

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE LAWYERS' REPORTS
ANNOTATED

---

BOOK VII.

---

ALL CURRENT CASES OF GENERAL VALUE AND IMPORTANCE WITH FULL ANNOTATION
ROBERT DESTY, EDITOR

BURDETT A. RICH, HENRY P. FARNHAM, ASSISTANTS.

---

1890.

---

EXTRA ANNOTATED EDITION

WITH L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY.

1905.

122069

JUL 29 1942

---

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year eighteen hundred ninety, by
THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

---

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year nineteen hundred five, by
THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

---

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE

OF ALL

CASES REPORTED IN LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED,

BOOK 7.

NOT OFFICIALLY REPORTED WHEN THIS BOOK WENT TO PRESS.

(To be "tipped in" in front of regular table, used as a book mark or as data for marking each case. Like tables will be furnished for subsequent volumes as fast as possible.)

Adams v. Seaman (82 Cal. 636) . . . . .	224	Commonwealth v. Gardner (188 Pa. 284) . . . . .	668
Adams Express Co. v. Harris (120 Ind. 78) . . . . .	214	Attorney-General v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (182 Pa. 591) . . . . .	684
Allison v. St. Paul City R. Co. (42 Minn. 411) . . . . .	149	Robinson v. Hemingway (181 Pa. 686) . . . . .	360
American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Smith (71 Md. 585) . . . . .	300	Cook v. Cooper (18 Or. 148) . . . . .	928
Anonymous (89 Ala. 291) . . . . .	425	Coppage v. Hutton (124 Ind. 401) . . . . .	591
Ashton v. Dashaway Assn. (84 Cal. 61, 69) . . . . .	809	Coudert v. Cohn (118 N. Y. 309) . . . . .	59
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cochran (48 Kan. 225) . . . . .	414	Crew v. Bradstreet Co. (184 Pa. 161) . . . . .	661
Attorney-General v. Detroit (78 Mich. 545) . . . . .	99	Culver v. Marks (122 Ind. 554) . . . . .	488
Baird v. Shipman (132 Ill. 16) . . . . .	128	Danaher v. Brooklyn (119 N. Y. 241) . . . . .	598
Baldwin v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 80 Ala. 619 . . . . .	266	Datz v. Cleveland (52 N. J. L. (28 Vroom.) 188, 200) . . . . .	481
Barton v. Union Cattle Co. (28 Neb. 360) . . . . .	457	Davis v. Fogle (124 Ind. 41) . . . . .	485
Bates v. Westborough (151 Mass. 174) . . . . .	156	v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (58 Ark. 117) . . . . .	288
Batz v. Mallon (151 Mass. 477) . . . . .	840	Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Trautwein (52 N. J. L. (28 Vroom.) 169) . . . . .	485
Barter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. (119 N. Y. 450) . . . . .	293	Deposit Bank v. Fayette Nat. Bank (90 Ky. 10) . . . . .	849
Beard v. Illinois C. R. Co. (79 Iowa, 518) . . . . .	280	v. Second Nat. Bank (90 Ky. 10) . . . . .	849
Bennett v. Chapin (77 Mich. 526) . . . . .	877	Detwiler v. Commonwealth, Dickinson (181 Pa. 614) . . . . .	857
Benton v. Shafer (47 Ohio St. 117) . . . . .	812	Devol v. Dye (123 Ind. 321) . . . . .	499
Betz v. Verber (46 N. J. Eq. (1 Dick.) 256) . . . . .	630	Dick v. Flanagan (122 Ind. 277) . . . . .	590
Born v. Indianapolis First Nat. Bank (123 Ind. 78) . . . . .	442	Donnegan v. Erhardt (119 N. Y. 468) . . . . .	537
Brockway v. Petted (79 Mich. 620) . . . . .	740	Duncan v. Flanagan (138 Pa. 378) . . . . .	412
Brooks v. Cedar Brook & S. O. R. I. Co. (82 Me. 17) . . . . .	460	Dwyer v. Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. (75 Tex. 572) . . . . .	478
Buffum v. Tiverton (16 R. I. 648) . . . . .	836	Earl v. Wilson (42 Minn. 361) . . . . .	125
Burton v. Tuttle (78 Mich. 368) . . . . .	73	Equitable L. Assur. Society v. Hazlewood (75 Tex. 389) . . . . .	217
v. Tuttle (80 Mich. 218) . . . . .	824	Evans v. Adams Express Co. 122 Ind. 362	678
Callen v. Junction City (48 Kan. 627) . . . . .	786	v. Evans (43 Minn. 31) . . . . .	448
Campbell's Appeal (182 Pa. 257) . . . . .	193	Exchange Bank v. Tuttle (5 N. M. 427) . . . . .	445
Carruth-Byrnes Hardware Co. v. Deere (58 Ark. 140) . . . . .	405	Farmers & M. Nat. Bank v. Loftis (183 Pa. 97) . . . . .	313
Cartwright v. Dickinson (88 Tenn. 476) . . . . .	706	Fernald v. Knox Woolen Co. (82 Me. 48) . . . . .	459
Cary Library v. Bliss (151 Mass. 364) . . . . .	765	Fiscus v. Moore (121 Ind. 547) . . . . .	235
Chauncey, Jr. (119 N. Y. 77) . . . . .	361	Fisher v. Northrup (79 Mich. 287) . . . . .	629
Church v. Church (16 R. I. 667) . . . . .	385	Fiske v. Butte First Nat. Bank (183 Pa. 241) . . . . .	209
Church of St. Monica v. New York (119 N. Y. 91) . . . . .	70	Fowler v. Saks (7 Mackey, 570) . . . . .	649
Citizen's Loan, T. & S. Assn. v. Friedley (128 Ind. 143) . . . . .	669	v. Allen (33 S. C. 229) . . . . .	745
Citizen's Street R. Co. v. Twiname (191 Ind. 375) . . . . .	852	Gafford v. Strouse (89 Ala. 283) . . . . .	568
Cleveland, R. (52 N. J. L. (28 Vroom.) 188, 200) . . . . .	481	Gardner v. Bunn (182 Ill. 403) . . . . .	729
Cochran v. Matthiesen (119 N. Y. 399) . . . . .	553	v. Terry (99 Mo. 523) . . . . .	67
Cody v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (151 Mass. 482) . . . . .	843	Gay v. Rooke (151 Mass. 115) . . . . .	392
Cofrode v. Gartner (79 Mich. 382) . . . . .	511	German Nat. Bank v. Coors (14 Colo. 202) . . . . .	845
Cole v. Hand (88 Tenn. 400) . . . . .	96	Gilkeson-Sloss Commission Co. v. London (58 Ark. 88) . . . . .	403
		Gray v. Woodward (117 N. Y. 522) . . . . .	867

THE HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

1	THE FOUNDING OF THE NATION	1
2	THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR	2
3	THE EARLY REPUBLIC	3
4	THE WESTERN EXPANSION	4
5	THE CIVIL WAR	5
6	THE RECONSTRUCTION	6
7	THE GROWTH OF THE NATION	7
8	THE PROGRESS OF THE NATION	8
9	THE MODERN NATION	9
10	THE FUTURE OF THE NATION	10
11	THE CONSTITUTION	11
12	THE PRESIDENTS	12
13	THE CONGRESS	13
14	THE SUPREME COURT	14
15	THE STATE GOVERNMENTS	15
16	THE LOCAL GOVERNMENTS	16
17	THE ECONOMIC HISTORY	17
18	THE SOCIAL HISTORY	18
19	THE CULTURAL HISTORY	19
20	THE SCIENTIFIC HISTORY	20
21	THE LITERARY HISTORY	21
22	THE ARTS AND LETTERS	22
23	THE MUSIC	23
24	THE THEATRE	24
25	THE FILM	25
26	THE RADIO	26
27	THE TELEVISION	27
28	THE COMICS	28
29	THE GAMES	29
30	THE SPORTS	30
31	THE FASHION	31
32	THE FOOD	32
33	THE DRINK	33
34	THE TOBACCO	34
35	THE GAMING	35
36	THE LOTTERY	36
37	THE HORSE RACING	37
38	THE BOXING	38
39	THE BASEBALL	39
40	THE FOOTBALL	40
41	THE BASKETBALL	41
42	THE TENNIS	42
43	THE GOLF	43
44	THE HOCKEY	44
45	THE ICE HOCKEY	45
46	THE FIGURE SKATING	46
47	THE SKIING	47
48	THE SNOWBOARDING	48
49	THE WATER SKIING	49
50	THE SURFING	50
51	THE JET SKIING	51
52	THE BOAT RACING	52
53	THE CANOEING	53
54	THE KAYAKING	54
55	THE ROWING	55
56	THE SWIMMING	56
57	THE Diving	57
58	THE WATER POLO	58
59	THE VOLEYBALL	59
60	THE BASKETBALL	60
61	THE TENNIS	61
62	THE GOLF	62
63	THE HOCKEY	63
64	THE ICE HOCKEY	64
65	THE FIGURE SKATING	65
66	THE SKIING	66
67	THE SNOWBOARDING	67
68	THE WATER SKIING	68
69	THE SURFING	69
70	THE JET SKIING	70
71	THE BOAT RACING	71
72	THE CANOEING	72
73	THE KAYAKING	73
74	THE ROWING	74
75	THE SWIMMING	75
76	THE Diving	76
77	THE WATER POLO	77
78	THE VOLEYBALL	78
79	THE BASKETBALL	79
80	THE TENNIS	80
81	THE GOLF	81
82	THE HOCKEY	82
83	THE ICE HOCKEY	83
84	THE FIGURE SKATING	84
85	THE SKIING	85
86	THE SNOWBOARDING	86
87	THE WATER SKIING	87
88	THE SURFING	88
89	THE JET SKIING	89
90	THE BOAT RACING	90
91	THE CANOEING	91
92	THE KAYAKING	92
93	THE ROWING	93
94	THE SWIMMING	94
95	THE Diving	95
96	THE WATER POLO	96
97	THE VOLEYBALL	97
98	THE BASKETBALL	98
99	THE TENNIS	99
100	THE GOLF	100

TABLE

OF

CASES REPORTED

IN

LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK VII

A.		Bank, National Butchers & D., v. Hubbell
Adams v. Seaman (82 Cal. 636)	224	(117 N. Y. 884)	852
Adams Express Co., Evans v. (Ind.)	678	National German-American, Streissguth v. (Minn.)	368
v. Harris (120 Ind. 78)	214	North Atchison, Garrettson v. (U. S. C. C. Mo.)	428
Alabama, Attorney-General, v. Savage (Ala.)	426	of America, Peck v. (R. I.)	826
Yellowstone Kit v. (Ala.)	599	People's Nat., Pickle v. (Tenn.)	93
Allen, Fowler v. (S. C.)	745	Sioux Valley State, Steele v. (Iowa)	524
Allison v. St. Paul City R. Co. (Minn.)	149	Yates County Nat., v. Carpenter (119 N. Y. 550)	557
American Nat. Bank, Snoddy v. (Tenn.)	705	Barton v. Union Cattle Co. (Neb.)	457
Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Smith (Md.)	200	Bashe, State ex rel., v. Boyce (Md.)	272
Anderson, McCullough's Admr. v. (Ky.)	886	Bates v. Westborough (Mass.)	156
Anonymous (Ala.)	425	Batt v. Mallon (Mass.)	840
Ashton v. Dashaway Asso. (Cal.)	809	Baxter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. (119 N. Y. 450)	293
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cochran (Kan.)	414	Beard v. Illinois C. R. Co. (Iowa)	290
Attorney-General, Commonwealth of Pa. ex rel., v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (Pa.)	634	Beck v. German Klinik (78 Iowa, 696)	566
v. Detroit (Mich.)	99	Bennett v. Chapin (Mich.)	377
State ex rel., v. Savage (Ala.)	426	Kelly v. (Pa.)	120
Austin, Merwin v. (Conn.)	84	Benton v. Shafer (47 Ohio St. —)	812
B.		Bernhard, Spaulding v. (Wis.)	423
Bagwell, Sanders v. (S. C.)	748	Betz v. Verner (N. J.)	630
Baird v. Shipman (Ill.)	128	Bingham v. Goshen Nat. Bank (118 N. Y. 349)	505
Baldwin v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (85 Ala. 619)	266	Goshen Nat. Bank v. (118 N. Y. 349)	595
Bank, American Nat., Snoddy v. (Tenn.)	705	Bliss, Cary Library v. (Mass.)	705
Butte First Nat., Fiske v. (Pa.)	209	Born v. First Nat. Bank of Indianapolis (Ind.)	442
Chicago Trust & Sav., Siegel v. (Ill.)	537	Boyce, State, Bashe, v. (Md.)	272
Corn Exch., v. Farmers Nat. Bank (118 N. Y. 448)	559	Bradstreet Co., Crew v. (Pa.)	661
Deposit v. Fayette Nat. Bank (Ky.)	849	Brockway v. Pettet (Mich.)	740
Deposit v. Second Nat. Bank of Lexington (Ky.)	849	Brookhaven v. Smith (118 N. Y. 634)	755
Exchange v. Tuttle (N. M.)	445	Brooklyn, Danaher v. (N. Y.)	592
Farmers & M. Nat. v. Loftus (Pa.)	813	Brooklyn L. Ins. Co., Baxter v. (N. Y.)	293
Farmers Nat., Corn Exch. Bank v. (N. Y.)	559	Brooks v. Cedar Brook & S. C. R. Imp. Co. (Me.)	460
German Nat., v. Coors (Colo.)	845	Buffum v. Tiverton (16 R. I. —)	386
Goshen Nat., v. Bingham (118 N. Y. 349)	595	Bullard, Wood v. (Mass.)	304
Indianapolis First Nat., Born v. (Ind.)	442	Bunn, Gardner v. (Ill.)	729
Lexington Second Nat., Deposit Bank v. (Ky.)	849	Burgess, Walling v. (Ind.)	481
C.		Burton v. Tuite (Mich.)	78, 824
7 L. R. A.		Cairns, Pepper v. (Pa.)
1		California, Morgan v. Hayne (83 Cal. 111)
		Callen v. Junction City (Kan.)
		Camden, Thorndike v. (Me.)
		Campbell's Appeal (Pa.)
		1

Carpenter, Yates County Nat. Bank v. (N. Y.)	557	Darrow, People ex rel. , v. Coleman (119 N. Y. 137)	407
Carruth-Byrne Hardware Co. v. Deere (A. K.)	405	Dashaway Asso. v. Ashton v. (Cal.)	809
Carson, Moose v. (N. C.)	548	Datz v. Cleveland (N. J.)	431
Cartwright v. Dickinson (Tenn.)	706	Davis v. Fogle (Ind.)	485
Cary Library v. Bliss (Mass.)	765	Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Ark.)	283
Cascade County Comrs., Montana, Choteau County Comrs. v. (Mont.)	105	Deere, Carruth-Byrnes Hardware Co. v. (Ark.)	405
Cedar Brook & S. C. R. Imp. Co., Brooks v. (Me.)	460	Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Trautwein (N. J.)	435
Chadwick, Little v. (Mass.)	570	Deposit Bank v. Fayette Nat. Bank (Ky.)	849
Chapin, Bennett v. (Mich.)	377	v. Second Nat. Bank of Lexington (Ky.)	849
Chauncey, Re (119 N. Y. 77)	361	Derby, Farrel v. (Conn.)	776
Chesapeake & O. R. Co., Ricketts v. (W. Va.)	354	Detroit, Attorney-General v. (Mich.)	99
& O. R. Co., Rupard v. (Ky.)	316	Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., People v. (Mich.)	717
Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co., White v. (Ind.)	257	Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., Harrison v. (Mich.)	623
Chicago Trust & Sav. Bank, Siegel v. (Ill.)	537	De Turk, Winters v. (Pa.)	658
Choteau County Comrs., Montana ex rel. , v. Cascade County Comrs. (8 Mont. 396)	105	Detwiller v. Commonwealth of Pa., Dickinson (181 Pa. 614)	357
Church v. Church (16 R. I. —)	385	Devol v. Dye (Ind.)	439
Church of St. Monica v. New York City (119 N. Y. 91)	70	Dick v. Flanagan (Ind.)	590
Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., State, Kohler v. (Ohio)	319	Dickinson, Cartwright v. (Tenn.)	706
N. O. & T. P. R. Co., White v. (Ky.)	44	Commonwealth of Pa., ex rel. , Detwiller v. (Pa.)	357
W. & B. R. R. Co., State, Kohler v. (Ohio)	319	District Board, State, Weiss, v. (Wis.)	330
Citizens Loan, F. & S. Asso. v. Friedley (Ind.)	669	Donnegan v. Erhardt (119 N. Y. 468)	527
Citizens Street R. Co. v. Twiname (Ind.)	352	Douglass v. Merchants Ins. Co. (118 N. Y. 484)	822
Clark, State, ex rel. , v. Haworth (Ind.)	240	Drummond, Moyer v. (S. C.)	747
Cleland, Pierce v. (Pa.)	752	Duncan v. Flanagan (Pa.)	412
Clem, Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. (Ind.)	588	Durland, Louisville Underwriters v. (Ind.)	399
Cleveland, Re (N. J.)	431	Durston, People, ex rel. Kemmler v. (N. Y.)	715
Cleveland, Datz v. (N. J.)	431	Dwyer v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (75 Tex. 572)	478
Cochran, Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. (Kan.)	414	Dye, Devol v. (Ind.)	439
Cochran v. Matthiessen (119 N. Y. 399)	553	E.
Cody v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (Mass.)	843	Earl v. Wilson (Minn.)	125
Cofrode v. Gartner (Mich.)	511	Equitable L. Assur. Society v. Hazlewood (75 Tex. 338)	217
Cohn, Coudert v. (N. Y.)	69	Eidson, State, ex rel. Taylor, v. (Tex.)	733
Cole v. Hand (Tenn.)	96	Erhardt, Donnegan v. (N. Y.)	527
Coleman, People, Darrow, v. (N. Y.)	407	Evans v. Adams Express Co. (Ind.)	678
Comer, Lawton v. (U. S. D. C. Ga.)	55	v. Evans (Minn.)	448
Nashville v. (Tenn.)	465	Territory v. (Idaho)	288
Commonwealth of Pa., Attorney-General, v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (Pa.)	634	Territory v. (Idaho)	646
ex rel. Dickinson, Detwiller v. (Pa.)	357	Evening News Asso., Randall v. (Mich.)	309
Hay, Hemingway v. (Pa.)	357	Evergreen R. Co., Millvale v. (Pa.)	369
Robinson, v. Hemingway (Pa.)	360	Ewing, Metropolitan Exhibition Co. v. (U. S. C. N. Y.)	381
v. Gardner (Pa.)	666	Exchange Bank v. Tuttle (N. M.)	445
Conrad, Kircher v. (Mont.)	471	Expressmen's Mut. Benefit Asso., McCullough v. (Pa.)	210
Cook v. Cooper (Or.)	273	F.
Cooper, Cook v. (Or.)	273	Farmers & M. Nat. Bank v. Loftus (Pa.)	313
Coors, German Nat. Bank v. (Colo.)	845	Farmers Nat. Bank, Corn Exch. Bank v. (N. Y.)	559
Coppage v. Hutton (Ind.)	591	Farrel v. Derby (58 Conn. 234)	776
Corn Exch. Bank v. Farmers Nat. Bank (118 N. Y. 443)	559	Fayette Nat. Bank, Deposit Bank v. (Ky.)	849
Coudert v. Cohn (118 N. Y. 309)	69	Fernald v. Knox Woolen Co. (Me.)	459
Creeden, State v. (Iowa)	295	First Nat. Bank of Butte, Fiske v. (Pa.)	209
Crew v. Bradstreet Co. (Pa.)	661	First Nat. Bank of Indianapolis, Born v. (Ind.)	442
Culver v. Marks (Ind.)	489	D.
D.		Danaher v. Brooklyn (119 N. Y. 241)	593
D.		Daniels v. New London (58 Conn. 156)	563
7 L. R. A.

Fiscus v. Moore (Ind.)	285
Fisher v. Northrup (Mich.)	629
Fiske v. First Nat. Bank of Butte (Pa.)	209
Flanagan, Dick v. (Ind.)	590
Flanagan, Duncan v. (Pa.)	412
Fogle, Davis v. (Ind.)	485
Fowler v. Allen (S. C.)	745
Fowler v. Saks (D. C.)	649
Franklin Ins. Co., Murdock v. (W. Va.)	572
Friedley, Citizens Loan F. & S. Asso. v. (Ind.)	669
Fulker, State v. (Kan.)	188

G.

Gafford v. Strouse (Ala.)	568
Galland, Schroeder v. (Pa.)	711
Galveston, Newson v. (Tex.)	797
Gardner v. Bunn (Ill.)	729
Commonwealth of Pa. v. (Pa.)	666
v. Terry (99 Mo. 523)	67
Garrettson v. North Atchison Bank (U. S. C. C. Mo.)	428
Gartner, Cofrode v. (Mich.)	511
Gay v. Rooke (Mass.)	392
Georgia v. Tutty (U. S. C. O. Ga.)	50
v. Ward (U. S. C. C. Ga.)	50
Georgia P. R. Co., Smith v. (Ala.)	823
German Klinik, Beck v. (Iowa)	566
German Nat. Bank v. Coors (Colo.)	845
Gilbert, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. (Tenn.)	162
Gilkeson-Sloes Commission Co. v. London (Ark.)	408
Gilliland, McQuerry v. (Ky.)	454
Glidewell, Jones v. (Ark.)	881
Goodwin, Leavitt v. (Iowa)	365
Goshen Nat. Bank v. Bingham (118 N. Y. 849)	595
Graham, Hanson v. (Cal.)	127
Gray v. Woodward (117 N. Y. 522)	867
Griggs v. Stone (51 N. J. L. 549)	48
Griswold v. Webb (16 R. I. —)	802
Gulf, C. & S. v. R. Co., Dwyer v. (Tex.)	478

H.

Hall v. Pillsbury (Minn.)	529
Hand, Cole v. (Tenn.)	96
Hanford v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. (Minn.)	722
Hanson v. Graham (82 Cal. 631)	127
Harris, Adams Express Co. v. (Ind.)	214
Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. (Mich.)	623
Haworth, State, Clark, v. (Ind.)	240
Hay, Commonwealth of Pa., ex rel. Hemingway v. (Pa.)	357
Hayne, People, Morgan v. (Cal.)	348
Hazlewood, Equitable L. Assur. Society v. (Tex.)	217
Heller, Royal Ins. Co. v. (Pa.)	411
Hemingway v. Commonwealth of Pa., Hay (181 Pa. 614)	357
Commonwealth of Pa., ex rel. Robinson, v. (Pa.)	860
Henderson v. Reynolds (Ga.)	327
State ex rel., v. Le Sueur (99 Mo. 552)	784
Hennepin County, State, St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. (Minn.)	121
Herrman v. Roberts (119 N. Y. 37)	226
Hess v. Lowrey (Ind.)	90
Hill v. Kimbell (76 Tex. 210)	618
7 L. R. A.

Hodges v. Kowing (58 Conn. 12)	87
Hopkins, v. Manchester (16 R. I. —)	837
Hubbell, National Butchers & D. Bank v. (N. Y.)	852
Hunn, v. Michigan C. R. Co. (Mich.)	500
Hutton, Coppage v. (Ind.)	591

I.

Idaho v. Evans (Idaho)	288
v. Evans (Idaho)	646
Illinois C. R. Co., Beard v. (Iowa)	280
Indiana, ex rel. Clark, v. Haworth (Ind.)	240
Indianapolis, Quill v. (Ind.)	681
Insurance Co., Brooklyn L., Baxter v. (N. Y.)	298
Franklin, Murdock v. (W. Va.)	572
Kenton v. Wigginton (Ky.)	81
Merchants, Douglass v. (N. Y.)	822
Royal v. Heller (Pa.)	411
Union Central L., Starck v. (Pa.)	576
Iowa v. Creeden (78 Iowa, 556)	295

J.

Jay County Comrs. v. Taylor (Ind.)	160
Jellett v. Rhode (Minn.)	671
Jeudevine, Powers v. (Vt.)	517
Johnson, Knox County Comrs. v. (Ind.)	684
Johnson v. Leman (Ill.)	656
Jones v. Glidewell (Ark.)	881
v. State (Neb.)	825
Junction City, Callen v. (Kan.)	786
Junker, Smithers v. (U. S. C. C. Ill.)	264

K.

Kansas v. Fulker (Kan.)	188
Kansas City Cable R. Co., Weber v. (Mo.)	819
Katie, The (U. S. D. C. Ga.)	55
Kelly v. Bennett (Pa.)	120
Kemmler, People ex rel., v. Durston (119 N. Y. 569)	715
Kenton Ins. Co. v. Wigginton (Ky.)	81
Kersey, Schuykill River East Side R. Co. v. (Pa.)	409
Ke-tuc-e-mun-guah v. McClure (Ind.)	782
Killingsworth v. Portland Trust Co. (Or.)	688
Kimbell, Hill v. (Tex.)	618
Kinnaird v. Standard Oil Co. (Ky.)	451
Kircher v. Conrad (Mont.)	471
Knox County Comrs. v. Johnson (Ind.)	684
Knox Woolen Co., Fernald v. (Me.)	459
Kohler, State ex rel., v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. (47 Ohio St. —)	819
v. Cincinnati, W. & B. R. Co. (47 Ohio St. —)	819
Koons v. Mellett (Ind.)	231
Kowing, Hodges v. (Conn.)	87
Krueger v. Krueger (76 Tex. 178)	72
Kursheedt v. Union Dime Sav. Inst. (118 N. Y. 858)	229

L.

Lafin & R. Powder Co. v. Tearney (Ill.)	262
Lane, Standard Oil Co. v. (Wis.)	191
Lang v. Salliotte (Mich.)	720
Lapham v. Wheeler Cotton Mills (Mass.)	613

Petted, Brockway v. (Mich.)	740
Pickle v. People's Nat. Bank (Tenn.)	93
Pierce v. Cleland (Pa.)	752
Porter v. (N. Y.)	847
v. Whittlesey (58 Conn. 104)	286
Pillsbury, Hall v. (Minn.)	529
Pinkerton v. Verberg (Mich.)	507
Pittsburgh Carbon Co. v. McMillin (119 N. Y. 46)	46
Pomeroy, Mason v. (Mass.)	771
Poppleton v. Yamhill County (Or.)	449
Porter v. Pierce (N. Y.)	847
v. Powell (Iowa)	176
Portland Trust Co., Killingsworth v. (Or.)	638
Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Lathrop (Ill.)	474
Powell, Porter v. (Iowa)	176
Powers v. Jendevine (Vt.)	517
Prentiss v. Paisley (Fla.)	640

Q.

Quill v. Indianapolis (Ind.)	681
------------------------------	-----

R.

Racine Seeder Co., Rappleye v. (Iowa)	139
Railroad Co., Atchison, T. & S. F., v. Cochran (Kan.)	414
Chesapeake & O., Ricketts v. (W. Va.)	354
Chesapeake & O., Rupard v. (Ky.)	816
Chicago, St. L. & P., White v. (Ind.)	257
Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P., State, Kohler, v. (Ohio)	819
Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P., White v. (Ky.)	44
Cincinnati, W. & B., State, Kohler, v. (Ohio)	819
Citizens Street, v. Twiname (Ind.)	352
Delaware, L. & W., v. Trautwein (N. J.)	435
Detroit, G. H. & M., People v. (Mich.)	717
Detroit, L. & N., Harrison v. (Mich.)	623
Evergreen, Millvale v. (Pa.)	369
Georgia P., Smith v. (Ala.)	323
Gulf, C. & S. F., Dwyer v. (Tex.)	478
Illinois C., Beard v. (Iowa)	280
Kansas City Cable, Weber v. (Mo.)	819
Louisville & N., Baldwin v. (Ala.)	266
v. Gilbert (Tenn.)	162
Memphis & C., v. Woods (38 Ala. 630)	605
Metropolitan Elev., Newman v. (N. Y.)	289
Michigan C., Hunn v. (Mich.)	500
Newport Street, Taggart v. (R. I.)	205
New York & N. E., Cody v. (Mass.)	843
Ramsdell v. (Mass.)	154
New York, L. E. & W., Commonwealth of Pa., Attorney-General v. (Pa.)	634
Ohio S., v. Morey (47 Ohio St.—)	701
Pennsylvania S. V., Updegrove v. (Pa.)	213
St. Louis, I. M. & S., Davis v. (Ark.)	283
v. Worthen (Ark.)	374
St. Paul & D., Hanford v. (Minn.)	722

T L. R. A.

Railroad Co., St. Paul City, Allison v. (Minn.)	149
Roberts v. (Minn.)	149
Wood v. (Minn.)	149
St. Paul, M. & M., State ex rel., v. Hennepin County (Minn.)	121
Schuylkill River East Side v. Kersey (Pa.)	409
Terre Haute & I., v. Clem (Ind.)	588
Vicksburg, S. & P., Walker v. (La.)	111
Virginia M., v. Washington (Va.)	344
Wabash, St. L. & P., Thomas v. (U. S. C. C. Ill.)	145
Ramsdell v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (Mass.)	154
Randall v. Evening News Asso. (Mich.)	309
Rapp v. Reehling (Ind.)	498
Rappleye v. Racine Seeder Co. (Iowa)	139
Raybaud, Perez v. (Tex.)	620
Read v. Nichols (118 N. Y. 224)	180
Real Estate Investment Co., Roop v. (Pa.)	211
Reasoner, Thompson v. (Ind.)	495
Redmond v. Tarboro (N. C.)	539
Reehling, Rapp v. (Ind.)	498
Reese v. Western Union Teleg. Co. (Ind.)	583
Rehfuss v. Moore (Pa.)	663
Reynolds, Henderson v. (Ga.)	327
Rhode, Jellett v. (Minn.)	671
Rhodes v. Wheeler Cotton Mills (Mass.)	613
Richards, Whitaker v. (Pa.)	749
Ricketts v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (W. Va.)	354
Riddick, Odom v. (N. C.)	118
Riley v. Simpson (88 Cal. 217)	622
Roberts, Herrman v. (N. Y.)	226
Roberts v. St. Paul City R. Co. (Minn.)	149
Robinson, Commonwealth of Pa., ex rel., v. Hemingway (Pa.)	860
Roche v. Waters (Md.)	583
Rogers, William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. (Conn.)	779
Rooke, Gay v. (Mass.)	392
Roop v. Real Estate Investment Co. (Pa.)	211
Royal Ins. Co. v. Heller (Pa.)	411
Ruan Street, Re, (Pa.)	193
Rupard v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Ky.)	816
Russell v. Tate (Ark.)	180

S.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., Davis v. (Ark.)	283
v. Worthen (Ark.)	374
St. Paul & D. R. Co., Hanford v. (Minn.)	722
St. Paul City R. Co., Allison v. (Minn.)	149
Roberts v. (Minn.)	149
Wood v. (Minn.)	149
St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., State, ex rel., v. Hennepin County (Minn.)	121
Saks, Fowler v. (D. C.)	649
Salina, Wells v. (N. Y.)	759
Salliotte, Lang v. (Mich.)	720
Sanders v. Bagwell (S. C.)	743
Sanford, Moore v. (Mass.)	151
San Francisco Musical Fund Society, Wiese v. (Cal.)	577
Savage, State, Attorney-General, v. (Ala.)	426
Savings Institution, Union Dime, Kursesheet v. (N. Y.)	229
Schonfield v. Turner (75 Tex. 324)	189
Schroeder v. Galland (Pa.)	711

CASES REPORTED.

7

Whittlesey, Pierce v. (Conn.) - - -	286	Woods, Memphis & C. R. Co. v. (Ala.)	605
Wiese v. San Francisco Musical Fund Society (82 Cal. 645) - - -	577	Woodward, Re (117 N. Y. 522) - - -	367
Wigginton, Kenton Ins. Co. v. (Ky.) - -	81	Woodward, Gray v. (N. Y.) - - -	367
Wilder, Strough v. (N. Y.) - - -	555	Worthen, St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. (Ark.) - - -	374
William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Rogers (58 Conn. 356) - - -	779	Wysor, Valentine v. (Ind.) - - -	788
Wilson, Earl v. (Minn.) - - -	125	Y.
Winters v. De Turk (Pa.) - - -	658	Yamhill County, Poppleton v. (Or.) -	449
Wisconsin, ex rel. Weiss, v. District Board (Wis.) - - -	380	Yates County Nat. Bank v. Carpenter (119 N. Y. 550) - - -	557
Wood v. Bullard (Mass.) - - -	304	Yellowstone Kit v. State (88 Ala. 196) -	599
Wood v. St. Paul City R. Co. (Minn.)	149
7 L. R. A.

CITATIONS

IN OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK.

A.

.....	404
.....	778
.....	91
.....	698
R. A. 498.	550
.....	548
.....	544
.....	696
.....	58
414.	550
.....	217
.....	215
34 Fed.	749
.....	221
(87).....	224
7th Nat.	94
1. 9487, 21	604
.....	621
.....	628
(11 L. ed.	248
Alexander v. Milwaukee, 18 Wis. 284	402
Allegheny County Home's App., 77 Pa. 77	370
Allen v. Berryhill, 27 Iowa, 584	120
v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 54 Iowa, 95	282
v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 80 (25 L. ed. 818)	58
v. McKean, 1 Sumn. 277	770
v. Merchants Bank, 22 Wend. 215	864
v. Newberry, 63 U. S. 21 How. 244 (16 L. ed. 110)	59
v. Thomas, 3 Met. 198	79
Allin v. Merchants Bank, 22 Wend. 215	580
Allis v. Billings, 6 Met. 415	120
Allison v. Hess, 28 Iowa, 289	558
Allor v. Wayne Co. Auditors, 48 Mich. 76	171
Almshouse v. American Art Union, 7 N. Y. 228	802, 808
Almy v. Winslow, 195 Mass. 842	368
Alter v. Berghaus, 8 Watts, 77	485
American Academy of A. & S. v. Harvard College, 12 Gray, 582	770
American Exp. Co. v. Haire, 21 Ind. 4	864
American Ins. Co. v. Leonard, 80 Ind. 278	401
Ames v. Blunt, 5 Paige, 18	800
Anderson v. Ackerman, 88 Ind. 481	795
Andrews v. Bank of Cape Ann, 8 Allen, 818	571
v. German Nat. Bank, 9 Heisk. 211, 24 Am. Rep. 300	445
v. Rowan, 28 How. Pr. 126	558
Anne Arundel Co. v. Duckett, 20 Md. 468, 83 Am. Dec. 566	109
Anonymous, 2 Hill, 375	848
Ansonia B. & C. Co. v. Babbitt, 74 N. Y. 895	285
Anthony v. Adams, 1 Met. 284	758
Archer v. Hathcock, 6 Jones, L. (N. C.) 421, 422, 423	808
Ardeaco Oil Co. v. North American Oil & M. Co., 85 Pa. 281	86
Armour v. Michigan C. R. Co., 65 N. Y. 111-122	758
Armstrong Co. v. Clarion Co., 85 Pa. 218	91
Arnold v. Walts, 58 Iowa, 708	748
Ash v. People, 11 Mich. 851	799
Ascraft v. De Armond, 44 Iowa, 229	120
Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129 (23 L. ed. 868)	479
Ashley v. Port Huron, 35 Mich. 295	171
Askew v. Douglass (N. J.) 2 Cent. Rep. 210	234
Atchison v. Morris, 11 Fed. Rep. 582	516
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Davis, 24 Kan. 209, 210	418
v. Fletcher, 35 Kan. 236	419
v. Thul, 29 Kan. 465, 10 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 788	98

.....	512
Bank,	811
I. & P.	208
.....	183
.....	769
.....	571
.....	508
385, 387	769
171,	834
.....	183
.....	769
.....	769
.....	764
rn. 55	770
5.	208
.....	768
.....	183
.....	459
.....	769
.....	769
.....	183
.....	558
.....	672
.....	561
.....	560
ed. 47	568
2 Q. B.	497
.....	890
1. 240	848
.....	158
.....	364, 560
Babcock v. Buffalo, 58 N. Y. 298	138
Corp., 9 Met. 553, 43 Am.	280
28 N. H. 354	404
R. A. 355, 123 Pa. 452	315
N. Y. 546, 504	803, 804
89	328
P. Wms. 347	41
Conn. 455	91
Nat. Bankr. Reg. 352	745
N. Y. 112	856
Hill, 551	470
& B. Eq. 524, 81 Am. Dec.	796
309	589
v. Daly, 68 N. Y. 547	407
v. Williams, 19 Pick. 881	227, 228
Bakeman v. Talbot, 81 N. Y. 366, 370	363
Baker v. Baker, 6 H. L. Cas. 616	365
v. Brown, 5 New Eng. Rep. 204, 146 Mass.	287
899	789
v. Griffith, 88 Ind. 411	237
v. Smith, 18 Met. 84, 41	808
Balbougie Case, 2 Dow. P. C. 482	507
Balch v. Grand Rapids & L. R. Co., 11 West. Rep.	818
475, 67 Mich. 894	270, 271
Baldwin v. Judge, 48 Mich. 525	781
v. Kouns, 31 Ala. 272	356
v. Society for Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, 9 Sim. 346	287, 289
Baldwin's App., 44 Conn. 37	840
Bail v. Green, 90 Ind. 75	453, 525
v. Hancock, 82 Ky. 107	238, 239
Ballard v. Tomlinson, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 116, 24 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 634	525
Ballenger v. Drock, 101 Ind. 172	683
Ballou v. Lucas, 59 Iowa, 24	654
Baltimore v. Gill, 81 Md. 375	459
v. O'Donnell, 53 Md. 110	571
v. Warren Mfg. Co., 59 Md. 96	9
Baltimore C. Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 104 U. S. 54, 63, 71 (25 L. ed. 693, 698, 701)

Briar v. Robertson, 1 West. Rep. 456, 19 Mo. App. 66	672	Butler v. Boston & S. Steamship Co., 130 U. S. 527-553 (32 L. ed. 1017-1025)	65
Briden v. Hewlett, 2 Myl. & K. 90	309	v. Bushnell, 3 Myl. & K. 232	309
Bridgeport v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 36 Conn. 255	124	v. Butler, 5 Ves. Jr. 534	38
Bridgers v. Taylor, 102 N. C. 89	543	v. Detroit, 43 Mich. 552	171
Bridges v. North London R. Co., L. R. 6 Q. B. 377	324	v. Kelsey, 15 Johns. 177	329
Briggs v. Central Nat. Bank, 60 N. Y. 182	359	v. Tomlinson, 38 Barb. 641	230
v. Johnson Co., 4 Dill. 148	242	v. United States, 38 U. S. 21 Wall. 272 (22 L. ed. 814)	747
v. Lewiston & A. Horse R. Co., 4 New Eng. Rep. 546, 79 Me. 363	208	Butts v. Wood, 87 N. Y. 317	811
v. Morgan, 3 Phillim. Ecol. 325, 1 Eng. Ecol. Rep. 408	425	Byler v. Asher, 47 Ill. 101	108
Bright Star, The, 1 Woolw. 274	59	Byron v. Chapin, 113 Mass. 308	633
Brinkley v. Brinkley, 50 N. Y. 197, 198	803
Brisbin v. Cleary, 26 Minn. 107	834
Brisbane v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co., 23 Minn. 114	725
Bristol Mill & M. Co. v. Probasco, 64 Ind. 406	590
Broadway Nat. Bank v. Adams, 133 Mass. 170	365
Brockway v. Innes, 30 Mich. 47	98
Bronson v. Winter, 1 Amb. 57	391
Brookhaven v. Strong, 60 N. Y. 58	757
Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 193	53, 54
Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. National Bank of the Republic, 102 U. S. 14-23 (26 L. ed. 61-66)	431
Brooklyn Elevated R. Co., Re, v. Phillips, 18 N. Y. Supp. 78	292
Brooks v. Boston & M. R. Co., 135 Mass. 21	117
v. Brooks, 12 S. C. 422	234
v. Curtis, 50 N. Y. 639	653
v. Everett, 13 Allen, 457	696
v. Hydon (Mich.), 42 N. W. Rep. 1122	105
v. Riding, 45 Ind. 15	550
Brown v. Turner, 16 La. 434	205
Brown v. Brown, 18 Conn. 410	388
v. Burbank, 64 Cal. 101	352
v. Chadbourne, 31 Me. 9	461
v. Cowan, 1 Cent. Rep. 623, 110 Pa. 588	713
v. Darrah, 26 Ind. 86	590
v. Gilman, 13 Mass. 158	393
v. Hummel, 6 Pa. 88, 96	770
v. Illius, 27 Conn. 84	452
v. Leckie, 43 Ill. 497	445
v. New York C. R. Co., 34 N. Y. 404	528
v. Perkins, 12 Gray, 89	138
v. Slee, 103 U. S. 323 (23 L. ed. 618)	798
v. Spofford, 95 U. S. 474 (24 L. ed. 508)	847
v. Sprague, 5 Denio, 545	758
Brown & S's Contract, Re, L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 156	387
Browning v. McCracken, 97 Ind. 279	233
Bruce v. State, 11 Gill & J. 332	741
Bryan v. Scholl, 7 West. Rep. 560, 109 Ind. 367	272
Bryant v. Fairfield, 51 Me. 149	497
Buck v. Chesapeake Ins. Co., 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 151 (7 L. ed. 90)	574
Buckalew v. State, 62 Ala. 334	601
Buckner v. Finley, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 589 (7 L. ed. 590)	54
Buckout v. Swift, 27 Cal. 438	693
Buel v. New York Cent. R. Co., 31 N. Y. 814, 818	844
Buesching v. St. Louis Gaslight Co., 73 Mo. 219	821
Buffalo v. Webster, 10 Wend. 100	799
Buffbrook v. Goodere, 3 Burr. 1770	137
Bullock v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 137	446
Bunn v. Wells, 94 N. C. 67	741
Bunnell v. Bunnell, 73 Ind. 163	459
v. Studebaker, 33 Ind. 338	758
Burgett v. Fancher, 35 Hun, 647	558
Burleigh v. Clough, 62 N. H. 267, 145	839
Burlington v. Leebriek, 43 Iowa, 252	738
Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 76	77
Burnham v. Nevins, 3 New Eng. Rep. 792, 144 Mass. 32	227
Burns v. Singer Mfg. Co., 37 Ind. 641	297
Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 173	96
Burrell v. Haw, 43 Cal. 223	352
Burrill v. Jewett, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 701	128
Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 430	741
Burton v. Eyden, L. R. 8 Q. B. 235	210
v. McCellan, 3 Ill. 434	263
v. Marshall, 4 Gill (Md.) 487	781
v. Tuttle, 7 L. R. A. 73	825
Burwell v. Mandeville, 43 U. S. 2 How. 560 (11 L. ed. 378)	774
Busch v. Buffalo Creek R. Co., 29 Hun, 112	508
Bush v. Bradley, 4 Day, 238	696
v. Hamilton Co. Comrs. (Ind.), 23 N. E. Rep. 275	586
v. Lathrop, 23 N. Y. 535	599
v. Seabury, 3 Johns. 418	739
Butchers Union S. H. & L. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. L. & S. H. Co., 111 U. S. 746 (28 L. ed. 585)	252, 253
Butler v. Barkley, 67 Iowa, 491	525
		C.
		Calder v. Billington, 15 Me. 398	598
		Caldwell v. Glenn, 6 Rob. (La.) 9	296
		Caleb v. Field, 9 Dana, 546	340
		Calhoun v. Williams, 62 Gratt. 18	748
		Calton v. Bragg, 15 East, 223	393
		Camden & A. R. Co. v. Forsythe, 61 Pa. 61	216
		Cammack v. Lewis, 33 U. S. 15 Wall. 643 (21 L. ed. 244)	224
		Campbell v. Campbell, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 182, 190, 200, 201, 211	802, 803, 807, 809
		v. Findley, 3 Humph. 330	43
		v. International L. Assur. Society, 4 Bosw. 299	848
		v. McCahan, 41 Ill. 47	730
		v. Martin, 37 Ind. 577	233, 236
		v. Portland Sugar Co., 62 Me. 552	129
		v. Scaife, 1 Phila. 187	714
		v. Wilson, 6 Tex. 379	514
		Canal Bank v. Partee, 99 U. S. 325 (25 L. ed. 390)	644
		Candee v. Western Union Telegr. Co., 34 Wis. 472	477
		Cannon's Case, 47 Mich. 433	818
		Capel v. Powell, 17 C. B. N. S. 743	644
		Capen v. Foster, 12 Pick. 485, 488	101, 103
		Cardwell v. American River Bridge Co., 113 U. S. 205 (28 L. ed. 959)	187, 240
		Care v. Keller, 7 Pa. 437	661
		Cargile v. Wood, 63 Mo. 501, 511-514	803, 804
		Carli v. Stillwater, S. R. & T. Co., 23 Minn. 373	725
		Carlton v. Carlton, 72 Me. 116	544
		Carman v. Steubenville & I. R. Co., 4 Ohio St. 399	708
		Carpenter v. Roberts, 56 How. Pr. 216	811
		v. Sheldon, 23 Ind. 259	784
		Carr v. Holliday, 5 Ired. Eq. 167	120
		v. National Security Bank, 107 Mass. 45	94
		Carrington v. Brents, 1 McLean, 167	816
		Carroll v. Staten Island R. Co., 58 N. Y. 126	437
		Carson v. Lucas, 13 B. Mon. 213	393
		Carter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co., 12 Cent. Rep. 756, 110 N. Y. 15	295
		v. John Hancock L. Ins. Co., 127 Mass. 153	236
		Carver v. Carver, 97 Ind. 497	690
		Cary v. Dixon, 51 Miss. 593	643
		Casamayor v. Pearson, 3 Clark & F. 100	833
		Casco Bank v. Keene, 53 Me. 103	758
		Case v. Abeel, 1 Paige, 398	796
		v. Case, 17 Cal. 600, 601	807, 808
		Casey v. Buttolph, 12 Barb. 637	278
		Cassiday v. Old Colony R. Co., 1 New Eng. Rep. 603, 141 Mass. 174, 179	158
		Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 152	450
		Caujolle v. Ferrie, 23 N. Y. 90	804
		Caulkins v. Memphis Gaslight Co., 35 Tenn. 633	831
		Cavinton v. Hardy, 37 Mo. 633	788
		Central Iowa R. Co. v. Wright, 67 Iowa, 196	378
		Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 522	609
		Central R. & B. Co. v. Fletcher, 69 Ala. 106	117
		Central Sav. Bank v. Richards, 109 Mass. 413	430
		Central Trust Co. v. Wyandotte First Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 63 (25 L. ed. 876)	598
		Chalker v. Chalker, 1 Conn. 87, 88	698
		Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio, 551	683
		Chambers v. Howell, 11 Beav. 6	796
		Champlin v. Laytin, 19 Wend. 407	798
		Chandler v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., 21 Minn. 85	574
		Chapin v. Brown, 4 New Eng. Rep. 918, 15 B. L. 579	550
		Chaplin v. Doty, 60 Vt. 712	522
		Chapman v. Bankers & T. Pub. Co., 123 Mass. 473	774
		v. Erie R. Co., 55 N. Y. 579	625
		Chappel v. Brockway, 21 Wend. 159	162
		Charles v. Finchley Local Board, 49 L. T. N. S. 569	595
		Charlotte First Nat. Bank v. National Exch. Bank, 92 U. S. 123 (23 L. ed. 679)	609
7 L. R. A.

Chase v. Dana, 44 Ill. 363	780	Clowes v. Hillard, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 418	860
v. East Tennessee, V. & G. H. Co., 5 Lea, 415		Coalfield Coal Co. v. Peck, 98 Ill. 146	475
v. Lord, 77 N. Y. 1	709	Cobb v. Elizabeth City, 75 N. C. 1	541, 544, 547
v. Whitmore, 98 Cal. 548	555	Cobble v. Tomlinson, 50 Ind. 550	796
Chaunin v. Valiton, 7 Mont. 581	325	Cochrane v. Walker, 4 Dem. 164	363
Cheatham v. Shearon, 1 Swan, 213	472	Cockreham v. State, 7 Humph. 11	328
Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 1 (S L. ed. 25)	268	Cocksedge v. Cocksedge, 1 Robt. Eccl. 90	386
Cherry v. Boulbee, 4 Myl. & Cr. 443	788	Coffin v. Reynolds, 87 N. Y. 640	99
Chicago v. Cameron, 9 West. Rep. 507, 180 Ill. 447, 458	235	Colby v. Duncan, 189 Mass. 396	308
v. Gage, 95 Ill. 593, 85 Am. Rep. 183	511	Colonester v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 839	136
v. Robbins, 97 U. S. 2 Black, 416 (17 L. ed. 298)	585	Cole v. Sherard, 11 Kroh. 482	151
Chicago & A. E. Co. v. Joliet, L. & A. E. Co., 105 Ill. 388, 400, 404	704	Coleman v. Henderson, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 171, 13 Am. Dec. 291, note	329
v. Randolph, 59 Ill. 510	124	e. Parker, 114 Mass. 80	441
v. Shannon, 48 Ill. 386	117	Coles v. Kelsey, 2 Tex. 555	73
Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Hough, 61 Mich. 507	507	Collins v. Davidson, 19 Fed. Rep. 88	117
	124, 719	v. Hill, 3 L. R. A. 110, 77 Iowa, 181	148
	117	v. Johnson, 57 Ala. 304	569
		v. Mitchell, 5 Fla. 364	742
	507	Collins Line of Steamships, 9 Ops. Atty-Gen. 84	863
	771	Collumb v. Read, 24 N. Y. 506	860
	479	Colored Orphans Ben. Assn. v. New York, 6 Cent. Rep. 796, 28 Hun, 593, 104 N. Y. 581	71, 72
6, 507		Columbus Exch. Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 1	542
117		Columbus Gas-Light Co. v. Freeland, 12 Ohio St. 398	453
148		Commercial Bank v. Marine Bank, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 405	561, 562
505		Commercial Bank of Pa. v. Union Bank, 11 N. Y. 308	569
		Commercial Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 44 Ill. 365	402
		Commercial Nat. Bank v. Proctor, 95 Ill. 561	475
		Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush. 58	727
	505	v. Bacon, 13 Bush, $10, 28 Am. Rep. 189	254
		v. Central Pass. R. Co., 59 Pa. 506	371, 372
	117	v. Erie & N. E. R. Co., 27 Pa. 389, 354	372, 373
	285	v. Hartman, 17 Pa. 118	242
	200	v. Harnett, 8 Gray, 450	543
	159	v. Kendig, 3 Pa. 448	741
	308	v. Lane, 113 Mass. 458	54
	91	v. Lisher, 17 Serg. & R. 155	341
	309	v. McClelland, 68 Ky. 686	103
	643	v. Metropolitan R. Co., 107 Mass. 296	155, 285
	363	v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 114 Pa. 340	635, 636
	289		196
	386	v. Patton, 38 Pa. 258
	813	v. Pennsylvania Ben. Inst., 2 Serg. & R. 141	327
	109		303
	447		667
			804
	560		602
	848		341
			. Rep. 306 .
	117		613
			386
			464
			782
			379 chaefier, 94
			( Ill. 518 .
			28 (15 L. ed.
			514
			230
			151
			I Ind. 315
			it. Bank, 50
			N. Y. 575, 582-586
			757, 758
			Cook v. Burnley, 78 U. S. II Wall, 659 (20 L. ed. 29) 272
			v. Hays, 9 Gratt. 142
			576
			v. Hartman, 3 White & W. Civ. Cas. 770
			629
			Cooke v. Boston State Nat. Bank, 52 N. Y. 98
			430
			Cooley v. Granville, 10 Cush. 56
			464, 465
			v. Philadelphia Board of Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 299 (13 L. ed. 908) 185, 187
			Coolidge v. Brigham, 5 Met. 68
			496
			v. Brookline, 114 Mass. 563
			464, 779
			v. Payson, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 66 (4 L. ed. 185)
			431
			Cooper v. Davis, 15 Conn. 556
			633
			v. Randall, 58 Ill. 24
			393, 264
			Cope v. Cope, 2 Salk. 449
			38
			Copeland v. Barnes, 7 New Eng. Rep. 61, 147 Mass. 388
			776
			Corbett v. Bradley, 7 Nev. 106
			245
			Corbit v. Smith, 7 Iowa, 60
			119
			Corley v. State, 50 Ark. 305
			823
			Cornell v. Guilford, 1 Denio, 510
			763 Cornick v. Richards, 3 Lea, 1
			709 Corwin v. New York & E. R. Co., 13 N. Y. 43
			528

Drake v. Hamilton W. Co., 80 Mass. 500.....	617	Patbanks v. Sargent, 5 Cent. Rep. 919, 104 N. Y. 100.....	809
u. Rogers, 3 Hill. 601.....	228	Patman v. Beal, 14 Ill. 244.....	849
Drennan v. People, 10 Mich. 160.....	611	Pake v. Whipple, 30 Barb. 339.....	464
Drew v. Davis, 10 Vt. 809.....	464	Falkner v. Butler, Amb. 514.....	298
Drucker v. Manhattan R. Co., 100 N. Y. 157.....	292	Fares v. Seiler, 39 La. Ann. 1000.....	178
Drulmer v. State, 30 Ind. 300.....	304	Fargo v. Miller, 180 Mass. 236.....	309
Drury v. Midland R. Co., 127 Mass. 371, 391.....	617	Farmer v. Balava, 11 Ala. 1028.....	849
u. Natick, 10 Allen. 189.....	789	Farmers & M. Nat. Bank v. King, 67 Pa. 210.....	691
u. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 404.....	441	Farmington v. Jones, 39 N. H. 271.....	178
Du Bose v. Marx, 28 Ala. 308.....	273	Farnsworth Co. v. Rand, 68 Mo. 19.....	466
Dubuque First Nat. Bank v. Carpenter, 41 Iowa, 818.....	141	Farquharson v. Cave, 2 Coll. Ch. 284, 18 L. J. N. S. Ch. 187.....	441
Duchess of Kingston's Case, 2 Smith. Lead. Cas. 764 (7th Am. ed. 610).....	609	Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp., 4 Met. 49.....	606
Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Bligh (N. H.) 407.....	228	Faulkner v. Whitaker, 15 N. J. L. 418.....	603
Duke of Lancaster v. Mayor, 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 6th Am. ed. 593.....	37	Favor v. Boston & L. R. Corp., 114 Mass. 280.....	317
Dulham v. Wilson, 22 Mich. 303.....	607	Faxon v. Hollis, 13 Mass. 427.....	405
Dunn v. People, 40 Ill. 468.....	604	Faxon v. Faxon, 20 Mich. 129.....	753
Dupre v. Boulard, 10 La. Ann. 411.....	58	Pearu v. Mayers, 53 Minn. 456.....	657
Durham v. Brown, 24 Ill. 94.....	730	Fellows v. Miner, 119 Mass. 543.....	709
u. Shannon, 118 Ind. 403.....	706	Fenille v. Coudert, 44 N. J. L. 304.....	670
Duryea v. New York, 20 Hun, 120.....	496	Fenton v. Reed, 4 Johns. 58.....	806
Dusenbury v. Kelley, 35 N. Y. 303.....	497	Ferguson v. Hagans, 30 Ind. 38.....	91
Dutch v. Boyd, 31 Ind. 146.....	498	u. Tweedy, 43 N. Y. 543.....	606
Dutobom & O. C. B. Co. v. Mabbett, 30 N. Y. 307.....	601	Ferris v. Van Vechten, 78 N. Y. 113.....	571
Dutton v. Strong, 68 U. S. 1 Black, 28 (17 L. ed. 29).....	735	Ferriter v. Tyler, 45 Vt. 444, 469.....	341
Duval v. Malone, 14 Gratt. 24.....	676	Fertig v. Bucher, 3 Pa. 306.....	750
Duval v. Speed, 1 Md. Ch. 229.....	227	Fesenmayer v. Adcock, 16 Mees. & W. 449.....	303
Dwyer v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co., 7 L. R. A. 473, 89 Tex. 707.....	473	Fewlam v. Abbott, 28 Mich. 270.....	630
Dynart Poultry Case, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 599.....	604	Field v. Com., 32 Pa. 463.....	637
E.		u. Parks, 20 Johns. 140.....	648
Eagle, The, 75 U. S. 3 Wall. 15 (19 L. ed. 383).....	43	Filer v. New York Cent. R. Co., 40 N. Y. 47.....	116
Eames v. Eames, 41 N. H. 177.....	604	Finnegan v. Carraber, 47 N. Y. 100.....	738
Earl of Oxford v. Lady Rodney, 14 Ves. Jr. 418.....	37	Fisher v. Leslie, 1 Esp. 498.....	303
East Dallas v. State, 73 Tex. 370.....	734	u. McGillr, 1 Gray, 1.....	120
Easter v. Severin, 78 Ind. 540.....	236	Fisk v. Eastman, 5 N. H. 340.....	606
East St. Louis Con. R. Co. v. People, 8 West. Rep. 342, 119 Ill. 122.....	377	Fitzgerald v. Cross, 20 Ohio St. 480.....	702
East Tenn. V. & G. R. Co. v. Urmsley, 5 Lea, 401.....	149	Flagg v. Worcester, 13 Gray, 301.....	149
u. Cooner, 15 Lea, 223.....	116	Flanders v. Blandy, 26 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 389, 601, note.....	323
Eaton v. Eaton, 37 N. J. L. 109.....	120	Flash v. Connecticut, 109 U. S. 371 (37 L. ed. 904).....	506
u. Straw, 13 N. H. 280.....	145	Flackner v. Bank of U. S., 21 U. S. 3 Wheat. 303 (5 L. ed. 631).....	66
Ebner v. Stichter, 19 Pa. 19.....	708	Fleming v. Buchanan, 3 De G. M. & G. 976.....	145
Ebons v. Williams, 3 Murph. 27.....	423	u. Jencks, 23 Ill. 478.....	720
Edmonds v. Ranbury, 20 Iowa, 307.....	108	Fletcher v. Ingram, 45 Wm. 191.....	90
Edwards v. Jagers, 19 Ind. 407, 416.....	770	u. Pierson, 69 Ind. 301.....	402
Edwards v. Wood, 3 Paige 580.....	774	Floytas v. Pontchartrain R. Co., 13 La. 229.....	116
Engrott v. New York, 43 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 623.....	603	Fluke v. Boston & A. R. Co., 55 N. Y. 540.....	607
Eman v. Keon, 4 Leigh. 309.....	309	Floyd v. Calvert, 58 Minn. 40, 46.....	804
Edred v. Edred, 3 Curt. Recl. 378.....	309	Fogg v. Holcomb, 64 Iowa, 393.....	606
Ehrod v. Keller, 30 Ind. 393.....	782	Folts v. Wart, 1 West. Rep. 302, 108 Ind. 404-411.....	297
Elliot v. Ince, 7 DeG. M. & G. 475.....	120	Fones v. Phillips, 39 Ark. 17.....	296
Elliot v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co., 38 Conn. 379.....	233	Foot v. Appellant, 28 Pick. 399, 303.....	323
u. Hayden, 104 Mass. 160.....	708	Ford and Sheldon's Case, 18 Coke, 1.....	544
u. Layhead, 1 West. Rep. 102, 48 Ohio St. 171.....	708	Ford v. Kendall School Dist., 1 L. R. A. 607, 121 Pa. 543.....	249
Co., 64 Iowa, 307.....	374	Fordyce v. McCanta, 51 Ark. 309.....	296
u., 4 Ohio St. 623.....	380	Forgey v. Sutliff, 5 Cow. 713.....	280
648.....	441, 442	Fort Plain Bridge Co. v. Smith, 30 N. Y. 64.....	122
397.....	405	Foster v. Hawley, 3 Hun, 66.....	604
136.....	136	u. Kansas, 112 U. S. 301 (30 L. ed. 699).....	607
137.....	137	Fothergill v. Rowland, L. R. 17 Eq. 122.....	781
138.....	138	Foulkes v. Metropolitan Dist. R. Co., L. R. 6 Q. P. Div. 187-193.....	427
139.....	139	F.....	427
140.....	140	F.....	427
141.....	141	F.....	427
142.....	142	F.....	427
143.....	143	F.....	427
144.....	144	F.....	427
145.....	145	F.....	427
146.....	146	F.....	427
147.....	147	F.....	427
148.....	148	F.....	427
149.....	149	F.....	427
150.....	150	F.....	427
151.....	151	F.....	427
152.....	152	F.....	427
153.....	153	F.....	427
154.....	154	F.....	427
155.....	155	F.....	427
156.....	156	F.....	427
157.....	157	F.....	427
158.....	158	F.....	427
159.....	159	F.....	427
160.....	160	F.....	427
161.....	161	F.....	427
162.....	162	F.....	427
163.....	163	F.....	427
164.....	164	F.....	427
165.....	165	F.....	427
166.....	166	F.....	427
167.....	167	F.....	427
168.....	168	F.....	427
169.....	169	F.....	427
170.....	170	F.....	427
171.....	171	F.....	427
172.....	172	F.....	427
173.....	173	F.....	427
174.....	174	F.....	427
175.....	175	F.....	427
176.....	176	F.....	427
177.....	177	F.....	427
178.....	178	F.....	427
179.....	179	F.....	427
180.....	180	F.....	427
181.....	181	F.....	427
182.....	182	F.....	427
183.....	183	F.....	427
184.....	184	F.....	427
185.....	185	F.....	427
186.....	186	F.....	427
187.....	187	F.....	427
188.....	188	F.....	427
189.....	189	F.....	427
190.....	190	F.....	427
191.....	191	F.....	427
192.....	192	F.....	427
193.....	193	F.....	427
194.....	194	F.....	427
195.....	195	F.....	427
196.....	196	F.....	427
197.....	197	F.....	427
198.....	198	F.....	427
199.....	199	F.....	427
200.....	200	F.....	427

G.
Galesburg v. Hawkinson, 75 Ill. 152	738	Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cummings, 106 U. S. 700
Gallagher v. Kern, 81 Mich. 138	721	(27 L. ed. 268)	506
Galpin v. Page, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 360-374 (21 L. ed. 365-368)	497, 498	Grapengether v. Fejervary, 9 Iowa. 168	366
Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Smith, 59 Tex. 406		Gravelle v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 10 Fed. Rep. 711	505
Gambert v. Hart, 44 Cal. 543	117	Graves v. American Exchange Bank, 17 N. Y. 207	96
Gannon v. Hargadon, 10 Allen. 106	670	Gray v. Bowden, 23 Pick. 282	363
Gano v. Flak, 1 West. Rep. 501, 43 Ohio St. 462	159	v. Brignardello, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 627 (17 L. ed. 693)	496
Garaty v. Du Bose, 5 S. C. 493	440	v. Crockett, 30 Kan. 188	739
Gardner v. Buckbee, 8 Cow. 120	748	v. Philadelphia R. Co., 24 Fed. Rep. 168	506
v. Gardner, 23 S. C. 588	583	v. State, 73 Ind. 576	246
v. Heartt, 3 Denio. 232	745	Great Luxembourg R. Co. v. Magnay, 25 Beav. 586	611
v. Michigan C. R. Co., 58 Mich. 590	633	Great Western R. Co. v. Hawkins, 18 Mich. 427	282
v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. 162	503	v. Miller, 19 Mich. 305	514
Garland, Ex parte, 10 Ves. Jr. 110	459	Greeley v. Stilson, 27 Mich. 154	516
v. Scott, 15 La. Ann. 143	774	Green v. Putnam, 1 Barb. 500	732
Gavett v. Manchester & L. R. Co., 15 Gray, 501	393	v. Swift, 47 Cal. 536	462
Gay v. Smith, 38 N. H. 171	117	v. Walker, 73 Wis. 548	425
Genesee Chief, The, v. Fitzhugh, 53 U. S. 12	497	Greene v. Grimshaw, 11 Ill. 369	657
How. 443 (13 L. ed. 1058)	50, 63	Greenfield v. State, 12 West. Rep. 713, 113 Ind. 597	245
Gemin v. Grier, 10 Ohio. 209	701	Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. 439	242
George v. George, 47 N. H. 27	499	v. Wakefield, 127 Mass. 275	464
v. Milbanke, 9 Ves. Jr. 190	145	Greensdale v. Dare, 20 Beav. 234	120
George Rice v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 722	322	Greenwald v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 49 Mich. 197	503
Georgia R. & Hkg. Co. v. Friddell, 79 Ga. 499	347	Gribben v. Maxwell, 34 Kan. 8	119
v. McCurdy, 45 Ga. 289	116	Gridley v. Bloomington, 68 Ill. 47	130
Gere v. Clarke, 6 Hill. 360	91	Griffin v. Cunningham, 20 Gratt. 52	536
Gest v. Packwood, 34 Fed. Rep. 372	526, 527	Griffith v. McCullum, 46 Barb. 561	138
Gibbins v. Gibbins, 1 New Eng. Rep. 98, 140 Mass. 105	308	Grim v. Jackson Twp. School Directors, 51 Pa. 219	750
Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 1 (6 L. ed. 28)	187, 189	Grimes v. Harmon, 85 Ind. 198	499
Gibson v. Burrows, 41 Mich. 713	516	Grisson v. Moore, 3 West. Rep. 667, 106 Ind. 296	494, 794
v. Soper, 6 Gray. 279	119	Grogan v. Hayward, 4 Fed. Rep. 161	550
Gilbert v. Sharp, 2 Lans. 412	598	Grouseford v. Howat, 77 Iowa. 187	188
Gilbreath v. State, 23 Tex. App. 318	648	Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. 261	388
Gill v. Middleton, 105 Mass. 478, 479	622	Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 17	441
v. Wells, 59 Md. 499	585	Gordon v. Potter, 17 Vt. 348	178
Gillam v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co., 26 Minn. 286	123	Guernsey v. Cook, 120 Mass. 501	162
Gillet v. Moody, 3 N. Y. 479	48	Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baird, 75 Tex. 266	480
Gillett v. Bate, 56 N. Y. 87	664	Gulick v. New, 14 Ind. 98	685
Gilliland v. Sellers, 2 Ohio St. 223	702	Gunther v. Lee, 45 Md. 66	273
Gilman v. Philadelphia, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 713, 724, 730 (13 L. ed. 94, 99, 101)	62, 185-187, 479
Gilmore v. Northern P. R. Co., 18 Fed. Rep. 895	505, 628
Gimbel v. Stolte, 59 Ind. 446	238
Girard Bank v. Penn. Twp. Bank, 39 Pa. 92	443
Gladwell v. Stegall, 5 Bing. N. C. 733	437
Glenn v. Eddy, 6 N. J. L. 255	425
Glocester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 126 (29 L. ed. 158)	65, 479
Glover v. Stillson, 56 Conn. 316	422, 840
Godfrey v. Dalton, 6 Bing. 460	670
Godfrey v. Crier (Ind.) 22 N. E. Rep. 999	590
v. Scott, 70 Ind. 259	784
Godley v. Hagarty, 20 Pa. 387	621
Goldsmid v. Tunbridge Wells Imp. Comra., L. R. 1 Eq. 161	596
Goodell v. Goodell (Providence County, Oct. Term, 1886)	396
v. Jackson, 20 Johns. 693	783, 784
Goodhill v. Brigham, 1 Bos. & P. 197	145
Gooding v. Shea, 103 Mass. 390	686
Goodloe v. Taylor, 3 Hawks. 458	588
Goodman v. Goodman, 28 L. J. N. S. Ch. 745	802
v. Walker, 30 Ala. 482, 68 Am. Dec. 134	670
Goodrich v. Detroit, 12 Mich. 279	516
Goodsell v. Lawson, 42 Mich. 348, 362	726
Goodwin v. Wertheimer, 99 N. Y. 149	860
Gore v. Jenness, 19 Me. 58	633
Gorham v. Hall, 67 Me. 58	464
Goshen v. England, 119 Ind. 368	590
Gosport v. Evans, 11 West. Rep. 115, 112 Ind. 183	662
Goss v. Furman, 21 Fla. 406	643
Gott v. Powell, 41 Mo. 416	496
Gould v. Boston, 120 Mass. 300, 306	159
v. Boston Duck Co., 13 Gray. 442	617
v. Coombs, 1 C. B. 543	303
Gourdin v. Read, 8 Rich. L. 230	747
Govan v. Jackson, 32 Ark. 563	832
Grady v. Wolmer, 46 Ala. 381	620
Graham v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., 46 Hun. 386	528
Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 58 Mich. 641	719
Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 62	208
Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 35 Mich. 265	719
Grand Tower Mfg. & Transp. Co. v. Ullman, 89 Ill. 244	355
		H.
		Haas v. Shaw, 91 Ind. 384-386	484
		Hackettstown v. Swackhamer, 37 N. J. L. 191	763
		Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341, 353	80, 476, 477
		v. Hopkins Academy, 14 Pick. 262	768, 770
		v. Western Union Teleg. Co., 115 Ind. 191	568, 587
		Haff v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 14 Fed. Rep. 558	117
		Hagerty v. Palmer, 6 Johns. Ch. 437	860
		Haggart v. Morgan, 5 N. Y. 423	128
		Haggitt v. Iniff, 5 DeG. M. & G. 910	151
		Haight v. Badgley, 15 Barb. 499	781
		Haines v. Beach, 3 Johns. Ch. 459	230
		Hale v. Rice, 124 Mass. 232	388
		Hall v. Culver, 34 Conn. 404	421
		v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485 (24 L. ed. 547)	185
		v. Hall, 4 Allen. 39	386
		v. Laver, 1 Hare. 571	657
		v. Piddock, 21 N. J. Eq. 311	732
		v. Tufts, 18 Pick. 459	381
		v. Vandegrift, 3 Binn. 374	660, 661
		Hall's Case, 17 Ct. Cl. 39	963
		Hallett v. Hallett, 2 Paige. 15	774
		Hallett's Estate, Re, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 696, 708, 721	571
		Halliday v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co., 74 Mo. 150, 41 Am. Rep. 309	216
		Hamblin v. Dinneford, 2 Edw. Ch. 529	781
		Hamilton v. Annapolis & E. R. Co., 1 Md. 560	202
		v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 36 Iowa. 31	232
		v. Hamilton, 1 Bell App. Cas. 736, 9 Clark & F. 327	804
		v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 119 U. S. 280 (30 L. ed. 381)	187
		Hamlin v. Parsons, 12 Minn. 106	632
		Hammer v. State, 44 N. J. L. 667	438, 434
		Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146	688
		Hancock v. Hubbard, 19 Pick. 167	239
		v. Yaden (Ind.) 6 L. R. A. 576	242, 444
		Hancox v. Abbey, 11 Ves. Jr. 179	40
		Hand v. Brookline, 128 Mass. 324	160
		v. Newton, 92 N. Y. 89	757
		Handy v. Handy, 124 Mass. 394	886
		v. Ins. Co. 37 Ohio St. 366	703

724	I	372
726	I	391
727	I	392
729	I	798
730	I	119
731	I	160
732	I	812
733	I	831
734	I	441
735	I	670
736	I	238
737	I	1,390
738	I	277
739	I	780
740	I	10, 63
741	I	40
742	I	158
743	I	496
744	I	550
745	I	308
746	I	1, 68
747	I	584
748	I	589
749	I	214
750	I	544
751	I	238
752	I	448
753	I	787
754	I	423
755	I	627
756	I	304
757	I	565
758	I	571
759	I	462
760	I	159
761	I	145
762	I	459
763	I	402
764	I	401
765	I	108
766	I	39
767	I	464
768	I	502
769	I	187
770	I	590
771	I	464
772	I	574
773	I	367
774	I	640
775	I	367
776	I	638
777	I	847
778	I	676
779	I	796
780	I	839
781	I	217
782	I	412
783	I	1, 256
784	I	571
785	I	348
786	I	485
787	I	606
788	I	610
789	I	308
790	I	589
791	I	788
792	I	558
793	I	708
794	I	599
795	I	656
796	I	611
797	I	226
798	I	229
799	I	285
800	I	804
801	I	159
802	I	468
803	I	786
804	I	58
805	I	393
806	I	394

Krug v. Davis, 87 Ind. 590	246
v. Davis, 101 Ind. 75	484
Kuhns v. Gates, 92 Ind. 66	768
Kurtz v. Hibner, 56 Ill. 514	728
Kyle v. Fayetteville, 75 N. C. 445	541, 544, 547

L

7, 118 Ind.	728
N. J. Eq.	290
285, 286	238
(89 L. ed.	588
340, 341	841
& W. L. R.	771
Ohio St.	124
, 88 Minn.	724-728
	230
	425
	277
78 Pa. 407	120
ass. 18	596
	599
	688
R. Co., 19
Wis. 489	117
Langlois v. Buffalo & R. R. Co., 19 Barb. 384	528
Lanning v. New York C. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 521	629
Lapsley v. Grierson, 8 Ct. Sess. Cas. (2d Series) (Dunlop, B. & M.) 61, 1 H. L. Cas. 496	602, 606
Laramie Co. v. Albany Co., 82 U. S. 307 (23 L. ed. 552)	107
	525
	445
oghue, 127	377
	540, 547
8 Wis. 204	258
	60, 70
	863
	36
	117
	230
18	88
2 Ill. 421	147
Leary v. Schaffer, 79 Ind. 537	670
Leavitt v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 64 Wis. 228	117
Le Breton v. Peirce, 2 Allen, 8-18	571
Leechmere v. Charlton, 15 Ves. Jr. 198	41
Le Claire v. Davenport, 18 Iowa, 210	709
Le Fevre v. Le Fevre, 4 Serg. & R. 241	758
Legal Tender Cases, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 547-561 (20 L. ed. 811, 815)	242
Leigh v. Lintheum, 80 Tex. 108	79
	188
(82 L. ed. 811	58, 479
	769
Minn. 486	288
Co., 3 West.	821
7 La. 392	115
	689
	91
	851
47 L. J. N. S.	163
	421, 422
	644
	265
	645
(12 L. ed. 256)	187
	525
807	544
as, 602	688
Nat. Bank, 58
Barb. 75	582
Lindley v. Hunt, 23 Fed. Rep. 52	474
Linnehan v. Sampson, 128 Mass. 506	844
Little v. Willford, 81 Minn. 173	280
Little Meadows, Borough of, 35 Pa. 335	788
Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Barker, 83 Ark. 350	285
v. Townsend, 41 Ark. 332	284, 285
v. Worthen, 46 Ark. 812, 380	875
Little Rock M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 833	285, 286
Littlewood v. New York, 89 N. Y. 24	285
Liverpool A. L. Asso. v. Fairhurst, 9 Exch. 422	644
7 U. R. A.

B. 200	278
	145
Co., 68 Mo. 509	118, 117
, 55 Am. Dec. 847	109
b., 15 Ir. O. L. 87	163
	228
	147
	189
	283
C. 100	541
	309
	712
b., 60 N. Y. 78	227
	129
R. Co., 19 C. B. N.	429
	539
Loomis v. Mowry, 8 Hun, 812
Lord v. Goodall S. S. Co., 102 U. S. 541 (25 L. ed. 224)	59
v. Grow, 39 Pa. 68	478, 474
Lorillard v. Monroe, 11 N. Y. 395, 63 Am. Dec. 120, 124	109
Lottawanna, The, 68 U. S. 21 Wall. 558-577 (22 L. ed. 68)	68
	129
	470
15 B. Mon. 542	770
19 Ind. 542	691
	116 slight Co., 115	254
Lucas, 119 Ind.	690
118 Ind. 544	92
lk, 64 Miss. 728	117
ll. 1 (18 L. ed. 129)	278
Low v. Harmony, 72 N. Y. 408	368
v. Mumford, 14 Johns. 426	91
Lowery v. Manhattan R. Co., 99 N. Y. 158	184
Lowrie v. Mercer, 3 Ct. Sess. Cas. (2d Series) (Dunlop, B. & M.) 968	808
Lowry v. Commercial & F. Bank, 8 Am. L. J. N. S. 111	830
v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119, 125, 126	565
Lucas v. Pennsylvania Co. 120 Ind. 206	690
Lucena v. Craufurd, 2 Bos. & P. N. B. 238	574
Ludlow v. Cooper, 4 Ohio St. 1	796
Lum v. McCarty, 38 N. J. L. 287	77
Lumley v. Wagner, 1 De G. M. & G. 604	782
Luques v. Dresden, 77 Me. 186	464
Lyman v. Clark, 9 Mass. 235	408
Lynch v. Com. 16 Serg. & R. 368	565
v. Jersey City First Nat. Bank, 9 Cent. Rep. 554, 107 N. Y. 189	599
Lyon v. Fishmongers Co., L. R. 1 App. Cas. 662	725
v. McLaughlin, 38 Vt. 429	459

M

McAllister v. Butterfield, 81 Ind. 25	499
McAndrews v. Burns, 89 N. J. L. 117	628
McArthur v. Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357	171
McAulch v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 20 Iowa, 450	149
	562
	576
	287
	594
	538
	803
	523
	812
	863
	786
	239
	161
	473
N. Y. 308, 315	496, 514
McCormick's App., 57 Pa. 54, note, 66 Am. Dec. 200	484
McCoy v. Huffman, 8 Cow. 84	176
McCrea v. Purmort, 16 Wend. 400	86
McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 316 (4 L. ed. 679)	540
McDaniel v. Correll, 19 Ill. 226	536
McDermott v. Seymour, 47 N. J. L. 174	434
MacDonald v. Irvine, L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 101, 108	392
McDonald v. Gray, 29 Tex. 88	78
v. New York, 68 N. Y. 23	764
v. State, 81 Ala. 279	268, 271
McDonough's Election, Re, 105 Pa. 400	108
McElroy v. McElroy, 113 Mass. 509	842

McEwan v. Zimmer, 38 Mich. 765	515	Mayes v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 63 Iowa, 562	235
McGatriek v. Wason, 4 Ohio St. 566	341	Mayhew v. Burns, 1 West. Rep. 577, 108 Ind. 328	681
McGe v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 10 West. Rep. 282, 82 Mo. 218	821	Maynard v. Cleaves, 149 Mass. 307	886
McGinnis v. Curry, 13 W. Va. 29	565	v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 203 (31 L. ed. 654, 657)	62
McGoon's Case, 18 Ops. Atty-Gen. 456	863	v. Percault, 80 Mich. 160	645
McGrew v. City Produce Exchange, 85 Tenn. 572	706	Mead v. Acton, 139 Mass. 341	762
McJilton v. Love, 13 Ill. 496	496	v. Parker, 115 Mass. 413	89
McKay v. Draper, 27 N. Y. 256	561	Meade v. Deputy Marshal of Va. Dist. 1 Brook. 324	687
McKersy v. Ramsay, 9 Clark & F. 818	364	Meader v. Norton, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 442 (20 L. ed. 184)	881
McKeen v. Delaware D. Canal Co., 49 Pa. 439	462	Mechanics & W. M. Mut. Sav. Bank & B. Assn. v. Meriden Agency Co., 24 Conn. 159	610
McKellar v. Detroit, 57 Mich. 158	171	Mechanics Bank v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 13 N. Y. 638	599
McKellip v. McIlhenny, 4 Watts, 317	753	Medley v. Medley, 27 Gratt. 568	686
McKenzie v. Mississippi & R. R. Boom Co., 29 Minn. 288	977	Medway v. Needham, 16 Mass. 157-161	53, 54
McKinn v. California S. R. Co., 66 Cal. 803, 21 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 539	505	Meek v. Ruffner, 2 Blackf. 23	90, 91
McLain v. Carson, 4 Ark. 164	91	Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. 397	137, 138
McLearn v. Wallace, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 644 (9 L. ed. 566)	42	Melanotte v. Teadale, 13 Mees. & W. 216	383
McLeod v. Evans, 66 Wis. 401-409	571	Mellichamp v. Mellichamp, 28 S. C. 125	749
McMicken v. Webb, 47 U. S. 6 How. 293 (12 L. ed. 443)	741	Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Copeland, 61 Ala. 876	117
McPherson v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 97 Mo. 254	822	Mendenhall v. Burton, 42 Kan. 570	739
McPike v. Pen, 51 Mo. 63	68	Merchants & P. Line v. Wagener, 71 Ala. 581	612
McQuaid v. Fontane, 24 Fla. 509	643	Merchants Bank v. McClelland, 9 Colo. 608	845
Madison v. Neal, 45 Ark. 121, 55 Am. Rep. 540	247	Merchants Dispatch Transp. Co. v. Bloch, 86 Tenn. 397	168
Madison Ave. Baptist Church v. Baptist Church in Oliver St. 73 N. Y. 82	278	v. Bolles, 80 Ill. 473	216
Madox v. Humphries, 24 Tex. 196	73	v. Cornforth, 3 Colo. 280	282
Magrav v. Lambert, 3 Pa. 444	412	Meredith v. Sacramento Co., 50 Cal. 433	352
Maghee v. Camden & A. R. Transp. Co., 45 N. Y. 514	216	Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472 (23 L. ed. 197)	468
Magnolia Ave., Re, 9 Cent. Rep. 611, 117 Pa. 56	198	v. Morrison, 78 Ky. 573	441
Maguire v. McGuire, 7 Dana, 181, 183	52	Merrick's Estate, Re, 2 Ann. 485	315
Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S. 700 (32 L. ed. 283)	818	Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 219, 221	159, 616
Mahoney v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co., 63 Me. 68	747	Merriman v. Barker (Ind.), 22 N. E. Rep. 992	91
Mallett v. Parham, 52 Miss. 921	643	Merritt v. Farmers F. Ins. & L. Co., 2 Edw. Ch. 547	387
Malley v. Hartford Carpet Co., 51 Conn. 524	589	v. Horne, 5 Ohio St. 307	699
Malone v. Hathaway, 64 N. Y. 5, 9, 505, 627, 628, 629	696	v. Merritt, 20 Ill. 80	478
v. McLaurin, 40 Miss. 161	696	Me-shing-gome-sia v. State, 36 Ind. 310	784
Maloney v. Bruce, 94 Pa. 249	663, 664	Metcalf v. First Parish in Framingham, 128 Mass. 370, 372, 373	301, 302
Mamie, The, 5 Fed. Rep. 819	59	Metropolitan Board of Excise v. Barrie, 34 N. Y. 668, 668	716
Manderson v. Commercial Bank, 28 Pa. 379	811	Metropolitan E. Co. v. Ward (N. Y. Supreme Ct. not yet reported)	384
Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 Mich. 87	381	Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Loyd, 90 N. Y. 530	869
Manhattan Oil Co. v. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co., 54 N. Y. 197	216	Metropolitan Police Board v. Wayne Co. Auditors, 13 West. Rep. 487, 68 Mich. 576	171
Manifold's Estate, Re, 5 Watts & S. 840	234, 236	Metzner v. Bauer, 98 Ind. 425	496
Mann v. Mann, 12 Helsk. 245	239	Miami & M. Turnp. Co. v. Bailly, 37 Ohio St. 104	92
Manners v. Haverhill, 135 Mass. 165	159	Michenor v. Dale, 23 Pa. 59	441
Manning v. Lowell, 130 Mass. 21, 22, 25	159	Michigan C. R. Co. v. Austin, 40 Mich. 247	503
Manufacturers & T. Bank v. Hazard, 30 N. Y. 236	757	v. Dolan, 32 Mich. 510	503
Manville v. Western Union Teleg. Co., 37 Iowa, 214	597	v. Gilbert, 46 Mich. 176	503
March v. Eastern R. Co., 40 N. H. 548	811	v. Leahoy, 10 Mich. 193, 199	503, 626
Markham v. Brown, 8 N. H. 523	304	v. Smithson, 45 Mich. 212	503
Markley v. Amos, 8 Rich. L. 468	565	Middleport v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 82 Ill. 565	147
Marks v. First Nat. Bank, 79 Ala. 550	746	Middleton v. Greeson, 8 West. Rep. 906, 108 Ind. 18	245
v. Townsend, 97 N. Y. 590	497	Milbank v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 64 How. Pr. 20	609
Marple v. Myers, 12 Pa. 125	961	Millard v. Bailey, L. R. 1 Eq. 378	362
Marr v. Western Union Teleg. Co., 85 Tenn. 529, 530, 542, 545	163, 168, 477	v. Board of Education, 8 West. Rep. 372, 121 Ill. 297	843
Marriott v. London & S. W. R. Co., 1 C. B. N. S. 469	304	Miller v. Adams, 7 Lans. 181, 52 N. Y. 409	497
Marsh v. Whitmore, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 173 (22 L. ed. 462)	610, 670	v. Black, 2 Jones, L. 341	514
Marshall v. Heard, 69 Tex. 267	620	v. Carmichael, 98 Ind. 236	238
v. York, N. & B. R. Co., 11 C. B. 655	437	v. Mendenhall (Minn.), 44 N. W. Rep. 1141	728
Martin v. American Exp. Co., 19 Wis. 336	216	v. State, 8 Gill, 145	536
v. Benoist, 20 Mo. App. 238	129	v. Wild Cat Gravel Road Co., 52 Ind. 51	591
v. Funk, 75 N. Y. 134	440, 441	Millett v. People, 5 West. Rep. 155, 117 Ill. 306	149
v. Great Indian P. R. Co., L. R. 8 Exch. 9	437	Milligan v. Poole, 35 Ind. 64	238
v. Jones, 72 Mo. 24	68	Mills v. Central R. Co., 2 Cent. Rep. 239, 41 N. J. Eq. 1	811
v. Woodruff, 2 Ind. 237	496	v. Malott, 43 Ind. 248	788
v. Wyncoop, 12 Ind. 268	796	v. Van Voorhies, 20 N. Y. 412	230
Martino v. Commerce F. Ins. Co., 15 Jones & S. 530	824	v. Williams, 16 S. C. 563	747
Marvin v. Marvin (Ark.), 12 S. W. Rep. 876	553	Milne v. Moreton, 6 Binn. 353, 361	815
Mason v. The Blaireau, 6 U. S. 2 Cranch, 240 (2 L. ed. 268)	514	Milnes v. Huddersfield, L. R. 10 Q. B. Div. 124, L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 443	593
Massachusetts C. R. Co. v. Boston, C. & F. R. Co., 121 Mass. 124	124	Milroy v. Lord, 4 De G. F. & J. 264	411
Masie v. Watts, 10 U. S. 3 Cranch, 148 (3 L. ed. 181)	456	Miner v. Beckman, 50 N. Y. 357	277
Mason v. Swan, 6 Helsk. 451, 457	43	Mingus v. Condit, 22 N. J. Eq. 313	632
Masteron v. Short, 33 How. Pr. 451	303	Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26 (32 L. ed. 555)	54, 254
Mathis v. Thomas, 101 Ind. 119	217	Minor v. Ferris, 22 Conn. 371	422
Mattox v. Mattox, 2 Ohio, 233	886	v. Rogers, 40 Conn. 512	441
Maxwell v. McAtee, 9 B. Mon. 21	227	Minot v. Harris, 182 Mass. 529	309
May v. Palmerton, 21 Wend. 407	389	v. Tappan, 122 Mass. 535	300
May v. Joyce, 30 Gratt. 662	839	v. West Roxbury, 112 Mass. 1	183, 762, 763
v. Le Claire, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 217 (20 L. ed. 50)	526	Missouri P. R. Co. v. Dwyer, 38 Kan. 58	505
		Mitchell v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 51 Mich. 236	324
		v. Harmony, 54 U. S. 13 How. 128 (14 L. ed. 81)	771

Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 501, 507 (25 L. ed. 238, 239) .....	187, 188, 679
Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Brama, 95 U. S. 754 (24 L. ed. 580) .....	235
Mohr v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 40 Iowa, 979 .....	302
Molson's Bank v. Howard, 40 N. Y. Super. Ct. (8 Jones & S. 20) .....	480, 481
Molton v. Camroux, 2 Exch. 487, 4 Exch. 17 .....	120
Molyneux v. Seymour, 30 Ga. 440, 79 Am. Dec. 687, note .....	514
Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Coon, 6 Pa. 389 .....	462
Monroe v. Collins, 17 Ohio St. 693, 695 .....	169
Monroe Co. v. Teller, 51 Iowa, 670 .....	180
Montague v. Flockton, L. R. 16 Eq. 189 .....	782
Montello, The, 78 U. S. 11 Wall 431 (30 L. ed. 151), 87 U. S. 30 Wall 470 (32 L. ed. 391) .....	88, 89
Montgomery v. Black, 13 West. Rep. 594, 134 Ill. 82 .....	475
Montgomery Co. Bank v. Albany City Bank, 7 N. Y. 459 .....	580, 581, 582, 583
Montgomery County Comrs. v. Fulton, 9 West. Rep. 351, 111 Ind. 410 .....	608
Moody v. King, 2 Bing. 447 .....	626
Moor v. Venzie, 32 Me. 343, 367 .....	602
Moore v. American Transp. Co., 65 U. S. 24 How. 22 .....	39
Moore v. .....	(C. Y. 41) .....
Moore v. .....	343
Moore v. .....	743
Moore v. .....	574
Moore v. .....	88, 89, 49
Moore v. .....	340
Moore v. .....	782
Moorman .....	141
Morgan .....	163
v. Chester, 4 Conn. 287 .....	273
v. Nunes, 54 Minn. 311 .....	128
v. State Bank, 11 N. Y. 404 .....	74
v. Wattlea, 60 Ind. 201 .....	785
Morgan's Steamship Co. v. Louisiana Board of Health, 113 U. S. 455 (30 L. ed. 397) .....	185, 187, 303, 371
Morley's Trusts, The, 25 Week. Rep. 685 .....	303
Morrill v. Hurley, 130 Mass. 99 .....	189
v. St. Anthony Falls Water-Power Co., 20 Minn. 222, 223 .....	735
Morrow v. Wood, 25 Wis. 88 .....	343
Morse v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 30 Minn. 445 .....	608
v. Purvis, 68 N. Y. 285 .....	643
Morville v. Fowle, 4 New Eng. Rep. 28, 144 Mass. 109 .....	700, 770
Moses v. Macferlan, 2 Burr. 1006 .....	608
v. Micou, 79 Ala. 344 .....	611
v. Scott, 54 Ala. 608 .....	611
Mount v. Van Ness, 23 N. J. Eq. 384 .....	40
Mugler v. Kansas, 129 U. S. 983, 981 (31 L. ed. 203, 210) .....	183, 187, 189, 190
Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 507 .....	622
Muller v. Pondir, 55 N. Y. 335 .....	598
Mulliken v. Aughinbaugh, 1 Penn. & W. 124 .....	315
Multon v. Clayton, 54 Iowa, 436 .....	391
Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 126 (34 L. ed. 77, 87) .....	185, 187
Munroe v. Merchant, 25 Barb. 599 .....	278
Munson v. Cole, 85 Ind. 303 .....	795
v. Munson, 30 Conn. 435 .....	89
Murdock v. Chapman, 9 Gray. 189 .....	277
Murphy v. Deane, 101 Mass. 455 .....	661
v. Lowell, 124 Mass. 564 .....	139
v. Smith, 194 N. H. N. S. 201 .....	305
v. Teier, 56 Ind. 545 .....	795
Murray v. Ballou, 1 Johns. Ch. 506 .....	516
v. Lardner, 89 U. S. 3 Wall 110 (17 L. ed. 657) .....	347
Mussey v. Holt, 24 N. H. 343 .....	768
Mutual Nat. Bank v. Rotge, 20 La. Ann. 935 .....	445
Myatt v. Myatt, 44 Ill. 473 .....	807
Myers v. Malcom, 6 Ill. 323 .....	203
N.
Nagel v. Nagel, 12 Mo. 53 .....	488
Naglee v. Alexandria & F. R. Co., 25 Va. 707 .....	264
Nailor v. French, 4 Yeates, 241 .....	128
Nance v. Hill, 20 S. C. 227 .....	749
Nashville v. Hay, 85 U. S. 19 Wall 468 (32 L. ed. 184) .....	764
Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 129 U. S. 98 (32 L. ed. 352) .....	289, 271
Nathan v. Tompkins, 25 Ala. 437 .....	610, 612
National Bank of America v. Bangs, 105 Mass. 441 .....	300
National Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 77 U. S. 10 Wall 122, 187 (19 L. ed. 397, 399) .....	94, 95, 96
National Ban. Assn. v. Grauman, 5 West. Rep. 843, 107 Ind. 288 .....	408
National Exch. Bank v. Wilder, 34 Minn. 149 .....	610
Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 143 .....	611
Nealley v. Bradford, 5 New Eng. Rep. 514, 145 Mass. 561, 564 .....	189
Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 20 Vt. 394 .....	305
Nelson v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 69 Mo. 500 .....	621
v. Brodback, 44 Mo. 500 .....	68
v. Clay, 7 J. J. Marsh. 129 .....	68
v. Hayner, 68 Ill. 487 .....	705
v. Murfer, 68 Ala. 506 .....	294, 320
Nettleton v. Dixon, 2 Ind. 645 .....	328
Nevins v. Peoria, 41 Ill. 502 .....	322, 345
New v. Nicoll, 73 N. Y. 127 .....	627
Newall v. Bartlett, 114 N. Y. 289 .....	134
Newell v. Minneapolis, L. & M. R. Co., 25 Minn. 112, 25 Am. Law Rep. 431 .....	308
New Gloucester School Fund v. Bradbury, 11 Me. 118 .....	779
New Haven & N. Co. v. Goodwin, 43 Conn. 230 .....	403
New Haven City Bank v. Perkins, 20 N. Y. 554 .....	501
New Haven Steamboat Co. v. Sargent, 50 Conn. 189 .....	729, 737
New Jersey Cent. R. Co. v. Van Horn, 28 N. J. L. 129 .....	324
New Jersey Eino & I. Co. v. Morris Canal & R. Co., 1 L. R. A. 122, 13 Cent. Rep. 342, 44 N. J. Eq. 299 .....	121
New Orleans v. Stafford, 37 La. Ann. 417 .....	700
v. United States, 25 U. S. 10 Pet. 717 (9 L. ed. 594) .....	600
New Orleans Cotton Exchange v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 2 Intern. Com. Rep. 299-294 .....	85
New Orleans Gas Light Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. Co., 115 U. S. 680 (29 L. ed. 518) .....	252, 254
New York v. Hamilton F. Ins. Co., 20 N. Y. 45 .....	574
New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 34 U. S. 17 Wall 257 (21 L. ed. 627) .....	163, 164, 165
New York C. & H. R. R. Co., Re, 15 Hun, 68 .....	291
New York Elevated R. Co., Re, 70 N. Y. 337 .....	717
New York, L. R. & W. R. Co., Re, 20 Hun, 1, 49 Hun, 539 .....	391
New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 619 (29 L. ed. 934) .....	221
New York Rubber Co. v. Rothbury, 9 Cent. Rep. 327, 107 N. Y. 310-316 .....	706
Nichols v. Lewis, 15 Conn. 127 .....	726
Nickerson v. Chase, 122 Mass. 298 .....	294, 296
Niell v. Morley, 9 Ven. Jr. 478 .....	120
Nightingale v. Withington, 15 Mass. 272 .....	178
Nixon v. Campbell, 2 West. Rep. 681, 108 Ind. 47 .....	484
Noel v. Ewing, 9 Ind. 37 .....	53
Norris v. Abington Academy, 7 Gill & J. 7 .....	770
Norristown v. Moyer, 67 Pa. 355 .....	605
North & West Branch R. Co. v. Swank, 105 Pa. 535 .....	214
North Vernon v. Voegler, 1 West. Rep. 600, 108 Ind. 314 .....	607
Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Haselott, 2 West. Rep. 690, 106 Ind. 313 .....	602, 603
Norton v. Reid, 11 S. C. 598 .....	80
v. Turrill, 2 P. Wms. 144 .....	645
v. Wiswall, 25 Barb. 618 .....	347
Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall 104, 109-123 (20 L. ed. 545-553) .....	61, 66
Noyes v. Blakeman, 6 N. Y. 557 .....	607
Nugent v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co., 5 New Eng. Rep. 685, 80 Me. 62-72 .....	347
Nuttall v. Bracewell, L. R. 2 Exch. 1, 11 .....	737
O.
O'Brien v. Capwell, 20 Barb. 407 .....	602
Odd Fellows Hall v. Masser, 24 Pa. 510 .....	713
Oelrichs v. Spain, 22 U. S. 15 Wall 231 (21 L. ed. 46) .....	446
Ogdensburg & L. C. R. Co. v. Pratt, 20 U. S. 23 Wall 123 (22 L. ed. 627) .....	282
Ogdensburg R. Co. v. Pratt, 20 U. S. 23 Wall 126 (22 L. ed. 627) .....	282
Oglesby v. Attrill, 105 U. S. 605 (35 L. ed. 1183) .....	101
Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Cosby, 4 West. Rep. 484, 107 Ind. 38 .....	353
v. Porter, 68 Ill. 437 .....	299
Old Colony & F. R. R. Co. v. Plymouth Co., 14 Gray, 135 .....	124
Old Colony R. Co. v. Tripp, 5 New Eng. Rep. 283, 147 Mass. 26 .....	304
Old Colony R. Corp. v. Evans, 6 Gray, 29 .....	80
Oliver v. Platt, 44 U. S. 3 How. 410 (11 L. ed. 627) .....	286
v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 439, 492, 500 .....	189, 190
Olmsted v. Elder, 3 Sandf. 285 .....	279
Olt v. Lohnan, 19 Ill. 379 .....	673

O'Neil v. Adams Exp. Co., 1 Cent. L. J. 188, 189	187
O'Neil v. Newell, 8 East, 384	181
O'Neil v. Blessing, 34 Ohio St. 38	708
Ontario Bank v. Lightbody, 13 Wend. 103	500
Outbank v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 194	237
Opinions of Justices, 8 Gray, 21	168
Oregon R. Co. v. Walt, 3 Or. 91	202
Oregonian R. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 27 Fed. Rep. 278	588
Orford v. Benton, 26 N. H. 306	626
Orleans First Nat. Bank v. State Bank, 29 Neb. 769	851
Ormond v. Martin, 37 Ala. 605	738
Osborne v. Mobile, 89 U. S. 18 Wall. 479 (21 L. ed. 470)	185
v. Morgan, 180 Mass. 102	129
Osgood v. Artz, 17 Fed. Rep. 575	686
Ott v. Kaufman, 10 Cent. Rep. 107, 68 Md. 54	90
Ottawa Gas-Light Co. v. Graham, 28 Ill. 74	453
Ottawa Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Thompson, 39 Ill. 600	263
Outram v. Morewood, 8 East, 347	652
Over v. Shannon, 75 Ind. 352	484
Owen v. Delamere, L. R. 15 Eq. 184	774
Owens v. Snodgrass, 6 Dana, 229	644
Owings v. Jones, 9 Md. 108	630
Osburn v. Adams, 70 Ill. 291	120

P.

Pacific Bank v. Robinson, 57 Cal. 520	684
Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 335	108
v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 70 Ill. 324	263
v. Freeman, 19 Mo. 421	373
v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. 678	657
Painter v. London, B. & S. O. R. Co., 2 C. B. N. S. 702	304
Palestine v. Barnes, 50 Tex. 588	799
Palmer v. Foley, 71 N. Y. 106	497
v. Hatch, 48 Mo. 568	473
v. Rowan, 21 Neb. 452	818
Paramore v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 58 Ga. 386	286
v. Western R. Co., 53 Ga. 386	282
Pardee v. Kanady, 1 Cent. Rep. 250, 100 N. Y. 121	142
Parham v. McCravy, 6 Rich. Eq. 140	821
Parish v. Eden, 62 Wm. 372	117
Parker v. Hollis, 50 Ala. 411	672
v. Lowell, 11 Gray, 353	186
v. Saratoga County, 9 Cent. Rep. 263, 106 N. Y. 302	764
v. West Coast Packing Co., 5 L. R. A. 61, 17 Or. 510	725, 727
Parkersburg & O. R. Transp. Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 691, 701 (37 L. ed. 564, 568)	127, 479
Parrott v. Byers, 40 Cal. 622, 623	812
Parsons v. Freeman, 3 P. Wms. 644, note	39
v. Gosben, 11	763
v. Root, 41 Ct	86
Patch v. Covington	80
Paterson v. Socie	ig Useful
Mfra. 24	439
Pattison v. Pattison	822
Patton v. Coates,	822
Paul v. Davis, 100	483
Paulmier v. Erie	506
Payne v. Troy & I	569
Peabody v. Hamill	514
v. Norfolk, 9	732
Peak v. Wigginton	88
Pearl St., Re, 111	550
Pearman v. Pearn	1, 602
Pearson v. Concov	& Eng. R.
R. Cas. 102	610
v. Shelton, 1 Mees. & W. 504	91
Peck v. Smith, 8 New Eng. Rep. 677, 16 R. I. —	229
Pearson v. Stortz, 31 W. Va. 220	356
Peck v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 94 U. S. 178 (24 L. ed. 98)	187
Peirce v. Goddard, 23 Pick. 559	682
v. New Hampshire, 46 U. S. 5 How. 504 (12 L. ed. 278)	189
Pell v. Ulmar, 18 N. Y. 139	279
Pellamino v. St. Joseph's Society, 16 Cin. L. Bul. 27	211
Penuegar v. State, 2 L. R. A. 708, 87 Tenn. 244	58
Pennington v. Yell, 11 Ark. 212, 52 Am. Dec. 262	670
Pennoyer v. Saginaw, 8 Mich. 534	171
Pennsylvania & D. R. Co. v. Leuffer, 34 Pa. 169	98
Pennsylvania Co. v. Marlon, 2 West. Rep. 234, 104 Ind. 239	680
v. Marshall, 7 West. Rep. 445, 119 Ill. 899	268
Pennsylvania Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Wiler, 100 Ind. 99	401, 408

7 L. R. A.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Aspell, 23 Pa. 147	112-117
v. Barnett, 59 Pa. 263	312
v. Kilgore, 32 Pa. 292	147
v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co., 118 U. S. 309 (30 L. ed. 92)	264
Penny-Pot Landing v. Philadelphia, 16 Pa. 79	659
I	Teleg.
I	308
I	644, 645
I	696
I	712, 717
I	807, 808
I	728
I	716
I	771
I	35 Hun,
I	71
v. Brotherton, 47 Cal. 306	649
v. Carpenter, 24 N. Y. 86	738
v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. (Ill.) 22 N. E. Rep. 798	198
v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283, 97 Am. Dec. 141, and note	694
v. City Bank, 93 N. Y. 563	639
v. Columbia Co., 43 N. Y. 120	717
v. Cooper, 83 Ill. 586	149
v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 223, 29 Mich. 106	171
v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532	717
v. Fellen, 58 Cal. 218	907
v. Fielda, 58 N. Y. 491	183
v. Fong Ah Sing, 70 Cal. 8-11	648
v. Gates, 44 Cal. 53	898
v. Gilson, 12 Cent. Rep. 616, 109 N. Y. 389, 397	716
v. Hazelwood, 8 West. Rep. 538, 116 Ill. 327	147
v. Hoffman, 8 West. Rep. 522, 116 Ill. 567	108
v. Holley, 12 Wend. 481	626
v. Home Inn Co., 98 N. Y. 523, 544	716
v. Huribut, 24 Mich. 44	171
v. Huson, 78 Cal. 154	743
v. Institution of Protestant Deaconesses, 71 Ill. 229	147
v. Judge, 40 Mich. 780	812
v. King, 1 L. R. A. 298, 110 N. Y. 418	716
v. Kopplekom, 16 Mich. 342	101
v. Lacombe, 99 N. Y. 43	246
v. Laine, 33 Cal. 55	198
v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 53 Mich. 277	719
v. Laning (Mich.) 41 N. W. Rep. 494	741
v. Leong Sing, 77 Cal. 117	648
v. Liscombe, 60 N. Y. 559	716
v. Luther, 1 Wend. 43	823
v. McCaffrey, 75 Mich. 115	513
v. Meech, 101 Ill. 200	149
v. Mellen, 32 Ill. 182	147
v. New York Co., 11 Abb. Pr. 114	249
v. New York, 19 Hun, 441	687
v. New York Fire Comrs., 73 N. Y. 443	687
v. Oakland Bd. of Education, 56 Cal. 381	248
v. Olsen, 50 Cal. 123	649
v. Pope, 58 Cal. 437	506
v. Pratt, 22 Hun, 300	512
v. Quincy Bd. of Education, 101 Ill. 306	243
v. Richards, 99 N. Y. 620	77
v. Rickett, 8 Cow. 230	70
v. Riley, 56 Cal. 107	648
v. Smith, 69 N. Y. 576	406, 451
v. State Bd. of Education, 49 Cal. 684	248
v. Tweed, 18 Abb. Pr. N. R. 77, 62 Am. Dec. 124, note	109
v. Ward, 77 Cal. 113	648
v. Warden of N. Y. County Jail, 1 Cent. Rep. 173, 100 N. Y. 20	716
v. West, 8 Cent. Rep. 758, 106 N. Y. 296	139
v. Wright, 70 Ill. 388	147
People's Bank v. Franklin Bank (Tenn.) 6 L. R. A. 724	851
People's Sav. Bank v. Finney, 63 Ind. 400	238
Pepper v. Western Union Teleg. Co., 4 L. R. A. 680, 87 Tenn. 554	477
Perkins v. Milford, 59 Me. 315	464
Permon v. First Municipality, 44 U. S. 8 How. 609 (11 L. ed. 742)	349
Perry v. Jackson, 88 N. C. 108	119
v. Lansing, 17 Hun, 84	508
v. Worcester, 8 Gray, 544, 547	169, 198
Person v. Warren, 14 Barb. 498	129
Pettingill v. Devin, 35 Iowa, 358	624, 625, 626, 627
Petty v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 8 West. Rep. 297, 88 Mo. 306	821
Pfohl v. Simpson, 74 N. Y. 137	854
Phelan v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., 113 N. Y. 147	296
Phelps v. Mankato, 23 Minn. 275, 279	159
v. Wall, 30 N. Y. 73	129

Philadelphia & S. M. Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 325-345 (30 L. ed. 1200-1204), 1 Intern. Com. Rep. 811.....	64	Proctor v. Lewiston, 25 Ill. 155.....	550
Philadelphia & T. R. Co's Case, 5 Whart. 25.....	373	Prospect Park & C. I. R. Co., Re, 13 Hun, 345....	291
Philadelphia Ball Club v. Hallan (In Court of C. P. Phila.).....	384	Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co., 109 U. S. 576-598 (27 L. ed. 1038-1044).....	66
Philadelphia Seventh Nat. Bank v. Cook, 73 Pa. 483, 485.....	94, 96	Providence S. E. Co. v. Providence & S. E. S. Co., 12 R. L. 848, 868.....	725
4 Wis. 475.....	506	Puitt v. Gaston County, 94 N. C. 709.....	541, 544
10).....	54	Pulaski Co. Equalization Board Cases, 49 Ark. 518.....	376, 377
1 N. Y. ....	263	Pullen v. Raleigh, 68 N. C. 451.....	540, 541, 544, 547
R. & Ch. ....	480	Pulliam v. Byrd, 2 Strobb. Eq. 134.....	145, 889, 840
142.....	142	Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co., 115 U. S. 587 (29 L. ed. 499).....	418
355.....	355	Purcell v. Allemong, 22 Gratt. 749.....	94
401.....	401	v. Purcell, 4 Hen. & M. 512.....	803
394.....	394	Purdue v. Noffsinger, 15 Ind. 385.....	401
278.....	278	Purdy v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 61 N. Y. 358.....	528
804.....	804	Purse v. Snaphin, 1 Atk. 414.....	391
323.....	323	Putnam v. Payne, 13 Johns. 312.....	399
3.84 (29 L. ....	479	v. Putnam, 8 Pick. 433.....	64
478.....	478	Pym v. Great Northern R. Co. & Best & S. 769..	285
549.....	549
(S. 377 (28).....	401	Q.
866.....	866	Quincy Min. Co. v. Kitts, 43 Mich. 34, 39..	503, 504, 628
890.....	890	Quinn v. Heisel, 40 Mich. 575.....	511
644.....	644	v. Markoe, 37 Minn. 439.....	534
643.....	643
300.....	300	R.
92, 98.....	92, 98	Railroad Co. v. Van Dorn, 1 C. Ct. Rep. 398.....	708
423.....	423	Raleigh v. Griffith, 37 Ark. 150.....	404
487.....	487	Ralston v. Moore, 2 West. Rep. 747, 105 Ind. 249.....	91
774.....	774	Ramot v. Schotenfels, 15 Iowa. 457.....	265
153.....	153	Ramsour v. Thompson, 65 N. C. 628.....	235
6.....	851	Ranck v. Albright, 36 Pa. 307.....	623
670.....	670	Randall v. Bourguardez, 23 Fla. 284.....	643
617.....	617	v. Raab, 2 Abb. Pr. 307.....	278
erson, 37.....	506	Rankin v. Ingwersen, 8 Cent. Rep. 371, 49 N. J. L. 481.....	621
rk Third.....	506	Ranking v. Barnard, 5 Madd. 32.....	235
ed. 722).....	364, 500	Ratcliff v. Ratcliff, 1 Swab. & T. 467-478.....	366
	698	Rathke v. Gardner, 134 Mass. 14, 16.....	156
Planters Bank v. Davis, 31 Ala. 636.....	94	Ratterman v. Western Union Teleg. Co., 127 U. S. 411-423 (32 L. ed. 239-234).....	64
v. Keesee, 7 Heisk. 200.....	94	Rawlinson v. Oriett, Carth. 96.....	272
v. Merritt, 7 Heisk. 177.....	468	Rayson v. Spencer, 113 Mass. 40.....	242
Plate v. New York C. R. Co., 37 N. Y. 472.....	217	Raymond v. Morrison, 59 Iowa. 371.....	525
Platter v. Elkhart County, 1 West. Rep. 235, 108 Ind. 860.....	116	Raynor v. Hoagland, 7 Jones & S. 11.....	536
Plopper v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co., 18 Hun, 625.....	758	Reary v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co., 40 La. Ann. 32.....	112-115
Plumb v. Cattaraugus Ins. Co., 18 N. Y. 396.....	802	Reasoner v. Creek, 161 Ind. 483.....	496
Plunkett v. Sharpe, 1 Lee, Eccl. 441.....	661	Rector v. Buckhart, 3 Hill, 193.....	622
Poe v. Foster, 4 Watts & S. 335.....	340	Redus v. Hayden, 43 Miss. 624.....	696
Pollard v. Hagan, 44 U. S. 3 How. 212 (11 L. ed. 565).....	184	Reed v. Reed, 3 Head, 451.....	696
Pollett v. Long, 54 N. Y. 200.....	481	v. Richmond Street R. Co., 50 Ind. 342.....	591
Pope v. Bank of Albion, 59 Barb. 228.....	70	Reeder v. Sayre, 70 N. Y. 150, 184.....	69, 70
Porter v. Bleiler, 17 Barb. 154.....	48	Reeves v. Butcher, 31 N. J. L. 224.....	437
v. Williams, 9 N. Y. 142.....	550	v. State Bank, 8 Ohio St. 435.....	364
Port Huron v. Chadwick, 52 Mich. 320.....	526	Reg. v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 1 El. & El. 545.....	687
Postel v. Palmer, 71 Iowa, 157.....	788	v. Mills, 10 Clark & F. 749.....	804
Pottawatomie Co. v. O'Sullivan, 17 Kan. 68.....	460	Reid v. State, 53 Ala. 402.....	329
Potter v. Howe, 2 New Eng. Rep. 167, 141 Mass. 857.....	795	Renard v. Sampson, 12 N. Y. 551.....	227
v. Smith, 36 Ind. 231.....	453	Renner v. Canfield, 36 Minn. 90.....	619
Pottstown Gas Co. v. Murphy, 39 Pa. 257.....	807	Reriok v. Kern, 14 Serg. & R. 297.....	768
Poultney v. Fairhaven, Brayt. 185.....	185	Reubelt v. Noblesville, 4 West. Rep. 509, 106 Ind. 478.....	168
Pound v. Turck, 35 U. S. 459 (24 L. ed. 525).....	242	Rex v. Liverpool, 2 Burr. 731.....	326
Powell v. Board of Education, 97 Ill. 375.....	632	v. Lyme Regis, 1 Doug. 154.....	327
v. Holman, 50 Ark. 65.....	569	v. Medley, 6 Car. & P. 232.....	596
v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678 (32 L. ed. 253).....	467	v. Richardson, 1 Burr. 540.....	327
Powers v. Council Bluffs, 45 Iowa, 556.....	550	v. Stone, 1 East, 639.....	327
Pratt v. Law, 13 U. S. 9 Cranch, 456 (3 L. ed. 791).....	229	v. Twynning, 2 Barn. & Ald. 386.....	307
Prentice v. Geiger, 74 N. Y. 342.....	497	Reynolds v. Hosmer, 45 Cal. 616.....	496
v. Harrison, 4 Ad. & El. N. S. 662.....	700	v. Manning, 15 Md. 510.....	496
Prevost v. Gratz, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 491 (5 L. ed. 811).....	684	v. Palmer, 21 Fed. Rep. 433, 439, note.....	474
Presinger v. Harness, 13 West. Rep. 646, 114 Ind. 491.....	120	Rhoades v. Blackiston, 106 Mass. 384.....	575
Price v. Berrington, 3 Macn. & G. 496.....	494	Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 37 U. S. 13 Pet. 719, 723 (9 L. ed. 1258, 1260).....	64, 399
v. Earl of Torrington, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. (6th ed.) 566.....	224	Rice v. Frayser, 24 Fed. Rep. 460.....	404
v. Knights of Honor, 68 Tex. 361, 366.....	191, 223	Rich v. Lord, 18 Pick. 325.....	408
v. Neale, 3 Burr. 1365.....	117	Richards v. Green, 23 N. J. Eq. 586.....	58
v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co., 72 Mo. 414.....	230	v. Raymond, 92 Ill. 612, 34 Am. Rep. 151....	243
v. State Bank, 14 Ark. 50.....	626	Richardson, Ex parte, 3 Madd. 138.....	774
Priest v. Cummings, 20 Wend. 350.....	839	v. Paige, 54 Vt. 373.....	322
Priestley v. Fowler, 8 Mees. & W. 1.....	230	Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 27 (30 L. ed. 844).....	656
Frigg v. Pennsylvania, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 610, 611 (10 L. ed. 1067).....	230	v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375, 378, 94 Am. Dec. 451.....	109
Procter v. Newhall, 17 Mass. 81.....	230	Richmond Co. v. Ellis, 59 N. Y. 620.....	763
71. R. A.		Richmond Mfg. Co. v. Atlantic De Laine Co., 10 R. L. 106.....	460
		Richmond Street R. Co. v. Reed, 63 Ind. 9.....	591
		Rigg v. Wilton, 13 Ill. 15.....	543

Riggan v. Green, 80 N. C. 236, 239.....	11	nd of Ringgold v. Ringgold, 1 Harr. & G. 11.....			376
Ripley County Comrs. v. Hill, 13 West. Rep. 774, 115 Ind. 816.....		a, 11	476
Ripon v. Bittel, 30 Wis. 614.....		197..	264
Rippe v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co., 23 Minn. 18.....			407
Rising v. Brainard, 86 Ill. 80.....			781
Rosch v. Hill, 54 Ind. 245.....			329
Robbins v. Chicago, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 657 (18 L. ed. 427).....			575
v. New York Ins. Co., 1 Hall, 326.....			560
v. Shelby County Taxing Dist., 120 U. S. 489 (30 L. ed. 694).....			239
Roberts v. Dunsmuir, 75 Cal. 203.....		k, 89	566
v. Knights, 7 Allen, 449.....			217
v. Roberts, 15 Week. Rep. 117.....			348
v. Sutherland, 4 Or. 219.....		94, 95	120
v. Tennell, 3 T. R. Mon. 247.....			565
Robeson v. Hornbaker, 3 N. J. Eq. 60.....			713
Robinson v. Addison, 2 Beav. 515, 520.....			788
v. Howard, 84 N. C. 151.....			787
v. Howard, 5 Cal. 428.....			842, 343
v. Ryan, 23 N. Y. 380.....			842, 343
v. Schenck, 102 Ind. 307, 318.....			24
Rochester v. Levering, 2 West. Rep. 330, 104 Ind. 562, 795.....		Iowa,	93
v. Rush, 30 N. Y. 302.....			70
Rochette v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 38 .....		West.	90
.....			322
.....		1001,
.....			66
.....			783
.....			858
.....			794
.....			627
.....			51
.....		1).....	710
.....			196
.....			844
.....			811
.....			309
.....			272
.....		Am.
.....			604
.....			358
.....			120
.....			907
.....			388, 441
.....			489
.....			288
.....			441
.....			516
.....			91
.....		5) 18
.....		484,	795
.....			516
.....			750
.....			145
.....		1, 509	676
.....			715
.....		329,	380
.....			398
.....			478
.....			93
.....			596
.....			208
.....			665
.....		1, 91
.....			505
.....			273
.....			308
.....			686
.....		269),	643
.....		V. Y.
.....			523
.....			92
.....			661
.....		68	574
.....		1, 185,	479
.....			813
.....			91
.....			676
.....			623
.....		38,	474
Shorer v. State, 10 Ark. 250.....			341
Shores v. Carley, 8 Allen, 425.....	117		696
Shoults v. McPheeters, 79 Ind. 878.....	216		350
Shriver v. Shriver, 66 N. Y. 575.....	117		278
v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co., 24 Minn. 506.....			263
Stickles v. Mather, 20 Wend. 72.....	538		495
Sidney v. Sidney, L. R. 17 Eq. 65, 66.....	848		392
Sigourney v. Lloyd, 8 Barn. & C. 622.....	569		562
v. Munn, 7 Conn. 11.....	273		795
Simar v. Canaday, 53 N. Y. 226.....	770		230
Simon v. Gratz, 2 Peur. & W. 412, 23 Am. Dec. 38.....			341

B.

Backett v. New Albany, 38 Ind. 478.....
Badd, Re, 31 Beav. 650.....
Bager v. Portsmouth, St. P. & R. R. Co., 31 Me. 228.....
St. John v. Bumstead, 17 Barb. 100.....
St. Joseph v. Ensworth, 65 Mo. 628.....
St. Joseph & Denver City R. Co. v. Ryan, 11 Kan. 602, 15 Am. Rep. 357.....
St. Lawrence, The, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 627 (17 L. ed. 188).....
St. Louis v. Weber, 44 Mo. 549.....
St. Louis & C. R. Co. v. Thomas, 34 Fed. Rep. 774.....
St. Louis, B. & T. R. Co. v. People, 127 Ill. 627.....
St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Person, 49 Ark. 188.....
v. Weakly, 50 Ark. 397.....
v. White, 48 Ark. 495.....
Salisbury First Nat. Bank v. Michael, 93 N. C. 68.....
Salter v. Burt, 20 Wend. 205.....
Salters v. Delaware & E. Canal Co., 3 Hun, 333.....
Sanderson v. Caldwell, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 195.....
v. White, 18 Pick. 323, 383.....
Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 123 U. S. 288, 295 (31 L. ed. 149, 151).....	59, 340

Stewart v. Boston & P. R. Corp., 6 New Eng. Rep. 273, 146 Mass. 605.....	117
v. Chambers, 2 Sandf. Ch. 382.....	368
v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 53 Md. 564.....	331
v. New Orleans, 9 La. Ann. 451, 61 Am. Dec. 218.....	109
v. Woodward, 50 Vt. 78.....	473
Stiles v. Granville, 6 Cush. 458.....	178
Stocking v. State, 7 Ind. 325.....	686
Stockton v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co., 1 Int. Com. Rep. 411, 32 Fed. Rep. 9.....	68
Stockwell v. Malone Bank, 36 Hun. 563.....	558
Stoddard v. Gibbs, 1 Sumn. 263.....	596
Stohr v. San Francisco M. F. Soc. 82 Cal. 597.....	582
Stone v. Bird, 16 Kan. 494.....	329
Stoneman v. Pyle, 35 Ind. 104.....	447
Stoolfoos v. Jenkins, 8 Serg. & R. 157, 175.....	606, 609
Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 437.....	727
Storris v. Utica, 17 N. Y. 108.....	704
Storrs v. Barker, 6 Johns. Ch. 166.....	758
Story v. Elliot, 8 Cow. 27.....	846
Stout v. Leonard, 37 N. J. L. 495.....	128
v. McAdams, 3 Ill. 87.....	269
Stowell v. Hastings, 59 Vt. 494.....	522
Strader v. Graham, 51 U. S. 10 How. 94, 97 (13 L. ed. 341, 342).....	340
Stramburg v. Heckman, Bush. L. 250.....	514
Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 7 West. Rep. 470, 64 Mich. 216.....	117
Stribling v. Hart, 20 Fla. 226.....	648
Strieb v. Cox, 9 West. Rep. 349, 111 Ind. 239.....	683
Stringer v. Frost, 2 L. R. A. 614, 116 Ind. 477.....	680
Strong v. Bass, 36 Pa. 333.....	264, 236, 239
Stuart v. Kalamazoo School Dist. 30 Mich. 69.....	242
Stuhl v. Shipp, 44 Ill. 134.....	730
Stultz v. Dickey, 5 Blun. 287.....	210
Sturge v. Great Western R. Co., L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 444.....	309
Sturges v. Crowninshield, 117 U. S. 4 Wheat. 302.....	341

T.

Taber v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 489.....	116, 324
Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray. 417.....	133, 154
Talbridge v. Hill, 21 Barb. 84.....	145
Talmage v. Peck, 7 N. Y. 328.....	43
Tarry v. Ashton, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 314.....	655
Tash v. Adams, 10 Cush. 252.....	464
Tatterson v. Suffolk Mfg. Co., 106 Mass. 56.....	823
Taylor v. Galloway, 1 Ohio, 232.....	796
v. Jones, 42 N. H. 25.....	90
v. Robinson, 14 Cal. 395.....	406
v. Taylor, 1 Lee, Eccl. 571, 5 Eng. Eccl. Rep. 454.....	307
v. Townsend, 8 Mass. 411.....	279
Tenchout v. Des Moines B. G. Street R. Co., 75 Iowa, 727.....	811
Tenb v. Roth, 39 Ark. 66.....	404
Ten Eyck v. Runk, 31 N. J. L. 423.....	630
Terre Haute & L. R. Co. v. Buck, 56 Ind. 347.....	568
Thayer v. Brooks, 17 Ohio, 439.....	468
The License Cases, 46 U. S. 5 How. 608 (12 L. ed. 256).....	156, 188
Thomas v. Peunrich, 23 Ohio St. 55.....	702
v. People, 59 Ill. 160.....	604
v. West Jersey R. Co., 101 U. S. 71 (25 L. ed. 950).....	255

7 L. R. A.

Tt	mph. 238.....	685
Tt	K. 116.....	774
	.....	36
	.....	758
	.....	774
	.....	511
	11 Ind. 272.....	704
	.....	758
	....., 53 Mich. 522.....	513
	.....	36
Tt	....., 82 N. Y. 1.....	443
Tt	Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 269, 269.....	369, 269
	.....	702
Tt	....., 3 L. ed. 103)...	64
Tt	.....	301
Tt	78, 67 Am. Dec. ....	484
	.....	558
Tt	72, 174.....	159
Tt	..... N. J. L. 568.....	364
Tobin v. Portland S. & P. R. Co., 59 Me. 183.....	304
Todd v. Union Dime Sav. Inst., 3 N. Y. & N. H. 697.....	230
Tomle v. Hampton (Ill.) 21 N. E. Rep. 800.....	120
Tourtillot v. Phelps, 4 Gray, 310.....	617
Towles v. Towles, 1 Head, 601.....	239
Town v. Needham, 8 Paige, 545.....	768
Townsend v. Smith, 47 Wis. 63.....	313
Tracewell v. Farnsley, 2 West. Rep. 270, 104 Ind. 497.....	484
Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 83 (25 L. ed. 550).....	58
Travis v. Milne, 9 Hare, 141.....	793
v. Taylor, 12 Jur. N. S. 791.....	349
Trecothick v. Austin, 4 Mason, 16-39.....	571
Tresch v. Wirtz, 34 N. J. Eq. 124.....	645
Trimm v. Marsh, 54 N. Y. 549.....	278
Troy v. Cheshire R. Co., 23 N. H. 31, 103.....	407
Troy & B. R. Co. v. Lee, 13 Barb. 169.....	291
Trowell v. Carraway, 10 Henk. 104.....	443
True v. Plumley, 36 Me. 466.....	529
Tucker v. Cole, 54 Wis. 649.....	90
v. Gill, 61 Ill. 236.....	789
v. Ladd, 4 Cow. 47.....	151
Turner v. Dartmouth, 13 Allen, 291.....	159
Turrill v. Walker, 4 Mich. 177.....	515, 516
Tuscaloosa Mfg. Co. v. Cox, 68 Ala. 71.....	612
Tweddle v. Tweddle, 2 Bro. Ch. 101.....	37, 38
Tyler v. Old Fellows Mut. Relief Assn., 5 New Eng. Rep. 191, 145 Mass. 134, 135.....	307
v. Decker, 10 Cal. 435.....	230
v. Western Union Teleg. Co., 60 Ill. 421, 74 Ill. 168.....	476
v. Wilkinson, 4 Mason, 397, 404.....	617
Tyson v. State Bank, 6 Blackf. 335.....	364

U.

Uline v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co., 3 Cont. Rep. 116, 126, 101 N. Y. 98, 125.....	467, 468
Underwood v. McDuffee, 15 Mich. 361.....	350
Union Depot S. R. & T. Co. v. Brunswick, 31 Minn. 297.....	724, 725
Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Buchanan, 100 Ind. 63-82.....	98
United States v. Bank of Metropolis, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 401 (10 L. ed. 783).....	303
v. Bradley, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 365 (9 L. ed. 448).....	743
v. Bridgman, 9 Biss. 221.....	318
v. Libby, 1 Woodb. & M. 221.....	151
v. Olney, 1 Deady, 461, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 276, 602.....	603
v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407 (30 L. ed. 425).....	313
v. Reese, 92 U. S. 220 (23 L. ed. 555).....	58
v. Spunka, 15 Minn. 309.....	123
v. Union P. R. Co., 91 U. S. 72 (23 L. ed. 224).....	245
United States Bank v. Bank of Washington, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 8 (3 L. ed. 299).....	496
United States Exp. Co. v. Backman, 23 Ohio St. 144.....	217
v. Harris, 51 Ind. 127.....	216
United States Mortgage Co. v. Henderson, 111 Ind. 24, 34.....	670
United States Teleg. Co. v. Wenger, 55 Pa. 202.....	476
University of Md. v. Williams, 9 Gill & J. 365, 408.....	770
Updegraph v. Com., 11 Serg. & R. 394.....	341
Upjohn v. Richland Board of Health, 46 Mich. 542.....	453
Upton v. Suffolk Co. Mills, 11 Cush. 566.....	473
v. Tribblecock, 91 U. S. 50 (23 L. ed. 206).....	711
Utica, C. & S. V. R. Co., R. 56 Barb. 456.....	291

V.

Vail v. Jersey Little Falls Mfg. Co., 32 Barb. 564.....	323
---	-----

Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1.....	683	Well v. Geter, 81 Wis. 414.....	425
Vandiveer v. Stickney, 75 Ala. 227.....	569	Weinman v. Wilkensburg & E. L. P. R. Co., 11
Van Duyn v. Thayer, 14 Wend. 233, 234.....	278, 279	Cent. Rep. 54, 118 Pa. 122.....	196
Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 361.....	270	Weir v. Day, 35 Ohio St. 143.....	342, 343
Vanhorn v. Corcoran, 4 L. R. A. 386, 127 Pa.		Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway, 8 Wend. 463..	755
255.....	685	Wellington, Petitioner, 18 Pick. 96.....	153
Van Pelt v. McGraw, 4 N. Y. 110.....	673	Wellman v. Wickerman, 44 Mo. 434.....	771
Van Riper v. Parsons, 40 N. J. L. 123.....	433	Wendell v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Johns. Ch. 344, 354	758
Van Tuyl v. Van Tuyl, 57 Barb. 237.....	303	Westbrook v. Deering, 63 Mo. 231.....	464, 465
Van Valkenburgh v. Watson, 13 Johns. 430.....	178	Westerlo v. DeWitt, 33 N. Y. 340.....	336
Van Vechten v. Paddock, 12 Johns. 178.....	343	Western Maryland R. Co. v. Owings, 15 Md. 190	201
Van Wart v. Woolley, 3 Barn. & C. 439.....	394	Western P. R. Co's Case, 13 Ops. Atty-Gen. 387	353
Van Wormer v. Albany, 15 Wend. 263.....	137, 138	Western Union Telegr. Co. v. American Union
Vaughan v. Murfreesboro, 96 N. C. 317.....	541, 544, 547	Telegr. Co., 9 Biss. 73.....	303
v. Vanderstegen, 2 Drew. 165.....	145	v. Atty-Gen. of Mass., 125 U. S. 530 (21 L.
Veniz v. Moore, 55 U. S. 14 How. 568 (14 L. ed.		ed. 790).....	64
545).....	59	v. Blanchard, 63 Ga. 290.....	477
Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Phillips, 64 Miss. 603.	285	v. Cooper, 1 L. R. A. 723, 71 Tex. 507, 10
Vidal v. Girard, 43 U. S. 2 How. 195 (11 L. ed. 234)	341	Am. St. Rep. 772, and note.....	597
Vinton v. Baldwin, 96 Ind. 433.....	217	v. Griswold, 37 Ohio St. 302.....	476
Virginia Coupon Cases, 114 U. S. 304 (29 L. ed.		v. Hamilton, 50 Ind. 181.....	587
197).....	58	v. Pennsylvania, 123 U. S. 39 (32 L. ed. 345)	64
Vogler v. Montgomery, 54 Mo. 577.....	68	v. Rich, 19 Kan. 517.....	201, 203
Von Sachs v. Kretz, 72 N. Y. 543.....	495	v. Sheffield, 71 Tex. 570.....	587
Vosper v. New York, 49 N. Y. Super. Ct.		v. Texas, 105 U. S. 420 (23 L. ed. 1067).....	479
(17 Jones & S.) 290.....	595	West Feliciana R. Co. v. Thornton, 12 La. Ann.
		736.....	266
		West Hartford v. Hartford Water Comrs., 44
		Conn. 367.....	470
		West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 47 U. S. 6 How.
		507 (12 L. ed. 535).....	771
		West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Ohio River Pipe Line Co., 22 W. Va. 600, 46 Am. Rep.
		527.....	163
		W.....	sp. 323, 146
		.....	309
		W.....	309
		W.....	323
		W.....	405
		W.....	672
		.....	193, 196
		W.....	heeling, 90
		.....	185
		W.....	nk, 64 Ala.
		.....	430, 431
		W.....	593
		W.....	96
		W.....	153, 159
		.....	571
		.....	573
		.....	730
		.....	437
		.....	536
		.....	36 (36 L. ed.
		250).....	562, 563
		v. Phillipston, 10 Met. 105, 110.....	159
		v. Winchester, 6 Pick. 48.....	361
		Whiting v. Bank of United States, 33 U. S. 13
		Pet. 3 (10 L. ed. 23).....	643
		Whitmore v. Oxborrow, 2 Youngs & C. Ch. 13.	774
		Whitney v. Blackburn, 17 Or. 564.....	426
		v. Grand Rapids Twp. (Mich.) 39 N. W.
		Rep. 42.....	720
		v. New Haven, 23 Conn. 624.....	89
		Whiton v. Old Colony Ins. Co., 2 Met. 1.....	544
		Whittaker v. Collins, 34 Minn. 290.....	91
		Wickliffe v. Clay, 1 Dana, 585.....	220
		Wier's App. 74 Pa. 230.....	263, 264
		Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 107 U. S.
		365 (27 L. ed. 419).....	185
		Wightman v. Spofford, 56 Iowa, 145.....	525
		Wilcox v. Bickel, 11 Neb. 154.....	311
		v. Matteson, 53 Wis. 23.....	440
		Wiles v. Suydam, 64 N. Y. 173.....	555
		Wiley v. Baumgardner, 97 Ind. 60.....	162
		Wilkinson v. Adams, 1 Ven. & B. 456.....	422
		v. Gill, 74 N. Y. 63, 30 Am. Rep. 204.....	603, 608
		Wilks v. Georgia P. R. Co., 79 Ala. 180.....	603
		Willamette Iron B. Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 9 (31
		L. ed. 532).....	340
		Willard v. Dorr, 3 Mason, 161.....	593
		Willard's App. 4 R. I. 601.....	687
		Williams v. Bagot, 3 Barn. & C. 786.....	687
		v. Blackwell, 2 Hurst. & C. 33.....	139
		v. Byrne, 7 Ad. & El. 177.....	324
		v. Grand Rapids, 59 Mich. 51.....	171
		v. Guile, 5 L. R. A. 393, 117 N. Y. 343.....	443
		v. Kent, 15 Wend. 300.....	90, 91
		v. Lewis, 14 West. Rep. 325, 115 Ind. 45.....	93
		v. Oates, 5 Ired. L. 535.....	53
		v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 40 La. Ann. 430	113
		v. Reed, 29 N. J. L. 385.....	313
		v. Smith, 14 C. B. N. S. 596.....	497
		v. Stein, 33 Ind. 60.....	324
		v. Williams, 73 Cal. 101.....	353
		v. Williams, 46 Wis. 478.....	304

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS CITED, CONSTRUED, ETC.

England.

Statutes.

29 Car. II. c. 2. Statute of Frauds.....	672
1 Wm. & Mary. c. 2. Unusual punishment....	716
7 Geo. II. Limited liability.....	66
26 Geo. III. Limited liability.....	66
53 Geo. III. Limited liability.....	66
5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 62, § 15. Notaries; adminis- tration of oaths.....	151
2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, § 7. Les pendens .....	816
9 & 10 Vict. Action for negligent death.....	234
17 & 18 Vict. c. 31. Public hacks.....	304
§ 7. Railway and Canal Traffic Act.....	163
20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, § 31. Divorce; recrimination.....	286
45 & 46 Vict. c. 75. Married women; transfers of property.....	215

United States.

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 2. Regulation of commerce.....	288
§ 10. Obligation of contracts; impair- ment of.....	52, 769
§ 2, par. 1. Judicial power; admiralty jurisdiction.....	65
§ 2. Privileges of citizen.....	149, 514
7. Jury trial.....	737
14th Amend. § 1. Due process of law.....	687, 737
Civil rights.....	51

Ordinances.

1787. Northwest territory.....	335
--------------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1861, March 2. Limitation of liability.....	59
1866, July 14. Telegraph companies.....	202
1872. Railroads as post roads.....	203
1879, June 23. Army appropriation bill.....	203
1883, March 3, c. 116. Court of claims.....	662
1884, June 26. Limitation of liability.....	61
1886, June 19. Limitation of liability.....	57
1887, Feb. 4. To regulate commerce.....	68
1887, c. 359. Court of claims; final judgment.....	662

Statutes at Large.

Vol. 22, p. 485. Court of claims.....	662
23, p. 53. Limitation of liability.....	61
24, p. 80. Limitation of liability.....	57
p. 379. Act to Regulate Commerce.....	53
505. Court of claims; final judg- ment.....	662

Treaties.

1838. Miami Indians.....	738
1840. Miami Indians.....	738

Revised Statutes.

§§ 305-308. Claims against the government.....	662
§ 367. Contracts with Indians.....	734
1059. Statute of Limitations.....	662
§§ 4263-4269. Limitation of liability.....	58
§ 5067. Bankruptcy.....	413
5209. Falsification of bank books.....	495

Alabama.

Constitution, 1875.

Art. 4, § 26. Lottery.....	601
7, § 1. Officers; impeachment.....	427

Statutes.

1886-87, p. 87. Protection against color blind- ness.....	268
7 L. R. A.....

Code, 1886.

P. 230, § 236. Election registry.....	103
§ 1533. Consolidation of railroads.....	609
1586. Railroad; power to add other railroads.....	608
1587. Railroad; power to operate other railroads.....	608
2322. Divorce; incapacity.....	428
§§ 4063, 4069. Lottery.....	601
§ 4818. Officers; impeachment.....	427

Arkansas.

Constitution.

Art. 3, §§ 2, 3. Elections.....	323
16, § 5. Taxation; valuation.....	375

Statutes.

1871, p. 185. Taxation; railroads.....	376
1875, Feb. 8. Death by negligence of railroad company; action.....	264
p. 138. Death by negligence of railroad company; action.....	264
1879, p. 40. Taxation; railroads.....	376

Manfield's Digest.

§ 305. Assignment for creditors.....	404
309. Attachment.....	406
356. Enforcement of lien.....	407
P. 471, § 2323. Election; registry.....	103
§ 5223. Negligent injuries; survival of action.....	284
§§ 5225, 5226. Action for negligent death.....	284
§ 5647. Commissioners for assessment of rail- road property.....	375
6396. Action by surety against principal.....	406

California.

Statutes.

1889, Feb. 15. Supreme court commissioners ..	343
---	-----

Laws.

1871-72, p. 380. Living in adultery; criminal...	308
1889, p. 13. Supreme court commissioners.....	343

Hittell's General Laws.

Vol. 1, § 1024. Incorporation of social and be- nevolent associations.....	510
---	-----

Civil Code.

Art. 1, c. 1, tit. 15, § 3087. Negotiable instru- ments.....	223
§ 3088. Payment of negotiable instrument.....	223
3093. Requisite of negotiable instrument.....	223

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 537. Attachments.....	127
1953. Presumptions of law and fact.....	504
1963, subd. 30. Presumption of marriage.....	506

Political Code.

§ 52. Residence.....	129
----------------------	-----

Penal Code.

§ 1170. Admission of juror; exceptions.....	647
---	-----

Colorado.

Statutes.

1877, p. 110, § 90. Promissory notes.....	268
	28

Code.
C. 1, § 4. Negotiable paper; bona fide purchaser.....	846

Connecticut.Statutes.*

1879. Practice Act.....	80
-------------------------	----

Special Laws.

Vol. 8, p. 53. Beacon Falls.....	779
----------------------------------	-----

Revision of 1875.

P. 413, § 5. Equity jurisdiction.....	80
---------------------------------------	----

General Statutes.

§ 1743. Withholding of wages.....	287
-----------------------------------	-----

District of Columbia.Statutes.*

1878, June 14. Building regulations.....	653
--	-----

Florida.Statutes.*

1879, March 11. Married women; free trader..	644
--	-----

McClellan's Digest.

Pp. 756, 757. Married women; free trader.....	644
---	-----

Georgia.Code.*

§§ 1286, 1287, 1312. Reckoning time.....	328
§ 1710. Marriages; validity.....	51
1768. Miscegenation.....	51
4572. Adultery and fornication.....	51
4578. Sunday trains.....	328

Idaho.Statutes.*

9th Sess. p. 704. Juror, qualifications.....	647
12th Sess. p. 106. Electors, qualifications.....	647

Revised Statutes.

§ 13. Construction of revision.....	647
§§ 500, 501. Electors; qualifications.....	647
3941, 3942. Jurors, qualification of.....	647
§ 7183. Exportation of fish.....	288
7576. Depositions.....	648
7588. Use of depositions.....	648
7634. Depositions.....	648
7631. Jurors, causes of challenge.....	647
7632. Jurors, general challenge.....	647
7633. Particular challenge.....	647
7664. Rules of evidence in criminal actions.....	648
7640. Admission of juror; exceptions.....	647
8161. Use of depositions.....	648
8236. Mistakes of form.....	648

Illinois.Constitution.*

Art. 4, § 13. Printing bills.....	146
§ 22. Local laws.....	146
11, § 14. Eminent domain.....	147

Statutes.

1885. Registration.....	108
1887, May 27. Watercraft Act.....	146

Revised Statutes, 1845.

C. 109, § 115. Settlement of estate; expenses.....	657
--	-----

Revised Statutes, 1889.

C. 93, §§ 2-7. Promissory notes.....	366
7 L. R. A.

110, § 86. Confession or judgment.....	729
§§ 87, 89. Appeal; re-examination of questions of fact.....	475

Indiana.Constitution.*

Art. 1, § 23. Privileges or immunities.....	251
§ 1. Encouragement of knowledge.....	241
13. Municipal indebtedness.....	632

Statutes.

1852, May 11. General Railroad Law.....	257
1875, March 10. Promissory notes; agreements for attorney's fees.....	447
1877. County board of education.....	255
1889, March 2. Public schools; text-books.....	241
§ 10. School superintendent; bond.....	685
March 9. Street improvements.....	681
March 11, p. 430, § 1. Rights of second wife.....	439

Revised Statutes, 1876.

Vol. 1, c. 177, §§ 1-4. Promissory notes.....	366
2, p. 35, § 6. Promissory notes.....	366
p. 530. Sale of lands under direction of a will.....	705

Revised Statutes, 1881.

§ 370. Condition precedent; plea of performance.....	401
498. Suit by or against executor; witnesses.....	92
635. Appeal; parties.....	233
2000. Sabbath observance.....	496
2346. Administrator; sale of real estate.....	238
2454. Who may appeal.....	233
2455. Appeal bond.....	233
2559. Revocation of will.....	438
2560. Revocation by birth of child.....	439
3861. Incorporation; acknowledgment of certificate.....	591
3908. Right of way.....	259
3907. Eminent domain.....	259
4178. Penalty for failure to deliver telegram.....	586
4439. Contracts by school board.....	162
4904. Statute of Frauds; leases of land.....	787
5119. Married woman; contract of suretyship.....	670
5130. Trade by married woman.....	363

Elliot's Supplement.

§ 29. Property of adopted children.....	436
818. Municipal improvements; procedure.....	632
816. Municipal improvements; payment to contractor.....	632
821. Assessments for improvements.....	634
817. Street improvements.....	681
1885, §§ 1170, 1172. Penalty for failure to deliver telegram.....	586
§ 1289. Public schools; text-books.....	241
1293. School superintendent; bond.....	685

Iowa.Revision, 1860.*

§ 1793. Assignment of instrument.....	141
2250. Deed; recording of.....	525

Code.

§ 1941. Deeds; recording of.....	525
1970. Form of quitclaim deed.....	526
§§ 2082-2087. Assignment of contracts.....	141
§ 2084. Assignment of instrument.....	141
2065. Promissory notes.....	363

Kansas.Bill of Rights.*

§ 5. Jury trial.....	738
18. Legal remedy.....	738

Constitution.

Art. 2, § 1. Delegation of legislative power.....	738
12, § 2. Stockholders' liability.....	418
§ 4. Right of way; compensation.....	738

Statutes.

1873, c. 105. Stockholders' liability.....	418
1886, c. 69, § 1. Extension of corporate limits.....	737

Compiled Laws, 1879.		1887, c. 270. Employer's Liability Act.....	155
C. 23, § 32. Stockholders' liability.....		1888, c. 342. Incorporation Act.....	768
		1889, c. 446. Improvement of Boston Harbor..	158
Kentucky.		Public Statutes.
Statutes.		C. 52, § 17. Remedies for death by negligence..	155
1874, Feb. 4. Insurance; representations and		73, § 6. Remedies for death by negligence..	155
warranty.....		112, § 212. Remedies for death by negligence	155
		182, §§ 3, 6-17. Ne exeat .....	896
Civil Code.		Michigan.
§ 15. Parties to actions.....		Constitution.
21. Suit by trustee.....		Art. 7, § 1. Elections.....	101
		§ 6. Elections.....	101
		18, § 4. Property for public use; compensation	718
Louisiana.		Public Acts.
Statutes.		1873, No. 198, art. 4, § 15. Crossings; notice.....	718
1884, p. 94, No. 71. Death by negligence; damages		1889, No. 156. Residence crossings.....	718
		No. 205. Facilities for inspection of record	825
Code of Practice.		p. 286. Inspection of records.....	74
Art. 13. Law of place.....	266	Local Acts.
753. Foreign judgments.....	266	1869, March 2. Marquette Water Commissioners	171
1000. Succession.....	266	1889, p. 994. Elections in Detroit.....	100
1001. Proofs in succession proceedings.....	266	Compiled Laws, 1857.
1008. Possession of succession.....	266	§ 1987. Farm crossings.....	719
Revised Civil Code.		Howell's Statutes.
Art. 1198. Succession.....	266	§ 98. Sick and absent voters; registration....	108
2315 (2284). Death by negligence; damages	178	C. 292. Arbitration.....	721
		§ 2278. Liquor bond.....	740
		4245. Mortality tables.....	506
		5531. Wills.....	381
		5844. Administrator de bonis non ; authority.	379
		6467. Rules of practice.....	516
		6468. Change of venue.....	516
		6469. Affidavit of good faith.....	516
		6495. Change of venue; causes for.....	516
		6816. Confession of judgment.....	516
		6823. Suits before justices; how instituted..	516
		6825. Suit, when commenced.....	516
		7291. Commencement of suit.....	513
		7547. Trial of actions upon contract.....	513
		7682. Confession of judgment.....	516
		8474. Arbitration; submission entered as judgment	516
		8475. Arbitration; cannot extend to controversies concerning realty.....	516, 721
Maine.		Minnesota.
Special Laws.		Special Laws.
1875-77, c. 106. River improvement.....		1867, c. 134. Corporate charter.....	675
Revised Statutes.		General Statutes, 1878.
C. 3, § 46. Power of town to raise money.....		Title 2, c. 41, § 6. Action upon parol agreement	672
6, §§ 147, 149. Collector; deprivation of tax warrant		§ 10. Creation of interest in land.....	672
§§ 151, 152, 158. Warrants against delinquent collector		12. Leases.....	672
§ 173. Collector, relief of.....		C. 62, § 6, subd. 6. Divorce.....	448
92, § 1. Diversion of water.....		§ 30. Separation.....	448
P. 95. Elections; registry.....		C. 90, §§ 6, 7. Mechanic's liens.....	150
		124, §§ 13-20. Regulation of warehouses and deposits.....	532
Maryland.		Mississippi.
Constitution.		Revised Code, 1880.
Art. 3, § 40. Eminent domain; compensation..		§ 1123. Promissory notes.....	393
Statutes.		Missouri.
1785, c. 72, § 12. Chancery jurisdiction; sale of infant's land.....		Revised Statutes.
1791. Cession of District of Columbia.....		§ 533. Acceptance of bill of exchange.....	430
1816, c. 154. Sale of infant's estate.....		535. Promise to accept.....	431
1831, c. 311, § 7. Sale of lands where of full age		543. Acceptance on separate paper.....	430
§ 9. Sale of infant's land with consent of life tenant.....		Art. 10, c. 42. Incorporation of pleasure societies.....	735
1862, c. 155. Sale of infant's land.....
1867, c. 121. Railroad incorporation.....
1868, c. 249. Ratification of void sale.....
c. 273. Sale of infant's land.....
314. Railroad incorporation.....
1878, c. 185. Railroad consolidation.....
Code.
Art. 23, §§ 222-226. Telegraph companies.....
67, § 2. Actions for injuries caused by negligence.....
Supplemental Code.
P. 240. Election Law; registry.....
Massachusetts.
Statutes.
1875, c. 239. Improvement of Boston Harbor..
1883, c. 243. Remedies for death by negligence
1384, c. 299. Eminent domain; petition for damages.....
7 L. R. A.

Montana.Statutes.*

1897, Sept. 12. County of Cascade; organization 106

General Laws.

§ 810. Sale of county bonds..... 106

Compiled Statutes.

P. 820, § 847. County attorney's fee..... 110

§ 1237. Vexatious delay; penalty..... 109

Nebraska.Criminal Code.*

§ 22. Disturbance of religious meeting..... 326

New Jersey.Statutes.*

1878, April 5. Appointment of commissioners of municipal affairs..... 434

1889, April 6. Government of city..... 432

April 19. Government of cities..... 436

Revision.

P. 364, § 152. Election; registry..... 105

699. Mechanic's lien..... 49

1012, § 92. Road vehicles..... 437

1227, § 1. Sunday traveling..... 436

Revision Supplement.

P. 456, § 3. Mechanic's liens..... 49

New York.Constitution.*

Art. 1, § 5. Infliction of cruel and unusual punishment..... 716

§, § 1. Legislative power..... 136

Session Laws.

1812. Incorporation of religious societies..... 72

1822, c. 274, § 1. Additional money for highway improvement..... 762

§ 5. Collection of additional road tax..... 762

1840, c. 305. Collection of road tax..... 762

1847, c. 197. Money for building town houses..... 762

1848, c. 40, § 10. Stockholder's liability..... 555

1850, c. 40, § 16. General Railroad Law..... 291

§ 44. General Railroad Act..... 523

1852, c. 232. Taxation; exemptions..... 71

1855. Election; registry..... 108

1855, c. 570. Railroad aid bonds..... 759

1872. Election; registry..... 108

c. 357. Rochester water supply..... 470

513. Power to raise money for municipal purposes..... 762

835, § 3. Elevated railroads..... 291

1874, c. 410. Power to raise money for municipal purposes..... 762

1875, c. 206, § 20. Rapid Transit Act..... 291

c. 611. Corporations; limited liability..... 554

1876, c. 341. Insurance; forfeiture..... 294

1877, c. 321. Insurance; forfeiture..... 294

1880, c. 554. Power to raise money for municipal purposes..... 762

c. 591. Illegal fishing..... 136

1882, c. 410, § 827. N. Y. Consolidation Act..... 71

1883, c. 317. Illegal fishing..... 136

c. 362. Assessment of personal property..... 408

1889, c. 141. Fishing in Lake Ontario..... 136

c. 352. Commission to investigate capital punishment..... 717

1897, c. 7. Commission to investigate capital punishment..... 717

1898, c. 499. Infliction of death penalty..... 716

Revised Statutes.

Vol. 1, p. 687. Ed. ed. Fishing..... 137

p. 740, § 1. Dower rights..... 270

738, § 137. Unacknowledged deed..... 536

7 L. R. A.

Part 1, c. 11, tit. 1, art. 1. Corporate powers of towns..... 761

tit. 2, art. 1. Towns; right to prosecute or defend suits

6. Raising money for town charges..... 762

Vol. 1, part 1, c. 13, tit. 1, § 4, subd. 3. Taxation; exemption

Part 1, c. 16, tit. 1, art. 1. Highway improvement ment..... 762

Vol. 2, p. 134, § 6. Lease by agent..... 69

p. 285, § 55. Sheriff; office hours..... 848

312, § 57. Mortgage a conveyance..... 277

4, p. 96. Ed. ed. Fishing..... 137

Code of Procedure.

§ 132. Foreclosure; parties..... 239

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 1393. Exemption of pension money..... 557

1454. Redemption by creditor..... 848

1455. Redemption must be at sheriff's office..... 848

1469. Redemption; certificate..... 848

Code of Criminal Procedure.

§ 705. Death by electricity..... 716

North Carolina.Constitution, 1776.*

Exclusion or non-believers from office..... 349

Constitution.

Art. 5, § 1. Capitation tax..... 548

§ 2. Application of capitation tax..... 548

3. State taxation..... 549

6. County taxes..... 541

7, § 9. Uniformity of taxation..... 549

Statutes.

1867, March 2. Dower..... 129

1889, c. 218, § 18. Taxation of credits, investments, etc..... 544

Private Laws.

1887, c. 86, § 1. Taylorsville..... 559

1889, c. 8. Taylorsville..... 559

Code.

§ 2115. Deed; signature of wife..... 129

3765. Personal property defined..... 544

3800. Taxes for municipal purposes..... 547

3827. Taxes for municipal purposes..... 548

Ohio.Revised Statutes.*

§ 3623. Insurance; estoppel by receipt of premiums..... 577

5027. Railroads; place of suit against..... 701

5055. Pendency of action..... 816

5056. Record of judgment; notice..... 816

6761. Quo warranto against corporation..... 321

6821. Highways; obstruction of..... 703

Oregon.Hill's Annotated Code.*

§ 826. Mortgage a conveyance..... 277

2731. Personal property defined..... 451

3217. Power of corporation..... 639

Pennsylvania.Constitution.*

Art. 3, § 3. Titles of Acts..... 372

§ 7. Local and special laws..... 197

17, § 5. Carriers; right to engage in other business..... 636

§ 10. Corporation; benefit of future legislation..... 632

Statutes.

1784, § 1. Hawkers and peddlers.....	668
1785. Statute of Limitations.....	661
1791, April 6. Incorporation of literary association.....	368
1807. Rights of aliens.....	360
1840, Oct. 13. Incorporation of literary association.....	368
1846, April 17, § 1. Sales by hawkers or peddlers.....	668
1849, Feb. 19. Railroads.....	371
1854, Feb. 20. Incorporation of agricultural association.....	368
1855, April 26. Corporation; right to hold real estate.....	635
1858. Opening highways.....	198
1861, May 16. Railroads.....	371
1864. Opening highways.....	198
1866. Opening highways.....	198
1869, April 16. Railroads; right to aid other corporation.....	636
1872. Supplement to Railroad Act.....	372
1874, April 29, § 3. Corporate charters.....	359
May 23. Classification of cities.....	196
June 2. Limited partnerships.....	663
1875, March 13. Married women; power to sell loan.....	315
1876, May 1. Limited partnership; contribution of capital.....	663
1878, April 17. Corporate mortgages.....	359
May 23. Street railway companies.....	371
1881, April 8. Corporation; right to convey property illegally held.....	637
1887, May 6. Widening and paving streets.....	195
June 3. Married Person's Property Act 212, 315

Public Laws.

1855, p. 329. Corporation; right to hold real estate.....	635
1869, p. 32. Railroads, right to aid other corporation.....	636
1874, p. 271. Limited partnerships.....	663
1875, p. 24. Married women; power to sell loan.....	315
1876, p. 89. Limited partnership; contribution of capital.....	663
1878, p. 111. Street railway companies.....	371
1881, p. 9. Corporation; right to convey property illegally held.....	637
1887, p. 332. Married Person's Property Act 212, 315

Rhode Island.Statutes.*

1886, April 24. Newport horse railroad company.....	207
---	-----

Public Statutes.

C. 64, § 6. Notice of appeal.....	387
93, § 6. Right to kill dogs.....	339
237, § 12. Assignment for creditors.....	329

South Carolina.Constitution, 1778.*

Established religion.....	340
---------------------------	-----

Constitution.

Amend. 1880. Homestead exemption.....	749
---------------------------------------	-----

Tennessee.Statutes.*

1873. Suits to recover back illegal taxes.....	469
1876. Incorporation Law.....	708
c. 142. Organization of corporation.....	98
§ 11. General Incorporate Act; employees wages.....	97
1877. Revenue law.....	470
1883, c. 114, § 17. Charter of Nashville.....	470
p. 213. Corporate charters; amendments.....	710
p. 331. Option contracts; void.....	708
1887. Revenue Act.....	469
c. 1, § 4, pp. 20, 21. Taxes upon water companies.....	471

7 L. R. A.

Milliken & Vertrees' Code.

§ 2438. Recovery back of money paid upon wages.....	708
2444. Note for watering consideration.....	708
5703. Transfer of illegal note.....	708

Texas.Constitution.*

Art. 10, § 21. Corporation; privilege tax.....	735
--	-----

Statutes.

1881, April 6. Incorporation for school purposes.....	739
1882, May 6. Penalty for failure to deliver freight.....	475
1884, Feb. 6. Public school tax.....	734

Revised Statutes.

Art. 506. Incorporation of towns.....	734
1188. Suit in county of residence.....	619
Exception 8. Crime, offense or trespass.....	620
Arts. 4226, 4227. Duty of railroad companies.....	480
4251, 4254. Carriers bound to transport goods offered.....	480

Sayles' Annotated Statutes.

Art. 141a. Incorporation for school purposes.....	733
§ 733. Public school tax.....	734

Virginia.Statutes.*

1866, Feb. 15. Railroad lease.....	346
1870, July 11. Railroad lease.....	346

West Virginia.Statutes.*

1882, c. 120. Interest on judgments.....	574
--	-----

Code, 1863.

C. 131, § 14. Interest on judgments.....	576
--	-----

Wisconsin.Constitution.*

Art. 1, § 13. Supporting place of worship.....	334
§ 18. Rights of conscience.....	336
19. Officers; religious test.....	340
10, § 2, subd. 1. Interest of school fund.....	343
§ 3. Establishment of district schools; sectarian instruction.....	334, 343
4. School tax.....	343
5. Distribution of school fund.....	343

Statutes.

1879, c. 121. Attendance upon public schools.....	342
c. 194, § 2, subd. 19. Holidays; court closed.....	424
1882, c. 236. Attendance upon public school.....	342
1883, c. 251, § 3. Text-books in public schools.....	337
1886, c. 124, § 3. Public school fund.....	342
c. 142. Holidays; courts closed.....	424
237. One-mill school tax.....	342
1887, c. 73. Attendance upon public schools.....	342
c. 277. Public school fund.....	342
1890, c. 519. Attendance upon public schools.....	342

Revised Statutes.

§ 514. Text-books in public schools.....	337
554. Public school fund.....	342
1464. Holidays; May 30.....	424
2576. Holidays; courts closed.....	424
C. 60. Assignments for creditors.....	424

Sanborn & Berryman's Annotated Statutes.

§§ 430, 430a. Erection of school building.....	342
§ 489t. Attendance upon public school.....	342
489t. Attendance upon public school.....	342
1070a. One-mill school tax.....	343
Vol. 2, p. 1941, § 3814. Mechanic's liens.....	192

LAWYERS' REPORTS,

ANNOTATED.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

Fannie R. O'CONNER, Admx. of Thomas O'Conner, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

James O'CONNER et al.

(....Tenn....)

1. A purchaser of land expressly assuming and agreeing to pay off certain purchase-money notes given by his vendor and secured by a vendor's lien, which agreement is contained in his deed, which retains a lien for the payment of this sum as well as the balance of the purchase price to his vendor, becomes personally responsible to the creditor holding the original lien.

2. An incumbrance consisting of a vendor's lien which is expressly assumed by a subsequent purchaser as part of the purchase price, as well as the remainder of the purchase money, which is payable directly to his immediate vendor, who in his deed retains a lien for both sums, is such purchaser's personal debt; and in case of his death both sums are a charge upon his personal estate, and not a burden on the land in the hands of the heirs.

(Turner, Sp. J., dissentis.)

(October 19, 1899.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Chancery Court of Knox County in favor of defendants in an agreed case submitted to the court for the purpose of determining whether the personal representative or the heir was liable for unpaid purchase money due upon land purchased by decedent. Affirmed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Webb & McClung, for appellant:

Where a man purchases land already incumbered with a purchase-money lien, and assumes to pay off the lien, but dies before it

NOTE.—Incumbrances on decedent's real estate; from what payable.

Purchase money due on a contract for the purchase of land by a decedent is payable out of the personal estate. Wright v. Holbrook, 32 N. Y. 587; Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. Jr. 597; Livingston v. Newkirk, 3 Johns. Ch. 312; Cogswell v. Cogswell, 2 Edw. Ch. 231; Johnson v. Corbett, 11 Paige, 266; Lamport v. Beeman, 34 Barb. 239.

This rule is not affected by the New York Statute, which, changing the common law, has made mortgages a charge on the real estate of a decedent unless he has expressly provided otherwise. Wright v. Holbrook, 32 N. Y. 587.

A mortgage for a debt of the mortgagor's own contracting, although given for the purchase price of the land mortgaged, is chargeable on the personality. Sutherland v. Harrison, 86 Ill. 363; Cumberland v. Codrington, 3 Johns. Ch. 229; Ruston v. Ruston, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 243 (1 L. ed. 366); Hewes v. Dehon, 3 Gray, 205; Plimpton v. Fuller, 11 Allen, 139; Cope v. Cope, 2 Salk. 449 and note; Howel v. Price, 1 P. Wms. 291, and note.

A different rule applies as to mortgages assumed by a purchaser. On the death of a purchaser who had assumed the payment of an outstanding mortgage, the land, and not the personal estate of the decedent, is primarily liable. Coudert v. Coudert, 4 Cent. Rep. 132, 43 N. J. Eq. 407; Cumberland v. Codrington, 3 Johns. Ch. 229; McLenahan v. McLenahan, 13 N. J. Eq. 101.

Where part of the realty is incumbered by a mortgage, the executors should pay the mortgage first out of the personality as far as that will go. Wood v. Hammond, 16 R. I. 37, 139.

A mortgage given in discharge of a judgment for a debt created by a contract of the mortgagor's ancestor, and which constituted an equitable lien on the land, on the mortgagor's death, is not chargeable on the personality, but is to be paid out of both funds, where the mortgage covers both the real and personal property. McLearn v. Wallace, 36 U. S. 10 Pet. 625 (9 L. ed. 558).

Although mortgages are chargeable upon the realty incumbered under the Statutes of New York, an action against an administrator on his intestate's bond is not barred by the fact that it is secured by a mortgage on land. Thompson v. Sullivan, 60 How. Pr. 71.

Where real estate is expressly charged with debts, the proceeds of sales for that purpose cannot be applied to a mortgage upon lands not sold, to the prejudice of other creditors. Van Vechten v. Keator, 63 N. Y. 52.

Vendee assuming incumbrance personally liable for the debt.

The grantee of premises subject to an incumbrance is not personally liable therefor, without words importing, with reasonable certainty, a personal assumption of the debt. Davis v. Hulett, 2 New Eng. Rep. 123, 58 Vt. 90.

Where a purchaser expressly and in terms agrees to pay off an incumbrance out of the purchase price, such agreement inures to the benefit of the creditor, and may be enforced in equity; but where there is no promise to pay, but simply an agreement that, if the vendor fails to release the incumbrance within a certain time, the purchaser shall have the privilege to discharge it, it is otherwise. Ayres v. Randall, 7 West. Rep. 64, 108 Ind. 536.

An agreement, consented to by a mortgagee, whereby the grantee of the mortgaged premises assumes payment of the mortgage note as part of the purchase money, constitutes a novation which discharges the original mortgagor, and renders the is paid off, as between his heir and personal representative, in a court of equity, the land itself is the primary fund for the payment of said lien, and the promise of the decedent to pay the lien is a mere collateral security.

Cumberland v. Codrington, 3 Johns. Ch. 252; McLearn v. Wallace, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 625 (9 L. ed. 558); 1 Story, Eq. Jur., §§ 574-576; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1248 and note, §§ 1248a, 1248b, 1248c, 1248d, 1248e; Duke of Ancastr v. Mayer, 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 922, note; 2 Sharsw. Bl. 512, note 27; Snyder v. Summers, 1 Lea, 541.

As between the heir and personal representative in a court of equity all purchase-money liens resting on the ancestor's lands at the time of his death are a primary charge on such lands, and not on his personal estate, because the liens were created for the benefit of the real and not the personal estate.

McLearn v. Wallace, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 644 (9 L. ed. 566), and cases cited; Waring v. Ward, 7 Ves. Jr. 884; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 4th ed. 566, top p. 197; 1 Sharsw. Bl. bk. II, 512, 157; Masson v. Swan, 6 Heisk. 457; Franklin v. Armfield, 2 Sneed, 856.

Mr. R. N. Hood, for appellees:

That the personal estate is liable to exonerate the real estate from payment of sums assumed by decedent as part of the purchase price, is established by the fact that in suits to enforce the vendor's lien, etc., the personal representative is a proper party.

Townsend v. Champervorne, 9 Price, 180; Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 160, 174-177; Knight v. Knight, 8 P. Wms. 333; Smith v. Hibbard, 2 Dick. 780; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 176; Cooper, Eq. Pl.

33; Gawler v. Wade, 1 P. Wms. 99; Warren v. Stowell, 2 Atk. 125; Galton v. Hancock, Id. 483; Pom. Spec. Perf. § 483.

Lurton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Thomas O'Conner died in 1882, intestate, and without issue, leaving a large real and personal estate. Under the Statute of Descents and Distributions, his widow, who is likewise his administratrix, is his sole distributee, and entitled, after payment of his debts, to his entire personal estate. The heirs at law, to whom the real estate descends, are the brothers and sisters of the intestate, and the representatives of such as are dead. Thus the heirs and distributees are not the same persons, and the fact has given rise to a controversy as to whether the personal estate is, in equity, the primary fund for the discharge of certain incumbrances upon lands of the intestate. The parties in interest have submitted to the chancery court an agreed case, as provided by the Statute, and from the decree of the chancellor the administratrix has appealed.

The agreed case shows, first, that at the time intestate acquired one of the tracts of land which he owned at his death it was subject to a vendor's lien to secure certain purchase-money notes made by the immediate vendor of Mr. O'Conner; that Mr. O'Conner, as a part of the consideration for the purchase, expressly assumed and agreed to pay off the incumbrance, and to pay to his immediate vendor an additional sum of $3,000. This agreement was contained in the deed to O'Conner; and, to se-grantee the sole debtor. Brown v. Kirk, 3 West. Rep. 732, 20 Mo. App. 524.

A mortgagee has a right to proceed in equity against one who has assumed and agreed to pay his mortgage. Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178. See Garnsey v. Rogers, 47 N. Y. 236; Trotter v. Hughes, 12 N. Y. 74; Russell v. Pistol, 7 N. Y. 171; Cornell v. Prescott, 2 Barb. 16; Marsh v. Pike, 10 Paige, 597; King v. Whitely, 10 Paige, 466; Halsey v. Reed, 9 Paige, 448; Curtis v. Tyler, 9 Paige, 432. See also note to Gifford v. Corrigan, 6 L. R. A. 610.

The word "assumes" imposes a liability on the grantee. Schley v. Fryer, 1 Cent. Rep. 5, 100 N. Y. 71; Braman v. Dowse, 12 Cush. 227; Drury v. Tremont Imp. Co. 13 Allen, 168; Locke v. Homer, 131 Mass. 98; Stout v. Folger, 34 Iowa, 71; Sparkman v. Gove, 44 N. J. L. 252.

The element which lies at the bottom of such assumption is the fact that the mortgage debt is included in the purchase price, as a constituent part thereof, and the grantee actually pays or secures to his grantor only the balance of the gross price after deducting such debt. It is sufficient that the language shows unequivocally an intent on the part of the grantee to assume the liability of paying the mortgage debt, which intent must clearly appear. Strong v. Converse, 8 Allen, 567; Drury v. Tremont Improvement Co. 13 Allen, 168, 171; Weed Sewing Machine Co. v. Emerson, 115 Mass. 554; Trotter v. Hughes, 12 N. Y. 74; Belmont v. Coman, 22 N. Y. 438; Binsse v. Paige, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 138; Collins v. Rowe, 1 Abb. N. C. 97; Stebbins v. Hall, 29 Barb. 524; Miller v. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10; Fowler v. Fay, 63 Ill. 375; Dunn v. Rodgers, 43 Ill. 230; Comstock v. Hitt, 37 Ill. 542, 546; Hull v. Alexander, 26 Iowa, 569; Johnson v. Monell, 13 Iowa, 300; Bumgardner v. Allen, 6 Munf. 430; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 191.

The acceptance of a conveyance, containing a statement that the grantee is to pay off an incumbrance, binds him as effectually as though the deed had been inter partes, and had been executed by both grantor and grantee. Curtis v. Tyler, 9 Paige, 432; Halsey v. Reed, 9 Paige, 448; King v. Whitely, 10 Paige, 466; Thompson v. Bertram, 14 Iowa, 476; Corbett v. Waterman, 11 Iowa, 86; Miller v. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10; Crawford v. Edwards, 33 Mich. 354; Huyler v. Atwood, 26 N. J. Eq. 504; Trotter v. Hughes, 12 N. Y. 74; Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178; Spaulding v. Hallenbeck, 35 N. Y. 204; Ricard v. Sanderson, 41 N. Y. 179; Atlantic Dock Co. v. Leavitt, 54 N. Y. 35; Lennig's Estate, 52 Pa. 135; Hoff's App. 24 Pa. 200; Converse v. Cook, 8 Vt. 164; Bishop v. Douglass, 25 Wis. 686.

A purchaser of premises, agreeing to pay an outstanding purchase-money mortgage, is estopped to deny its validity, and cannot, while in possession, defend against the mortgage because of failure of title. McConihe v. Fales, 10 Cent. Rep. 232, 107 N. Y. 404.

Where a purchaser of an equity of redemption takes it subject to the mortgage, which he agrees to pay as part of the consideration of his purchase, he will be held personally liable to the mortgagee, and will be regarded as the principal debtor, the mortgagor standing as his surety. Flagg v. Munger, 9 N. Y. 499; Blyer v. Monholland, 2 Sandf. Ch. 480; Marsh v. Pike, 10 Paige, 596; Ferris v. Crawford, 2 Denio, 595; Cornell v. Prescott, 2 Barb. 16.

The mortgagee is entitled to the benefit of the agreement made by such purchaser. Higman v. Stewart, 33 Mich. 523.

As between the original parties, the promise by the grantee to the grantor is not collateral, but primary, and, in equity, the grantee is held to be the principal debtor, and the grantor the surety. Huyler v. Atwood, 26 N. J. Eq. 506; Klapworth v. Dressler, 18 N. J. Eq. 63; Jarman v. Wiswall, 24 N. J. Eq. 209; note to Boone v. Clark, 5 L. R. A. 276.

enure the payment of both sums, a lien was retained on the face thereof. Notes were executed and delivered for the sum to be paid his immediate vendor; but there was no substitution of intestate's notes for those of the seller, and no communication whatever between Mr. O'Conner and the creditor. At Mr. O'Conner's death no part of the purchase money due on this tract of land had been paid,—neither that which was due directly to his immediate vendor, nor that which he had assumed and engaged to pay for his vendor. The lien of the original purchase money, as well as that due immediately from intestate to his vendor, was subsequently enforced in a suit against the heirs to whom the incumbered land had descended, to which the administratrix of O'Conner was not a party, and these incumbrances have been paid by a sale of the land. The heirs now ask to have the sums thus enforced against the lands reimbursed out of the personal estate of the intestate, which, it is admitted, is sufficient for this purpose. A second tract which descended to the heirs was incumbered with a lien to secure purchase-money notes made by the intestate. This lien has been likewise enforced under a bill against the heirs, and the land sold for its satisfaction; and for this sum they likewise seek reimbursement out of the personalty. Two questions arise from these facts: First. Is the personal estate the primary fund, as between the distributees and the heirs, for the satisfaction of a lien, or charges upon the lands, at the time they were acquired by the intestate; the lien not being to secure a debt originally created by the intestate, but one assumed by him as a part of the consideration to be paid for the land, when there has been no communication between the intestate and original vendor, to whom the debt thus assumed was due? The second question is whether a debt created by the intestate for the purchase of land is, as between the distributee and heirs, a primary charge on the personal estate, or do the heirs take the land cum onere?

It may be, at the outset, admitted that where lands descend subject to a charge, or mortgage, or lien, not created by the intestate, which was never his personal debt, or one for which he could have been held personally liable by the creator, the heir, in such case, would take the land subject to the incumbrance, and could not call upon the personal estate to have his lands exonerated from the burden. This would follow for the obvious reason that the incumbrance was never the debt of the intestate, and his administrator could not therefore be called upon to discharge it.

The first matter to be determined, before we can reach a solution of the first question, is to decide whether the intestate had made himself personally responsible for the incumbrance. The agreed case states that in the deed accepted by the intestate there was a clause whereby the vendee assumed the unpaid purchase money, and agreed to pay the same. It is true, this promise or assumption is not made directly to the creditor, but only to the vendor, who was the debtor. The payment of this incumbrance was, however, a part of the consideration for the land. The undertaking, in ef-

If a grantee in purchasing part of the mortgaged premises assumes payment of part of the mortgage he becomes personally and primarily liable only for such part. Snyder v. Robinson, 35 Ind. 311; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 194.

Where an owner conveys a part to one who assumes a mortgage on the whole tract, and subsequently said owner conveys the remainder thereof to a third party, and the mortgage is foreclosed and the said remainder of the tract is sold in the foreclosure action, the grantee of such remainder can recover damages from the grantee who assumed the mortgage. Wilcox v. Campbell, 8 Cent. Rep. 687, 106 N. Y. 325.

Purchaser of mortgaged land liable for mortgage debt. See note to Boone v. Clark, 5 L. R. A. 276.

Remedies of mortgagees. Knoll v. N. Y. Chicago & St. L. R. Co. 1 L. R. A. 368, 121 Pa. 467.

Remedies after default. Gifford v. Corrigan, (N. Y.) 6 L. R. A. 610.

Vendor's lien, enforcement of.

The lien of the vendor is only another mode of expressing his equitable interest; and so far as it has any distinctive signification, it simply means his right of enforcing his claim for the purchase money against or out of the vendee's equitable estate, by means of a suit in equity. Lewis v. Hawkins, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 119 (23 L. ed. 118); Lingan v. Henderson, 1 Bland, Ch. 236; Tuck v. Calvert, 33 Md. 209; Richards v. Fisher, 8 W. Va. 55; Hadley v. Nash, 69 N. C. 162; Harvill v. Lowe, 47 Ga. 214; Scroggins v. Hoadley, 56 Ga. 165; Relfe v. Relfe, 34 Ala. 500, 504; Shinn v. Taylor, 28 Ark. 523; Lewis v. Bookins, 27 Ark. 61; Holman v. Patterson, 29 Ark. 337; Cochran v. Wimberly, 44 Miss. 508; Money v. Dorsey, 7 Smedes & M. 15, 22; Taylor v. Eckford, 11 Smedes & M. 21; Roberts v. Francis, 2 Helsk. 127; Carter v. Sims, 2 Helsk. 166; Cleveland v. Martin, 2 L. R. A.

Head, 128; Sitz v. Delhl, 55 Mo. 17; Selts v. Union Pac. R. Co. 16 Kan. 133; Smith v. Moore, 26 Ill. 392; Greene v. Cook, 29 Ill. 190, 55 Ill. 338; Grove v. Miles, 71 Ill. 376; Button v. Schroyer, 5 Wis. 508; Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 59; Purdy v. Bullard, 41 Cal. 444; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 272.

It is an equitable lien arising in favor of the grantor upon an actual conveyance of the land where the purchase price in whole or in part is left unpaid. Blizzell v. Nix, 60 Ala. 281; Neel v. Clay, 48 Ala. 252; Johnson v. Nunnerly, 30 Ark. 153; Hill v. Grigsby, 32 Cal. 55; Armory v. Reilly, 9 Ind. 490; Stevens v. Chadwick, 10 Kan. 406; Smith v. Rowland, 13 Kan. 245; Hall v. Jones, 21 Md. 439; Haughwout v. Murphy, 22 N. J. Eq. 531; Servis v. Beatty, 32 Miss. 52; Whitehurst v. Yandall, 7 Baxt. 228; Yancey v. Mauck, 15 Gratt. 800; English v. Russell, 1 Hempst. 35; Smith v. Evans, 28 Beav. 59.

It is not even, in strictness, an equitable lien until declared and established by judicial decree. Gilman v. Brown, 1 Mason, 191; Hutton v. Moore, 28 Ark. 382; Campbell v. Rankin, 28 Ark. 401, 406; Moore v. Anders, 14 Ark. 623, 634.

The lien of the vendor is in rem, and he may resort to equity in the first instance to enforce it, without first resorting to a suit at law to recover the amount due. Vall v. Drexel, 9 Ill. App. 439; McCaslin v. State, 44 Ind. 151; Moore v. Anders, 14 Ark. 623, 634; Hutton v. Moore, 28 Ark. 382; Pitts v. Parker, 44 Miss. 247; Wells v. Smith, Id. 266; Driver v. Hudspeth, 16 Ala. 348; Recse v. Burts, 39 Ga. 566; Hines v. Perkins, 2 Helsk. 305; Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 186, 194; Church v. Smith, 39 Wis. 492, 496.

Where a note for purchase money has been assigned, the assignee may not only enforce the lien against the vendee, but may have appropriate relief against the vendor-assignor. Church v. Smith, 39 Wis. 492.

fect, was that the vendee should pay the vendor the sum of $3,000, and, in addition, should assume and pay off his lien upon the land. The price the vendee was to pay for the land was the sum of $3,000, plus the lien debt. That this was the plain intent and meaning is most manifest from the fact that the covenant in the deed is not merely that he took the land subject to the incumbrance, or that the vendor was to be indemnified against personal liability on account thereof; but that he expressly agrees to assume and pay off the outstanding notes for purchase money due from his grantor to the vendor of the latter; and these notes, and their dates, and amounts, and payer, are precisely described. To secure the grantor against default either in the payment of the lien debt thus assumed, or in the payments directly made to him, an express lien is retained on the face of the deed accepted by the purchaser. This was therefore not a promise to pay the debt of another, or to be answerable for the debt, default or miscarriage of another; but was a promise, rather, to pay his own debt to a third person designated by his creditor. That the intestate, by the acceptance of the deed containing this assumption of the lien debt, made himself personally responsible to the creditor holding the lien, will not at this day admit of doubt. Upon this subject, Mr. Pomeroy says: "The mortgagor may not only convey the premises 'subject to' the mortgage. He may also convey them in such a manner that the grantee assumes the payment of the mortgage debt, and thus renders himself personally liable therefor. The element which lies at the bottom of such assumption, and which alone gives it efficacy, according to the theory held by some courts, is the fact that the mortgage debt is included in the purchase price, as a constituent part thereof, and the grantee actually pays or secures to his grantor only the balance of the gross price, after deducting such debt. No particular form of words is necessary to create a binding assumption. It is sufficient that the language shows unequivocally an intent on the part of the grantee to assume the liability of paying the mortgage debt; but this intent must clearly appear. When the deed executed by the grantor contains a clause sufficiently showing such an intent, the acceptance thereof by the grantee consummates the assumption, and creates a personal liability on his part which inures to the benefit of the mortgagee, as though he had himself executed the deed." 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1206.

The person who thus assumes a mortgage on his debt becomes, as to the mortgagor or lienor, the principal debtor, and the mortgagor a surety. Upon such a promise, the original vendor could have maintained an action at law. Moore v. Stovall, 2 Lea, 543.

This is upon the ground that the original vendor, in adopting the act of the vendee for his benefit, is brought into privity with the promisor, and may enforce the promise as if it were made directly to him. Lawrence v. Fox, 30 N. Y. 268; Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178; Thompson v. Bertram, 14 Iowa, 476; Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Ohio St. 333.

But it is insisted that if it be admitted that the intestate had made himself personally liable to the owner of the incumbrance for the assumption of the debt, in the manner heretofore shown, this promise and liability is only collateral. That, the debt being one not originally contracted by him, his liability, growing out of the promise to pay it, only makes it his debt with respect to the land, which continued to be charged with the lien, and which was therefore the primary fund for its payment; and that the rule in equity in respect to incumbrances upon lands described is that, if the incumbrance was not created by the ancestor, the heir takes the land cum onere, and cannot call upon the personal estate to exonerate it; and that the rule is not affected by the fact that the ancestor has made himself personally liable, unless there be something, in addition, indicating a clear intention that the personal estate shall be the primary fund for the payment of the debt.

This presents a question concerning the marshaling of assets, which is altogether res integra in this State. It is a general rule at common law, and in equity, that debts shall be primarily payable out of the personal estate, and that the land shall only be subjected as auxiliary to the personality. In this State, by statute, both the personality and the lands of an intestate are assets for payment of debts; but the latter cannot be subjected until the former is exhausted. These principles are fundamental, and need no elaboration. When, therefore, a creditor, whose debt is secured upon the land, elects to go upon the latter, as he may, the heir will be reimbursed out of the personality. This is the undisputed rule where the debt was the personal debt of the intestate, and one originally created by him. In every such case the election of the creditor to enforce his mortgage is not suffered to disappoint the heir; for, the personality being the primary fund for payment of such debts, it must reimburse the heir for the loss of the land, the latter being entitled to exoneration. Therefore there is no room for controversy. Neither can it be seriously denied that in the case under consideration the creditor could, at his election, have recovered the debt secured by him from the personal representative. But it is insisted that, if such a creditor should, at his election, rely upon his right to satisfaction out of the personality, rather than pursue his remedy by enforcement of his lien, in that event the personal representative could call upon the heir for reimbursement, upon the ground that, as to the debt thus paid, the land, as between the personal representative and the heir, was the primary fund, and the personality the auxiliary; in other words, that the land must ease the personality, in case of debts of this character. The rule heretofore stated as to the primary liability of the personality to the payment of the debts of an intestate is likewise the general rule as to the payment of legacies and of the debts of a testator. But this is a mere rule for the determination as between those to whom the land may be devised and those to whom the personality may be bequeathed, when the testator has made no other direction as to which shall be the fund primarily liable. The testator may, undoubtedly, entirely or partially change the natural order of liability, either by express words or by a plain indication of such intention.

It has been lamented by a long line of judges that the rule governing the construction of wills had not been that nothing but "express words" would be held sufficient to alter the course and order of the law concerning the primary liability of the personality to pay both debts and legacies. Duke of Ancaster v. Mayer, 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 4th Am. ed. 892.

The question here presented is not arising under a will claimed to alter the natural order of liability, for there is no will. But it is, nevertheless, an analogous question, the alteration of the usual order of liability arising, it is claimed, from acts in pais of the testator, whereby the land, and not the personality, is the primary fund for the payment of this debt. It may be here premised that the doctrine here invoked arises only where the testator or intestate has acquired, by purchase or otherwise, lands which at the time were subject to mortgage or other incumbrance. The incumbrance being for a debt not originally created by the purchaser, he is generally presumed not to intend to subject his personal estate as the primary fund for its payment, but, rather, to intend that the land shall discharge the burden.

This doctrine, as stated by Chancellor Kent, is this: "When a man," says he, "gives a bond and mortgage for a debt of his own contracting, the mortgage is understood to be merely a collateral security for the personal obligation. But when a man purchases, or has devised to him, land with an incumbrance on it, he becomes a debtor only in respect to the land; but, if he promises to pay it, it is a promise, rather, on account of the land, which continues, notwithstanding, in many cases, to be the primary fund. The same equity which in other cases makes the personal estate contribute to ease the land, as between the real and personal representatives, will here make the land relieve the personal estates. There is," says he, "good sense and justice in the principle; and I feel the force of the doctrine that it requires very strong and decided proof of intention before the court can undertake to shift the natural course and order of obligation between the two estates." Cumberland v. Codrington, 3 Johns. Ch. 257.

The doctrine just quoted is the deduction of the learned chancellor after reviewing the English equity cases, though in other points of his opinion he recognizes certain important distinctions and qualifications, which will hereafter be noticed. See also Story, Eq. Jur. 571-577, 1248 et seq.

The American editors of White & Tudor's Leading Cases in Equity thus sum up the doctrine: "The weight of authority would therefore seem to be that the personal estate is not primarily liable, unless the testator has not merely made himself answerable for the payment of the mortgage, but has made the debt directly and absolutely his own; or has in some other way manifested an intention to throw the burden on the personality in ease of the land." Volume 1, pt. 2, p. 928 (4th ed.).

The question in all the cases has been whether or not the facts and circumstances showed such an adoption of the debt as to make the personality the primary fund for its payment. A careful examination of the reported English decisions makes it exceedingly difficult to extract any distinct rule by which it may be determined when a purchaser has so manifested his intention to adopt the debt as to take a particular case out of the general rule, which makes the really the primary fund for the payment of an incumbrance existing upon lands purchased by a decedent. By all the cases it is held that a mere dry covenant, by which the purchaser agrees to indemnify his vendor against an incumbrance, is insufficient. Cumberland v. Codrington, 3 Johns. Ch. 229.

This case presented no other question, the learned judge distinctly stating that in the deed conveying the incumbered estate there was only a naked and dry covenant of indemnity. Id. 254.

All that is said in the case as to the rule under any other circumstances is nothing but dicta. So there are cases holding that when lands are purchased subject to a mortgage, and the vendor enters into bond at the time, or subsequently, to pay off the incumbrance, this alone, without other circumstances, will not be regarded as a sufficient demonstration of his intention to make it his personal debt, with respect to the fund primarily liable for its payment. Dillinghurst v. Walker, 2 Bro. Ch. 604; Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 P. Wms. 664, and a number of other cases cited in the very full note of Mr. Cox to the case last cited.

These cases proceed upon the notion that the assumption of the incumbrance was only by way of collateral security, the land remaining the principal debtor and primary fund for its payment. Very slight circumstances, however, will, it seems, suffice to take a case of the latter class out of the rule; as, for instance, in the case of Earl of Oxford v. Lady Rodney, 14 Ves. Jr. 418, where the purchaser of the equity of redemption at the same time covenanted with the mortgagor to pay his debt, and agreed upon new terms and conditions of payment. This was held to distinguish the case from Treddell v. Treddell, 2 Bro. Ch. 101, and to make the personal estate primarily liable.

Waring v. Ward, opinion by Lord Eldon, presents another case where slight circumstances, in addition to a covenant to pay, were held enough to make the debt the personal debt of the vendee. 7 Ves. Jr. 338. See also Woods v. Huntingford, 8 Ves. Jr. 128.

Another rule may be deduced from the decided cases with a good deal of certainty, which is this: That when the incumbrance is assumed as a part of the purchase price, and the vendee makes himself, in any way, directly liable to the creditor for the amount of the incumbrance, in such case the personal estate is the primary fund for the payment of the incumbrance. To satisfactorily show the ground upon which this conclusion is reached, it becomes necessary to briefly consider some of the adjudged cases.

Treddell v. Treddell is termed a leading case, and is certainly the most extreme of the many cases touching upon the doctrine. That case was this: An estate was purchased subject to a mortgage. The purchaser covenanted to discharge the mortgage debt, and to indemnify the vendor, and to pay the agreed purchase price, less amount of the mortgage, to the vendor. Lord Thurlow held the land the primary fund, and refused to exonerate it, on bill of the heir, out of the personal estate. Now, that case, in all of its particulars, is like the one under consideration, and it might be well assumed to be a very commanding authority. But the reasoning of the learned judge, when examined, shows most conclusively it is not, in view of our own decisions as to the effect of a covenant to pay the incumbrance as a part of the purchase price, of any weight whatever. He put his decision distinctly upon the grounds that the personal estate is not chargeable in equity when it is not at law, saying: "The land was the original debtor, and the mortgagee could not bring his action against the executor of any other party, but merely against the original debtor." He proceeds: "Where it is a debt payable by executors at law, this court will relieve the heir by turning the charge upon the executors, provided it does not interfere with other debts and legacies, or any more substantial claims." 2 Bro. Ch. 101.

Upon the reasons of the chancellor, the decree should have been the other way, for the creditor clearly could have maintained a direct action at law against the vendee. Chancellor Kent himself questioned this case, suggesting that the rule was not applicable in that case, saying: "When the indentures between the mortgagor and purchaser recited an agreement by which A had agreed to pay out of the purchase money, to the son and heir of the mortgagee, the principal and interest due on the mortgage, being 2,155 pounds, and the residue of the purchase money, being 1,845 pounds, to the mortgagor, it might be a question whether the son and heir could not have sued at law for that money, as so much received for his use. It has been held that if one person makes a promise to another, for the benefit of a third person, that third person may maintain an action at law on that promise." 3 Johns. Ch. 254.

That an action at law would lie on such a promise has been expressly decided in this State. Moore v. Stocall, 2 Lea, 545.

This case, in the subsequent case of Woods v. Huntingford, 8 Ves. Jr. 128, was commented on by Lord Alvanley as follows: "Tweedell v. Tweedell amounts only to this: That where a man buys subject to a mortgage, and has no connection, or contract, or communication with the mortgagee, and does no other act to show an intention to transfer that debt from the estate to himself, as between his heir and executor, but merely that which he must do if he pays a less price in consequence of that mortgage,—that is, indemnifies the vendor against it,—he does not by that act take the debt upon himself personally." Again, he says: "There was no communication with the mortgagee, but upon the sale there was a mere covenant of indemnity against the mortgage by the vendee." This case, thus limited, and the facts changed from those stated in the report of the case, becomes a sound opinion, but is no authority for the contention of the administratrix; and its reasoning is altogether against the rule involved.

The case of Butler v. Butler was decided in 1800. It was a case of a purchase of a mortgaged estate, the vendee merely covenanting with his vendor that he would indemnify him against the mortgage. The briefs of counsel admit that the vendee had not made himself personally liable to the mortgagee by a mere covenant of indemnity, and the decision was put upon the ground that he had not made himself personally liable. 5 Ves. Jr. 534.

The case of Billinghurst v. Walker, 2 Bro. Ch. 604, was this: A rectory, subject to a charge, was devised. The devisee subsequently assigned the devised estate, and executed his bond to the person in whose favor the charge was, to pay interest during his life, and that his executor and heirs should pay off the principal within three months after his death. The bearing this case has upon the one at bar is not on account of its facts, or of the decision, but for the reasoning of Lord Thurlow as to what facts and circumstances would show such an adoption of an assumed debt as to make the personality the primary fund for its discharge. Lord Thurlow said: "I agree that, if the testator has shown an intent to take the debt upon himself, it will become his debt; but here the old security remained, and he merely gave a collateral security. If there was anything in the marriage contract which bound him to exonerate this estate from the debt, it would become his personal debt; but there is nothing in the contract like that. Where a man transfers a mortgage, which is not his own debt, his executing a bond as a collateral security does not vary the nature of the charge. It is only a necessary act in the transfer. I do not mean that it does not make him liable personally to the creditor, but it does not throw the charge on his personal estate. Nothing passed here to vary the charge. All the cases of sale have turned upon this,—whether the charge was considered as part of the price. The mere purchase of an estate, subject to charges, as an equity of redemption, does not make the personal estate of the purchaser liable to the charge; but, if the charge is part of the price, then the personal estate is liable." This clear announcement, that "if the charge is part of the price" the personal estate is liable, is but an announcement of the rule as stated by the English editors of Leading Cases in Equity, vol. 1, pt. 2, p. 904, citing Cope v. Cope, 2 Salk. 449, and Belvidere v. Rochfort, decided by House of Lords, Wallis, 45-52, 5 Bro. P. C. 209.

The case of Cope v. Cope is not accessible. But the case of Belvidere v. Rochfort, having been decided by the highest English court, and before the independence of these United States, is one of very high authority. The case is one of a sale of premises subject to a mortgage, the deed stating that the mortgage debt and interest were to be paid and discharged by the purchaser out of the consideration agreed to be paid. On the back of the deed was indorsed a receipt for the £500 paid as a consideration, in this manner, viz.: "450 pounds on the perfection of the deed, and 450 pounds allowed on account of the mortgage." The purchaser, Lord Rochfort, died, never having paid the mortgage debt. By his will, he devised the mortgaged estate. The devisee, upon bill filed, obtained a decree that the mortgage should be paid by the personal representative. This decree was affirmed by the House of Lords. Another case directly in point, and of the same high authority, because decided long before our independence, is that of Parsons v. Freeman, decided in 1751 by Lord Hardwicke. As the case is reported by Cox in his note to Boelyn v. Boelyn, 2 P. Wms. 664, it was this: A purchased an estate for £90 which was at that time mortgaged for £86, and he covenanted to pay £86 to the mortgagee and £4 to the vendor. The Lord Chancellor held that, although the covenant was with the vendor only, and the vendee's personal estate was not therefore liable in that respect to the mortgagee (which would not be the law in this State), yet the words were sufficiently strong to show an intention in the vendee to make it his personal debt. It was accordingly held that the personal estate must exonerate the heir.

These three earlier cases are not by any subsequent cases overruled. When we analyze the reasons upon which they rest, it will be seen that the subsequent cases are not even in conflict. The ground upon which the land, in any case, is held to be the primary fund is not that the contract is a contract concerning realty, or even for the benefit of realty. In some of the cases the courts, in endeavoring to get at the intention of the purchaser, in order to determine whether the one fund or the other should be the primary fund, have, as a circumstance, referred to the fact that the engagement which had been entered into was for the benefit of the incumbered land. The suggestion in argument that the intent is to be determined by an inquiry as to whether the debt assumed, or the promise to pay, or the covenant to discharge was for the benefit of the vendee's personality or realty, is not supported by the cases. If it were so, then money borrowed to buy land, and secured by a mortgage on land, would be primarily a charge on the land. So the notes of the vendee, executed to his immediate vendor for the purchase price, would be a debt incurred for benefit of the land, and hence primarily a charge on the land. This extreme has never, it is believed, been held by any court. On the contrary, the English notes to Leading Cases in Equity say: "Again, if a person bought an estate, and thereby contracted a debt with the vendor, and for the purpose of securing it gave a charge on the estate, and entered into a covenant to pay it, it would be the personal debt of the purchaser, and his personal estate would be primarily liable to pay it; and it will make no difference whether the purchase money was to be paid in a gross sum, or from time to time, by way of annuity for life. It is equally a debt and charge upon the personal estate, and in either case the personal estate is the primary fund to pay it." Volume 1, pt. 2, p. 904 (4th ed.); Yonge v. Tores, 20 Beav. 880, 883.

So, under the English Act of 1854, declaring mortgaged land in all cases the primary fund for the discharge of such mortgages, unless the decedent, by will, expressly declared otherwise, it was held not to make a vendor's lien a primary charge upon the land. Hood v. Hood, 26 L. J. N. S. Ch. 616; Barnwell v. Iremonger, 1 Drew. & S. 255. The Act was subsequently amended so as to include such liens.

A debt created for purchase money of land not, therefore, being within the rule contended for, it would seem to follow, without discussion, that a debt assumed as a part of the purchase price would be just as decidedly the personal debt of the vendee as that part of the purchase money covenanted to be paid directly to his immediate vendor. There is no distinction between the two engagements; and the early English cases, cited heretofore, holding that, where the incumbrance is to be paid off as a part of the purchase price, the incumbrance becomes a charge primarily upon the personal estate, are unquestionably to be regarded as sound upon principle, and commanding as authorities upon this court.

We have not deemed it necessary in this opinion to consider how far we would be willing to be governed by the highly artificial rules by which an incumbrance is held to be primarily dischargeable out of one fund or the other. It would seem, then, when the vendee has assumed the debt in such a way as to give to the creditor a right of action against him or his representatives, that this, of itself, would be a sufficient adoption, and sufficient demonstration of his intention to put such a debt on the footing of a personal liability. But this is not now decided, under the well-settled principles of equity, as administered in courts of equity. When all these artificial distinctions as to the origin of the debt have been adopted, the debts which have been paid by a resort to a lien on the land of the heir were the personal debts of Mr. O'Conner, and the personal estate was the primary fund for their payment. The costs taxed to the heir in the foreclosure suit are properly payable by the administratrix. It was the duty of the administratrix to have exonerated the heirs' land. These costs have been thrown upon the heirs by reason of the failure of the administratrix to relieve the heirs before suit. The costs of this cause will be paid by the administratrix, and the decree of the chancellor in all respects affirmed.

Hon. B. J. Turner sat, upon the hearing of this case, in the room and stead of the Chief Justice, who was absent; and he, taking part in the decision of this cause, did not agree with the conclusions here reached, and has filed a dissenting opinion.

Turner, Sp. J., dissenting:

The complainant's assignment of errors correctly states the material facts involved in this controversy, and the same is here copied, viz.: "Thomas O'Conner died intestate, in Knoxville, October 19, 1832, without issue, leaving a widow (the complainant), his sole distributee, and his brothers and sisters (the defendants), his heirs-at-law. He left a valuable real and personal estate, and was in debt about $500,000. His widow administered on his estate, and has paid all the debts, except about $10,000 and some interest; and the balance of the personal estate is merely nominal, having no market value. The defendants have realized over $200,000 in cash from the real estate, and will realize $50,000 more. At the time of said O'Conner's death three parcels of his real estate were incumbered with purchase-money liens, as follows: first, Sanborn lot, about $1,100; second, the Moffatt farm, about $5,000; third, the one-half interest in the Williams McKinney place, about $13,000. About $10,000 of the lien upon the third purchase was resting upon it at the time O'Conner purchased it, and was for purchase money due from O'Conner's vendors to Samuel McKinney, from whom said vendors had purchased it. The $3,000 was the amount which said O'Conner owed his vendors upon this purchase, who conveyed the interest held to O'Conner, retaining in the deed a lien for the payment of the $3,000, also a recitation that said O'Conner assumed and agreed to pay the $10,000 incumbered on the land to McKinney. O'Conner accepted the deed, and went into possession. The other liens were for purchase money due direct by said O'Conner to his vendors, and said liens were retained in the deeds conveying him said real estate. The administratrix did not pay off said liens out of the personal estate, but the lienholders foreclosed them by sale of the property, and the proceeds of the sales were applied in discharge of said liens. The heirs demand that the administratrix shall reimburse them to the extent that proceeds of said lands were applied to the discharge of said liens," etc. The chancellor decreed that the administratrix was bound to reimburse said heirs this money out of the personal estate, and rendered judgment against her for about $24,000, and all the costs of the several causes in which said liens were enforced. The complainant has brought the case here, and has assigned three errors to the action of the court below. Complainant's second assignment of error is: "The $10,000 purchase money due from O'Conner's vendors to McKinney was a primary liability resting upon the land; and that O'Conner's understanding as to said incumbrance was merely secondary; and, as between the heirs and personal representatives, his personal estate is not liable."

This precise question has not heretofore been before this court, and is particularly an open one in Tennessee. Our code system for administering estates of decedents does not provide for the state of facts presented by this assigned error. We have the opportunity of determining this question under the light of adjudged cases in courts of last resort, and gaining from them whatever of wisdom they may afford. The Chancery Court of England, more than two centuries ago, held, where one acquired real estate already incumbered, if he did no more than assume or undertake to discharge it, as between himself and his vendor, that the real estate so acquired contained the primary fund for its payment, and the personal liability of the purchaser was auxiliary, merely. This proposition received the approval of its finest judicial minds, and was never questioned by them. Some uncertainty and collision in the adjudication of the English High Court of Chancery came in when it was attempted to determine what amount of contracting with the owner of incumbrance by the purchaser would make his (purchaser's) personal liability primary, and not secondary. Some of the judges held that the last purchaser or taker entered into a contract with the prior incumbrancer, and bound himself to discharge it; or, if the incumbrance was deducted from the gross price,—at which price he purchased,—then his liability was primary. But, though the last proposition was supported by many fine lawyers, the weight of the adjudged cases in England was against it. The better opinion held the purchaser's liability merely secondary, and the real estate—the burden bearer—primarily liable for the discharge of the incumbrance. We refer to the able and exhaustive opinion of Chancellor Kent in Cumberland v. Codrington, 8 Johns. Ch. 252 et seq., in which he collects and reviews the English adjudged cases bearing on this question during a period of more than a century.

The most distinguished law-writers in England concur with Chancellor Kent in the result reached by him in his review of the cases. Mr. Spence says: "The rule" (the one making personality the primary fund) "only applies to those debts which were properly the debts of the testator. In all other cases, where the real estate was the original debtor, and came to the possessor as such, it must continue to bear the burthen. Even though testator, when he purchased the estate, entered into a collateral contract or covenant, or gave a security for payment of the debt, the estate burthened must first be resorted to." 2 Spence, Eq. Jur. 335.

Mr. Powell, on Mortgages, says: "A purchases an estate subject to a mortgage, and covenants with the mortgagee to discharge the same. A's personal estate is not liable to exonerate the land purchased" (this author, continuing, in the same connection adds), "the personal estate not having received any addition to its funds by reason of the mortgage."

These citations from Powell and Spence are approved by Sir William Grant in Hancox v. Abbey, 11 Ves. Jr. 179.

It will be noted, these two eminent masters of the law go further than the case in hand. It does not appear from the record that the intestate gave any bond, covenant or other obligation to the incumbrancer, McKinney, to discharge his debt.

Williams, on Executors, says: "Again, if a man buys an estate subject to an existing mortgage, the lands remain the proper fund for its discharge, and the heir or devisee cannot throw the debt upon the personality, as the primary fund for its payment." 2 Williams, Exrs. 1535, 1536; 2 Roper, Legacies, 957, 958; 8 Jarm. Wills, 477; Adams, Eq. 529.

2 Redfield, on Wills (p. 878), after stating the rule making the realty, incumbered when acquired, the primary fund for its payment, says: "In order to make the purchaser's personality primarily liable, the purchaser must by contract make himself personally liable, and directly liable, to the owner of the incumbrance; and even a covenant or bond for the purpose will not be sufficient, unless accompanied with circumstances showing a decided intention to make it thereby personally his own. This rule prevails in most of the States of this Union. Only three have attempted to vindicate a different rule, and in those three States there is no separate chancery court." Coudert v. Coudert, decided in 1887, and reported in 43 N. J. Eq. 407, 4 Cent. Rep. 132, is to the same effect. See also Mount v. Van Ness, 33 N. J. Eq. 264; Sutherland v. Harrison, 86 Ill. 366; Hirst's App. 92 Pa. 494; Bisph. Eq. § 848; 8 Pom. Eq. Jur. 1206; Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 574-576, 1248, 1248c; 2 Lomax, Exrs. 413; 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. pt. 2, p. 922.

In the case in hand, the intestate had no negotiations with the owner of the incumbrance touching it in any particular. He gave no note or other obligation to his vendors for the payment of the debt upon the land, or its purchase. The deed conveying him the land contains a recital of the existence of the incumbrance, and intestate's assumption and promise to pay it; and the intestate accepted the deed, and went into possession of the land under it. "This is the head and front of his offending" in this direction. It will be noticed that the principle applicable to these facts has not been questioned in England or the States of this Union, excepting this, during a period of 200 years, and that there has been no conflict upon it, but only upon the question, What acts of the purchaser will make the incumbrance his debt, and his personal estate primarily liable for its payment?—and that the weight of authority upon this phase of the question was adverse to the primary liability of the purchaser.

See William Grant, in Lechmere v. Charlton, 15 Ves. Jr. 198, says: "Where a person becomes entitled to an estate subject to a charge, and then covenants to pay it, the charge still remains primarily on the real estate, and the covenant is only a collateral security, because the debt is not the original debt of the covenantor."

It is well settled by the ablest courts and law-writers in this and the mother country that the personal estate will not be primarily liable unless the testator has not merely made himself answerable for the payment of the mortgage, but has made the debt directly and absolutely his own, and has in some other way manifested an intention to throw the burden on the personality, in case of the land.

We are aware that it has been objected that the high authorities cited to sustain the principle laid down above are not Tennessee authorities, and therefore are not binding on this court; that we have a system of statutes of our own regulating the administration of decedents' estates, and the system, as explained by our adjudged cases, should determine and settle the question raised by the second error of complainant's assignment. Is this objection well taken? There is no provision of our Code touching the administration of estates that provides for a case circumstanced as is the one in hand. It is not a creditor seeking, under these laws, to subject realty to sale, in order to pay his debts, nor an administrator or executor, for the creditor, seeking to reach realty as a means of paying a debt of a decedent. The creditor enforced his lien for purchase money in the courts, and had sale and payment of his debts from the proceeds of the realty. The heir-at-law now asks to be reimbursed the sum paid from the proceeds of this land. The question of his prayer depends upon the equity of his case, and whether his land was the primary fund for the payment of the debt paid by his inheritance. Our Code makes both real and personal property assets for the payment of debts,—the latter the primary, and the first the auxiliary, fund for payment,—unless this order has been changed by the decedent in his life, as between legatee or distributee on the one hand, and the devisee or heir at law, on the other. Our Code and the adjudged cases of this court permit the decedent to determine which shall be the primary, and which the auxiliary, fund for paying debts and legacies. His intention or purpose thereupon, either express or by necessary implication, is sufficient to control the question, provided its latitude is reasonably apparent. We are not shut up to a will alone for this intent. We may get it from the res gesta, the facts of the transaction connecting the decedent with the incumbrance, it may be express or by necessary implication. Bisph. Eq. §§ 847, 848.

It is to be noted that the judges in the cases cited considered and interpreted the facts as transactions, to find proper evidence of the decedent's intentions to charge his personality in case of the burdened realty. Lord Cowper, in Bagot v. Oughton, 1 P. Wms. 847, after detailing the facts of the transaction, said: "The covenant . . . was an additional security, for the satisfaction only of the lender, and not intended to alter the nature of the debt."

Chancellor Kent (3 Johns. Ch. 262), after saying there must be a direct dealing with the owner of the lien debt, adds: "And even that is not enough, unless the dealing with the mortgagee be of such a nature as to afford decided evidence of an intention to shift the primary obligation from the real and personal fund."

2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1248b, on the same point, has this language: "And even a covenant or bond for the purpose will not be sufficient, unless accompanied with circumstances showing a decided intention to make thereby the debt personally his own."

Redfield, on Wills, in nearly identical language, lays down the same rule.

The inquiry is not, Did the decedent charge the McKinney land primarily with the $10,000 incumbrance? This debt had been fastened upon it before intestate's purchase, but it is said that O'Conner intended to relieve the land by throwing upon his personality the primary liability of its payment. If we are precluded from considering and interpreting the facts of the purchase for the answer to the question (he dying intestate), we have no evidence of an intention to exonerate the land with his personality; and, however, clearly, the heir cannot call on the distributees to reimburse him for the discharge of the McKinney debt. But, considering the facts of the purchase of the McKinney land by the intestate, is there proper evidence of intent to exonerate? The vendor's lien in favor of McKinney was fastened on the land, being retained on the face of the deed to intestate's vendors. O'Conner made no contract with the lienholder; gave no note or other obligation to him for it. He merely accepted a deed from his vendors, which recited the existence of the incumbrance, and that intestate assumed and agreed to discharge it; but nothing was said or done by him in the direction of its discharge. This fixed lien was left by the parties undisturbed,—a primary charge upon the land.

It is clear this purchase was made for the benefit or increase of the real estate. This fact, under the old rule, which will be discussed below, was evidence of an intention and purpose on the part of the purchaser that the land purchased should be the primary source of its payment. Evidently, the intestate intended his personality to be in aid of the realty merely, for the reasons stated under the high authorities cited. I hold that the McKinney land was first liable for the payment of the McKinney $10,000, and interest, and cost, and that the heir is not entitled to a recovery against the administratrix for reimbursement thereof.

We feel less certain in disposing of the three 1,000-dollar notes given by the intestate to his vendors on the purchase of the McKinney land. These notes are for an additional sum, needed to acquire the half of the McKinney land, were in aid of the purchase, and come under the rule laid down by Mr. Lomax, as follows: "So, in cases where the land comes to the deceased by descent or devise [will perchance vary the rule], his concurrence in the mortgage deed, and his personal covenant for the payment of the money, on the assignment or transfer of the mortgage, will not alter the burden, as between his real and personal representatives. And the same principle applies if other estates are added to the security, on a further sum lent, or if there be a covenant on his part increasing the rate of interest. And it seems that, if the sum borrowed by him and added to the original mortgage be comparatively small, equity will not consider that he had different intentions as to these different terms, but will charge the real estate with the whole." See 2 Lomax, Exrs. marg. note, 227, 228.

The sum covered by the three notes is small, compared with the incumbrance debt, being a little less than one third its size. Alluding to the rule above given, equity will not consider he had a different intention as to these terms, and, therefore, the real estate should be charged with both sums, as the primary source of payment. Complainant's first error assigned denies the right of the defendant to reimbursement on these facts: The intestate bought of Sanford real estate at the price of $1,650; paid $550 cash, and gave notes for balance. He purchased of Moffatt real estate at $4,500, and gave his notes therefor. Each vendor made a deed of the real estate sold by him to intestate, retaining lien for purchase money upon the land conveyed. Each enforced his lien upon the real estate against the heir-at-law, and had his debt paid from the proceeds thereof. These proceedings were after death of intestate, and the realty so sold was situated in or near the City of Knoxville. The presumption is that this realty was bought by the intestate on speculation, and he intended and proposed to pay the sums due thereon from the proceeds thereof when sold. Complainant insists that no case has been passed upon by this court identical in its facts and defenses with the one in hand.

We have found none determined by courts of last resort in the United States, except one or more adjudged by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, wherein the court briefly held that the contract of purchase was a personal one, upon which the purchaser might have been sued, judgment had, and the debt collected from his personal estate; and for that reason held the personality the primary fund for payment, and the realty in aid of it, merely.

Complainant admits that the non-lien creditor cannot subject the land to sale for the payment of his debt until he shows complete exoneration of the personality, or its insufficiency to pay debts. She insists the lien creditor can proceed to enforce his lien upon the realty in the first instance, without reference to the personality; that there is neither statute nor decision of this court settling the identical question presented here; that the question is equitable, to be settled by deciding where the superior equity is; that complainant's contention is supported by the superior equity, the controversy being between the heirs at law and distributees, creditors and legatees having no interest therein. On the last analysis, lying back of the fact of a "personal contract," on which the Massachusetts cases put the primary liability on the personality, is this inquiry: Was the contract for the increase and benefit of the realty, or of the personality? Its answer determines which estate is first liable. If the realty is first in liability, the contract made for the purchase money, though capable of being turned into a personal judgment against the purchaser, is secondary in its character, and in aid of the realty. This rule was formulated and used by the courts of England more than 200 years ago, in settling questions identical with those now before this court, and since its introduction into the judicial history of the mother country we remember no decision of her courts questioning its soundness. It should be stated that at the date of its first use personality constituted the only fund for the payment of debts in England. A favoritism, the outgrowth of the old feudal system, so completely hedged the realty about that it was rarely made to pay debts of decedents. In the United States property of a decedent, of all kinds, is and has been applicable to the payment of his debts. It has been made so now in England. Our constitutions and laws constitute a soil more favorable to the growth and vigor to this old rule than that of its origin, and in this country we would expect to see it oftener applied, and its authority less questioned, than in the land of its nativity. This old rule has been cited and approved by the Supreme Court of the United States in McLeirn v. Wallace, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 644 [9 L. ed. 566]. Judge McLean, delivering the opinion of the court, quotes Lord Eldon as saying, in Waring v. Ward, 7 Ves. Jr. 386, that "the principle upon which the personal estate is first liable in general cases is that the contract, primarily, is a personal contract, the personal estate receiving the benefit." Judge McLean, continuing, says: "And so, if the contract was in regard to the realty, the debt is a charge on the land. It is in this way that a court of chancery, by looking at the origin of the debt, is enabled to fix the rule between distributees."

We state generally that many of the state courts and law-writers in the United States cite and approve this "rule;" but they need not be referred to here with more particularity. When the rule was adopted in England, personal property did not have its present volume or importance. The mortgages upon real estate were nearly without exception for borrowed money. Vendor's liens were very rare, and cut no figure in the current litigation of that day. The courts, in that formative period, explained the parts of the transaction from which grew the debt, to ascertain the interest of the debtor to charge his real or personal estate with its payment. Those able judges had little of precedent to guide them, but had good common sense, and large acquaintance with and understanding of the motives and purposes moving to action in the affairs of every-day life. To this circumstance is largely due the excellency of those early decisions. These fathers of our inherited jurisprudence, guided by their practical good sense and level-headed wisdom, interpreted the making of the debt for the increase of and benefit to the personalty to mean that the debtor intended that estate should be burdened primarily with the payment. Hence all debts for personal property, services, loaned money and mortgaged debts, which make up the consideration supporting the great bulk of the indebtedness of that period, were held to be for the benefit of the personalty; and consequently it was first chargeable with their payment. These judges were too clear-headed not to know that the converse of this rule, when applied to real estate, was axiomatically true, also; but, as the occasion of its application was rare, there being few land transactions, there are few rulings of the courts upon it to be found in the early reported cases. If the personalty receiving the benefit coming from the creation of a debt means that the debtor intended that it should first be chargeable, why does not the result follow to the realty? When it gets the benefit, why should it be true as to personalty and untrue as to realty? The courts proceeded in principle and reason upon the same line when they left the facts to determine the relative liability, inter partes, of two or more persons jointly and severally bound upon the same instrument. If it is reasonably certain, upon weighing the facts, that one signed with the intention to be bound as principal, and the others as sureties, the courts do not hesitate to so define their rights, and to enforce them accordingly. Likewise, the determination of the many questions arising in the settlement of partnerships, involving the conflicting rights of firm and individual creditors as to their priorities of payment from firm and individual means, is largely controlled by the intention and purpose of the parties, impressed upon the particular transaction. In fact, the rule giving several priorities is the outgrowth and fruitage of the expressed or presumed intent of the parties to the transaction, or in relation thereto. Death and intestacy do not affect the question; and the personal contract idea, though a prominent fact, is silent, while the courts give expression to the intent of the parties, in settling and fixing the relative liability of persons and funds in the two classes of cases hereinbefore referred to. Also, if a tract of land subject to a lien is sold by the lien debtor surreptitiously, in separate parcels, at different times, and conveyed by deeds registered when made, the lien, if enforced by rule of the land, must be in the inverse order of alienation. The first sub-purchaser may force this order in the sale of the parcels. This equity grows out of the presumed intention of the several sub-purchasers, and may be enforced, notwithstanding death and intestacy have intervened.

Other contentions might be cited wherein the expressed or presumed intention of the parties, impressed upon the transaction, is the controlling fact with the courts in fixing the liability of persons or funds; but those named are deemed sufficient for this purpose, to show the constant practice of the courts in giving a controlling influence to the intent of parties in settling the large part of the covenant litigation of the day. Where the claims of creditors have been paid, with no opposing statute nor adjudication of this court, and when the title to both realty and personalty flows from the same source,—the intestate,—why should not his intent, impressed upon his property, control the question which shall enrich his heir or his distributee? What good reason is there for making this an anomaly,—an exception to a rule of such general application?

This court, in Masson v. Swan, 6 Heisk. 451, 457, goes far to sustain this rule. Swan sold a lot to Masson, by parol, who put valuable improvements on it, but did not pay purchase money. Swan died, and Masson disaffirmed the contract, and sued for the value of the improvements. This court held the lot the primary fund for the payment. Judge Nicholson, speaking for the court, said: "The real estate, and not the personal, is benefited by the improvement; and equity necessarily fixes the liability for the benefit on the real estate." The principle of Masson v. Swan has been applied to similar facts by nearly all the courts of this Union; and the reason of the rule, whenever applied, is the same, viz.: The realty, having received the benefit, must be held first liable for the payment therefor. The personal contract on the part of Swan had no bearing in the decision.

John Marshall, of Franklin, Tenn.,—a great name in the law,—sat as a special judge in Franklin v. Armfield, 2 Sneed, 356, 357. This great lawyer held the executor, who had paid off an incumbrance upon a parcel of land, partly with his own means, and partly with the assets in his own hands, was entitled to be reimbursed therefor; and that the land, relieved from the burden resting on it when it came to the devisee, was chargeable therewith, as the primary fund.

The "personal-contract" theory, as a test to determine which estate is to be first chargeable with a debt, has been shifting and unfixed in its nature, as may be seen in the overruling of Campbell v. Findley, 8 Humph. 380, after an interval of half a century, by Moore v. Stovall, 2 Lea, 543, by a divided court, and a century of discordant opinions in England, and to some extent in New York, as to what makes a binding personal contract, in the sense of the rule. It should be observed that these two prominent States in intelligence, wealth and culture have cleared up the question by clear-cut legislative enactment, providing that the descended realty of decedents shall in all cases be the primary fund for payment of any debt fastened upon it by mortgage, etc., when it came to the heir, unless there is a clearly expressed intention to the contrary in the will of decedent. The better rule, we think, is to let the answer to the inquiry, Which estate got the benefit? fix the primary liability, if the debt is for borrowed money, and is secured by a mortgage on real estate, and the personalty has been benefited thereby; and the courts, for more than a century, held these facts, by necessary implication, evidence of the decedent's intention to charge his personalty with the burden of discharging the mortgage debt, in exoneration of the realty,—not an intention shown in a will, but impressed upon and inhering in the very fiber of the transaction from which came the debt. When the debt is the price of land bought, why will not these facts, under the same rule, evidence an intent to charge the incumbered land primarily, as the debt was made for the increase of the land?

Why shift the rule, and say the personality is the primary fund to pay, because it is the "personal debt of the decedent?" In strictness, the canons of descent devolved upon the heirs only the excess of the market value of the realty over the incumbering, unpaid purchase money, with the privilege to them, upon discharging that debt, to be invested with the fee simple. The intestate took just this interest in the realty purchased, and no more was transmitted to his heirs. He consented to the retention by his vendors of so much of the realty purchased as would be sufficient to pay its price, and thereby appropriated and set apart that interest as a means charged with the payment of the price of the realty. Presumably, the purchases from Moffatt and Sanford were on speculation, and intestate intended to pay the debts credited in the purchase from the proceeds, when sold. As between the heir and the distributee, should not that intent of intestate to make the realty first liable to pay off the burden be effective, not as an intent evidenced by a will, but one impressed upon and woven into the very texture of the transaction by the intestate himself? Does public policy, or public good, or the uniformity of the rules for administering the estates of decedents favor or oppose the settlements of these open questions, as already indicated? It can only be a practical question when the distributee and heir are not the same person, which is rarely the case. Under our laws of distribution and descent, the heir and distributee are never different persons, except when one dies circumstanced as was Thomas O'Conner, or without wife, or husband, or children, when the distributee is a parent, old, and perhaps needy.

The intestate was largely engaged in real-estate speculation in a growing city, where real estate was rapidly enhancing in value. The purchases were made with the expectation of early sales, at fine profits. He meets a sudden death. No testament is made, providing for his childless widow. If the personality is to relieve the realty of the incumbrance for its purchase money, the heir will be enriched, and the widow and distributee impoverished. The superior equity is certainly in her favor. The heir is in a court of equity, asking that equity be done. Will equity reimburse the heirs at the expense of the distributee?

The reasoning upon the first error assigned by complainant is equally applicable to the third 1,000-dollar note given to the intestate's vendors in the purchase of the McKinney land. We reach a conclusion as to this error with less certainty than we had as to the McKinney incumbrance; but still we feel justified in holding that the heirs are not entitled, in equity, to be reimbursed for sums paid upon the Moffatt and Sanford parcels of land from the proceeds of said lands. This disposes of the third assigned error of complainant adversely to the claim of the heirs at law, and upon the whole case, the chancellor is in error, and should be reversed, and the heirs at law pay the cost of this cause in this and the court below. Entertaining these views, I am compelled to dissent from the opinion of the majority of the court in this case.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

J. M. WHITE, Appt.,
c.

CINCINNATI, NEW ORLEANS & TEXAS
PACIFIC R. CO.

(....Ky.....)

Knowledge of the unsafe condition of the platform provided by a carrier for loading stock will not prevent a person, attempting to use it for that purpose, and exercising due care, from recovering for injuries received by reason of the defect.

(January 25, 1890.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Grant County in favor of defendant in an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.
Mr. J. J. Landram, for appellant:

NOTE.—Carrier, unsafe condition of platform. See notes to New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Doane (Ind.) 1 L. R. A. 157; Kelly v. Manhattan R. Co. (N. Y.) 8 L. R. A. 74; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Wortham (Tex.) 8 L. R. A. 368.
7 L. R. A.

Messrs. De Jarnette & Dickerson, with Mr. C. B. Simrall, for appellee:

A party cannot recover for an accident occasioned by the use of a defective platform, after he had seen the defects, had his attention expressly directed to them, and "knew its unsafe condition when he went on it."

Bogenschutz v. Smith, 84 Ky. 331.

There can be no recovery for an injury caused by the mutual default of both parties. When it can be shown that it would not have happened except for the culpable negligence of the party injured concurring with that of the other party, no action can be maintained.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 7, and cases cited; Sullivan v. Louisville Bridge Co. 9 Bush, 81; Jacobs v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 10 Bush, 268; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Collins, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 114; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Robinson, 4 Bush, 507; Louisville C. R. Co. v. Goets, 79 Ky. 442; Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Lebus, 14 Bush, 518; Paducah & M. R. Co. v. Hoehl, 12 Bush, 41; Wharton, Neg. § 800, and cases cited, and see also § 832; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 25, and cases cited; 2 Thompson, Neg. p. 1140, notes; Smith, Neg. 2d Eng. ed. p. 227, and cases cited; Pollock, Torts, p. 874; Wood, Mast. and S. § 319, and cases cited; Smith, Mast. and S. 4th Eng.

ed. p. 344; Patterson, Railway Acc. L. p. 45, and cases cited.

Holt, J., delivered the opinion of the court: The appellant sues for damages for injuries sustained by him while assisting his employer, a shipper over the appellee's road, in loading stock at night upon its cars. The apron or platform connecting the stock-chute with the car into which the cattle were being driven gave way, precipitating the appellant against the side of the car. The evidence tends to show that the apron was too short,—not long enough to lap sufficiently far over on either the chute or the car to insure safety to one upon it; that it was not fastened to the chute by hinges or otherwise, as is usual, and had been out of repair for a considerable time; that all this was known to the Company, through its agent, previous to the time of the injury, but was likewise known to the appellant. It further appears that the station where the accident occurred was the nearest and most convenient point for shipping the stock, and that but the one chute and apron were provided by the Company. The lower court, at the close of the appellant's testimony, peremptorily instructed the jury to find for the Company upon the ground, as is admitted in argument, that the appellant was aware of the defective condition of the platform, and could not therefore recover.

Such an instruction should not be given, unless, conceding the truth of the evidence offered, and of every fact which it conduces to prove, the party has no case. It is contended that the knowledge of the appellant, prior to the time of the injury, of the unsafe condition of the platform, forbids a recovery. If so, the action of the trial court was correct. Let us see. It is not properly a question of contributory negligence. It is not claimed, and there is no testimony tending to show, that the appellant was negligent in the manner of using the platform. So far as appears, it was the usual and careful use of it; but the trouble consisted in the fact that it was defective. The rule is well settled by a uniform current of decisions, so numerous that citation is unnecessary, that a railroad must keep its platforms and approaches to which the public do, or will naturally, resort in doing business with it, in a safe condition for such use. This is one of the duties it owes to the public. It goes hand in hand with its franchises and extraordinary privileges. The appellant had a right to be where he was, and engaged as he was, when he was injured. The Company had invited his presence by holding itself out as a carrier of stock. It had impliedly said to the public: "The platform is safe for the purposes intended, if reasonable care be exercised in its use."

It is said, however, that the appellant knew this was not true, and that he therefore used it at his peril. This is, however, unlike the case of a servant against the master for an injury caused by a defective state of the machinery or premises or materials provided by the latter for the work of the former. The master is not bound to employ the servant. The latter cannot dictate to him in this respect. Not only the duty rested upon the Company, however, so long as it held itself out to the public as a carrier, of providing safe appliances for such purpose, but the public had a right to demand it, and to use the road for travel and shipping purposes. It was bound to keep its platforms and approaches essential to travel or shipment in a safe condition; and public policy forbids that it should be allowed to protect itself from liability for injurious consequences resulting to persons from its failure to perform this important duty upon the ground that they knew the platform or approach was defective.

Suppose a passenger platform at a depot is defective. A person desiring to take passage knows it. Is he, therefore, to forego going, or else take the risk of injury without remedy, notwithstanding the exercise of reasonable care upon his part in attempting to board the train? Surely not. In this case the Company had provided but the one chute and the one apron for the shipment of stock at the station. It was inviting patronage in this way by the public, although it knew the means provided for the purpose were unsafe. Under such circumstances, was the owner of the stock to be compelled to take them elsewhere for shipment, or the appellant to refuse employment, because of knowledge of the defective condition of the platform? A very different case would be presented where one contributed to his own injury by carelessness upon his part in the use of the defective platform. He cannot complain where, but for his own neglect in the manner of using it, the injury would not have occurred. In such a case, there is a co-operating cause of injury on his part. Here there is none, but the Railroad Company invites the shipper to ship his stock. It holds itself out as furnishing safe means for the purpose; and, although he makes a prudent and usual use of them, yet after he has been injured it says to him: "There is no liability upon our part, because you knew we were not doing what we professed to the public?" It cannot be heard to rely upon the failure of a duty so important to the public. It is the duty, for instance, of a railroad company to keep its depot lighted at night, that entrance and exit may be safe. Suppose a person desires to take passage at a certain place, and upon reaching the depot he finds that this has not been done. The situation is such that he must enter the depot and take passage, or decline to go, however important his business. He accordingly enters; and, while prudently, and as best he can, making his way in the darkness, falls, and is injured by something carelessly placed in the way by the company. Will it be contended that the company could shield itself by saying: "You knew there was no light in the depot, and if you had kept out of there no injury would have resulted?"

If one have notice of a defect in a highway making it dangerous for travel, this does not per se make a careful and usual use of it by him negligence. We do not, of course, mean to hold that one may, by recklessly rushing into danger, or by his own culpable negligence in use of the appliances provided by the railroad company, directly produce the injury, and then hold the company liable; but as he must of necessity use them, or forego travel, or the transportation of his property, he should not be remediless, although he may know of their defective condition, if he is injured when using them for these purposes in a prudent and the usual manner. Any other rule would leave the public at the mercy of the railroad companies. They, knowing the traveler or shipper, in this day of wonderful advance and improvement, is compelled to use their roads, or forego travel or the shipment of his property, could by their agents inform him of the defective condition of their appliances for travel, and then be exempt from liability for his injury by reason thereof, although still inviting him to use them, and although he has been injured when doing so in a prudent and usual manner. Public safety, and the proper management of this now almost universal mode of travel and shipment, forbid the adoption of a different rule from the one we have indicated.

Judgment reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PITTSBURGH CARBON CO., Limited,
Appt.,
v.

Frank C. McMILLIN, Receiver of the United Carbon Companies, Resp't.

(...N. Y....)

1. A party to an illegal trust combination, who, in pursuance of the agreement, has furnished goods in the name of the trustee, cannot claim the proceeds as against a receiver of the trust assets, although he withdrew from the combination before the receiver was appointed.
2. The rule against granting relief to a party to an illegal contract does not apply to prevent a receiver from recovering the fruits of the transaction for the benefit of honest creditors.

(January 14, 1890.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fifth Department, affirming a judgment of the Erie Special Term in favor of defendant in an action to determine the ownership of a fund which had been paid into court by the original defendant in the suit. Affirmed.

The action was originally brought against the Brush Electric Light Company, of Buffalo, to recover the contract price of certain electric-light carbons which were alleged to have been sold and delivered by plaintiff to that company.

The company appeared and represented that a claim was made upon it for the same debt by one Frank C. McMILLIN, that it admitted the debt to be due and offered to pay the same into court, and moved that McMILLIN be substituted as defendant in the suit. The court granted this motion and McMILLIN was substituted as defendant and appeared and made defense.

The court found as facts, inter alia, that prior to March 1, 1887, plaintiff had a contract with the Brush Electric Light Company for supplying to it certain electric light carbons from time to time; that on or about March 1, 1887, plaintiff made a contract with Edward C. Hawks relating to the conduct and management of its business, and relating to the performance by him of its existing contracts; that during the period in which the carbons for which this suit was brought were shipped to the Brush Electric Light Company plaintiff was operating its works in accordance with the contract made with Hawks, who sent bills for all shipments, and that the bills were made payable to Hawks as trustee.

That subsequently, and before the commencement of this suit, the trust represented by Hawks was ordered to be wound up and McMILLIN was appointed receiver therefor, and that McMILLIN was entitled to receive the money which had been deposited by the Brush Electric Light Company.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. C. S. Crosser, for appellant:

The original vice of an unlawful purpose tainted every part of the trust contract, including the assignment of the claim against the Brush Electric Light Company. Such claim never in any legal sense became an asset of the trust or trustees.

Bishop, Cont. 469, 471, 473; 8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 872; 9 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 880; Thorne v. Travellers Ins. Co. 80 Pa. 15; Shidler v. Vandike, 92 Pa. 447; Saratoga Co. Bank v. King, 44 N. Y. 87; Arnot v. Pittston Coal Co. 68 N. Y. 558; Stanton v. Allen, 5 Denio, 434.

There can be no estoppel against asserting the invalidity of the trust contract.

Greenhood, Pub. Pol. Rule 126; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 5 Lans. 355; Langan v. Sankay, 55 Iowa, 52; Snyder v. Willey, 83 Mich. 483; Stevens v. Wood, 127 Mass. 123; 2 Kent, Com. 466; Bredin's App. 92 Pa. 241.

The receiver represents the trust combination, with no better title to this claim than that of a voluntary assignee. His title is derived solely from the trust combination, with all previous equities and iniquities still attached thereto.

Rev. Stat. pt. 3, chap. 8, art. 8, § 68; Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 9; Cutting v. Damarell, 88 N. Y. 410; Honegger v. Wettstein, 94 N. Y. 252; Williams v. Babcock, 25 Barb. 109; McHarg v. Donnelly, 27 Barb. 100; Bell v. Shibley, 38 Barb. 610; Van Wagoner v. Paterson Gas-light Co. 23 N. J. L. 283; Symes v. Hughes, L. R. 9 Eq. 475; Greenhood, Pub. Pol. Rules 2, 10, 42; High, Receivers, § 699; Beach, Receivers, §§ 699-706; Story, Eq. Jur. § 881.

The respondent's position is not strengthened by urging the claims of the creditors of the trust, and by relying on their real, or supposed, innocence.

1. The burden was on these creditors of ascertaining the nature of the trust, and the limits of the trustees' authority.

Swan v. Produce Bank, 24 Hun, 277.

NOTE.—Conspiracy: trust combinations in trade, illegality of. See note to People v. North River Sugar Ref. Co. 2 L. R. A. 83; Carroll v. Giles, 4 L. R. 7 L. R. A.

See also 42 L. R. A. 85.

A. 264, 30 S. C. 412; Leslie v. Lorillard, 1 L. R. A. 456, 110 N. Y. 519; Anderson v. Jett, 6 L. R. A. 360, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 570.

2. The trust agreement did not by its terms create any copartnership relationship. The creditors dealt directly with, and extended credit to the trustees as principals.

Smith v. Anderson, L. R. 15 Ch. Div. 247; Cary v. Gregory, 6 Jones & S. 127; Austin v. Munro, 47 N. Y. 360; New v. Nicoll, 73 N. Y. 130; Storrs v. Flint, 14 Jones & S. 498.

The appellant's right to recover this fund antedates the trust contract and is clear of all its taint. The respondent, to succeed, must plant himself squarely upon the trust contract and secure the aid of the court to enforce the same. This is beside the purpose of equity.

Keene v. Kent, 4 N. Y. S. R. 431; Bishop, Cont. § 469; Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 401, 940; Wharton, Cont. ed. 1882, § 849; Steers v. Lashley, 6 T. R. 61; Sykes v. Bendon, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 170; Armstrong v. Toler, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat, 258 (6 L. ed. 468); Thomson v. Thomson, 7 Ves. Jr. 470; Snell v. Dwight, 120 Mass. 9; Dunham v. Presby, 120 Mass. 285; Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co. 68 Pa. 173.

Mr. Anasley Wilcox, for respondent:

Appellant cannot set up the illegality of its own contract as against the receiver, who represents not only itself and the other parties to the contract, but bona fide creditors, who had dealt with the trust or combination and had given credit to it in the ordinary course of business. The receiver represents primarily the creditors of the insolvent. For this reason he is allowed to disaffirm the illegal acts of the insolvent and recover its assets wherever creditors might do so; and in general he unites in himself all the rights of creditors and of the parties interested in the insolvent estate.

Laws 1858, chap. 814; Rules 78, 79, General Rules of Practice; Atty-Gen. v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 272; Talmage v. Pell, 7 N. Y. 328; Farmers & M. Bank v. Jenks, 7 Met. 592; Honegger v. Wettstein, 15 Jones & S. 125, 94 N. Y. 253; Alexander v. Relfe, 74 Mo. 516; Osgood v. Laytin, 8 Keyes, 521; Osgood v. Ogden, 4 Keyes, 70; Litchfield Bank v. Church, 29 Conn. 150.

The plaintiff cannot take advantage of the illegality of its own acts to defeat the rights of creditors, whether in a suit brought directly by them, or by a receiver as their representative.

Broom, Legal Max. pp. 279, 288. See Litchfield Bank v. Church, supra.

Members of a partnership cannot set up, as against a creditor who had dealt with the partnership in good faith, the fact that the partnership was formed for an illegal purpose, in order to defeat their own liability for a just debt.

See 1 Lindley, Partn. Eng. ed. 201, 205; Metcalfe, Cont. 116; Adams v. Creditors, 14 La. 461; Kineman v. Parkhurst, 59 U. S. 18 How, 298 (15 L. ed. 387).

Treating the contract as an agency, the principal could not set up the illegality of such a contract as against an innocent creditor who had contracted with the agent in good faith, so as to defeat its liability for a just debt.

See Murray v. Vandrbill, 39 Barb. 140; Wharton, Ag. §§ 474, 542, also §§ 25, 26, 249, 250, 320.

In cases of unlawful agreements, where they have been executed, and new rights have sprung up which do not necessarily involve the enforcement of the unlawful agreement itself, 7 L. R. A.

courts have refused to allow the parties to defeat such rights by going back to the unlawful agreement, even as between themselves.

See Keene v. Kent, 7 N. Y. S. R. 229; Brooks v. Martin, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 70 (17 L. ed. 732); Marsh v. Russell, 66 N. Y. 288; Wann v. Kelly, 5 Fed. Rep. 584; W. U. Teleg. Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co. 3 Fed. Rep. 428; New York Cent. Trust Co. v. Ohio Cent. R. Co. 28 Fed. Rep. 806.

Andrews, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The finding that the contract of March 1, 1887, between the plaintiff and Edward C. Hawks, as trustee for the plaintiff and other carbon companies, was made for unlawful purposes, and was illegal, was not excepted to, and is to be taken an incontrovertible fact on this appeal. The ground of illegality is not expressly stated, but it is clearly to be inferred from the other findings and the opinion of the trial court that the contract was held to be illegal for the reason that it was entered into in furtherance of an unlawful combination between the plaintiff and other carbon companies in restraint of trade. The scheme of the parties to the combination was to vest in a common trustee the management and control of the business of manufacturing and selling carbons for electric lighting theretofore carried on separately by the companies forming the combination. To this end the several companies were to lease to the trustee their respective factories, and to operate them under the direction of the trustee, who was to designate the kind of goods to be manufactured, fix the prices at which and the persons to whom they should be sold, purchase all materials and supplies, collect the bills and pay out of the common fund the cost of production, and divide the net proceeds and profits of the business between the several parties to the combination in a ratio fixed by the contracts of the respective companies with the trustee.

The plaintiff, when the contract of March 1, 1887, was made, had an outstanding contract to furnish carbons to the Brush Electric Light Company from time to time, and in its contract with the trustee the plaintiff assigned to him all existing contracts, and the trustee assumed their performance.

The sum in controversy in this action has been paid into court by the Brush Electric Light Company, being the purchase price of carbons manufactured and delivered to that Company in April, May and June, 1887. These carbons were manufactured at the plaintiff's factory, but were billed in the name of the trustee, and delivered in performance of the contract between the plaintiff and the Brush Electric Light Company, which the trustee had assumed.

In or about July, 1887, the plaintiff refused to continue any longer in the combination. Thereupon an action was commenced in the Court of Common Pleas for Cuyahoga County, in the State of Ohio, the headquarters of the combination, by some of the members of the combination, against the plaintiff and other members thereof, to dissolve and wind up its affairs, and the proceedings resulted in the appointment of the present defendant as receiver of the property and assets of the trusteeship, with power, among other things, to take possession thereof, to collect the assets and pay and adjust claims arising out of the business. No question is made on this appeal as to the jurisdiction of the Ohio Court to entertain the proceeding and make the order appointing the receiver, and it is found that the receiver duly qualified and entered upon the discharge of his duties. It is also found that at the time of the appointment of the receiver the trust was insolvent, and that all the assets of the trust business, including the claim against the Brush Electric Light Company, are insufficient to pay its creditors.

The plaintiff stands in the attitude of a party to an illegal contract, claiming a fund which, if the contract was valid, would clearly belong to the trust combination, and not to the plaintiff as one of its members. The plaintiff has no standing to claim the fund in opposition to the clear import of the trust agreement, unless its repudiation of the contract in July, 1887, made the plaintiff the vendor of the carbons delivered to the Brush Electric Light Company during the time the plaintiff remained a party to the combination. The carbons, it is true, were delivered in performance of the plaintiff's agreement made before the combination was formed. But the trustee assumed performance by contract with the plaintiff, and the Brush Electric Light Company accepted performance by him. To permit the plaintiff to treat the debt as a debt owing to it, and not to the trustee, would be permitting the plaintiff to escape from the operation of the rule which denies relief to a party to an illegal transaction. The plaintiff had a right to repudiate the contract of March 1, 1887. Its stipulations could not have been enforced against the plaintiff. The plaintiff, notwithstanding the contract, could have sold its carbons to the Brush Electric Light Company on its own account, and received pay for them. But it did not do so.

The agreement of March 1, 1887, was carried out in part. The carbons were manufactured by and for the trustee representing the combination, and were delivered to the purchaser as the property of the trust, by the consent of the plaintiff, and the purchaser became the debtor of the trust and not of the plaintiff. The repudiation of the trust agreement by the plaintiff after this transaction did not purge its previous participation in the illegal scheme. If the Brush Company had not voluntarily paid the fund into court, it would be a grave question whether the plaintiff could have enforced a recovery against that company, although there was no adverse claimant. See De Witt v. Brisbane, 16 N. Y. 508; Johnson v. Bush, 8 Barb. Ch. 207; Talmage v. Fell, 7 N. Y. 328.

But as between the plaintiff and the receiver of the trust combination, the latter is, we think, clearly entitled to the fund. It is claimed that no action could have been maintained by the trustee representing the trust combination, against the Brush Electric Light Company, to recover the purchase price of the carbons, for the reason that the illegality of the combination would have constituted a good defense. Assuming this predicate, it is then asserted that the receiver stands in the same position, and his title is subject to the same infirmity, as that of the combination which he represents. Without considering the assumption upon which this proposition is based, it is a sufficient answer to the proposition asserted that the receiver unites in himself, not only the right of the trust combination, but the right of creditors, and that he may assert a claim as representing creditors which he might be unable to assert as a representative of the combination merely. The general rule is well established that a receiver takes the title of the corporation or individual whose receiver he is, and that any defense which would have been good against the former may be asserted against the latter. But there is a well-recognized exception which permits a receiver of an insolvent individual or corporation, in the interest of creditors, to disaffirm dealings of the debtor in fraud of their rights. Gillet v. Moody, 3 N. Y. 479; Porter v. Williams, 9 N. Y. 142; Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 9, 108.

Assuming that the trustee could not have recovered of the Brush Electric Light Company for the reasons suggested, it would be a very strange application of the doctrine that no right of action can spring from an illegal transaction which should deny to innocent creditors of the combination, or to the receiver who represents them, the right to have the debt collected and applied in satisfaction of their claim. The just rule of the common law, that the courts will not lend their aid to enforce illegal transactions at the instance of a party to the illegality, would be misapplied if permitted to be used to prevent the recovery and application of the fruits of the transaction for the payment of honest creditors.

We think the judgment is right, and it should therefore be affirmed.

All concur.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

GRIGGS, Plff. in Err.,

STONE et al.

(...N. J. L....)

1. Work done in engraving upon copper shells, patterns to be printed on cloth, cre-

NOTE.—See Conrow v. Little, 5 L. R. A. 608, 115 N. Y. 387.

7 L. R. A.

ates no lien on cloth-printing machines which are sold as complete without shells, under Rev., p. 669, § 5, or Supp. Rev., p. 456, § 3, giving a lien for work done upon "fixed machinery" or "fixtures for manufacturing purposes."

2. A lien on "fixed machinery" or "fixtures for manufacturing purposes" will not be extended in case of doubt to machinery of such a character that a common-law lien may be had upon it.

(February 6, 1890.)

PRROR to the Circuit Court for Passaic County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action to enforce an alleged mechanics' lien. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Mr. Thomas M. Moore for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Joseph Coult for defendants in error.

McGill, Ch., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants in error, under the 5th section of the Mechanic's Lien Act (Rev. 669), claim a lien upon two cloth printing machines fixed in the soil, in buildings belonging to the Passaic Bleachery, because of work done in engraving, upon copper shells, patterns to be printed on cloth. These shells are cylinders which fit on mandrels or rollers constructed with the printing machines. A protrusion from the inside of the shell, called a "feather" (of uniform size in all shells), fits a groove in the mandrel, and keeps it from slipping as the mandrel revolves. The printing machines are sold, in this country and in England, as complete without shells. Shell-making is a distinct industry. The manufacturers of the printing machines do not make them. In fitting a shell, it is necessary that its internal diameter, or bore, shall correspond with the diameter of the mandrel of the machine by which it is used, but in all other respects the machine is adjustable, within limits, to the use of any shell. Sizes of mandrels and bores of shells are regulated by agreement between manufacturers, so that any size of either may be ordered by an agreed designation, without special measuring or fitting. For instance, the mandrels of the machines of the Bleachery Company are of that size which requires the shells to be used by them to have what is called an "E bore." A single pattern is engraved upon the external surface of each shell, and hence a printer's shells must be as numerous as the patterns he prints.

The Passaic Bleachery has 500 shells, and only two printing machines. The defendants, who are engravers in the City of Newark, have engraved patterns upon 76 of these 500 shells. The shells upon which they are worked were delivered into their possession at their place of business, and, after the work of engraving was done, were returned to the bleachery. The defendants did not do any work upon the printing machines themselves, and did not do anything to the shells which affected their mechanical connection with those machines. The lien is claimed simply because of the engraving. By the surrender of the possession of the shells, after the engraving was completed, the lien which the common law gave upon them was lost. The contention now is that, by the Statute, a lien can be had upon the printing machines as for work done in the construction or alteration of "fixed machinery," or of "fixtures for manufacturing purposes." Rev. p. 669, § 5; Supp. Rev. p. 456, § 3.

7 L. R. A.

The two printing machines are admitted to be "fixed machinery," within the intendment of the Statute. It is obvious that the simple question now to be considered is whether the shells are parts of the printing machines. If they are parts of them, it is apparent that the lien claimed must extend, not only to the machines, but also to the 500 shells which are held for use by them. The test by which this question should be determined is the inquiry whether the shells are essential to the completeness of the machines for the purposes for which the machines were designed. It has been held in several cases, which suggested this test, that rollers specially fitted for a machine designed for rolling iron are parts of it, because, without them, that machine cannot perform its functions, and would not pass as complete; and, as well, that duplicate rollers fitted to such a machine are parts of it, because their design is to render the machine more efficient. The plain purpose of the rolling-mill is to reduce iron to shape. Without rollers, it cannot accomplish this purpose, and hence it is not complete or salable without rollers. The office of the printing machine is not to itself print, but to apply that which prints to that which is to be printed upon. When sold, it is considered as complete without shells, just as the iron-rolling machine is complete without the iron upon which it operates. It stands upon the footing of the book-printing press, which is complete without types or stereotype or electro-type plates which it applies to paper. I do not conceive that a workman who alters, or even constructs, one of 10,000 stereotype plates used by a book publisher, could claim a lien upon the publisher's presses and his 10,000 plates as part of that press. It is evident that, to avoid such an absurdity, the plate must be regarded as a separate article, that the press is designed to use. I think it is plain that the shells were not parts of these printing machines.

But, if the question whether the shells are to be regarded as parts of the printing machines be doubtful, it appears to me that the court's conclusion in this case may rest upon another ground. The purpose of the Statute is to afford mechanics a lien upon machinery of which they cannot have such possession as would give them a lien by the common law. The statutory lien is confined to "fixed machinery." With this purpose of the Statute in view, it follows that, where machinery is of such a character that the common-law lien may be had upon it, doubts should not be so resolved as to hold the machinery to be also subject to lien under the Statute. In other words, in such cases doubts should be resolved against the statutory lien.

Here the defendants in error at one time had a lien by the common law. Upon these grounds I think that the judgment below should be reversed.

Reversed unanimously.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

STATE OF GEORGIA

v.

Charles TUTTY.

STATE OF GEORGIA

v.

Rose WARD.

(....Fed. Rep.....)

- *1. By the settled policy of the State of Georgia marriage relations between white persons and persons of African descent are forever prohibited, and by the Statutes of the State such marriages are declared null and void.
2. These Statutes have been held to be in accordance with the Constitution, by the supreme appellate tribunal of the State.
3. The Statutes of the State also declare that all marriages solemnized in another State, by parties intending at the time to reside in Georgia, shall have the same legal effect as if solemnized in the latter State, and, further, that parties residing in Georgia cannot evade the provisions of its laws as to marriage by going into another State for the solemnization of the marriage ceremony.
4. The contract of marriage is not a "contract" within the meaning of the provision in the Constitution of the United States prohibiting States from impairing the obligation of a contract.
5. Marriage is more than a contract. It is an institution which is the foundation of the family and of society; the rights and qualifications of the parties thereto depend upon the legislation of the State as controlled, for the benefit of the entire community, by principles of public policy.
6. Where the statutory law is silent as to the effect of marriages between persons domiciled in a State and who leave it with the purpose of solemnizing the marriage elsewhere, to evade such laws, but intending to return and live therein, the marriage may be upheld where the inhibition relates to form, ceremony or qualifications depending on age or like condition.
7. When, however, the marriage is inhibited by a positive policy of the State, as affecting the morals and good order of society and leading to serious social evils, the marriage will be held void.
8. Where the State has enacted legislation declaratory of the effect of marriages, extraterritorially, of its citizens, who thus seek to evade its positive policy and penal laws, the State affords the rule of decision.
9. Where Tutty, a white man, and Ward, a negro woman, were indicted in the state courts for fornication, and thereafter repaired to the District of Columbia and were married, immediately returning to Georgia, and thereupon attempted to remove into the United States court the indictments pending against them, the petition for removal was denied and the indictments remanded to the court of the State.

(February 4, 1890.)

ON motion to remand to the state court causes arising from indictments for fornication, *Head notes by SPEER, J.

7 L. R. A.

which had been removed from such court to the federal court for trial for the alleged reason that they presented federal questions. Grant'd.

The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. Wallace Fraser, Solicitor-General, for the motion.

Mr. James Atkins, contra.

Speer, J., delivered the following opinion:

It appears from the motion to remand, as well as from the petition for removal before the court, that the defendant, Charles Tutty, has been for many years a citizen and resident of Liberty County, in this State. The grand jury of that county presented an indictment against Tutty, charging him with the statutory crime of fornication on the 1st day of April, 1889, and at other times, with one Rose Ward, a woman of African descent, and formerly a slave, also a citizen of the State of Georgia and domiciled in the County of Liberty.

It appears further that after the indictment was found the said Tutty and the said Rose Ward, or Rose Tutty, as she calls herself, repaired to the District of Columbia and were married there in accordance with what are understood to be the laws of the United States for that District.

At the trial term of the Superior Court of Liberty County, to wit: on the 3d day of December, 1889, and before the trial of the criminal indictments above mentioned, both of the parties indicted presented to the state court petitions for the removal of the cases for trial into this the circuit court of the United States for this district. The petitions are practically identical. They recite the substance of the indictment. They deny the fornication. They state that the relations between the parties, which are described more in detail in the petition, "existed at a time when she (Rose Ward or Rose Tutty) was petitioner's lawful wife or under circumstances in which he and she were and are secured from lawful prosecution in the manner attempted in said case. That petitioner had been duly married to said Rose in the District of Columbia, and the acts which are charged to have been done, if done at all, were and are under their lawful executed contract of marriage with each other in full accordance with the requirements of the laws then in force in said District of Columbia. Petitioners further state that the prosecution against them is based upon a law of Georgia forever prohibiting the relation of marriage between white persons and persons of African descent. That such law denies to the petitioners the right secured to them by the Constitution and laws of the United States, providing for equal civil rights of themselves and all other citizens of the United States, to protection against the laws in a State impairing the obligation of contracts.

The Honorable Robert Falligant, of the superior court, declined to entertain these motions, whereupon the defendants filed in this court a certified transcript of the record of the proceedings of the superior court, and on the first day of the term, the court having been notified that the Solicitor-General of the Eastern Judicial Circuit, who is the counsel representing the State of Georgia in its criminal prosecutions, would move to remand the causes to the court whence the transcript was taken, regularly assigned the hearing of the said motion for trial. The motion to remand, which the court required to be in writing, presents several grounds:

1. It is insisted the case should be remanded because the defendants made no appearance in the state court, and that their bonds were estimated; that their counsel, James Atkins, Esq., admits that he advised his clients to remain away from said state court as it was not necessary that they should be there in person when said motion for removal was made.

2. Because it appears that the indictments against the defendants charged the offense to have been committed on the 1st day of April, 1880, whereas it is not pretended that the alleged marriage took place until the 15th day of the same month.

3. Because the defendants have been citizens and domiciled in the County of Liberty for many years; that the defendant Rose Ward was born a slave; that they removed to Chatham County after the finding of the indictment, but that, while domiciled in the County of Liberty and citizens of the State, they went to the District of Columbia, and were married there in order to evade the laws of the State of Georgia, prohibiting marriages between whites and blacks, and that immediately after said marriage they returned to the County of Liberty.

The defendants filed affidavits to the effect that their lives would have been in danger had they attended court in Liberty County, as they were bound to do by their bond, but they do not indicate any satisfactory, or, indeed, credible, reason for that statement.

Without bestowing very great attention on the technical reasons urged for remanding these cases, it is, in the opinion of the court, the wisest and most serviceable course to consider and decide the motion upon the grave and important question which it presents.

Does the law of the State which prohibits and makes void a marriage between individuals of the Caucasian and of the African races deprive the parties in this case of their rights, guaranteed to them by the Constitution and laws of the United States, or, to state the question as it is more narrowly presented by the petition of the defendants, do the statutes of the State have the effect to violate the obligation of the marriage contract in the sense in which the Constitution of the United States inhibits state action which violates the obligation of a contract? It would, perhaps, be impossible to overstate the importance of this question under the grave and unsettled relations which exist between the distinct races now inhabiting a large portion of these United States, and it will not be wise nor patriotic for the court to evade the vital point of decision as might perhaps be done in this case.

By a settled policy of this State, a policy adopted with the purpose to preserve, as far as the laws may accomplish that result, the purity and integrity of the races inhabiting the State, it is declared, (Code, section 1768):

"Marriage relations between white persons and persons of African descent are forever prohibited, and such marriages shall be null and void."

Section 4572, Code, presents the penalty for adultery or fornication between individuals of the races, and under this section the indictments against the defendants were found.

Section 1710 of the Code provides as follows: "All marriages solemnized in another State by parties intending at the time to reside in this State shall have the same legal consequence as if solemnized in this State. Parties residing in this State cannot evade any part of the provisions of its laws as to marriage by going into another State for the solemnization of the marriage ceremony."

It will thus be seen how clearly recognized and distinctly fixed is the purpose of the State of Georgia to prohibit within its borders miscegenation as the result of marriages between the white and black races.

These Statutes have received judicial construction by the Supreme Court of the State at a period when its judges were widely known, not alone for their conservatism, their devotion to the Constitution of the common country, their broad and tolerant liberality of opinion, but also for their profound learning and conspicuous intellectual power.

In Scott v. State, 39 Ga. 321, this decision will be found: Leopold Daniels, a Frenchman, had married Charlotte Scott, a negro woman. They were indicted for cohabiting, and thus the question arose.

Chief Justice Joseph E. Brown pronounced the unanimous opinion of the court, of which the other members were the Hon. H. F. McCay, more lately the United States Judge for the Northern District of Georgia, and the Hon. Hiram Warner, afterwards himself the illustrious chief justice of the State.

Of the law Chief Justice Brown makes these observations: "I do not hesitate to say that it was dictated by wise statesmanship, and has a broad and solid foundation in enlightened policy, sustained by sound reason and common sense. The amalgamation of the races is not only unnatural, but is always productive of deplorable results. Our daily observations show us that the offspring of these unnatural connections are generally sickly and effeminate, and that they are inferior in physical development and strength to the full blood of the other races. It is sometimes urged that such marriages should be encouraged for the purpose of elevating the inferior race. The reply is, that such connections never elevate the inferior race to the position of the superior, but they bring down the superior to that of the inferior. They are productive of evil, and evil only, without any corresponding good."

The court was unanimous that the law was constitutional, and the conviction of the parties was affirmed.

An identical conclusion was reached by this court, Judge Erskine pronouncing the decision, in the case of Hobbs and Johnson, 1 Woods, 537. The section of the Code above quoted is interpreted, and is held not to be an infraction of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, or of the laws Congress has made for its enforcement.

In the course of his opinion, page 540, Judge

Erskine says: "Nor, I apprehend, is marriage considered to be embraced within that clause of section 10 of article 1 of the National Constitution, which prohibits the State from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts."

He quotes the declaration of Chief Justice Marshall, in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 518 [4 L. ed. 629], that "the provision in the Constitution has never been understood to embrace contracts other than those which respect property or some object of value, and confer rights which may be asserted in a court of justice. It has never been understood to restrict the general rights of the Legislature to legislate on the subject of divorce."

In another part of the opinion, the same great magistrate said: "The framers of the Constitution did not intend to restrain the States in the regulation of civil institutions adopted for internal government."

Judge Erskine concludes that it is plain that the institution of marriage is not technically a contract, nor can it be said to be related to property. He quotes the declaration of Mr. Bishop: "All our marriage and divorce laws are state laws and state statutes, the national courts with us not having cognizance of the matter within our localities." 1 Bishop, Mar. and Div. § 87.

Calling attention to the fact that the state marriage regulations did not deny to a citizen the equal protection of the laws, for the punishment or penalty adjudged to the colored citizen found guilty of fornication is like that, and none other, which is inflicted on the white citizen, he holds that the sections of the Code of Georgia which inhibit marriage between white persons and persons of African descent, and which provide for the punishment of the colored and white persons who are found guilty of the crime of fornication, are not in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and the relators were remanded to the state courts.

The conclusion of Judge Erskine, that the marriage contract is not contemplated by the prohibition of the Constitution of the United States against the impairment of contracts by state legislation, has been, subsequently to the rendition of the decision above quoted, fully sustained by two decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. In the case of Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190 [31 L. ed. 654], it was held that marriage is something more than a mere contract, though founded upon an agreement by the parties. When once formed, a relation is created between the parties which they cannot change, and the rights and obligations of each depend, not upon their agreement, but upon the law, statutory or common. It is an institution of society, regulated and controlled by public authority. Legislation, therefore, affecting this institution, or annulling a relation between parties, is not within the prohibition of the Constitution of the United States against the impairment of a contract by such legislation. It may be observed that this decision was rendered upon the effect of territorial legislation annulling a marriage. A fortiori, this announcement will control with reference to the legislation of a State.

The language of Mr. Justice Fields is peculiarly apposite and instructive with reference to the important controversy before the court.

7 L. R. A.

On page 205 [657] of the decision, he declares: "Marriage, as creating the most important relation in life, as having more to do with the morals and civilization of a people than any other institution, has always been subject to the control of the Legislature."

He cites many cases where the Legislatures of States have annulled marriages. He calls attention to the fact that this power was formerly exercised by the Parliament of England, and it may, with reason, be asked, if this power has been formerly exercised by state Legislatures after a marriage has been contracted, may it not, with more of force and reason, be exerted to prevent the marriage, if it would be objectionable and contrary to public policy?

Upon the main point on which the defendants here rely, the learned justice says: "The only inconsistency suggested is, that it impairs the obligation of the contract of marriage. Assuming that the prohibition of the Federal Constitution against the impairment of contracts by state legislation applies equally, as would seem to be the opinion of the Supreme Court of the Territory, to legislation by territorial legislatures, we are clear that marriage is not a contract within the meaning of the prohibition."

He quotes the language of Chief Justice Marshall, quoted supra. With reference to marriage, he says: "It is an institution in the maintenance of which in its purity the public is deeply interested, for it is the foundation of the family and of society, without which there would be neither civilization nor progress. This view is well expressed by the Supreme Court of Maine in Adams v. Palmer, 51 Me. 481, 483."

It will be interesting and important to consider the language of this case, to which Justice Field quotes with approval.

Chief Justice Appleton declares that "when the contracting parties have entered into the married state, they have entered into a new relation, the rights and obligations of which rest, not upon their agreement, but upon the law of the State, statutory or common, which defines and prescribes those rights, duties and obligations. They are of law, not of contract. Their rights under it are determined by the will of the sovereign, as evidenced by law. It is not, then, a contract within the meaning of the clause of the Constitution which prohibits the impairing of the obligation of contracts. It is, rather, a social relation, a creation of the law itself; a relation of the utmost importance as affecting the happiness of individuals, the first step from barbarism to incipient civilization, the purest tie of social life, and the true basis of human progress."

And the Chief Justice cites, in support of this opinion, the case of Maguire v. Maguire, 7 Dana, 181, 183, and Ditson v. Ditson, 4 R. I. 87, 101. In the first of these, the Supreme Court of Kentucky said that marriage was more than a contract; that it was the most elementary and useful of all the social relations regulated and controlled by the sovereign power of the State and might be abrogated by the sovereign will whenever the public good would thereby be subserved; that being more than a contract, and depending especially upon the sovereign will, it was not embraced by the constitutional inhibition of legislative Acts impairing the obligation of contracts.

The Supreme Court of Rhode Island, in the case above quoted, declares it is not a contract in the sense in which the obligation may not be impaired, but one of the domestic relations.

In Wade v. Kalbfleisch, 58 N. Y. 282, it is declared to be more than a contract, its relations always regulated by the government. It partakes more of the character of an institution, regulated and controlled by public authority, upon principles of public policy for the benefit of the community.

In Noel v. Ewing, 9 Ind. 87, it is declared to be "in every enlightened government, pre-eminently the basis of civil institutions and thus an object of the deepest public concern."

The illustrious Story, in his great work on the Conflict of Laws, paragraph 108, note, fully sustains this view: "It follows within the full precincts of absolute and paramount administration by the controlling authority, that the marriage contract is not within the provision of the inhibitory clause of the Constitution denying to the State the power to impair contracts."

This doctrine has been repeated by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Hunt v. Hunt, 131 U. S. Appendix cixv. [S. C. in its place chronologically 24 L. ed. 1109]: "The contract of marriage is not a contract within the meaning of the provision in the Constitution prohibiting States from impairing the obligation of contracts."

In the case of Kinney v. Com. 80 Gratt. 858, 32 Am. Rep. 690, the precise question in this case was decided adversely to the defendants here. There a negro man and a white woman domiciled in Virginia, went, as in this case, to the District of Columbia, and were regularly married, and after remaining there ten days returned to their home in Virginia and continued to reside there as husband and wife. The law of Virginia, like the law of Georgia, prohibits marriages between white persons and negroes. It was held that the parties were liable to indictment in Virginia for lewd and lascivious cohabitation; that the marriage in the District of Columbia was a mere evasion of the laws of Virginia, and could not be pleaded in bar of the prosecution. The case is therefore precisely in point. There the argument was made that the laws of a State, with reference to marriage, could not operate extra territorium. Conceding the general rule, the learned court proceeded to point out the exceptions, citing Mr. Justice Story, in his work on the Conflict of Laws, section 118a: "The most prominent, if not the only known, exceptions to the rule are those marriages involving polygamy and incest, those positively prohibited by the laws of a country upon motives of policy." The case at bar would seem clearly within the latter classification.

Reference is made in the opinion from which we quote to the case of Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 198. In that case William Leigh Brook married in Denmark Mrs. Emily Armitage, his first wife's sister. The parties were lawfully domiciled in England and had gone to Denmark on a temporary visit. The marriage was lawful in Denmark. In a suit among the heirs of Brook, Vice-Chancellor Stuart, with whom sat Mr. Justice Creswell, held that the marriage in Denmark was, by the well-known law of England upon the subject, wholly invalid.

The case was appealed to the House of Lords, and was there considered with great carefulness. Opinions were rendered by the Lord Chancellor Campbell, Lord Cranworth, Lord St. Leonards and Lord Wensleydale.

The Lord Chancellor declared: "While the forms of entering into the contracts of marriage are to be regulated by the lex loci contractus the essentials of the contract depend upon the lex domicilii. If the contract of marriage is such in essentials as to be contrary to the law of the country of domicile, and it is declared void by that law, it is to be regarded as void in the country of domicile though not contrary to the law of the country in which it was celebrated." All the law Lords concurred with the opinion of the Lord Chancellor. The same doctrine is affirmed in this country, in North Carolina (Williams v. Oates, 5 Ired. L. 535; State v. Kennedy, 76 N. C. 251; State v. Ross, 76 N. C. 242), and in Louisiana (Dupre v. Boulard, 10 La. Ann. 411); and the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Virginia seems to have concurred in the opinion of the state court, in Kinney v. Com. above quoted. Ex parte Kinney, 3 Hughes, 1.

The principle, as we have seen, is made the law of the State of Georgia by the express Statute quoted above. By statute and by unbroken authority then, except by the case of Medway v. Needham, 16 Mass. 157, such marriages, between parties domiciled at the time in the State, as are declared void by the laws of the State, will be held invalid, no matter where they were contracted.

The case of Medway v. Needham, 16 Mass. 157-161, was the occasion of an interesting and learned discussion of the conflict of laws relative to marriage, and especially of the validity of marriages between persons domiciled in a State, who temporarily left it to evade its marriage laws (Story, Conf. L. 5th ed. p. 230, note), in which the distinguished author, with much of warrant in the renown of its courts and the learning of its judges, favors, not unnaturally, the ruling in Massachusetts. An attentive consideration of the reasoning of the text and the note will make it appear, however, that the author did not have in mind a case like that under consideration here. The true rule is stated with satisfactory clearness in the recent case of Pennegar v. State, decided by the Supreme Court of Tennessee on 29th of January, 1889, and reported in that useful and valuable periodical, the Lawyers Reports, Annotated, Vol. 2, p. 708 [87 Tenn. 244]. Stating the general rule that a marriage valid where celebrated is valid everywhere, the court calls attention to the exceptions. Of these the most important is a marriage which the local law-making power has declared shall not be allowed any validity either in express terms or by necessary implication.

Marriages of this class are divided by the court into two subdivisions: (1) where the statutory prohibition relates to form, ceremony and qualifications; (2) marriages which are prohibited by positive state policy as affecting the morals or good order of society. Justice Folkes, for the court, presented the distinction in the following language: "Where the statutory inhibition relates to matters of form or ceremony, and in some respects to qualification of the parties, it is declared that the courts would hold such marriage valid. But if the statutory prohibition is expressive of a decided state policy as a matter of morals, the court must adjudge the marriage void as contra bonos mores." To illustrate the proposition the court cites the case of State v. Bell, 7 Baxt. 9, where a marriage between a white person and a negro, valid in Mississippi where celebrated, and where the parties were domiciled at the time of the marriage, was held void in Tennessee. There is in Tennessee, as in Georgia, a highly penal statute on this subject, and the court alludes in vigorous language to the "demoralization and debauchery involved in such an alliance." Referring to the criticisms made in Medway v. Needham by the Lord Chancellor in Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 198, and the criticism of that case in Com. v. Lane, 113 Mass. 458, and to the case of Putnam v. Putnam, 8 Pick. 433, the court calls attention to the significant fact that in Putnam v. Putnam the Supreme Court of Massachusetts says: "If it shall be found inconvenient or repugnant to sound principles (the italics are ours) it may be expected that the Legislature will explicitly enact that the marriages contracted in another State, which, if entered into here, would be void, shall have no effect within this Commonwealth." The Legislature did shortly thereafter so enact, whether because the doctrine laid down in the case was inconvenient or because repugnant to sound principles does not appear.

Justice Folkes, in his interesting opinion, quotes also from the opinion of the Lord Chancellor in Brook v. Brook, supra, the following observation relative to Medway v. Needham, 16 Mass. 157: "It is entitled to but little weight, and is based upon decisions which relate to the form and ceremony of marriage. If a marriage is absolutely prohibited in any country as being contrary to public policy, and leading to social evils, I think that the domiciled inhabitants in that country cannot be permitted, by passing the frontier, and entering another State in which the marriage is not prohibited, to celebrate a marriage forbidden in their own State, and, immediately returning to their own State, to insist on their marriage being recognized as lawful."

We may add, with reference to the law and the policy of Georgia, that whatever may be the difference between courts or countries in the opinion held and enforced upon this vital topic, this State, by its Declaratory Statute, has distinctly withdrawn its jurisprudence from the domain of the debate. The Statute is the rule as to persons domiciled in Georgia. "All marriages solemnized in another State by parties intending at the time to reside in this State shall have the same legal consequences and effect as if solemnized in this State. Parties residing in this State cannot evade any of the provisions of its laws as to marriage by going into another State for the solemnization of the marriage ceremony."

This authoritative and precise announcement of state policy is made in the exercise of its 7 L. R. A.

sovereignty, upon a subject which involves the character of its population and citizenship, and, as we have seen, repeatedly declared by the Supreme Appellate Court of our country, exclusively within the precincts of state control. The general rule upon which the petitioners rely, viz., that a marriage valid where celebrated is valid everywhere, depends upon international comity, a jurisprudence "existing in the sense of mutual interest, mutual benefits and mutual obligations to cultivate peace and harmony." Story, Conf. L. p. 83.

But of international comity it was said by Chief Justice Taney in the decision in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 38 U. S. 18 Pet. 589 [10 L. ed. 308]: "It is the voluntary act of the nation by which it is offered, and is inadmissible when contrary to its policy or prejudicial to its interest."

That marriages between individuals of Caucasian and of African blood are contrary to the policy of Georgia, we have seen. Whether it is prejudicial to the State is for Georgia to determine. We have seen that the National Constitution is not infringed. It is true that in certain senses the States of the American Union are not independent nations. "For all national purposes embraced by the Federal Constitution the States and the citizens thereof, are one, united under the same sovereign authority and governed by the same laws. In all other respects the States are foreign to and independent of each other." Buckner v. Finley, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 589 [7 L. ed. 530], opinion, Mr. Justice Washington. See also Dickins v. Beal, 53 U. S. 10 Pet. 573 [9 L. ed. 538]; Rhode Island v. Mass. 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 719 [9 L. ed. 1258]; Phillips v. Payne, 92 U. S. 133 [23 L. ed. 649].

And the 14th Amendment to the Constitution does not limit the power of the State to protect its citizens. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26 [32 L. ed. 585].

The court will not discuss the argument of defendant's counsel to the effect that the intermarriages of whites and blacks do not constitute an evil or an injury against which the State should protect itself. This is a question which has been, as we have seen, the subject of repeated judicial deliverance, but it is more properly in the opinion of this court within the domain of legislative debate.

It is enough, for the purpose of its duty, for the court to ascertain that by a legitimate and settled policy the State of Georgia has declared such marriages unlawful and void; for, while in this country, where the home life of the people, their decency and their morality are the basis of that vast social structure of liberty and obedience to law which excites the patriotic pride of our countrymen and the admiration of the world, and while these attributes of our citizenship should be cherished and protected by all in authority, and the creatures who defy them should be condemned by all, the courts in their judicial functions are rarely concerned with the policy of the laws which are made to protect the community. The policy of the State upon this subject has been declared, as we have seen by its supreme court as well as by its statutes; and it is enough to say that this court is unable to discover anything in that policy with which the federal courts have the right or the power to interfere. To discuss the topic further might give immediate pain to many who are wholly irresponsible for a condition which would make them sensitive to its hearing or knowledge.

It may not be improper to state that the evils comprehended in this general topic are decreasing. This the observation and testimony of superintendents of public instruction who have the opportunity to observe large numbers of colored children, prove to be true. Upon every possible consideration this must be deemed an important, indeed an absolutely necessary, step toward the amelioration of their condition and the permanent advancement of the race; and to disregard the praiseworthy purposes and efforts of the colored people themselves, whether by nullifying the laws made to prevent miscegenation or by ignoring the vicious practices of the licentious, would be as cruel to that race as it would be injurious to society, destructive to social order and ruinous to the future of a large portion of the country, a future with which the prosperity of the whole country is indissolubly connected.

The questions presented are decided adversely to the defendants, and the indictments must be remanded to the state court whence they were removed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

John LAWTON, Libelant to Limit Liability as Owner of The Steamboat "Katie,"

v.
H. M. COMER et al.

"THE KATIE."

(40 Fed. Rep. 480.)

"The Act of June 19, 1886, extending the benefits of limited liability legislation to vessels engaged in inland navigation, having been assailed for alleged unconstitution-

*Head notes by SPENCER, J.

ality,—Held, that the Act is valid, in view of the power of Congress to regulate commerce:

(a) Because the law, amended, excepted from its operation inland navigation only, and not internal commerce, as insisted.

(b) The amendment extended the operation of the law, not to internal commerce, but to inland navigation. So much for the direct purpose of the Act.

(c) If internal commerce is affected, it is incidentally merely. The purpose of the Legislature being legitimate, and warranted by the Constitution, it is wholly immaterial to the consideration of the validity of its action that somewhere it has a casual or contingent effect upon the domain of state legislation.

NOTE.—Congress may regulate liability of ship-owners.

It is within the power of Congress to regulate the liability of owners of vessels so far as applicable to marine torts, and it is not necessary to aver in the petition, or to prove, that the claims against the vessel are in excess of her value. The Garden City, 26 Fed. Rep. 766; Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 589 (27 L. ed. 1042); Headrick v. Virginia & T. A. L. R. Co. 48 Ga. 545.

Limited Liability Act of Congress construed.

Under the provisions of the Act of Congress of 1851, if the loss is caused by the owner's "design or neglect," his common-law liability remains intact, and he is liable for the whole loss. Walker v. Western Transp. Co. 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 153 (18 L. ed. 174).

The purpose of the Act was to limit the liability of the vessel owner, and it applies to any damage irrespective of locality of the thing injured, if there be "no fault or privity" on the part of the owner. Re Vessel Owners' Towing Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 169; Re Goodrich Transp. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 713.

To render them liable there must be "privity or knowledge," some personal concurrence, or some fault or neglect on their part or in which they personally participate. Walker v. Western Transp. Co. supra; Hill Mfg. Co. v. Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. 113 Mass. 499; Moore v. Am. Transp. Co. 65 U. S. 24 How. 1 (16 L. ed. 674).

The word "privity" (of the owner) means some fault or neglect in which the owner of the vessel personally participates; and "knowledge," as used, means some personal cognizance, or means of knowledge of which he is bound to avail himself, of a contemplated loss, or of a condition of things likely to produce or to contribute to a loss, without adopting appropriate means to prevent it. Lord v. Goodall, N. & P. Steamship Co. 4 Sawy. 392, 7 L. R. A.

The "privity or knowledge" of the officers of a corporation is "privity or knowledge" of the corporation. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Quigley, 62 U. S. 21 How. 202 (16 L. ed. 73); Hill Mfg. Co. v. Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. 113 Mass. 500.

The "knowledge and privity" of the wrecking-master of an insurance company is not the knowledge and privity of the corporation so far as to charge it with responsibility for his negligence beyond the value of the vessel. Craig v. Continental Ins. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 796.

The Limited Liability Act, Rev. Stat. §§ 4282-4289, leaves ship owners liable without limit for their own negligence, and liable to the extent of the ship and freight for the negligence or misconduct of the master and crew. Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 440 (33 L. ed. 788, 791).

It was not intended to exonerate them beyond the value of the ship and freight, for losses from causes for which they were previously liable, including mere negligence of employees. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall 121 (20 L. ed. 591); Allen v. Mackay, 1 Sprague, 219; Place v. The City of Norwich, 1 Ben. 89; Lord v. Goodall, N. & P. Steamship Co. 4 Sawy. 390.

Neither the provision of 16 Stat. at L. 440, for the better protection of the lives of passengers on board steam vessels (Carroll v. Staten Island R. Co. 58 N. Y. 120), nor the jurisdiction over marine contracts and torts saved to the state courts by the Judiciary Act, are limited or affected by Stat. March 3, 1851, unless proceedings are taken under the latter Act by a party to limit his liability. Baird v. Daly, 57 N. Y. 236.

This Act applies to owners of foreign as well as domestic shipping. The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24 (26 L. ed. 1001); Re Leonard, 14 Fed. Rep. 68.

"In no case" applies to all cases of loss and dam-

(d) Even though the subjects of this extended limitation of liability, or the territory in which it is effective, are partially within the region of state control, yet, where the subjects are separable, and are partly under the national control, the Act will be sustained by the courts wherever the power of Congress extends, and as to all those objects to which it attaches; and this rule is easily applicable in this case.

(e) As to the Savannah River, it is a public navigable stream. The voyages of The Katie and her cargo are interstate in character, and the jurisdiction of Congress is undoubted.

(f) The Act is warranted also by the admiralty clause of the Constitution, and the power of Congress to modify by statute the application of admiralty doctrines.

(g) The entire purpose of the limited liability enactments was to encourage investments in shipping, and they may be extended wherever the admiralty courts of the United States have jurisdiction.

(November 12, 1886.)

LIBEL in admiralty by the owner of the Steamboat Katie to limit his liability for losses to her cargo occasioned by fire. On demurrer and motion to dismiss libel. Overruled.

The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Denmark & Adams, for respondents, in support of the demurrer:

The commerce clause of the Constitution not only does not authorize, but it prohibits, legislation by Congress that will affect internal commerce, traffic between citizens of the same State. This clause was intended to place such commerce beyond its control.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 194 (6 L. ed. 23); Moore v. Am. Transp. Co. 65 U. S. 24 How. 37 (16 L. ed. 680); The Daniel Ball, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 564 (19 L. ed. 1001); Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 95 (25 L. ed. 552); Lord v. Goodall Steamship Co. 102 U. S. 543 (26 L. ed. 225); Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co. 123 U. S. 295 (31 L. ed. 151).

We fully recognize the familiar principle that a law may be constitutional in part and bad in part. But the courts never change, limit or restrict the natural and obvious meaning of words so as to amend the Statute into harmony with the fundamental law.

United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 220 (23 L. ed. 565); Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82 (25 L. ed. 550); Virginia Coupon Cases, 114 U. S. 304 (29 L. ed. 197); Sprague v. Thompson, 118 U. S. 90 (30 L. ed. 115); Allen v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 80 (26 L. ed. 818); Lord v. Goodall Steamship Co. 102 U. S. 543 (26 L. ed. 225).

The cases which sustain the principle that "a legislative Act may be entirely valid as to some classes of cases, and clearly void as to others" are those in which the class to which the law has been applied has been covered by unobjectionable and separable words or clauses.

Tiernan v. Rinker, 102 U. S. 123 (26 L. ed. 103).

Unlike the Legislature of a State, Congress has only those powers conferred.

Dwarris, Stat. Const. pp. 367, 368; Martin v. Hunter, 14 U. S. 1 Wheat. 826 (4 L. ed. 37); Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 93 (25 L. ed. 551); Cooley, Const. Lim. 10, 11.

The law under review undertakes to regulate age happening during the entire voyage. The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 468, 491 (30 L. ed. 134, 143).

The Statute of June 26, 1884, contains the proviso "that this provision shall not affect the liability of any owner, incurred previous to the passage of this Act, nor prevent any claimant from joining all the owners in one action; nor shall the same apply to wages due to persons employed by said ship owners."

Failure to adopt the provisions of section 4285 does not deprive ship owners of the benefits of Rev. Stat. § 4284. The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24 (26 L. ed. 1001).

Loss by fire.

Owners are exempted by the Act from liability for loss by fire from negligence of their officers and agents, in which the owners did not participate (Re Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. 6 Ben. 124; Walker v. Western Transp. Co. 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 150 (18 L. ed. 172); Moore v. Am. Transp. Co. 65 U. S. 24 How. 1 (16 L. ed. 674); Keene v. The Whistler, 2 Sawyer. 648; Rev. Stat. §§ 4283, 4287); and though the vessel be in a wrecked condition, incapable of self propulsion or of carrying a cargo. Craig v. Continental Ins. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 738.

The protection of this Statute may be invoked notwithstanding the fact that the thing injured is situated on land, if the damage in question be occasioned by the vessel without fault or privity on the part of her owner. Re Vessel Owners' Towing Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 172.

But in Goodrich Transp. Co. v. Gagnon, 36 Fed. Rep. 123, it was held that the words "for any act, matter or thing, loss, damage or forfeiture done, occasioned or incurred," refer only to such acts, things, losses and damages as to which relief can be had in a court of admiralty, and do not include liability for the destruction of buildings and goods 7 L. R. A.

on the land occasioned by fire which has been communicated by a vessel.

The language of this Act limits its operation to fire happening to or on board a vessel, and not to a fire happening on the wharf. Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. The Tangier, 6 Am. L. Reg. 604, 11 Law Rep. N. S. 6; The Egypt, 25 Fed. Rep. 323.

Damage caused by collision.

Ship owners are entitled to a limitation of liability where damage is caused to other vessels and their cargo by collision. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 104 (20 L. ed. 585); Wright v. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. 8 Blatchf. 14, 1 Ben. 154.

In a case of loss by collision the limitation of the owner's liability under the Act is as applicable when the proceeding is in rem, as when it is in personam; if his liability is only the amount of the vessel's value when at the bottom of the sound, his liability after it is raised and repaired is no greater. Place v. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. 118 U. S. 468 (30 L. ed. 134).

Where two vessels, both in fault, collide, and one of the vessels is lost, such sum as the surviving vessel is bound to pay to the owners of the sunken vessel must also be applied to the payment of the damages sustained by the owners of the cargo on board said sunken vessel. Duncan v. The C. H. Foster, 1 Fed. Rep. 733; Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, supra.

For the mode of applying a limitation of liability where both vessels are in fault and the damages are divided, see The Manitoba, 122 U. S. 97 (30 L. ed. 1065).

For the method of offsetting damages, see The Bristol, 29 Fed. Rep. 867.

Where two vessels collided and both were injured, and the vessel in fault subsequently on the

in a material way the rights of the parties who patronize the vessel—their traffic on the vessel. But as the Act applies and was intended to apply to the owners of all vessels without exception—whether the vessels were licensed and enrolled or not—including canal-boats and barges, the decisions will show that as a regulation of vessels the Act is unconstitutional.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 197 (6 L. ed. 23); Passenger Cases, 48 U. S. 7 How. 400 (12 L. ed. 702); Sinnot v. Davenport, 63 U. S. 22 How. 243 (16 L. ed. 247); The Bright Star, 1 Woolworth, 266; The Thomas Swan, 6 Ben. 42; The Daniel Ball, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 564 (19 L. ed. 1001); Gilman v. Philadelphia, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 718 (18 L. ed. 96).

There is an important limitation of the power of Congress over navigation, and that is, it must be navigation on navigable waters of the United States, and which concerns, in some way, interstate or foreign commerce.

Escanaba & L. M. Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 632 (27 L. ed. 444); The Daniel Ball, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 557 (19 L. ed. 999); Miller v. New York City, 109 U. S. 898 (27 L. ed. 973); Ex parte Boyer, 109 U. S. 681 (27 L. ed. 1057); Hatch v. Wallamet Iron Bridge Co. 6 Fed. Rep. 329; Yale Lock Mfg. Co. v. James, 20 Fed. Rep. 903; Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co. 128 U. S. 295 (31 L. ed. 151).

If the power to regulate commerce were made in terms as broad as the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the courts, still the law under review cannot be sustained because it is inconsistent with the limitations of even such a jurisdictional principle. The waters in which the cases arise must at least be "navigable waters of the United States," the meaning of which designation has already been noticed.

The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 58 U. S. 12 How. 443 (13 L. ed. 1058); Allen v. Newberry, 62 U. S. 21 How. 244 (16 L. ed. 110); The Hine v. Tretor, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 569 (18 L. ed. 455); The Belfast, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 624 (19 L. ed. 266); The St. Lawrence, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 527 (17 L. ed. 183); Re Long Island N. S. P. & F. Transp. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 605, 607-618.

If the object of the 4th section of the Act of 1886 was not to regulate internal commerce as well as that carried on by sea-going vessels, to change the law which protected this commerce from the operation of the Act of Congress, then it had no object. If Congress has the power here attempted to be exercised, then the commerce clause is meaningless.

See The Lottawanna, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 558 (22 L. ed. 654); Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 589 (27 L. ed. 1042); The War Eagle, 6 Biss. 386; The Mamie, 5 Fed. Rep. 819.

Messrs. Chisholm & Erwin for libellant, contra.

Speer, J., delivered the following opinion: This is a libel brought under the provisions of section 4 of the Act of Congress of June 19, 1886 (24 Stat. at L. 80). Its purpose is to limit the liability of the owner of the steamer Katie for losses to her cargo occasioned by fire. The libellant (the owner) alleges that he is not liable at all for the damage which occurred to the cargo, but, if liable, to limit the liability, he same voyage was wrecked and sunk by negligence of the master, the liability of the owners was limited to her value after she had sunk. The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 468 (30 L. ed. 134); The Great Western, 118 U. S. 520 (30 L. ed. 156); Thomassen v. Whitwell, 9 Ben. 403, 21 Blatohf. 45, 12 Fed. Rep. 391; Re Wright 10 Ben. 14.

The value is to be ascertained by taking what she is found to be worth after she has been raised, and the expenses of raising her deducted; and the expense of raising and repairing her should not be added to the aforesaid value, nor is the insurance on said vessel to be accounted for by the owners. Re Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. 8 Ben. 312; The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 468 (30 L. ed. 134).

But in Walker v. Boston Ins. Co., 14 Gray, 288, 303, and Barnes v. Steamship Co., 6 Phila. 479, 25 Leg. Int. 196, it was held that the limitation of liability is to be ascertained by an estimation of the value of the ship at the point of time immediately preceding that when the wrong was done and injury inflicted.

The whole value of the vessel means her value at the close of the voyage, and where she is lost no one shall recover compensation for his whole loss. Re Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. 6 Ben. 124; Thomassen v. Whitwell, supra; The Alpena, 10 Biss. 436, 8 Fed. Rep. 280; The City of Norwich, supra.

If the vessel is lost the liability of the owner ceases (Watson v. Marks, 2 Am. L. Reg. 157; contra, Barnes v. Steamship Co. 6 Phila. 479, 25 Leg. Int. 196) and "freight then pending" includes freight earned at the end of the voyage for cargo on board at the time of the collision. Sumner v. Caswell, 20 Fed. Rep. 249.

There can be no apportionment of freight. The Abble C. Stubbs, 22 Fed. Rep. 719.

Where the same person owns both vessel and cargo, "freight then pending" is to be taken to 7 L. R. A.

mean the earnings of the vessel in transporting the goods of the owner. Allen v. Mackay, 1 Sprague, 219.

Where one of the owners of a vessel commands and sails on shares and exclusively manages the vessel and hires the crew, whereby he in effect becomes charterer thereof, he is responsible for her tortious acts. As to whether the owners also are responsible, quære. Thorp v. Hammond, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 408 (20 L. ed. 419); Somes v. White, 85 Me. 542.

Freight is only one of the items to be taken into estimation in ascertaining the extent of the liability of the party who is already responsible. Walker v. Boston Ins. Co. 14 Gray, 288.

A claim for unearned freight paid in advance is not within the class of claims protected by the Act. Re Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. 3 Fed. Rep. 168.

The court is not bound to allow interest on the value of the vessel. The Scotland, 118 U. S. 508 (30 L. ed. 155).

Damages for personal injuries.

The limitation of liability extends to personal injuries sustained by passengers, as well as loss of life. The City of Columbus, 22 Fed. Rep. 400; Butler v. Boston & S. Steamship Co. 130 U. S. 527 (32 L. ed. 1017); The Amsterdam, 28 Fed. Rep. 112; The Alpena, 10 Biss. 436, 8 Fed. Rep. 280; Rounds v. Providence & S. Steamship Co. 14 R. I. 844; The Epsilon, 6 Ben. 378; Re Long Island, N. S. P. & F. Transp. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 599.

Claims for personal injury caused by fire and explosion on board a steamboat prosecuting her voyage on the East River are claims within the Act. Re Long Island N. S. P. & F. Transp. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 599.

Damages to the person or loss of baggage are not taken out of the operation of the Limited Liability Act by Rev. Stat., § 4493. Re Long Island N. S. P. & F. Transp. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 599.

prays to be accorded the benefit of the Act referred to. The allegations of the libel are that the Katie was on her trip when the fire occurred. At that time, and for twenty years prior thereto, she had been engaged in transporting freight and passengers from and to the Ports of Savannah and Augusta, and intermediate landings on the Savannah River in the States of South Carolina and Georgia. She belonged to a line of carriers issuing through bills of lading to and from localities in Georgia, and to and from ports and places in the other States of the Union, and to and from foreign ports. The libel contains the usual averments that the damage was done without the privity or knowledge of the owner. It is admitted in the pleadings that a large portion of the cargo was laden at different points on the Georgia side of the river, and was consigned to merchants in Savannah, and that other portions, consigned in like manner, were received from the South Carolina landings.

The various owners of the cargo, as respondents, have interposed a demurrer and motion to dismiss the libel, upon the ground that the fourth section of the Act of Congress of June 19, 1886, is, as they insist, unconstitutional and void; and since the owners of vessels used in rivers or inland navigation were expressly excluded from the right to limit their liability under previous Acts of Congress (§§ 4288-4289, Rev. Stat.) it follows, they contend, that no relief can be granted under the allegations and prayers of the libel. The gist of the contention of proctors for respondents may be stated as follows: (1) They insist that section 4 of the Act of June 19, 1886, extending the right to limit liability to the owners of "all vessels used on lakes or rivers, or in inland navigation, including canal-boats, barges and lighters," was intended to affect, and ex vi termini does affect, vessels used in the purely internal commerce of a State; that this purpose of the Act is expressed in unequivocal words. (2) Even though it be conceded, they urge, that Congress might have provided a measure of relief for owners of a vessel whose interstate traffic relations were identical or similar to those of the Katie, without encroaching upon the domain of internal commerce, the court, they insist, may not restrict the application of this Act so as to give it partial effect simply because the facts here are appropriate to national control, the Statute itself, in plain and unambiguous terms, exceeding, they contend, the limitations of the commerce clause of the Constitution. This clause, they maintain, so far from authorizing, actually prohibits, legislation by Congress which will affect the internal commerce between citizens of the same State, and since the terms of the Act in question comprehend alike constitutional and unconstitutional topics, the entire section of the amended Statute must, they argue, be held inoperative and void,—citing U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S. 220 [28 L. ed. 565]; Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82 [25 L. ed. 550]; Virginia Coupon Cases, 114 U. S. 304 [29 L. ed. 197]; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 647 [32 L. ed. 314]; Sprague v. Thompson, 118 U. S. 90 [30 L. ed. 115]; Allen v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 80 [26 L. ed. 318]; State Tonnage Tax Cases, 79 U. S. 12 Wall.

The baggage of passengers is not merchandise, for the loss of which by fire ship owners are exempt. The Marine City, 6 Fed. Rep. 418; contra, Chamberlain v. Western Transp. Co. 44 N. Y. 306.

Surrender and transfer of ship and freight.

The privilege of exonerating himself from his individual liability, and of causing all legal proceedings against himself to cease by the surrender and transfer of the ship and freight, is not given to a party who is responsible for damages resulting from collision, but he is strictly confined to cases of loss in consequence of embezzlement or destruction by the master, mariners or passengers on board ship. Walker v. Boston Ins. Co. 14 Gray, 288.

Insurance is not such "an interest in such vessel and freight" as the ship owners are bound to surrender for the benefit of claimants. The City of Columbus, 22 Fed. Rep. 460.

Where property is sold, the insurance does not follow it, but ceases to have any value, unless the insurer consent to the transfer of the policy to the grantee of the property. In other words the contract of insurance does not attach itself to the thing insured, nor go with it when it is transferred. 2 Marshall, Ins. 801; Sadlers Co. v. Badoock, 2 Atk. 554; Carroll v. Boston M. Ins. Co. 8 Mass. 515; Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 85 U. S. 10 Pet. 507, 512 (9 L. ed. 512, 514); Carpenter v. Providence W. Ins. Co. 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 495, 508 (10 L. ed. 1044, 1048); Etna F. Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 18 Wend. 383, 397; Wilson v. Hill, 3 Met. 68; Bowles v. Innes, 11 Mees. & W. 18; McDonald v. Black, 20 Ohio, 185; Plimpton v. Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Co. 48 Vt. 497; Place v. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. 118 U. S. 495 (30 L. ed. 144).

Apportionment of fund paid into court.

The provisions of the Act authorizing the apportionment of the sum for which the owner is liable 7 L. R. A.

have reference solely to losses occasioned otherwise than by fire, happening without "the knowledge or privity of the owner." Knowlton v. Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. 53 N. Y. 76; Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 104 (20 L. ed. 585); Walker v. Boston Ins. Co. 14 Gray, 288.

If the amount paid into court is insufficient to pay all the damages caused, it will be apportioned pro rata amongst the parties claiming damages in proportion to their respective losses. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, supra.

The amount recovered, whether before the limitation proceedings or after, and whether in the court of first instance or an appellate court, will stand as the basis for pro rata division when the condemned fund is distributed. The Benefactor, 108 U. S. 220 (26 L. ed. 351).

The casualties or losses of different voyages cannot be aggregated or grouped together, and all losses be cited in to share what has been saved from shipwreck or other disasters, together with the pending freight, and have a decree entered exonerating the owners from personal liability. The Alpena, 8 Fed. Rep. 238; Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright and Walker v. Boston Ins. Co. supra.

What owners entitled to benefit of Act.

All owners of vessels are not entitled to the privileges of the Act, but only such as fall within the description named therein, to wit, those who had no privity or knowledge of the damage incurred. The Maria and Elizabeth, 11 Fed. Rep. 520.

A vessel must be engaged in interstate or foreign commerce to entitle her owners to claim a limited liability. Re Vessel Owners Towing Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 169.

A tug engaged in towing into the waters of other States vessels engaged in interstate commerce is as much engaged in such commerce as the vessels

219 [20 L. ed. 875]. (3) While respondents concede the power of Congress to provide, by inspection, license regulations, etc., for the safety of vessels engaged in internal traffic, they insist there is a distinction between inspection and other laws intended to control the character of machinery, equipment and the like in vessels plying upon the navigable waters of the United States, and laws intended to enlarge or to limit the contract rights and liabilities of persons concerned with the same vessels; that the legislation, for the one purpose, may be warranted by the commerce clause of the Constitution, while for the purpose of affecting the rights of persons contracting with vessels engaged exclusively in the internal traffic of a State the enactments of Congress are nugatory,—citing The Daniel Ball, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 557 [19 L. ed. 999]; Ex parte Boyer, 109 U. S. 631 [27 L. ed. 1057]; Hatch v. Wallamet Iron Bridge Co. 6 Fed. Rep. 329; Yale Lock Mfg. Co. v. James, 20 Fed. Rep. 903; Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co. 123 U. S. 295 [31 L. ed. 151]. (4) They further insist that the legislation embodied in the Act of March 3, 1851, and in sections 4288–4289 of the Revised Statutes, was construed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and by other federal courts, to be authorized by the commerce clause of the Constitution,—citing Moore v. Am. Transp. Co. 65 U. S. 24 How. 37 [16 L. ed. 680]; Lord v. Goodall Steamship Co. 102 U. S. 541 [26 L. ed. 224]; The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 53 U. S. 12 How. 443 [18 L. ed. 1058]; The Bright Star, 1 Woolw. 274; The Mamie, 5 Fed. Rep. 819; The War Eagle, 6 Biss. 366. They argue that the enactments are otherwise without constitutional warrant or validity. (5) They assert that the provision of the Constitution, “the judicial power shall extend to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction,” has relation merely to the law of the forum, and gives no authority to Congress to regulate the property rights and liabilities of parties litigant therein. Moreover, even though it be conceded, they say, that the admiralty clause confers upon Congress the power to legislate as to all topics which are properly within the admiralty jurisdiction, nevertheless the Act of June 19, 1886, is broader even than that extensive domain, for it applies to all inland waters, while the admiralty jurisdiction is limited to those waters which, by themselves, or their connections with others, form a continuous channel for commerce among the States or with foreign countries,—citing The Daniel Ball and The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, supra; Allen v. Newberry, 62 U. S. 21 How. 244 [16 L. ed. 110]; The Hine v. Trecoor, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 569 [18 L. ed. 455]; The Belfast, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 624 [19 L. ed. 266]; The St. Lawrence, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 527 [17 L. ed. 188].

Proctors for respondents instance rivers and inland waters in the States which are not included in the navigable waters of the United States; and they cite Veazie v. Moor, 55 U. S. 14 How. 568 [14 L. ed. 545]; The Montello, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 411 [20 L. ed. 191]; Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co. supra. By all of this reasoning they reach with great apparent confidence the conclusion that the Act of June 19, 1886, has no foundation upon the admiralty themselves and is within the provisions of the Statute. Ibid.

A vessel employed in navigation upon the Hudson River, and not elsewhere, is not within the class excepted by the provisions of § 4289. The Tug Seare, 3 Fed. Rep. 365.

It is only vessels engaged in what is known ordinarily as maritime commerce which are subject to the provisions of the Act; hence, the owners of a small steam pleasure yacht engaged in navigating the Detroit River are not entitled to the benefit of the Limited Liability Act. The Mamie, 5 Fed. Rep. 818, 3 Fed. Rep. 367.

Proceedings for claim of benefit of Act.

Limited liability may be claimed (1) merely by way of defense to an action; or (2) by surrendering the ship or paying her value into court; the latter method is necessary only when the owner desires to bring all the creditors claiming damage into concourse for distribution. Thommessen v. Whitwill, 118 U. S. 520 (30 L. ed. 156).

Ship owners are entitled to the benefit of the Statute, though no action has been begun against them. The John Bramall, 10 Ben. 406.

Where the owners may invoke the provisions of the statute, the court cannot know without appropriate proceeding the value of the offending vessel and the pending freight. The Maria and Elizabeth, 11 Fed. Rep. 520, 12 Fed. Rep. 627.

Where on a libel for collision the vessel has been decreed liable for damages, the owner cannot on a petition for a limitation of liability retry the question of liability, that being res judicata. Ibid.

The institution of proceedings under the Statute, followed by a decree, is a bar to an action elsewhere for damages. Rounds v. Providence & S. Steamship Co. 14 R. I. 344.

Proceedings for a limitation of liability, if not instituted until after a party has obtained satisfaction of his demand, are ineffectual as to him, and a return of the money should not be compelled. The Benefactor, 103 U. S. 239 (26 L. ed. 351).

If any such proceedings are begun after the suit brought, they must be in the same district court as that in which the suit is pending. The Alpena, 10 Biss. 436; Re The Lukenback, 26 Fed. Rep. 870.

Costs may be imposed upon the owners for delaying for an unreasonable period to institute proceedings for a limitation of liability. Re The Garden City, 27 Fed. Rep. 234; Miller v. O'Brien, 35 Fed. Rep. 779.

Jurisdiction in proceedings for limitation of liability.

The words “in any court” refer to a competent federal court, and not to a state court. Re Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. 6 Ben. 124.

In a cause of a limitation of liability, which proceeding is in rem, partaking of the nature of a suit in personam, and not a proceeding in rem, possession of the vessel or her proceeds is not essential to the jurisdiction. Re The City of Norwich, 6 Ben. 330; The Mendota, 14 Fed. Rep. 353.

The “appropriate proceedings” must be proceedings in personam where the parties to be affected are to be duly brought before the court, and such proceedings are not within the jurisdiction of an admiralty court. Place v. The City of Norwich, 1 Ben. 39.

The rule of limited liability embraces all damages done by a vessel without the privity of the owner, whether consummated on land or water; and this being a maritime rule or regulation, courts of admiralty have authority to enforce it, and to enforce claims on the fund representing the value of the vessel. Re Goodrich Transp. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 718.

A district court cannot take jurisdiction in admiralty of a petition for a limitation of liability clause, and none upon the commerce clause, of the Constitution, and must therefore be wholly disregarded, and, as a consequence, that the libel must be dismissed.

It is not difficult, it would seem, for the observing mind, trained in the philosophy and history of our law, to appreciate the interesting considerations of legal thought suggested by the pending inquiry and the gigantic magnitude of the values which its ultimate adjudication may affect. Should the propositions of the respondents be deemed finally controlling, this would afford the twenty-first instance when an Act of Congress was decisively adjudged unconstitutional. When it is considered that this record of legislative conscientiousness and judicial conservatism embraces a period of ninety-nine years, the inchoate and formative period of a vast and novel experiment in the science of government, the exciting exigencies of foreign wars, the corroding inflammation of civil strife, the expansion of three millions of primitive people, employed mainly in the simple and unproductive occupations of frontiersmen, to sixty millions whose ventures in the production of national wealth are as diverse in character as they are intrepid in enterprise and affluent in results; when, also, the mighty volume of decided cases, involving the application or interpretation of the Constitution, is considered, it must be granted that the national legislation is with substantial uniformity stable and valid, and that the occasions when it may be held by the courts invalid are rarely afforded. It is equally obvious that the courts will decline to adjudge a statute to be in conflict with the Constitution, unless the reasons therefor are of that convincing and imperative character which at once clear the mind of doubt and constrain the inevitable decision.

The attempted impeachment of the fourth section of the Act of June 19, 1886, extending the privilege of limited responsibility to "all vessels used on lakes or rivers, or in inland navigation, including canal-boats, barges and lighters," is evolved mainly from this premise of respondents' proctors: "It seems to us clear that section 4 of the Act (save in the use of the words 'sea-going vessels') directly collides with the Constitution, and that its expressed purpose was to do the very thing which Congress is prevented from doing. The law, as it stood, excepted from the operation the owners of vessels engaged in internal commerce. The design of the Act of 1886 was so to change the excepting clause as to apply the law to such owners and commerce. Take the law as it was in connection with this fourth section, and it will then appear that the purpose was to do an unconstitutional thing; that is to say, the very legislation proposed was unconstitutional if our contention be correct as to the power of Congress."

In this connection it may be well to state that elsewhere in the copious and valuable brief from which the quotation is taken an important axiom of constitutional interpretation is frankly set forth, viz., "that a court ought not to declare a law unconstitutional unless the fatal infirmity is made clearly to appear,—to appear beyond any reasonable doubt." With this cardinal rule in mind, let us attempt to ascertain if there is not at least a reasonable doubt as to the existence of error or misapprehension in the propositions of the proctor, above set forth. Is it true that Congress has "expressed the purpose" by this Amendment to take control of the internal commerce of the States? 1. Did the law, before the Amendment, except from its operation the owners of vessels engaged in internal commerce? 2. Does the Amendment assailed apply the law to such owners and commerce? 3. Is it true that the "purpose of Congress was to do an unconstitutional thing?" It does not appear that the Law of Limited Liability before the 19th of June, 1886, excepted from its operation the owners of vessels engaged in internal commerce. The language of the exception was applicable to the owners of craft of certain description plying upon certain waters. It is wholly silent as to the character or kind of commerce for which where it would not have had cognizance in admiralty originally of the cause of action involved, as where suit was brought by a sufferer from a fire set out on land by a passing vessel. Ex parte Phoenix Ins. Co. 118 U. S. 610 (30 L. ed. 274); The Plymouth, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 20 (18 L. ed. 125). See, however, The Mary Lord, 81 Fed. Rep. 418; Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 104 (20 L. ed. 585); Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 578 (27 L. ed. 1038); Elwell v. Geibel, 32 Fed. Rep. 71; The Epsilon, 6 Ben. 378.

Proceedings to limit the liability of ship owners may be instituted in a district where a fund or claim equitably representing the lost vessel is in litigation, though the petitioners reside in another district. Re Leonard, 14 Fed. Rep. 53.

In The Benefactor, 103 U. S. 239 (26 L. ed. 351), the supreme court promulgated a rule that a petition for the limitation of liability shall be filed in the circuit court, if a suit as to the vessel is there pending, and though the ship owner on the trial as to the cause of the collision contest all liability whatever. The Benefactor, 103 U. S. 239 (26 L. ed. 351).

And though the ship has been surrendered to the underwriters. The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 468 (30 L. ed. 184).

Admiralty courts have jurisdiction to enforce such claims on the fund as auxiliary and incidental 7 L. R. A.

to their jurisdiction of the main subject. Re Goodrich Transp. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 713.

The fact that a claimant against a vessel has recovered in a state court less than her stipulated value does not oust the jurisdiction of the district court of proceedings to limit her liability where his original claim was greater than its value. Briggs v. Day, 21 Fed. Rep. 727. See further, as to the jurisdiction of the district court, Ex parte Phoenix Ins. Co. 118 U. S. 610 (30 L. ed. 274).

Injunction to restrain prosecution in state courts.

Injunction may issue to restrain the prosecution of suits in a state court. The Amsterdam, 23 Fed. Rep. 112.

The district court may, notwithstanding Rev. Stat., § 720, restrain parties who have commenced action in the state court from proceeding further therein. Re Long Island N. S. P. & F. Transp. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 599; The Oceanus, 6 Ben. 258; but see Hill Mfg. Co. v. Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. 118 Mass. 495, 502.

The making of the 55th Admiralty Rule, restraining, on application by the owners, the further prosecution of all suits against them, was within the power of the supreme court, notwithstanding Rev. Stat., § 720. Re Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. 6 Ben. 124.

the vessels or the water routes were utilized. This is plainly apparent from the language of the proviso before the amendment was adopted: "This Act shall not apply to the owner or owners of any canal-boat, barge or lighter, or to any vessels of any description whatsoever, used in rivers or inland navigation."

It should not be difficult to understand that this is widely variant from the proposition of respondents. The excepting clause, if their construction had been adopted, would probably have read: "This Act shall not apply to the owners of any vessel, etc., used in purely internal commerce."

There is, or may be, a vast distinction in the lading or contracts of a vessel used in inland navigation, and one used for internal commerce. A vessel may be used for internal commerce and never traverse inland waters, or may ply the waters of a lake embosomed in the central territory of a State, and be wholly engaged in interstate commerce. Then it is not true that the law, before the Amendment, excepted from its operation the owners of vessels engaged in internal commerce, but simply those whose vessels were used in rivers or inland navigation. Again, does the Amendment to the Limited Responsibility Law, assailed by the respondents, apply to the "owners of vessels engaged in internal commerce?" In the opinion of the court, very clearly not. It has no syllable with reference to internal commerce. It "shall apply also to all vessels used on lakes or rivers, or in inland navigation, including canal-boats, barges and lighters." Congress, in the Amendment as in the excepting clause of the Act of 1851, supra, dealt entirely with classes of vessels navigating inland waters and lakes, and gave no attention to cargoes or shipping contracts. It did not deal with commerce, but with shipping. As we have before seen, there is no essential identity of topic in a vessel and the character of the commerce in which it is engaged. By a parity of reasoning it follows that Congress has not, by this extension of the limited-responsibility privilege, expressed the purpose to take control of internal commerce, nor, so far as it has been made to appear, was it its purpose to do an unconstitutional thing. These conclusions seem to be clearly inferable from the plain and unambiguous words of the clauses which constituted the old law and the remedial statute, which, as we will presently see, is but an encouragement to important classes of shipping in which the wealth of the country is largely invested. But if the language of the sections quoted was equivocal, there would even then be no difficulty in tracing to its constitutional source the current of this legislation, which has revived the drooping but vital growth of the country's maritime interests. It is well to remember that it is an elementary principle of construction, not only that the scope of a legislative enactment may be modified by the purpose expressed in the title, but that the intention of the Legislature is often gathered from a view of the whole, and every part, of continuous legislation on the same general topic. 1 Kent, Com. 461, 462. Upon consideration of the several enactments on the subject of limiting responsibility of the owners of shipping, it is not possible to discover any purpose of the national

7 L. R. A.

Legislature to encroach upon the conceded rights of the States as to internal commerce. It may be, and is, no doubt, true that much of this legislation does incidentally affect rights growing out of internal commerce. That, however, is a necessary result, flowing from the variety and extent of the influence, exerted by every Act of Congress of general operation, howsoever undoubted its constitutionality. An illustration of this may be found in the laws relating to internal taxation. Who may say these do not affect internal commerce? And yet the power of Congress is conceded. In the amplitude and variety of the occupations and enterprises of our countrymen many results flow from congressional action, which, if designed as a result of direct legislation, would be held unwarranted. It is enough to say of a law that its purpose, object and main results are legitimate, and the law of limited responsibility has been often so adjudged. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 109-128 [20 L. ed. 585-593].

The Act of March 8, 1851, was entitled "An Act to Limit the Liability of Ship Owners, and for Other Purposes." Its provisions applicable to the questions at bar, embodied in §§ 4283-4289, Rev. Stat., are as follows: "The liability of the owner of any vessel for any embezzlement, loss or destruction, by any person, of any property, goods or merchandise shipped or put on board of such vessel; or for any loss, damage or injury by collision, or for any act, matter or thing lost, damage or forfeiture done, occasioned or incurred without the privity or knowledge of such owner or owners, shall in no case exceed the amount or value of the interest of such owner in such vessel, and her freight then pending." § 4283, Rev. Stat. "The provisions of [this title] [the seven preceding sections], relating to the limitation of the liability of the owners of vessels, shall not apply to the owners of any canal-boat, barge or lighter, or to any vessel of any description whatsoever, used in rivers or inland navigation." § 4289, Rev. Stat.

The legislation upon this subject, next succeeding the Act of 1851, is found in the Act of June 26, 1884 (28 Stat. at L. 58). This, it is important to observe, is entitled "An Act to Remove Certain Burdens on the American Merchant Marine, and Encourage the American Foreign Carrying Trade, and for other Purposes." The eighteenth section of this Act is as follows: "That the individual liability of a ship owner shall be limited to the proportion of any or all debts and liabilities that his individual share of the vessel bears to the whole, and the aggregate liabilities of all the owners of a vessel, on account of the same, shall not exceed the value of such vessel and freight pending: provided, that this provision shall not affect the liability of any owner incurred previous to the passage of this Act, nor prevent any claimant from joining all the owners in one action, nor shall the same apply to wages due to persons employed by said ship owners."

We thus perceive that the title indicates what the body of the Act makes clear, viz., that it was intended to encourage, and therefore to foster, the American merchant marine and the American foreign carrying trade. Its clause, and none upon the commerce clause, of the Constitution, and must therefore be wholly disregarded, and, as a consequence, that the libel must be dismissed.

It is not difficult, it would seem, for the observing mind, trained in the philosophy and history of our law, to appreciate the interesting considerations of legal thought suggested by the pending inquiry and the gigantic magnitude of the values which its ultimate adjudication may affect. Should the propositions of the respondents be deemed finally controlling, this would afford the twenty-first instance when an Act of Congress was decisively adjudged unconstitutional. When it is considered that this record of legislative conscientiousness and judicial conservatism embraces a period of ninety-nine years, the inchoate and formative period of a vast and novel experiment in the science of government, the exciting exigencies of foreign wars, the corroding inflammation of civil strife, the expansion of three millions of primitive people, employed mainly in the simple and unproductive occupations of frontiersmen, to sixty millions whose ventures in the production of national wealth are as diverse in character as they are intrepid in enterprise and affluent in results; when, also, the mighty volume of decided cases, involving the application or interpretation of the Constitution, is considered, it must be granted that the national legislation is with substantial uniformity stable and valid, and that the occasions when it may be held by the courts invalid are rarely afforded. It is equally obvious that the courts will decline to adjudge a statute to be in conflict with the Constitution, unless the reasons therefor are of that convincing and imperative character which at once clear the mind of doubt and constrain the inevitable decision.

The attempted impeachment of the fourth section of the Act of June 19, 1886, extending the privilege of limited responsibility to "all vessels used on lakes or rivers, or in inland navigation, including canal-boats, barges and lighters," is evolved mainly from this premise of respondents' proctors: "It seems to us clear that section 4 of the Act (save in the use of the words 'sea-going vessels') directly collides with the Constitution, and that its expressed purpose was to do the very thing which Congress is prevented from doing. The law, as it stood, excepted from the operation the owners of vessels engaged in internal commerce. The design of the Act of 1886 was so to change the excepting clause as to apply the law to such owners and commerce. Take the law as it was in connection with this fourth section, and it will then appear that the purpose was to do an unconstitutional thing; that is to say, the very legislation proposed was unconstitutional if our contention be correct as to the power of Congress."

In this connection it may be well to state that elsewhere in the copious and valuable brief from which the quotation is taken an important axiom of constitutional interpretation is frankly set forth, viz., "that a court ought not to declare a law unconstitutional unless the fatal infirmity is made clearly to appear,—to appear beyond any reasonable doubt." With this cardinal rule in mind, let us attempt to ascertain if there is not at least a reasonable doubt as to the existence of error or misapprehension in the propositions of the proctor, above set forth. Is it true that Congress has "expressed the purpose" by this Amendment to take control of the internal commerce of the States? 1. Did the law, before the Amendment, except from its operation the owners of vessels engaged in internal commerce? 2. Does the Amendment assailed apply the law to such owners and commerce? 3. Is it true that the "purpose of Congress was to do an unconstitutional thing?" It does not appear that the Law of Limited Liability before the 19th of June, 1886, excepted from its operation the owners of vessels engaged in internal commerce. The language of the exception was applicable to the owners of craft of certain description plying upon certain waters. It is wholly silent as to the character or kind of commerce for which where it would not have had cognizance in admiralty originally of the cause of action involved, as where suit was brought by a sufferer from a fire set out on land by a passing vessel. Ex parte Phenix Ins. Co. 118 U. S. 610 (30 L. ed. 274); The Plymouth, 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 20 (18 L. ed. 125). See, however, The Mary Lord, 31 Fed. Rep. 418; Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 104 (20 L. ed. 555); Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 578 (27 L. ed. 1038); Elwell v. Geibel, 31 Fed. Rep. 71; The Epsilon, 6 Ben. 378.

Proceedings to limit the liability of ship owners may be instituted in a district where a fund or claim equitably representing the lost vessel is in litigation, though the petitioners reside in another district. Re Leonard, 14 Fed. Rep. 53.

In The Benefactor, 103 U. S. 239 (26 L. ed. 351), the supreme court promulgated a rule that a petition for the limitation of liability shall be filed in the circuit court, if a suit as to the vessel is there pending, and though the ship owner on the trial as to the cause of the collision contest all liability whatever. The Benefactor, 103 U. S. 239 (26 L. ed. 351).

And though the ship has been surrendered to the underwriters. The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 468 (30 L. ed. 184).

Admiralty courts have jurisdiction to enforce such claims on the fund as auxiliary and incidental 7 L. R. A.

to their jurisdiction of the main subject. Re Goodrich Transp. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 713.

The fact that a claimant against a vessel has recovered in a state court less than her stipulated value does not oust the jurisdiction of the district court of proceedings to limit her liability where his original claim was greater than its value. Briggs v. Day, 21 Fed. Rep. 727. See further, as to the jurisdiction of the district court, Ex parte Phenix Ins. Co. 118 U. S. 610 (30 L. ed. 274).

Injunction to restrain prosecution in state courts.

Injunction may issue to restrain the prosecution of suits in a state court. The Amsterdam, 23 Fed. Rep. 112.

The district court may, notwithstanding Rev. Stat., § 720, restrain parties who have commenced action in the state court from proceeding further therein. Re Long Island N. S. P. & F. Transp. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 599; The Oceanus, 6 Ben. 253; but see Hill Mfg. Co. v. Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. 113 Mass. 495, 502.

The making of the 55th Admiralty Rule, restraining, on application by the owners, the further prosecution of all suits against them, was within the power of the supreme court, notwithstanding Rev. Stat., § 720. Re Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. 6 Ben. 124.

the vessels or the water routes were utilized. This is plainly apparent from the language of the proviso before the amendment was adopted: "This Act shall not apply to the owner or owners of any canal-boat, barge or lighter, or to any vessels of any description whatsoever, used in rivers or inland navigation."

It should not be difficult to understand that this is widely variant from the proposition of respondents. The excepting clause, if their construction had been adopted, would probably have read: "This Act shall not apply to the owners of any vessel, etc., used in purely internal commerce."

There is, or may be, a vast distinction in the lading or contracts of a vessel used in inland navigation, and one used for internal commerce. A vessel may be used for internal commerce and never traverse inland waters, or may ply the waters of a lake embosomed in the central territory of a State, and be wholly engaged in interstate commerce. Then it is not true that the law, before the Amendment, excepted from its operation the owners of vessels engaged in internal commerce, but simply those whose vessels were used in rivers or inland navigation. Again, does the Amendment to the Limited Responsibility Law, assailed by the respondents, apply to the "owners of vessels engaged in internal commerce?" In the opinion of the court, very clearly not. It has no syllable with reference to internal commerce. It "shall apply also to all vessels used on lakes or rivers, or in inland navigation, including canal-boats, barges and lighters." Congress, in the Amendment as in the excepting clause of the Act of 1851, supra, dealt entirely with classes of vessels navigating inland waters and lakes, and gave no attention to cargoes or shipping contracts. It did not deal with commerce, but with shipping. As we have before seen, there is no essential identity of topic in a vessel and the character of the commerce in which it is engaged. By a parity of reasoning it follows that Congress has not, by this extension of the limited-responsibility privilege, expressed the purpose to take control of internal commerce, nor, so far as it has been made to appear, was it its purpose to do an unconstitutional thing. These conclusions seem to be clearly inferable from the plain and unambiguous words of the clauses which constituted the old law and the remedial statute, which, as we will presently see, is but an encouragement to important classes of shipping in which the wealth of the country is largely invested. But if the language of the sections quoted was equivocal, there would even then be no difficulty in tracing to its constitutional source the current of this legislation, which has revived the drooping but vital growth of the country's maritime interests. It is well to remember that it is an elementary principle of construction, not only that the scope of a legislative enactment may be modified by the purpose expressed in the title, but that the intention of the Legislature is often gathered from a view of the whole, and every part, of continuous legislation on the same general topic. 1 Kent, Com. 461, 462. Upon consideration of the several enactments on the subject of limiting responsibility of the owners of shipping, it is not possible to discover any purpose of the national

7 L. R. A.

Legislature to encroach upon the conceded rights of the States as to internal commerce. It may be, and is, no doubt, true that much of this legislation does incidentally affect rights growing out of internal commerce. That, however, is a necessary result, flowing from the variety and extent of the influence, exerted by every Act of Congress of general operation, howsoever undoubted its constitutionality. An illustration of this may be found in the laws relating to internal taxation. Who may say these do not affect internal commerce? And yet the power of Congress is conceded. In the amplitude and variety of the occupations and enterprises of our countrymen many results flow from congressional action, which, if designed as a result of direct legislation, would be held unwarranted. It is enough to say of a law that its purpose, object and main results are legitimate, and the law of limited responsibility has been often so adjudged. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 109-128 [20 L. ed. 585-593].

The Act of March 8, 1851, was entitled "An Act to Limit the Liability of Ship Owners, and for Other Purposes." Its provisions applicable to the questions at bar, embodied in §§ 4283-4289, Rev. Stat., are as follows: "The liability of the owner of any vessel for any embezzlement, loss or destruction, by any person, of any property, goods or merchandise shipped or put on board of such vessel; or for any loss, damage or injury by collision, or for any act, matter or thing lost, damage or forfeiture done, occasioned or incurred without the privity or knowledge of such owner or owners, shall in no case exceed the amount or value of the interest of such owner in such vessel, and her freight then pending." § 4283, Rev. Stat. "The provisions of [this title] [the seven preceding sections], relating to the limitation of the liability of the owners of vessels, shall not apply to the owners of any canal-boat, barge or lighter, or to any vessel of any description whatsoever, used in rivers or inland navigation." § 4289, Rev. Stat.

The legislation upon this subject, next succeeding the Act of 1851, is found in the Act of June 26, 1884 (23 Stat. at L. 53). This, it is important to observe, is entitled "An Act to Remove Certain Burdens on the American Merchant Marine, and Encourage the American Foreign Carrying Trade, and for other Purposes." The eighteenth section of this Act is as follows: "That the individual liability of a ship owner shall be limited to the proportion of any or all debts and liabilities that his individual share of the vessel bears to the whole, and the aggregate liabilities of all the owners of a vessel, on account of the same, shall not exceed the value of such vessel and freight pending: provided, that this provision shall not affect the liability of any owner incurred previous to the passage of this Act, nor prevent any claimant from joining all the owners in one action, nor shall the same apply to wages due to persons employed by said ship owners."

We thus perceive that the title indicates what the body of the Act makes clear, viz., that it was intended to encourage, and therefore to foster, the American merchant marine and the American foreign carrying trade. Its chief modification of the existing law was an enlargement of the privileges of exemption. It will be readily observed that it was the consistent legislative purpose to broaden the privileges of the owners of American craft upon the high seas. The enactments, it seems, were found advantageous also, as they were followed very soon afterwards by the Act of June 19, 1886 (24 Stat. at L. 79), which is entitled "An Act to Abolish Certain Fees for Official Services to American Vessels, and to Amend the Laws Relating to Shipping Commissioners, Seamen and Owners of Vessels, and for Other Purposes." The fourth section of this Act extends previous enactments relating to limitations of liability to "all sea-going vessels," and here the respondents insist the National Legislature exhausted its jurisdiction.

But it was not deemed enough to accord these privileges to sea-going vessels. A vast and rapidly augmenting fleet of American shipping, embracing every type of vessel, from the clumsy sailing craft of the last century to the latest achievements in naval architecture, whose twin screws and triple expansion engines drive them with incredible swiftness over the teeming waters of the Great Lakes, were wisely esteemed by Congress to merit the aid and encouragement of the legislation which had been so effective with sea-going shipping. Nor was this all. It had been found that the vital necessity for cheap transportation for the natural and manufactured productions of the country, often denied in greater or less measure by railway combinations, had been accomplished by a return to the slower but cheaper methods of water carriage. Rivers, canals and inland lakes, by themselves or their connections, in many instances afford the most important channels for the ebbing and flowing tide of interstate and foreign commerce.

In the case of The Daniel Ball, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 557 [19 L. ed. 999], where the recovery of a penalty under the Act of Congress for failure to obtain a license to transport merchandise and passengers upon the bays, lakes, rivers or other navigable waters of the United States was resisted upon the ground that the steamer navigating the Grand River, in the State of Michigan, was not engaged in interstate commerce, and for this reason it was insisted Congress had no control over her, the supreme court make very pertinent declarations. They decided that the Grand River was a navigable stream. They hold that rivers "are navigable in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce, over which trade and travel are, or may be, conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water, and they constitute navigable waters of the United States, within the meaning of the Acts of Congress, in contradistinction from the navigable waters of the States, when they form, in their ordinary condition, by themselves, or by uniting with other waters, a continuous highway, over which commerce is, or may be, carried on with other States or foreign countries, in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water." 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 563 [19 L. ed. 1001].

This test was applied to Grand River, and 7 L. R. A.

the conclusion was reached that it was a navigable stream, and the court adds: "And by its junction with the lake it forms a continued highway for commerce, both with other States and with foreign countries, and is thus brought under the direct control of Congress."

The court continues: "That power [i. e. the power to regulate commerce] authorizes all appropriate legislation for the protection or advancement of either interstate or foreign commerce, and, for that purpose, such legislation as will insure the convenient and safe navigation of all the navigable waters of the United States, whether that legislation consists in requiring the removal of obstructions to their use, in prescribing the form and size of the vessels employed upon them, or in subjecting the vessels to inspection and license, in order to insure their proper construction and equipment. 'The power to regulate commerce,' this court said in Gilman v. Philadelphia, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 724 [18 L. ed. 99] 'comprehends the control for that purpose, and to the extent necessary, of all navigable waters of the United States which are accessible from a State other than those in which they lie. For this purpose they are the public property of the nation, and subject to all the requisite legislation of Congress.' But it is contended that the steamer Daniel Ball was only engaged in the internal commerce of the State of Michigan, and was not, therefore, required to be inspected or licensed, even if it be conceded that Grand River is a navigable water of the United States; and this brings us to the consideration of the second question presented. There is undoubtedly an internal commerce which is subject to the control of the States. The power delegated to Congress is limited to commerce 'among the several States,' with foreign nations and with the Indian tribes. This limitation necessarily excludes from federal control all commerce not thus designated, and of course that commerce which is carried on entirely within the limits of a State, and does not extend to or affect other States. In this case it is admitted that the steamer was engaged in shipping and transporting down Grand River goods destined and marked for other States than Michigan, and in receiving and transporting up the river goods brought within the State from without its limits; but inasmuch as her agency in the transportation was entirely within the limits of the State, and she did not run in connection with, or in continuation of, any line of vessels or railway leading to other States, it is contended that she was engaged entirely in domestic commerce. But this conclusion does not follow. So far as she was employed in transporting goods destined for other States, or goods brought from without the limits of Michigan, and destined to places within that State, she was engaged in commerce between the States; and, however limited that commerce may have been, she was, so far as it went, subject to the legislation of Congress. She was employed as an instrument of that commerce; for, whenever a commodity has begun to move as an article of trade from one State to another, commerce in that commodity between the States has commenced. The fact that several different and independent agencies are employed in transporting the commodity, some acting entirely in one State, and some acting through two or more States, does in no respect affect the character of the transaction. To the extent in which each agency acts in that transportation, it is subject to the regulation of Congress. It is said that, if the position here asserted be sustained, there is no such thing as the domestic trade of a State; that Congress may take the entire control of the commerce of the country, and extend its regulations to the railroads within a State on which grain or fruit is transported to a distant market.

We answer that the present case relates to transportation on the navigable waters of the United States, and we are not called upon to express an opinion upon the power of Congress over interstate commerce when carried on by land transportation. And we answer, further, that we are unable to draw any clear and distinct line between the authority of Congress to regulate an agency employed in commerce between the States when that agency extends through two or more States, and when it is confined in its action entirely within the limits of a single State. If its authority does not extend to an agency in such commerce when that agency is confined within the limits of a State, its entire authority over interstate commerce may be defeated. Several agencies combining, each taking up the commodity transported at the boundary line at one end of a State, and leaving it at the boundary line at the other end, the federal jurisdiction would be entirely ousted, and the constitutional provision would become a dead letter." See also The Montello, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 411 [20 L. ed. 191], 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 490 [22 L. ed. 391]; Ex parte Boyer, 109 U. S. 629 [27 L. ed. 1056].

In the case last cited the waterway upon which the collision occurred was actually the property of the State of Illinois, and was wholly artificial, and was wholly within its territorial boundaries. The court says, through Mr. Justice Blatchford: "Within the principles laid down by this court in the cases of The Daniel Ball, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 557 [19 L. ed. 999], and The Montello, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 490 [22 L. ed. 391], which extended the salutary views of admiralty jurisdiction applied in The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 53 U. S. 12 How. 443 [18 L. ed. 1058]; The Hine v. Trevor, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 555 [18 L. ed. 451]; and The Eagle, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 15 [19 L. ed. 365], we have no doubt of the jurisdiction of the district court in this case." "Navigable water, situated as this canal is, used for the purposes for which it is used, a highway for commerce between ports and places in different States, carried on by vessels such as those in question here, is public water of the United States."

It is true that this case considers and decides a question of admiralty jurisdiction; but the canal, although wholly artificial, and wholly within the body of the State, is declared public water, for the reason that it is a conduit for interstate commerce. In concluding the opinion, Mr. Justice Blatchford observes: "This case does not raise the question whether the admiralty jurisdiction of the district court extends to waters wholly within the body of a State, and from which vessels cannot so pass as to carry on commerce between places in such State and places in another State or in a foreign country, and no opinion is intended to be intimated as to jurisdiction in such a case."
7 L. R. A.

The case was decided in January, 1884. In December, 1870, in the case of The Montello,—a proceeding to recover a penalty under a statute operative upon the "bays, lakes, rivers or other navigable waters of the United States,"—Mr. Justice Field, for the court, declares that the stream "can only be deemed a navigable water of the United States when it forms by itself, or by its connection with other waters, such a highway." "If, however," the learned justice continues, "the river is not of itself a highway for commerce with other States or foreign countries, or does not form such a highway by its connection with other waters, and is only navigable between different places within the State, then it is not a navigable water of the United States, but only a navigable water of the State, and the Acts of Congress . . . for the enrollment and license of vessels have no application. Those Acts only require such enrollment and license for vessels employed upon the navigable waters of the United States."

It will be observed that this was the construction of a penal statute, and its application under the admiralty power. But, for the regulation of interstate commerce, as we shall presently see, Congress has enacted legislation with reference to the commerce upon water routes, whether they form, by connection with other waters or with railways, a highway for continuous carriage or shipment of passengers or property. The power of Congress for this purpose is, we believe, generally conceded. If, therefore, the navigable waters of a State wholly within the State, and with no exterior water connection, are yet utilized under "common control, management or arrangement," in connection with railroads, for "continuous carriage,"—in other words, for interstate commerce,—they would become public waters of the United States, and subject to congressional control under the commerce clause (par. 3, § 8, art. 1) of the Constitution, if not under the admiralty clause. See Act of February 4, 1887, entitled "An Act to Regulate Commerce," 24 Stat. at L. 879; Stockton v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 411, 32 Fed. Rep. 9.

But if it be true, as contended, that the terms of the Act of June 19, 1886, are so broad that they affect the navigable waters of a State upon which there are vessels wholly engaged in internal commerce, must the Act be held a nullity for that reason? From the fact that the indefatigable proctors for respondents have referred to the Kissimee, in Florida, and the Jordan, in Utah, to illustrate their argument, it is perhaps fairly inferable that such streams and lakes are very rare. It is probable, also, that the commerce which they convey is comparatively unimportant. Now, is it not the duty of the court to sustain the Act under consideration if it appears that its application to the navigable inland waters of the United States, and to the great body of commerce, is valid and appropriate, even though it may affect, upon occasion, commerce wholly within a State? Concede that its language is susceptible of the meaning suggested by the respondents, it is nevertheless clearly warranted, and operative as to all the important inland navigation of the country and the Great Lakes, and as to a mighty volume of commercial transactions. It has long been settled that statutes, constitutional in part only, will be upheld so far as they are not in conflict with the Constitution, provided the allowed and prohibited parts are separable. Keokuk N. L. Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S. 80 [24 L. ed. 377].

A case of controlling authority upon the proposition that the Statute may be valid as to one class of commerce, even though invalid as to another, is Ratterman v. W. U. Teleg. Co. 127 U. S. 411-428 [32 L. ed. 229-234]. There a single tax was assessed by the State of Ohio upon the receipts of the telegraph company. These were derived as well from interstate as from internal commerce. The items of the income account were of course capable of separation, but they were returned and assessed in gross, and without separation or apportionment. A bill was presented to the judge of the circuit court of the United States, sitting in chancery, by the telegraph company, with averments that the tax was illegal and void, and in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, for the alleged reason that the State was seeking by the Act to impose a tax upon gross receipts principally accumulated from interstate telegraphic messages. The prayers were that the defendant, to wit, the treasurer, may be compelled to accept that portion of the tax lawfully due the State and country, and that he may be enjoined from levying or collecting the balance of the assessment. To the bill a general demurrer was filed. The circuit court, after argument, upon an agreed submission of facts, which was in the main but a statement of the separate amounts received from business within the State, and from business between points in Ohio and in other States, held that the tax by the State, so far as apportioned to receipts derived from interstate communication, was unconstitutional and void, but, as apportioned to messages within the State, it was valid. The case reached the supreme court by a certificate of difference of opinion between the circuit and the district judge; and Mr. Justice Miller, for the court, presenting the unanimous opinion with the characteristic vigor and clearness of his judicial deliverances, has with precision, and we think with conclusiveness, defined the rule for our guidance. After stating the question certified, and observing that the agreement of parties had avoided the point that the tax was not separable, the learned justice decisively states: "Nor do we believe, if there were allegations, either in the bill or answer, setting up that part of the tax was from interstate commerce, and part from commerce wholly within the State, that there would have been any difficulty in securing the evidence of the amount of receipts chargeable to these separate classes of telegrams by means of the appointment of a referee or master to inquire into that fact and make report to the court. Neither are we of opinion that there is any real question, under the decisions of this court, in regard to holding that, so far as this tax was levied upon receipts properly appurtenant to interstate commerce, it was void, and that, so far as it was only upon commerce wholly within the State, it was valid."

7 L. R. A.

How apposite is this language to the facts before the court! Here the books and bills of lading of the steamer would show every fact essential to the apportionment of the cargo into classes of internal and interstate traffic and freight. But even more pertinent is the next succeeding remark of the learned justice: "This precise question was adjudged in the Case of State Freight Tax, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 232 [21 L. ed. 146]." There a statutory tax of Pennsylvania of two cents for one class, three cents for another, and five cents for another, imposed upon every ton of freight transported by any railroad or canal of that State was resisted by the Reading Railroad Company on the ground that it was levied on interstate commerce. The returns of the railroad company to the accounting officers stated separately the amount of freight carried wholly within the State, and the amount brought into or carried out of the State. The court held "that the tax upon the former class . . . was valid under the law of Pennsylvania, by which it was imposed; but that the latter classes, being commerce among the States, were not subject to such taxation." These cases are very satisfactory.

It is also true that the apportionment and separation of subjects under control of the State, and exempt therefrom, will apply to the transportation routes, as well as to the freight transported or messages forwarded. In the case of W. U. Teleg. Co. v. Atty-Gen. of Mass., 125 U. S. 530 [81 L. ed. 790], where a tax by that State was estimated against the company upon the length of its lines within the State, as proportioned to their length elsewhere, it was held that since lines along post routes and across navigable waters of the United States were not subject to taxation, and since, in the State, 233,455 miles of the defendant's lines were thus exempted, there remained only 49,850 miles not exempt; and upon this the company offered to pay the proportion of the tax assessed against it according to mileage by the state authorities. The remaining assessment was enjoined. "We refer to this now," continues this valuable opinion, "only for the purpose of showing how easily the question of taxation which is forbidden by the Constitution may be separated from that which is permissible in this class of cases." If the subjects of taxation are so readily classified to mark the separate domain of federal and state taxing power, how entirely justifiable will be the same process when necessary to maintain the validity of national legislation! This, as we have seen, is the unquestionable duty of the court. vide also Tiernan v. Rinker, 102 U. S. 123 [26 L. ed. 103]; Philadelphia & S. M. Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326 [30 L. ed. 1200], 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 811; W. U. Teleg. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 128 U. S. 89 [32 L. ed. 845].

A case very interesting and very instructive as to this important topic is Philadelphia & S. M. Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania, 123 U. S. 326-345 [30 L. ed. 1200-1204]. The opinion of the court, rendered by Mr. Justice Bradley, comprehends an attractive analysis of the more pertinent decisions upon this rule, with copious references to many others.

It will be observed that we have heretofore considered the argument submitted by respondents' proctors as if a portion of the cargo of The Katie was shipped to be transported wholly within the State. It is true, however, as we shall presently see, that all of it is properly to be regarded as interstate in its character. It is true, also, that The Katie was engaged, in the strictest sense, in interstate and foreign commerce, and that the Savannah River between Augusta and Savannah is, as clearly, as the Mississippi between St. Louis and New Orleans, a navigable river of the United States. We extract the following from the valuable and elaborate brief of Mr. Robert Erwin, the proctor for libellant:

"The State of Georgia is bounded on the east by a line running from the sea, or the mouth of the River Savannah, along the stream thereof, to the fork or confluence made by the Rivers Keowee and Tugalo. Code Ga. § 15. It is proper to state, however, that there has been much discussion as to whether the State of Georgia extends only to the thread of the stream or to the Carolina shore. However that may be, the second article adopted by the convention of Beaufort, which settled the boundary between Georgia and South Carolina, provided that the navigable portion of the Savannah River should be henceforth equally free to the citizens of both States, and exempt from all duties, tolls, hindrance, interruption and molestation whatsoever attempted to be enforced by one State on the citizens of another. See Hotchkiss, Stat. Law Ga. 916. And as the steamboat Katie, on every trip, touched at landings on both shores of the river,—that is, in South Carolina and in Georgia,—there can be no doubt that she was engaged in interstate commerce."

In New Orleans Cotton Exchange v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 289-294, we find it announced that commerce between points in the same State, but which passes through another State, is regarded and treated as interstate commerce. Mr. Commissioner Morrison, stating the conclusion of the Commission, on page 298, uses the language following: "While passing through Mississippi, after passing from Louisiana, this commerce is interstate, and subject alone to interstate regulation. It is not subject at any place between Shreveport and New Orleans to regulation by both the State and the Congress. It passes by continuous carriage from Louisiana to and through the State of Mississippi. It is not transportation 'wholly within one State.' It is subject to regulation by the provision of the Act to Regulate Commerce, and the Commission has jurisdiction to revise the rates, when the parties interested in them are before it."

This report is strongly advisory, and the statement quoted seems otherwise altogether justifiable. Then The Katie was in all respects engaged in interstate commerce. See also Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196 [29 L. ed. 155]; The Daniel Ball, supra.

To summarize our conclusions upon this important and interesting topic, we are of opinion that the Act of June 19, 1836, is valid, in view of the power of Congress to regulate commerce: (1) Because the law, amended, excepted from its operation inland navigation only, and not internal commerce, as insisted. (2) The Amendment extended the operation of the law, not to internal commerce, but to inland navigation. So much for the direct purpose of the Act. (3) If internal commerce is affected, it is incidentally, merely: and the purpose of the Legislature being legitimate, and warranted by the Constitution, it is wholly immaterial to the consideration of its validity that somewhere it has a casual or contingent effect upon the domain of state legislation. (4) Even though the subjects of this extended liability, or the territory in which it is effective, are partially within the region of state control, yet, where they are separable, and are partly under the national control, the Act will be sustained by the courts wherever the power of Congress extends, and as to all those objects to which it attaches; and this rule is easily applicable to the facts. (5) As to the Savannah River, it is a public navigable stream. The voyages of The Katie and her cargo are interstate in character, and the jurisdiction of Congress is undoubted.

It will be seen that the question presented as to the constitutionality of the clause extending the benefit and privilege of limited responsibility to the owners of vessels engaged in navigating the inland public waters of the United States has been heretofore considered solely with relation to the commercial power of Congress. But the commerce clause of the Constitution is not the only title to the validity and effectiveness of the enactments. It is equally clear that the Amendment is warranted by par. 1, § 2, art. 3, of the Constitution, which extends the judicial power of the United States to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. Since the demurrer was argued, the Supreme Court of the United States, in Butler v. Boston & S. Steamship Co. 130 U. S. 527-558 [32 L. ed. 1017-1025], has settled with distinctness the following principles applicable to this discussion: The law of limited liability was enacted by Congress as part of the Maritime Law of the United States, and is co-extensive in its operation with the whole territorial domain of that law. (2) While the General Maritime Law, with slight modifications, is accepted as law in this country, it is subject, under the Constitution, to such modifications as Congress may see fit to adopt. (3) The Limited Liability Act applies to the case of a disaster happening within the technical limits of a county in a State, and to a case in which the liability itself arises from a law of the State. The case resulted from the well-known disaster to the City of Columbus near Gay Head, at the western extremity of Martha's Vineyard; and it was insisted by respondents to the libel to limit liability, filed by the steamship company, that the doctrine had no application to cases of personal injury and death, and none in the technical limits of a county in a State, nor to a cause of action created by state law. All of these propositions were negatived by the court. The case seems to have been argued with great care and elaboration; and the opinion, rendered by Mr. Justice Bradley, is most valuable. The learned justice declares that the purpose of the Limited Liability Law is, we may observe, not to affect internal commerce, but for the encouragement of ship-building, and the employment of ships in commerce. He refers to the various attempts which have been made to narrow the operation of the Statute. He cites the leading cases in which the beneficent object of the law has been set forth: Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 104 [20 L. ed. 585]; Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 578 [27 L. ed. 1088].

"The law of limited liability," says the learned justice, "as we have frequently had occasion to assert, was enacted by Congress as a part of the Maritime Law of this country, and therefore it is co-extensive in its operation with the whole territorial domain of that law. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 104-127 [20 L. ed. 585-593]; The Lottawanna, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 558-577 [22 L. ed. 654-663]; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, 29-81 [26 L. ed. 1001, 1003]; Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 578-593 [27 L. ed. 1088-1044].

"In The Lottawanna we said: 'It cannot be supposed that the framers of the Constitution contemplated that the law should forever remain unalterable. Congress undoubtedly has authority under the commercial power, if no other, to introduce such changes as are likely to be needed.' Page 577 [661].

"Again, on page 575 [662], speaking of the maritime jurisdiction referred to in the Constitution, and the system of law to be administered thereby, it was said: 'The Constitution must have referred to a system of law co-extensive with, and operating uniformly in, the whole country. It certainly could not have been the intention to place the rules and limits of Maritime Law under the disposal and regulation of the several States, as that would have defeated the uniformity and consistency at which the Constitution aimed on all subjects of a commercial character affecting the intercourse of the States with each other or with foreign States.'

"In The Scotland this language was used: 'But it is enough to say that the rule of limited responsibility is now our maritime rule. It is the rule by which, through the Act of Congress, we have announced that we propose to administer justice in maritime cases.' Page 81 [1004].

"Again in the same case, (page 29 [1003]) we said: 'But whilst the rule adopted by Congress is the same as the rule of the General Maritime Law, its efficacy as a rule depends upon the Statute, and not upon any inherent force of the Maritime Law. As explained in The Lottawanna, the Maritime Law is only so far operative as law in any country as it is adopted by the laws and usages of that country; and this particular rule of the Maritime Law had never been adopted in this country until it was enacted by statute. Therefore, whilst it is now a part of our Maritime Law, it is nevertheless statute law.'

"And in Providence & N. Y. Steamship Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. it was said: 'The rule of limited liability prescribed by the Act of 1851 is nothing more than the old maritime rule administered in courts of admiralty in all countries except England from time immemorial; and, if this were not so, the subject matter itself is one that belongs to the department of Maritime Law.' 109 U. S. 593 [27 L. ed. 1044].

"These quotations are believed to express the general, if not unanimous, views of the members of this court for nearly twenty years past, and they leave us in no doubt that whilst the General Maritime Law, with modifications, is accepted as law in this country, it is subject to such amendments as Congress may see fit to adopt. One of the modifications of the Maritime Law as received here was a rejection of the law of limited liability. We have rectified that. Congress has restored that article to our Maritime Code. We cannot doubt its power to do this."

At this point it is material to observe that the exception to the Act of 1851 denying the Statute operation to inland waters was added in the Senate. It seems to have been suggested by an Act of Parliament in the reign of Geo. III., which provided that these privileges "should not extend to the owners of any lighter, barge, boat or vessel, of any burden or description whatsoever, used wholly on rivers or inland navigation, or vessel not duly registered according to law." Opinion of Judge Drummond in The War Eagle, 6 Biss. 364.

Surely Parliament was not concerned with questions of interstate or internal commerce. To use the language of Mr. Justice Bradley above quoted, it was a modification of the Maritime Law. We have rectified that. In fact, our Statute adopted the Maritime Law, as contradistinguished from the English statutes, with that exception, where they were followed. But in England, as in this country, the scope of this great privilege had been gradually but steadily extended. It was partially adopted by the Act of 7 Geo. II. in 1734. It was enlarged by 26 Geo. III., 1786, and again by 53 Geo. III., 1813. In 1841, France took advanced action in behalf of the ship owner. The Act of 1851 was framed in the light thrown upon the subject by all of this European legislation, and by the writings of Grotius (War and Peace, bk. 2, chap. 11, § 13), Valin (liber 2, title 8), Pardessus (2 Droit Commercial, pt. 3, title 2, chap. 3, § 2), and many others.—renowned writers on Maritime Law. Who can doubt its wisdom or its beneficence, when considered in the light of such experience and such authority? Its philosophy is eminently practical, and is well explained by Mr. Justice Bradley in Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 121 [20 L. ed. 591].

"The great object of the law was to encourage ship-building, and to induce capitalists to invest money in this branch of industry. Unless they can be induced to do so, the shipping interests of the country must flag and decline. Those who are willing to manage and work ships are generally unable to build and fit them. They have plenty of hardiness and personal daring and enterprise, but they have little capital. On the other hand, those who have capital, and invest it in ships, incur a very large risk in exposing their property to the hazards of the sea, and to the management of sea-faring men, without making them liable for additional losses and damage to an indefinite amount. How many enterprises in mining, manufacturing and internal improvements would be utterly impracticable if capitalists were not encouraged to invest in them through corporate institutions, by which they are exempt from personal liability or from liability except to a limited extent! The public interests require the investment of capital in ship-building quite as much as in any of these enterprises."

Having rectified by the Act of 1851 its omission to obtain the benefit of this law for the ship owners who are our countrymen, Congress, finding that it was injudicious to exclude therefrom the interests engaged in inland navigation, rectified that mistaken exclusion by the Act of June 19, 1886, now under consideration. Who can successfully dispute the wisdom of this legislation? Who may deny its absolute and vital importance to the shipping interests of the country upon those northern oceans of living water,—traversed by vast fleets of steamers and sailing vessels, annually discharging into the coffers of national and individual treasure an opulence of wealth beyond the dreams of avarice? Is it possible to question the benefit of this law, to the traffic upon those mighty streams which, with their tributaries, vitalize the continent, as the arteries the human body, or upon the innumerable water-courses of lesser volume, but the value of which the nation is beginning to appreciate, and for the improvement of which the public makes annual and liberal expenditures in order to advance the commerce, which is declared in argument here to be wholly without national control?

After consideration in detail of the reasons urged against the validity of the Act,—consideration had with the carefulness and attention demanded, not alone by the great moment of the inquiry, but also by the zeal and earnestness with which the supposed encroachment upon the rights of the State has been combatted,—we are thoroughly satisfied that the legislation is proper, as well to the commercial power of Congress as to the admiralty jurisdiction of the courts, as modified by the Statutes. It has afforded an additional illustration of the fortunate truth that the Constitution of our country is never an obstacle to the practical and patriotic assertion of national control over subjects of national concern; but considered in sympathy with the broad and patriotic, yet cautious and conservative, purposes of its framers, it furnishes an undoubted warrant for all legislation appropriate to our diverse system, and in consonance with the expansion and progress of the country on the paths of civilization as they widen and extend.

The demurrer will be overruled.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

Miles W. GARDNER, App't.

v.

William M. TERRY et al., Respts.

(.....Mo.....)

1. An injunction may be granted to prevent a sale of land under a deed of trust in order to prevent a cloud being cast thereby on the title, which has been obtained by adverse possession.
2. A suit to restrain a sale of real estate under a trust deed in order to prevent a cloud upon title is one "involving title to real estate" within the jurisdiction of the supreme court.

(Barclay, J., dissents.)

(January 27, 1890.)

APPEAL by complainant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Franklin County in favor of defendants in a suit to enjoin the sale of certain real estate under a deed of trust. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. John W. Booth, for appellant:

A sale and conveyance thereunder would have made an apparent better title, which, though no title in fact, could only have been defended against by proof of matter dehors the deed. This being so, the sale and conveyance would have cast a cloud on appellant's title; and therefore the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to plaintiff's petition, and should have made the injunction perpetual as prayed for.

Gunby v. Brown, 86 Mo. 258, and cases cited.

Messrs. Isaac T. Wise and John H. Pugh, for respondents:

Plaintiff alleges that he has so good a defense at law that he ought to have equitable interference in his favor to save him the effort and trouble of setting it up. This is not the law. Where the law affords a complete remedy, equity will not interfere.

7 L. R. A.

Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Maddox, 10 West. Rep. 42, 92 Mo. 470; Shelbina Hotel Assn. v. Parker, 58 Mo. 327; Kelly v. Hurt, 74 Mo. 581; Bobb v. Graham, 5 West. Rep. 481, 89 Mo. 200.

The purchaser at this sale would have acquired no better title than the trustee had to convey. But except by a sale, the title remains in the trustee, and nothing can be done toward collecting the note or enforcing its payment.

Wilcox v. Walker, 13 West. Rep. 263, 94 Mo. 88; Martin v. Jones, 72 Mo. 23.

Limitation as a defense must be made as such and proved, and an issue at law tendered upon it. It does not become a defense unless made one like any other defense.

Lewis v. Schwenn, 6 West. Rep. 855, 98 Mo. 28.

While the sale under the deed of trust will cast a cloud on the title, still it could make no greater or more dense cloud than that originally made by said deed of trust from the day it was filed for record.

Martin v. Jones, supra; Kuhn v. McNeil, 47 Mo. 389; Drake v. Jones, 27 Mo. 428.

Black, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Gardner brought this suit against William M. Terry and the administrator of William H. Lamoreaux, to enjoin the sale of two lots under a deed of trust in which Terry is the substituted trustee and the estate of Lamoreaux is the beneficiary. The court sustained a demurrer to the petition, and gave judgment thereon, to reverse which the plaintiff appealed.

The petition discloses the following facts: William H. Lamoreaux, being the owner of the two lots in question, conveyed them to Isaac Brooks by a deed dated the 26th of August, 1869. On the same day Brooks gave Lamoreaux a deed of trust on the lots to secure two notes, both payable to Lamoreaux,—one for $500 payable in ten days, and the other for $625, payable on the 1st of March, 1870. The $625 note has never been paid, and from this averment it seems the other one had been paid. On the 29th of February, 1872, Brooks conveyed the lots to Sarah V. Lamoreaux, and she at the same time executed a deed of trust thereon. The property was sold under this deed of trust, and Brooks again became the purchaser; and he conveyed to Hall in 1878, who conveyed to the plaintiff in 1882. The administrator of W. H. Lamoreaux caused the defendant Terry to be substituted as trustee in the deed of trust first mentioned, which was executed by Isaac Brooks, and advertised the property for sale under that deed of trust. This is the sale which plaintiff seeks to enjoin. He states in the petition that he and his grantors have been in the actual, open, notorious, adverse possession of the lots for more than ten years, and that the deed of trust is barred by the Statute of Limitations; and this is the ground upon which he seeks to enjoin the proposed sale.

Although a note secured by a deed of trust may be barred by limitation so that no personal judgment can be had on it, it does not follow that the remedy on the deed of trust is barred. To defeat a foreclosure or other remedy on the deed of trust there must have been ten years' adverse possession. These principles of law have been often asserted by this court. Booker v. Armstrong, 98 Mo. 58, 10 West. Rep. 325, and cases cited.

On the facts, as they are stated in the petition in this case, it must be conceded that the deed of trust and all remedy thereon is barred by reason of the ten years' adverse possession, and the question is whether this fact furnishes a good ground for injunctive relief. In general, the Statute of Limitations is available in defense only, but ten years' adverse possession of real estate will not only bar an action of ejectment, but it will confer title upon the possessor. A title thus acquired is as good as any other title, and ejectment may be maintained as well as defended upon such a title. Nelson v. Brod-hack, 44 Mo. 596; Fulkerson v. Mitchell, 82 Mo. 20.

It is therefore difficult to see why a title thus acquired is not entitled to the same protection as a title acquired in any other way. The objection made to the relief asked is that the plaintiff can avail himself of the defense in an action of ejectment brought by the purchaser at the trustee's sale. That he could do this there can be no doubt, but it is not a complete answer to the right to the relief asked. The relief is demanded on the ground that the sale will cast a cloud on the plaintiff's title. The jurisdiction and power of a court of equity to prevent a cloud being cast upon the title to real estate is as well established as is the jurisdiction and power to remove one already created. McPike v. Pen, 51 Mo. 63; Martin v. Jones, 72 Mo. 24; Vogler v. Montgomery, 54 Mo. 577.

In Harrington v. Utterback, 57 Mo. 519, the 7 L. R. A.

plaintiff was the owner of a homestead which had been sold upon execution, and he brought his suit to remove the cloud thus cast upon his title. The objection was there made that the plaintiff could, by the statutory proceeding, compel the defendant to bring a suit at law to try the title; but the objection was not allowed to prevail, and the petition, it was held, stated a cause of action.

In Vogler v. Montgomery, supra, the question arose whether a sale under a deed of trust should be enjoined. The plaintiff was the owner of a homestead which had been sold under execution, and the purchaser at the execution sale made a deed of trust on the property thus purchased. It was held that the sale under the deed of trust should be enjoined. The court said: "It is the true policy of courts to prevent litigation, and a sale by the trustee would undoubtedly cast a cloud over plaintiff's title and embarrass a sale, if he desired to sell." See also State v. Tiedemann, 69 Mo. 306.

Where the facts are such that a court would remove the cloud when cast, it seems clear the court should interfere by injunction to prevent its being cast. 1 High, Inj. 2d ed. § 372.

The relief is granted in such cases upon the ground that the deed or other instrument constituting the cloud may be used to embarrass the plaintiff's title, and that, too, when the plaintiff's evidence is not at hand. As we hold in this State that one judgment in ejectment is not a bar to the prosecution of another like suit between the same parties for the same property, injunctive relief ought not to be withheld on the sole ground that the plaintiff may make his defense in an action of ejectment. The relief at law, to defeat the equitable jurisdiction, should be adequate and complete. The present invalidity of the deed of trust does not appear from the face of the records. It only appears by a resort to other evidence, and parol evidence at that; so that there can be no objection to the petition on the ground that the proposed sale will be void on the face of the records. It is to the interest of all parties that the present validity of the deed of trust should be settled before a sale thereunder, and our conclusion is that the demurrer should have been overruled.

The point is not made in the briefs, but the question has been properly suggested by members of this court, whether we have jurisdiction of this appeal. If this court has jurisdiction, it is because the case is one "involving title to real estate," it not appearing that the amount in dispute exceeds $2,500.

We have held again and again that suits for the enforcement of tax-bills, mechanics' liens and vendors' liens are not suits involving the title to real estate. In such cases there is generally no contest about the title, and the question is one of the enforcement of a lien against a conceded title.

In the case of State v. Court of Appeals, 87 Mo. 200, the relator had obtained a judgment enjoining a sale under execution on the ground that the sale would cast a cloud upon his title, from which an appeal was taken to the court of appeals, and it was held that the case was not one involving the title to real estate, and hence an appeal would not lie to this court. The facts of that case are not stated in the opinion, but it closes with these significant observations: "The real matters which the relator seeks to have determined in the suit for injunction are the validity and effect of the proceedings under which the execution sale is threatened to be made. He has, as yet, no contest with anyone about the title to his property."

In the case in hand the plaintiff says he has a title, though not of record, and not required to be made matter of record, which is superior to and cuts out the deed of trust; and he brings that title forward, and pleads it, relying upon the Statute of Limitations, which concerns real actions only, and bases his right upon that

Statute. The real issue which he tenders is the same that he would make in an action of ejectment brought by the purchaser at a trustee's sale, and surely this court would have jurisdiction of an appeal in such a case. We must look to the pleadings in this case to see what the real issues proposed to be made are, and in doing this we cannot escape the conclusion that the case is one involving the title to real estate.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

All concur except Barclay, J., who dissents.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS (2d Div.).

Charles COUDERT et al., Admsrs., etc., of Edmond Fougera, Deceased, Respts.,
v.

Isidor COHN et al., Appts.

(....N. Y.....)

Where tenants enter under a lease for a stated term of more than one year, which is void by reason of the absence of written authority to the owner's agent making the same, and pay rent, they become tenants from year to year, and the time for the commencement and termination of the respective terms will correspond in each year with the date of entry; and if they hold over after the close of any term, they cannot terminate the tenancy until the end of the succeeding term with the possible exception that they may quit at the day fixed in the lease for the termination of the tenancy should such day be reached.

(January 14, 1890.)

APP<sup>EAL</sup> by defendants from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of the Kings Circuit entered upon a verdict directed for plaintiffs in an action to recover rent alleged to be due and unpaid. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. Simpson & Werner, for appellants:

The yearly term expired on August 1, 1885, and, the defendants having quitted, they were not further liable.

Doe v. Bell, 5 T. R. 471, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 7th Am. ed. 114; People v. Rickert, 8 Cow. 231; Laughran v. Smith, 75 N. Y. 209.

The defendants were only liable for the time they actually occupied, which is coincident with the expiration of the term, to wit, August 1, 1885; and consequently there can be no recovery here.

Thomas v. Nelson, 69 N. Y. 118; Prial v. Entwistle, 10 Daly, 498; Smith v. Genet, 2 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 88; Fougera v. Cohn, 2 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 253.

Messrs. Carpenter & Roderick, for respondents:

The defendants are liable for the rent sued for. Having entered into possession under the void lease, a yearly tenancy was created, and, having held over after the expiration of the first year, they are liable for at least another year's rent.

7 L. R. A.

Laughran v. Smith, 75 N. Y. 205; Reeder v. Sayre, 70 N. Y. 180; Doe v. Terry, 4 Ad. & El. 274.

Bradley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The action was brought to recover rent of premises described in a written lease made by the agent of the plaintiffs' intestate to the defendants in January, 1884, for the term of two years and five months, commencing on the 1st day of March, 1884, and ending on the 1st day of August, 1886, at the yearly rent of $3,000, payable, in equal monthly payments, on the last business day of each month. The authority of the agent to make the lease not being in writing, it was void. 2 Rev. Stat. p. 184, § 6.

The defendants went into possession on the 1st of March, 1884, and continued to occupy and pay rent up to August, 1885, when they left the premises, and sought to surrender the possession up to the plaintiffs' intestate, who declined to accept it. He recovered for the amount of rent at the rate mentioned in the lease from the 1st of August to the 1st of March following. While the cases are not entirely in harmony on the subject, the doctrine now in this State is such that the defendants, on going into possession of the premises and paying rent, became, by reason of the invalidity of the demise, tenants from year to year, and in such case the continuance of occupancy into the second year rendered them chargeable with the rent until its close. They could then only terminate their tenancy at the end of the current year. Reeder v. Sayre, 70 N. Y. 180; Laughran v. Smith, 75 N. Y. 205.

The question presented is, When did the rental year arising out of such relation commence and terminate? It is contended by the defendants' counsel that inasmuch as the end of the term designated by the terms of the lease was the 1st of August, 1886, that was the time when the yearly tenancy, in contemplation of law, terminated, and therefore the surrender was properly made on the 1st of August, 1885. It is urged that this view is in harmony with the recognized principle that, although the lease was invalid, the agreement contained in it regulated the terms of the tenancy in all respects except as to the duration of the term, and Doe v. Bell, 5 T. R. 471, is cited. There a farm was, in January, 1790, let by a parol lease, void by the Statute of Frauds, for seven years, the lessee to enter upon the land when the former tenant left, on Lady Day, and into the house on the 25th of May following, and was to quit at Candlemas. He entered accordingly, and paid rent. A notice was served upon the tenant, September 22, 1792, to quit on Lady Day. In ejectment brought against him, it was claimed on the part of the lessee that his holding was from Candlemas, and therefore the notice was ineffectual to terminate the tenancy. Lord Kenyon, in deciding the case, said and held that "it was agreed that the defendant should quit at Candlemas; and though the agreement is void as to the number of years for which the defendant was to hold, if the lessor choose to determine the tenancy before the expiration of the seven years, he can only put an end to it at Candlemas."

That case has in several instances been cited by the courts of this State upon the question of the force remaining in the terms of the agreement embraced in a void lease. And in Schuyler v. Leggett, 2 Cow. 668, it was remarked by Chief Justice Savage, in citing it, that such an agreement "must regulate the terms on which the tenancy subsists in other respects, as the rent, the time of the year when the tenant must quit," etc. And the citation was repeated to the same effect by the chief justice in People v. Rickert, 8 Cow. 230.

The question here did not arise in either of those two cases, nor can they be treated as authority that the time for termination of a tenancy from year to year, in any year other than that of the designated expiration of term, is governed by such designation in a void lease for more than one year rather than by the time of entry. The effect sought to be given in the present case to the case of Doe v. Bell is not supported by English authority.

In Berrey v. Lindley, 3 Man. & G. 498, the tenant entered into possession of premises under an agreement void by the Statute of Frauds, by the terms of which he was to hold five years and a half from Michaelmas. Several years after his entry, and after expiration of the period mentioned in the agreement, the lessee gave notice to his landlord to terminate the tenancy at Michaelmas. It was there contended on the part of the latter, and Doe v. Bell was cited in support of the proposition, that the time designated in the agreement for the termination of the tenancy governed in that respect. But the court decided otherwise, and held that the notice was effectual to terminate the tenancy. The views of the court there were to the effect that, although the tenancy was from year to year, the tenant might without notice have quit at the expiration of the period contemplated in the agreement, but, having remained in possession and paid rent subsequently to that time, he must be considered a tenant from year to year with reference to the time of the original entry.

The same principle, in respect to holding over a term, was announced in Doe v. Dobell, 1 Ad. & El. N. S. 806, where it was said that "in all cases the current year refers to the time of entry, unless the parties stipulate to the contrary."

The doctrine of the English cases seems to be that a party entering under a lease, void by the Statute of Frauds, for a term, as expressed in it, of more than one year, and paying rent, is treated as a tenant from year to year from the time of his entry, subject only to the right to terminate the tenancy without notice at the end of the specified term; and to that extent, and for that purpose only, the terms of the agreement, in such case, regulate the time to quit. This right is held to be reciprocal. Doe v. Stratton, 4 Bing. 446.

That proposition is not without sensible reason for its support. The lease for more than one year, unless made in the manner provided by the Statute, cannot be effectual to vest the term in the lessee; yet in other respects the rights of the parties may be determined by its terms, so far as they are consistent with its failure to create any estate or interest in the land, or any duration of term for occupancy by the lessee; and that principle is properly applicable to such leases. Porter v. Bleiler, 17 Barb. 154; Reisler v. Sayre, 70 N. Y. 184; Laughran v. Smith, 75 N. Y. 205, 209.

This view does not aid the defendants. They became tenants from year to year as from the time of their entry; and although, by virtue of the terms of the agreement in that respect in the lease, they may have been at liberty to quit on the 1st of August, 1886, if they had remained until then, such time in that or the year previous could not be treated as the end of any year of the tenancy. The defendants having entered upon the second year from the time of the original entry, it was not within their power to terminate their relation or liability as tenants until the end of the then current year, which did not terminate until the 1st of March was reached. The conclusion, from these views, necessarily follows that the judgment should be affirmed.

All concur, except Brown, J., not sitting.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

CHURCH OF ST. MONICA, Respt.,
v.
MAYOR, etc., of NEW YORK et al., Appts.
(....N. Y....)

The fact that a school-house in the City of NOTE.—Legislative grants of immunity from taxation to be strictly construed.

Where the Legislature has power to exempt property from taxation, such grants of immunity
7 L. R. A.

New York is the property of a religious society will not exempt it from taxation, if the society is unincorporated.

(January 14, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the General Term of the Superior Court of must be strictly construed. State v. Whitworth, 8 Lea, 594; Bellinger v. White, 5 Neb. 401; Crawford v. Burrell Twp. 53 Pa. 219.

An exemption of every school-house and every the City of New York affirming a judgment of the Special Term in favor of plaintiff in an action to have certain taxes adjudged void, and to enjoin the collection of the same: Reversed.

Statement by Earl, J.:

This action was brought for the purpose of having certain taxes which were imposed upon real estate in the City of New York in and for the year 1882 adjudged void and canceled, and to restrain the collection thereof. The case was tried at a special term of the New York Superior Court, and the trial justice found the following facts: That on or about December 22, 1881, James J. Dougherty entered into a written contract with the New York Life Insurance Company for the purchase of premises known as "No. 804 East Seventy-Eighth Street," New York City, upon which was a four-story building, with basement. That on or about January 17, 1882, for a valuable consideration, the insurance company, by deed, conveyed the premises to Dougherty, who took the property in his own name, individually, but purchased the same on behalf of and with moneys belonging to the Church of St. Monica, a religious society of the Roman Catholic Church, of which he then was pastor. That it is a common custom for priests of the Roman Catholic Church to take deeds of property in their own names, and this custom was known to the archbishop at the time of the purchase, and the purchase was made with the archbishop's knowledge and authority. That prior to January, 1882, and ever since, the building was and has been used exclusively for school purposes, under the management of Dougherty, as pastor of the Church of St. Monica. That the school was presided over by the Sisters of Charity. That all female children of St. Monica's parish between the ages of five and sixteen years were admitted to the school, which was known as "St. Monica's Female Parochial School," and that all branches of common-school education were taught there. That the basement and several floors of the building, during the period aforesaid, were used as follows: The basement was the class-room for primary children; the first floor, the class-room for larger children; the second floor was used for the chapel; the third floor, for a lecture-room, and the fourth floor, for the residences of the Sisters of Charity, with the exception of three rooms used for storage. That the City of New York, through its proper officers, assessed the premises for taxation, in and for the year 1882, in the sum of $7,000, and thereafter imposed a tax upon the premises for that year, based upon the assessed valuation, amounting to $157.50. That in the year 1885 the Church of St. Monica was incorporated as a religious body, under the provisions of chapter 45, Laws 1863, and amendments. That, on or about May 28, 1885, Dougherty conveyed the premises to the plaintiff, the incorporated Church of St. Monica. That the parochial school is not incorporated, but belongs to the plaintiff. And he found as conclusions of law that the tax of $157.50 imposed upon the property for the year 1882 was void because at the time of the imposition thereof the property was exempt from taxation for the reason that the building was a "school-house," within the meaning of the Statute exempting school-houses from taxation, and was exclusively used for the purposes of a school, and was exclusively the property of a religious society; and he gave judgment for the plaintiff as prayed for.

Mr. D. J. Dean for appellants.

Mr. Alexander B. Johnson for respondent.

Earl, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Among the property exempted from taxation in the Revised Statutes is the following: "Every building erected for the use of a college, incorporated academy or other seminary of learning; every building for public worship; every school-house, court-house and jail; and the several lots whereon such buildings are situated, and the furniture belonging to each of them." Rev. Stat. pt. 1, chap. 13, title 1, § 4, subd. 3. Under this provision it has been held that no seminary of learning is exempt from taxation, unless it is incorporated, and that no school-house is exempt, unless it belongs to the public common-school system of the State. Oregaray v. New York, 13 N. Y. 220; People v. Brooklyn Board of Assessors, 82 Hun, 457, affirmed in this court, 97 N. Y. 648; Colored Orphans Ben. Assn. v. New York, 104 N. Y. 581, 6 Cent. Rep. 796.

If, therefore, the exemption here claimed depended upon the Revised Statutes, it is clear that it would have to be denied. There has been, however, further legislation. In 1852 (chapter 232) the Act "Defining the Exemptions from Taxation on Public Building in the City of New York" was passed, the first section of which is as follows: "The exemption from taxation of every building for public worship, and every school-house or other seminary of learning, under the provisions of subd. 3, § 4, title 1, chap. 13, of pt. 1 of the Revised Statutes, or amendments thereof, shall not apply to any such building or premises in the City of New York, unless the same shall be exclusively used for such purposes, and exclusively the property of a religious society, or of the New York Public-School Society." And this provision was subsequently embodied in the Consolidation Act relating to the City of New York, except the last phrase, above italicized. Laws 1862, chap. 410, § 827. There is building erected for the use of a college, incorporated academy or seminary of learning, does not embrace a building used and occupied for a private boarding-school. Chegaray v. New York, 13 N. Y. 220; State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 497; St. Mary's College v. Crowl, 10 Kan. 451.

An exemption of all houses of religious worship will not exempt portions of the building leased for business purposes. Prop'rs of S. O. Meeting-House 7 L. R. A.

v. Lowell, 1 Met. 538; Pierce v. Cambridge, 2 Cush. 611; Old South Society v. Boston, 127 Mass. 878; Chapel of the Good Shepherd v. Boston, 120 Mass. 212; Baltimore Appeal Tax Court v. Grand Lodge A. F. & A. Masons, 50 Md. 421; Fort Des Moines Lodge, I. O. O. F., v. Polk Co. 56 Iowa, 84; Griswold College v. State, 46 Iowa, 275; Cook v. Hutchins, 48 Iowa, 706; Frederick Co. v. Sisters of Charity of St. Joseph, 48 Md. 84.

some dispute whether, at the time this assessment was imposed, the Act of 1852, or the provision in the Act of 1883, was in force; and it is now immaterial to determine the matter. The provision above quoted is not happily worded, and its precise scope and meaning are not entirely clear; and its language has given some trouble to those who have had to deal with it. Colored Orphans Ben. Assn. v. New York, 38 Hun, 598.

It was apparently the purpose of the Act of 1852 to limit and confine in the City of New York the exemptions contained in the Revised Statutes, and not to extend them; and hence the qualifying words, "exclusively used for such purposes, and exclusively the property of a religious society," were added. But, without undertaking to give a precise construction to these qualifying words, we think this, at least, is clear: that before a school-house can be exempted it must belong to the public-school system of the city, or be "exclusively the property of a religious society." We have therefore only to determine whether this school-house belonged to a religious society. We will assume that it belonged to the society at the time called the "Church of St. Monica," although the legal title was held either by the insurance company or Father Dougherty. But that was an unincorporated society, and not, we think, such a society as the law-makers meant to include in the words "religious society," used in the Act of 1852. They evidently had in mind religious societies incorporated under the Act of 1813, entitled an Act "to Provide for the Incorporation of Religious Societies," or under some one of the other numerous Acts for the same purpose. The words "religious society," when used in the laws of this State, as they frequently are, generally have reference to an incorporated religious society. It cannot be supposed that it was the legislative intention that any number of persons could come together for some religious purpose, and set up a school, and then claim the exemption. In using the words "religious society," it is most probable that the law-makers had in mind some legal entity capable, as such, of taking and holding property, and popularly known as a "religious society."

We are therefore of opinion that upon the facts found the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief claimed, and that the judgment should be reversed; and as there is no probability that the facts can be changed, the complaint should be dismissed, with costs.

All concur.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

G. KRUEGER, Appl.,

v.

John KRUEGER.

(.....Tex.....)

1. When a debt is barred the new promise relied on must acknowledge the justness of the claim, and express a willingness to pay it.
2. A letter saying: "I have done my best to raise some money, but I cannot do it now . . . But some money we will send you, but not all, because we must live first,"—does not constitute a clear, unequivocal and unconditional acknowledgment of the justness of the demand, nor express a willingness to pay sufficient to remove the bar of the Statute.

(January 21, 1890.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Fayette County in favor of plaintiff in an action upon a promissory note which was alleged to have been taken out of the operation of the Statute of Limitations by a new promise. Reversed.

Commissioner's opinion.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. C. K. Bell for appellant.

Messrs. Robson & Rosenthal for appellee.

Acker, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee brought this suit on the 14th day of May, 1888, against appellant, in the District Court of Fayette County, and alleged in his petition that the defendant resided in Hamilton County, Texas, and that on the 1st day of January, 1880, the defendant executed and delivered to him his promissory note set out in the petition, as follows:

$2,061. Round Top, January 1, 1880.

We the undersigned, or either one of us, promise to pay to the order of John Krueger, in the Town of Round Top, Fayette Co., Texas, the sum of two thousand and sixty-one dollars, American coin, with interest from date at the rate of ten per cent per annum, interest payable annually, for value received. It is further provided that we are to pay any and all expenses, including attorney's fees, should the collection of the note be made by an attorney.

G. Krueger.

It was further alleged that the defendant, in a letter written by him to plaintiff in regard to his indebtedness on the 10th day of August, 1887, admitted the justness of the debt, and promised to pay it. The letter is as follows:

Hamilton, 10th August, 1887.

Dear Father: I have done my best to raise some money, but I cannot do it now, because the little money which I had yet, I bought wheat for, which was cheap still. I bought it at 68 cents yet, and then hauled 40 miles; and corn for feed I must also buy, because that is very slim here, as rain was wanted. Cotton, too, don't look the best. But some money we will send you, but not all, because we must live first, and that in Brenham we must pay too: that was a hard lick for us. Dear father, you sent me a note that I don't sign. I will pay you some every year, but whenever I can, but I sign no more papers, for I think it is just as good without, because we all know how we stand; but you must be satisfied with what you get every year, for I will do whatever I can.

Note.—Limitations, acknowledgment to take debt out of statute. See note to Opp v. Wack (Ark.) 5 L. R. A. 748.

7 L. R. A.

G. Krueger.

The defendant pleaded his privilege of being sued in the county of his residence, and claimed that, while the original note was payable in Fayette County, it was barred, and the suit was on the alleged admission and promise contained in defendant's letter of August 10, 1887, which did not stipulate for payment in Fayette County. The defendant interposed the same defense by special exception, and also especially excepted on the ground that the note set out in the petition was barred by the four-years' Statute of Limitations, and that "the letter sued on as a new promise does not show any promise to pay any certain sum of money, nor does it show any acknowledgment of the justness of any demand of plaintiff against defendant." The plea and exceptions were overruled, and the trial, without a jury, resulted in judgment for plaintiff for principal, interest and attorney's fees, according to the terms of the note.

Under proper assignment of error, it is contended that the court erred in holding that defendant's letter to plaintiff was sufficient to take the barred note out of the Statute of Limitations; and this is the only question we think it necessary to consider. It is conceded that the original debt was barred. When a debt is barred, the new promise relied on must acknowledge the justness of the claim, and express a willingness to pay it. Coles v. Kelsey, 2 Tex. 555.

An acknowledgment which will take a debt out of the bar of the Statute of Limitations must be clear and unequivocal, and neither qualified by conditions nor limitations. McDonald v. Grey, 29 Tex. 83; Dickinson v. Lott, Id. 178; Madox v. Humphries, 24 Tex. 196; Smith v. Fly, Id. 353.

Considered in the light of these authorities, we think it too clear for argument that the letter relied on by plaintiff to take the barred note out of the operation of the Statute of Limitations is not sufficient for that purpose. It does not contain a clear, unequivocal and unconditional acknowledgment of the justness of plaintiff's demand, nor does it contain an expression of a willingness to pay. We think it settled by the authorities, supra, that the acknowledgment, to relieve the claim from the operation of the Statute of Limitations, must contain an unqualified admission of a just, subsisting indebtedness, and express a willingness to pay it. If the expression of a willingness to pay is coupled with conditions, it devolves upon the plaintiff to prove that the named conditions have taken place. Leigh v. Lintheum, 30 Tex. 103.

We think the court below erred in its construction of the letter from defendant to plaintiff, and are of the opinion that its judgment should be reversed, and the cause dismissed.

Stayton, Ch. J.:

Report of commission of appeals examined, opinion adopted, judgment reversed, and cause dismissed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Clarence M. BURTON, Relator,
v.

Thomas P. TUIE, Treasurer of Detroit,
Resp't.

(....Mich.....)

1. Books made up by the receiver of taxes containing a statement of tax sales, and by him handed over to the city treasurer, are public records within the meaning of Pub. Acts 1889, No. 205, giving all persons the right to examine them for any lawful purpose.
2. An abstract maker cannot be deprived of the right to inspect public records given by Pub. Acts 1889, No. 205, because he uses the records to prepare abstracts of title for other persons for a compensation.

(December 23, 1890.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel respondent to permit relator to inspect the public records in the custody of respondent as city treasurer. Granted.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry A. Chaney, for relator:

Relator has a right to inspect and copy from the city treasurer's official records; and this right is enforceable by mandamus.

Lum v. McCarty, 89 N. J. L. 287; People v. Richards, 99 N. Y. 620; Hanson v. Ehrstaedt, 69 Wis. 538; State v. Rachac, 37 Minn. 372; Boylan v. Warren, 39 Kan. 301, 7 Am. St. Rep. 551. 7 L. R. A.

The Legislature has full power to open the records to the public, and no mere official perquisite can stand against its action.

Silver v. People, 45 Ill. 225.

Courts have nothing to do with any mere questions of policy in the enactment of statutes.

Crane v. Reeder, 22 Mich. 335; Reithmiller v. People, 44 Mich. 280; Sheley v. Detroit, 45 Mich. 481.

That the right of inspection existed at common law, see—

Rez v. Shelley, 8 T. R. 141; Rez v. Allgood, 7 T. R. 748; Herbert v. Ashburner, 1 Wils. 297; Bacon, Abr. title Evidence (F) 306.

The abstract maker's standing in the law is now such that he is held to a responsibility in damages for the accuracy of the information which he furnishes.

Smith v. Holmes, 54 Mich. 104.

Mr. John W. McGrath, for respondent:

There is no common-law right to make copies or abstracts of public records for speculative purposes, as for the compilation of a set of abstract books for selling abstracts of titles, nor is such a right given by Act 54 of 1875.

Webber v. Townley, 43 Mich. 534; Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 Mich. 145.

Morse, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator asks for the writ of mandamus to compel the respondent to permit him to inspect and examine the records and files in the city treasurer's office at Detroit, and to furnish proper and reasonable facilities for such inspection and examination, and for making memoranda and transcripts from such files and records, in compliance with Act No. 205, Pub. Acts 1889. The Act in question reads as follows: "That the officers having the custody of any county, city or town records in this State shall furnish proper and reasonable facilities for the inspection and examination of the records and files in their respective offices, and for making memoranda or transcripts therefrom, during the usual business hours, to all persons having occasion to make examination of them for any lawful purpose: provided, that the custodian of said records and files may make such reasonable rules and regulations with reference to the inspection and examination of them as shall be necessary for the protection of said records and files, and to prevent the interference with the regular discharge of the duties of such officer: and provided, further, that such officer shall prohibit the use of pen and ink in making copies or notes of records and files." Pub. Acts 1889, p. 286.

Relator shows in his petition that he is engaged in the abstract business in the City of Detroit, and has invested a large sum of money in said business. That his business requires that he should know what taxes, levied by the City of Detroit, are liens upon property of which he is furnishing abstracts, and by whom such liens, if any, are held. That when lands are sold for unpaid taxes the sale is conducted by the receiver of taxes. A statement of such sales in book form is made by the receiver, and turned over to the city treasurer, in whose custody it thereafter remains. When sales are redeemed or city bids sold, such redemption is minuted in this book. That it is necessary in said relator's business to frequently consult this book. If proper facilities were granted him, he would not need to consult the same more than ten minutes in any one day. That the prevailing rule and custom is, in all the city and county offices, to permit all persons to have free access to the records therein, and he, himself, has ordinarily been allowed this privilege without obstruction or restraint, except in the case of the respondent, who is city treasurer of the City of Detroit. That said respondent has frequently refused to permit relator to inspect the sales-book above referred to, as have also his subordinates; and, if at times an inspection of such record has been granted, it has always been accompanied with insulting language, implying that relator was taking time which belonged to the public, and that he must hurry, or that the books would be taken from him; and this, too, although no other parties were present to be waited upon or attended to, and though much more time was consumed by said treasurer in making such complaints than would be necessary for relator to inspect and make such memoranda as he needed if he could have access to the records without unreasonable interruption. A clerk would be detailed to see that the relator did not mutilate the records, with instructions not to permit relator to take the books. But more frequently relator has been told by the said city treasurer and his subordinates that he could not see the records. Respondent has followed this obstructive course for a long time, to the great annoyance and discomfort of relator, and in the face of the fact that there was posted in his office a notice to the effect that all information desired by the public would be cheerfully and promptly furnished. That respondent at one time informed relator that it was a matter of money with him, and that, if relator would pay him $25 per month, relator could have what access he pleased to the records in said treasurer's office.

July 2, 1889, relator called at the treasurer's office, at about 11 o'clock A. M., and requested the privilege of inspecting some of the sales-books. Respondent asked if the information wanted was for relator's private business. Relator replied that Richard M. Coon was the owner of lot 24, in Wesson's section of the Thompson Farm, in the City of Detroit, and that he had employed relator to see if certain tax-sales which had been previously made were still held by the city or disposed of, and, if disposed of, to whom. Respondent requested relator to write out what he wanted on a piece of paper, which he did. The paper was handed to a clerk, who was called by the respondent to wait on relator. The parcel of land had been sold for six successive years, and it became necessary to inspect six different sales-books. That the statement which relator had made for the clerk, a copy of which he retained, informed the clerk the number of the book required, the page of the book, and the line on the page which he desired to inspect. That said clerk produced four of the books required, and they were hastily inspected by relator, but he was not permitted to handle them. During the examination, which could hardly have occupied ten minutes, respondent himself sat by, discussing the general subject of relator's rights, and apparently in no wise hurried by pressure of official duties. That, after relator had inspected the fourth volume, said clerk—taking his cue from the language and actions of his employer, said respondent—abruptly, violently and unreasonably refused to produce the other two books requested, and left the room. That relator then asked the city treasurer himself to produce the two books asked for, but said treasurer refused. Relator then told respondent that he would get the books himself if he (respondent) would permit him (relator) to go into the room where said books were, for that purpose. Respondent told him he could not go into that room, and absolutely refused to permit him to see the books he desired. Relator offered respondent $10 per month to be accorded such treatment as was accorded to the public. Respondent refused the offer. Relator then formally demanded the right to inspect the two books he had asked for before, and reminded respondent of the Statute. Relator said that if he could not see the books he should ask for a mandamus. Respondent told him to "mandam" if he wanted to; that the books were in the vault, and relator could not see them; and that nothing but an order from the common council would make him remove them. He told relator to leave a written memorandum of what he wanted, and relator refused to do this, as he had already furnished respondent with one statement of what he required. Respondent became vociferous, declared that he had disposed of the subject, refused to hear anything further, and left the room. Relator then, under the advice of counsel, made a new memorandum of what he wanted, and offered it to the deputy treasurer, who said he had no time to attend to it. Relator told him he need not attend to it then, as he would send his clerk for it, laid the memorandum on the table, and placed a paper-weight upon it. Respondent came in about then, in a high temper, and with some profanity ordered the relator out of the office, which order relator obeyed. During the whole time of this interview there was no other person in the office on business, unless he was secluded in the private office of respondent.

The respondent in his answer denies that the books referred to by relator are public records, or that they are made so by charter, ordinance or law, or that they are required by law to be kept, or that relator, or any person except respondent, is entitled to the possession of said books or entitled to take them out of the custody of respondent, or to make extracts from them, except under the immediate supervision of respondent. He denies that it is the universal practice in city offices to permit all persons desiring to inspect the said books to have free access to them, or that such is the usage, or that such usage has become so well established as to have the force of a common-law custom. He denies that relator has been ordinarily allowed to inspect such books without obstruction or restraint, if by obstruction or restraint is meant a denial of the right of access to said books without the supervision of the city treasurer. He denies that the right which relator seeks to establish is recognized or confirmed by any Act of the Legislature. He denies that at any time this respondent, or, by this respondent's direction or authority, any deputy or clerk in respondent's office, has accompanied any inspection of the books which relator has been allowed to make with insulting language. He denies that relator has been told by respondent that he (the relator) could not see the records. He denies that respondent has been guilty of obstructing relator. He denies that respondent derives an income from abstracts amounting to $1,000 per annum, or any such sum. He denies that this respondent has ever said that if relator would pay respondent $25 per month during his term of office the relator could have whatever access he desired to the books in respondent's office. He denies that he made use of the expression found on page 9 of relator's petition, viz., "God damn quick, too."

Respondent also sets forth in his answer that relator is seeking the information from the books as a matter of merchandise to sell to others. That up to July 2, 1884, abstracts could only be procured of the city treasurer, and that the treasurer, whose office expired in 1884, realized from $1,500 to $2,000 annually from tax abstracts, and that he is informed relator paid such officer for the privilege of making a copy of the books of said office, and did make and use the same for private gain. That for one year prior to July 1, 1888, relator paid $35 per month for this privilege. That respondent has always been ready and willing to give any lot owner or citizen desiring it information as to tax charges upon lands, and has always done so free of charge. Insists that he has the legal right to charge a small fee for making out abstracts, as there is no law requiring him to make them otherwise. That the books in question have been kept for the information and convenience of the City of Detroit, and are not required to be kept by the city charter or any law or ordinance. That each year, after the receiver of taxes makes sale of lands for unpaid taxes, one of said books is made up by such receiver, and entered therein in the name of the owner, if known, a description of such parcel of land, the amount of the city tax, school tax, etc., the total tax, the name of the person to whom sold, which is usually the City of Detroit; and said books also contain blanks for entry of assignment or redemption. There are in all thirty-seven books, containing from 100 to 250 pages each. In addition, there are some sales-books, containing memoranda of sales for unpaid special assessments. There are also sixteen (one for each ward), indexes to sales-books, each of which contains a description of each parcel of land in that ward, with a column for each year in which to enter, if sold, the number of the page of the sales-book for that year containing the memoranda of the sale. If a sale has been canceled, a red-ink line is drawn through the reference figures. That the books so kept are easily subject to alteration or defacement. That the books aforesaid are valuable, and the loss of the same, or any of the same, would be irreparable. That respondent is charged by the city with the care and custody of the same. That a portion of respondent's office is kept for the use of the public, and the public is necessarily, by means of desks, railings and wire-work partitions, excluded from the private or working department of the office, and from the part containing the moneys, books and papers in respondent's office. That relator, in order to use the right which he here seeks to establish, must necessarily be admitted to that portion of respondent's office from which the general public is excluded. That the books referred to are kept by respondent in a vault in the city treasurer's office, and in the same vault are other valuable books and papers, together with large sums of the city moneys, varying in amount from $100 to $30,000. That to produce said books, and a number of them, as is often required by relator, requires a large amount of time almost daily, and from ten to thirty minutes per day have often been consumed in so doing. That respondent insists that it is the duty of respondent, in order to protect himself and his bondsmen, to keep these books under the immediate care, custody and supervision of himself or one of his trusted employés. That during the month of July, relator's purpose is not so much to look after individual cases of sales, as it is to compare his minutes of sale with the office memoranda of the same.

Respondent submits that he is not obliged to produce the books of his office, and supervise the inspection of the same, to one who is collecting information for merchandise, and that, if he does do so, he is entitled to pay for it. He also submits that in other public offices,—in the office of the register of deeds, in the probate court, and in the county clerk's office,—when information is furnished which the law does not require to be furnished, charges are made, and legitimately, for such information. He also shows that he has given bond for the safe keeping of these records. That his total fees for abstracts for eleven months ending December 31, 1888, were but $248. And he finally submits that relator is not entitled to access to the books of respondent's office at his own pleasure; neither is he entitled to frequent or enter into that portion of respondent's office from which the general public is excluded. That respondent is entitled to supervise the examination of the books in his office, and that the relator, as a dealer in information, is not entitled to compel respondent to give his time to relator, at the pleasure of relator, for his gain, and without compensation to respondent.

It is evident, from the petition and answer, that there is more or less of ill feeling between these parties, and it is also clear that the relator has been in fact denied free access to these sales-books, and that the respondent does not propose to permit such access unless he is paid therefor; nor does he propose to furnish any facilities, reasonable or otherwise, to the relator to inspect and examine said books without pay. This right of relator, claimed under the Statute, is denied, first, on the ground that these books are not public records, because there is no express statutory provision anywhere that such books shall be kept. These books are made up in the first place by the receiver of taxes, and by him handed over to the city treasurer. They are therefore books used and kept in two of the public offices in the City of Detroit, and they must be considered public records. The claim that they are private books of account is absurd. They are neither the private books of the receiver of taxes nor of the city treasurer, and the City of Detroit, a public municipal corporation, can have no private books, not even of accounts, not open to the inspection of its citizens. Its doings, and the doings of its officers, and the records and files in their offices, must be open to the public; nor can fees be charged for such inspection to those having the right to examine and inspect such files and records.

But the broad ground is also taken that the relator has no lawful right to inspect these sales-books without recompense to the respondent, because he is an abstract maker, and his business may be, and is in most cases, to sell some person the information gained by such examination; that he does not come under the Statute, because he does not have "occasion to make examinations of them for a lawful purpose," and that this case is covered and against relator by two former decisions of this court: Webber v. Townley, 43 Mich. 534; Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 Mich. 145.

If I understand the latter case, the writ of mandamus was denied because the Diamond Match Company was not a citizen nor an inhabitant, nor even a domestic corporation. It did not show its charter, nor give any evidence of its powers or artificial capabilities. The court says: "We have no means of knowing that it has capacity to buy lands or hold them, or deal in titles anywhere, or to carry on the business in which its petition alleges it to be engaged, or to apply itself to such an enterprise as making a system of abstracts of all the titles of all the real property in a county. The case is bare of information in regard to the true legal status of the relator, and as to whether it is other than a mere intruder in what it demands." The petition of the relator alleged that it was incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware; that it had become the purchaser of about 80,000 acres of pine land in the County of Ontonagon, had erected extensive saw-mills, and invested nearly $200,000, and was cutting large quantities of pine, and constantly purchasing more land; and, to provide against acquiring defective titles, desired to protect its rights and interest by providing for itself an abstract of all the lands in the county. The relator was permitted opportunity to examine and make abstracts, as far as its own ownership or interest was concerned, present or prospective; but the dispute was whether it had the right to go further, and insist on having office accommodations, and the handling of all the records, to make an abstract of title to all the lands in the county. While the writer of the opinion, Chief Justice Graves, paused to make some practical suggestions of obstacles in the way of proper relief being afforded by mandamus, the ground of the denial of the writ was that the relator had failed to show any title to the right it claimed, because the authority given to it by the State by which it was created was not disclosed, and could not be assumed. See Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 Mich. 147, 148.

In this view of the case above cited, I do not think that it is any authority bearing against the relator's claim in this case. And I cannot agree with the opinion of this court, or the reasons given for it, in Webber v. Townley, supra; nor do I anticipate that hardly any, if any, of the results imagined by the writer of that opinion would ever occur, if the holding were otherwise. If any of them should happen, the law is powerful enough to remedy them, and "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." I do not think that any common law ever obtained in this free government that would deny to the people thereof the right of free access to and public inspection of public records. They have an interest always in such records, and I know of no law, written or unwritten, that provides that, before an inspection or examination of a public record is made, the citizen who wishes to make it must show some special interest in such record. I have a right, if I see fit, to examine the title of my neighbor's property, whether or not I have any interest in it, or intend ever to have. I also have the right to examine any title that I see fit, recorded in the public offices, for purposes of selling such information, if I desire. No one has ever disputed the right of a lawyer to enter the register's office, and examine the title of his client to land as recorded, or the title of the opponent of his client, and to charge his client for the information so obtained. This is done for private gain, as a part of the lawyer's daily business, and by means of which, with other labors, he earns his bread. Upon what different footing can an abstractor—can Mr. Burton—he placed, within the law, without giving a privilege to one man or class of men that is denied to another? The relator's business is that of making abstracts of title, and furnishing the same to those wanting them, for a compensation. In such a business it is necessary for him to consult and make memoranda of the contents of these books. His business is a lawful one, the same as is the lawyer's, and why has he not the right to inspect and examine public records in his business as well as any other person? If he is shut out because he uses his information for private gain, how will it be with the dealer in real estate, who examines the records before he buys or sells, and buys and sells for private gain? Any holding that shuts out Mr. Burton from the inspection of these records, for this reason also shuts out every other person except the buyer, seller or holder of a particular lot of lands, or one having a lien upon it, or an agent of one of them, acting as such agent without fee or reward. It cannot be inferred that the Legislature intended that this Statute should apply only to a particular class of persons, as, for instance, those only who are interested in a particular piece of land; any person means all persons.

I can see no danger of great abuses or inconveniences likely to arise from the right to inspect, examine or make notes of public records, even if such right be granted to those who get their living by selling the information thus gained. The inconvenience to the office is guarded against by the Statute, which authorizes the incumbent to make reasonable rules and regulations with reference to the inspection. And when abuses are shown there will no doubt be found by the Legislature or the courts a remedy for them. It is plain to me that the Legislature intended to assert the right of all citizens, in the pursuit of a lawful business, to make such examinations of the public records in public offices as the necessity of their business might require, subject to such rules and restrictions as are reasonable and proper under the circumstances. The respondent in this case is the lawful custodian of these sales-books, and is responsible for their safe keeping, and he may make and enforce proper regulations, consistent with the public right, for the use of them. "But they are public property, for public use, and he has no lawful authority to exclude any of the public from access to and examination and inspection thereof at proper seasons." It follows that he has no right to demand any fee or compensation for the privilege of access to the records, or for any examination thereof not made by himself or his clerks or deputies. He has no exclusive right to search the records against any other citizen. Lum v. McCarty, 39 N. J. L. 237; Boylan v. Warren, 39 Kan. 301; State v. Rachac, 37 Minn. 372; People v. Richards, 99 N. Y. 620; Hanson v. Eichstaedt, 69 Wis. 538.

It follows, in my opinion, that the prayer of the petitioner must be granted, and the writ issue as prayed, the relator asking in this writ no more than the Statute gives him.

Champlin, J., concurred.

Campbell, J.:

I think relator has such an interest as entitles him, under the Laws of 1889, to see the books in question, and confine my opinion to that point.

Sherwood, Ch. J., and Long, J., did not sit.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

PADUCAH LUMBER CO., Appl.,

v.

PADUCAH WATER SUPPLY CO.

(.....Ky.....)

1. Where a city has power under its charter to enter into a contract with another for the construction and operation of water-works therein, the right and duty attaches to it to make the contract for the personal benefit of inhabitants within its corporate limits.
2. If such city makes a contract for a water supply, for the benefit of its inhabitants, and the property of one of them is destroyed by fire because of the failure of the person agreeing to furnish such supply to comply with his contract, the property owner may sue in his own name for damages for breach of the contract, he being the "real party in interest" within the provision of Civ. Code, § 18, that every action must be prosecuted in the name of such party; and the city is not a necessary party to the action.
3. One undertaking to furnish a water supply to a city for the benefit of its inhabitants under a contract which provides that he shall not be liable for damages occasioned by the temporary shutting off of the water for purposes of repair, etc., will, in the absence of such excuse, be liable for damages to property by fire resulting from his neglect to furnish the stipulated amount of water; and such liability will not be released by the insertion in the contract of provisions relieving the city from liability for rent for hydrants, and permitting rescission of the contract, in case it is not complied with.

4. The inquiry is, in an action to recover such damages, whether or not, under all the circumstances, the fire could and would have been prevented or extinguished before occasioning the damage, if defendant had performed his contract; and the question as to how or where the fire originated is immaterial provided it was not caused by plaintiff.

(December 5, 1889.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for McCracken County, sustaining a demurrer to the petition in an action to recover damages for the loss of plaintiff's property by fire because of the alleged breach by defendant of its contract with the City of Paducah to furnish a water supply. Reversed.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gilbert & Reed, for appellant:

7 L. R. A.

This is not an action ex delicto to recover damages for a tort or tortious negligence, but it is an action ex contractu, seeking to recover for a loss occasioned by or flowing out of a breach of an express and binding contract. The maxim, causa proxima non remota spectatur, is not applicable alike to the two cases stated.

Shinkle v. Covington, 1 Bush, 618; Webb v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 420; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hope, 80 Pa. 373; Milwaukee R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 474 (24 L. ed. 258).

Where two parties have made a contract, which one of them has broken, the damages which the other party ought to receive in respect of such breach of contract should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered either arising naturally, i. e. according to the usual course of things, from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties, at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it.

Thompson, Neg. § 13; Hadley v. Barendale, 9 Exch. 341, 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 898; Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489; Leonard v. New York, A. & B. Teleg. Co. 41 N. Y. 544; Wharton, Neg. § 435. See also U. S. Teleg. Co. v. Wenger, 55 Pa. 262; Sedgw. Dam. 5th ed. pp. 410-414, notes; Rittenhouse v. Independent Line Teleg. Co. 44 N. Y. 263.

Negligence may be the proximate cause of an injury of which it is not the sole or immediate cause.

Shearn. & Redf. Neg. § 10.

Messrs. Husbands & Husbands also for appellant.

Messrs. Burnett & Dallam for appellee.

Lewis, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The buildings, machinery and other property of appellant, a corporation engaged in the lumber and planing-mill business in the City of Paducah, having been, in 1887, destroyed by fire, it instituted this action to recover damages therefor of appellee, also a corporation; and the City of Paducah, having, as alleged, refused to join as plaintiff, was made likewise defendant to the action, though no recovery against it is sought.

In the petition it is stated, in substance, that in consideration of the grant by the City of Paducah to appellee, as assignee of one Jones, of the franchise and right to construct, maintain and operate for the term of forty years waterworks, including the laying of pipes and erection of hydrants in all the streets, avenues and public grounds of the city, and agreement to pay $40 annual rent for each of 150 hydrants, besides the privilege given to charge and collect of the inhabitants limited rates for private use of water, appellee agreed to erect upon a platform 50 feet high a stand-pipe, 22 feet in diameter, and 175 feet high, with which were to be connected the conducting pipes and hydrants mentioned, and also two pumping engines, each having capacity to force into the stand-pipe 2,000,000 gallons of water every twenty-four hours, and to keep a head of water sufficient to throw from any eight of the hydrants simultaneously, and for five consecutive hours at any one period of time, streams through 50 feet of hose 100 feet high, all which works were completed and put in operation in 1885; that appellee also agreed to have in the stand-pipe and conducting pipes at all times a supply of water sufficient to afford a head or pressure requisite for all domestic, manufacturing and fire-protection purposes, for all the inhabitants and property of the city, and to increase the number and length of hydrants and pipes when necessary to meet demands of the city and citizens; that said contract was made with appellee by the City of Paducah for the use and benefit of all its property owners and inhabitants, and appellant's property was, from 1885 until destroyed by fire, in common with that of others, taxed at its full value to raise money with which to pay said hydrant rents.

It is further stated that, under a contract directly between them, there had been erected, previous to the fire, on the same lot where the burned property was situated, two hydrants, one within 80, and the other 70, feet of the place where the fire originated, and connected by pipes with the water-main, to be used by appellant to extinguish fires, and for steam purpose, for which it had been paying rent to appellee, and that in consideration thereof appellee had agreed to furnish and have ready at all times water sufficient to throw streams through hose kept by appellant in proper condition, to be connected with the two hydrants, the height provided for in said contract between appellee and the City of Paducah; that the fire originated in a wood building situated on the lot of appellant, and connected with its other property, though occupied at the time by another, but said fire occurred without any fault or negligence of appellant or its servants, and it could and would have been extinguished before doing damage to the property of appellant if there had been the stipulated quantity of water in the stand-pipe and conducting pipes, or the pumping machinery had been in readiness to operate, and the engineer and servants of appellee had been present to set it in motion; for immediately after the fire commenced, and before it had done any damage, or extended to the premises then occupied by appellant, hose pipes in good order were attached to the two private hydrants, and carried to within 5 or 6 feet of the fire, for the purpose of applying water to it.

There were besides four or five double-nozzle fire hydrants, one within 12 and two within 60 feet of the property burned, and all near enough to extinguish fire on any part of said lot; and experienced firemen employed by the City of Paducah were present on the ground within ten minutes or less after the fire started, and had hose, suitable and in good condition, attached to the hydrants. But that, notwithstanding it had since 1885 been receiving from the City of Paducah the agreed hydrant rent, and from numerous inhabitants thereof, appellant included, large sums of money for water furnished to them, appellee, in violation of said contract, and without excuse, refused and neglected to have, when said fire commenced, the stipulated quantity of water in the stand-pipe, and for more than one hour after the alarm was given, and the city firemen had arrived and attached hose to the hydrants, neglected to start the pumping machinery, or to have its engineer or other servant present for the purpose, so that, although when water was in the stand-pipe at the height of 75 feet streams could be forced through hose attached to the two private hydrants 75 feet high, and higher when pressure was applied by the pumping machinery, the streams passing through the hose when applied at the incipency of the fire did not reach 10 feet, and were so weak as to be utterly useless, nor was there sufficient head of water to force a stream through any kind or length of hose as much as 25 feet; by reason of which refusal and neglect appellant's property was burned and destroyed.

The grounds of demurrer are, in substance, that the facts stated in the petition and amendments do not constitute a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant, which we will treat as involving two questions: (1) whether there is vested in the plaintiff (appellant) such legal interest in the contract between the City of Paducah and the defendant (appellee) as to authorize it in any event to prosecute an action in its own name, and for its own benefit; (2) whether appellee can be legally made liable in damages for the alleged breach of contract.

Clearly appellant had a right to sue for a breach of the distinct contract set out in the petition, by which, in consideration of rent paid for use of the two hydrants on its own lot, water was agreed to be furnished directly to it by appellee. But we will consider the two questions first stated as they arise on the contract between appellee and the City of Paducah. Authorities in some of the States hold the general rule to be that the plaintiff in an action on contract must be a person from whom the consideration actually moved, and that a stranger to the consideration cannot sue on a contract. But, we think, if there be in fact consideration for a promise or engagement made for the benefit of the person who sues, it is not essential for it to have passed directly from him to the person sued.

It is not, however, important whether this case either comes within what is elsewhere laid down as a general rule, or is an allowable exception to it; for this court has held the doctrine well settled that a party for whose benefit a contract is evidently made may sue thereon in his own name, though the engagement be not directly to or with him (Smith v. Lewis, 8 B. Mon. 229; Allen v. Thomas, 8 Met. 198); which practice is not only in accordance with the rule found in Chitty on Pleading, but seems to be required by § 18, Civil Code, that in express terms provides every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except that under section 21 a fiduciary or trustee may bring an action without joining with him the person for whose benefit it is prosecuted.

It thus follows that if the City of Paducah had power to make the contract as well for the personal benefit of its several inhabitants as for purely municipal purposes, and did so make it, appellant, being the real party in interest because owner of the property destroyed, has the right to prosecute the action in its own name, if maintainable at all, and the City of Paducah, though made so, is not even a necessary party, because whatever interest it may have or injury it may have sustained, is entirely distinct, if not remote.

Conceding, as must be done, existence of the alleged power of the City of Paducah under its charter to enter into a contract with another for construction and operation of waterworks, the right and also duty attached to make it for the personal benefit of inhabitants within its corporate limits; for supply of water in a city for domestic and manufacturing purposes, and as safeguard against injury to or destruction of private property by fire, is always in such cases the main inducement, the need of the municipal corporation itself for water supply being comparatively little. Besides, it is manifest the principal source of expected profit to appellee was the money to be collected by imposition of the special taxation, and for private use of water with which to pay for service in supplying water for use of the inhabitants, and protection of their property from effects of fire; and it being alleged in the petition, and also, in effect, provided in the ordinance of the city council that contains the terms and conditions of the contract, that it was made for the benefit of the inhabitants, it seems to us that, if appellee can be made answerable in damages at all, it is liable to appellant upon the facts stated in the petition.

It is a rule co-existent with contracts that a party who has performed his part is entitled to reparation in some form for breach to his injury by the other. In equity he may sue for specific performance or rescission, neither of which is an appropriate or adequate remedy when the subject matter of a contract is destroyed, and no longer exists; but at the common law, when an actual injury to one of the parties has been caused by refusal or neglect of the other to do what he agreed to do, and received consideration for doing, damages commensurate with the loss thereby sustained may be recovered, and such right of recovery cannot be regarded waived or relinquished unless clearly so provided in the contract.

It is not provided in the ordinance referred to, nor can it be fairly inferred, that appellee was not to answer in damages for its failure or refusal to perform its contract. The provision on that subject is that appellee shall have the right to shut off water temporarily for the purpose of making repairs or extension of the works, and shall not be liable for any damages occasioned by such temporary suspension, provided notice is given of the intention to shut off the water, and such repairs or extension are made with due diligence and without delay; but that, if at any time the supply is shut off from any cause for more than five days, rent for the fire hydrants shall cease during the period of such suspension. It is further provided that, if appellee fail for five months to furnish an adequate supply of water for fire or other public or private purposes, the contract is to be void, and the franchise forfeited. As, under the contract, exemption from liability in damages for shutting off or suspending the water supply exists only when done for the special and temporary purpose of making repairs or extension of the works, and not then unless notice is given, and such repairs and extension are made with due diligence, and without delay, the necessary inference is that appellee was intended to be, and according to a fair interpretation must be, regarded liable in the absence of such excuse. For, manifestly, neither the provision for rent of the fire hydrants to cease in case of a longer than five days' suspension of the water supply for the particular purpose mentioned, nor the reserved right of the City of Paducah to rescind the contract for the cause stated, was intended by the parties, or can be properly construed, to release appellee from liability, or deprive the City of Paducah or its inhabitants of the remedy for non-performance of the contract while it is in force.

The rule laid down in the leading case of Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 358, is that "where two parties have made a contract which one of them has broken, the damages which the other ought to receive in respect of such breach of contract should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered either arising naturally—that is, according to the usual course of things—from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it." This rule, which has been generally adopted and approved in the United States, is applicable and useful in determining the question of legal liability, as well as in fixing the measure of damages in case of breach of contract; for "parties, when they enter into contracts, may well be presumed to contemplate the ordinary and natural incidents and consequences of performance or non-performance." 1 Sutherland, Dam. 77.

It is, however, argued that the damages sustained by appellant were not the natural and proximate consequences of the neglect complained of, and therefore no recovery can be had; and the case of Patch v. Covington, 17 B. Mon. 722, is cited to sustain the position. There the action was to recover in damages the value of a house destroyed by fire in consequence of failure on the part of the City of Covington to keep its public cisterns in repair, and to provide the fire company with hooks, ladders and other necessary apparatus. The fire originated in a building adjacent to that of the plaintiff. The firemen had reached the house before the flames were communicated to it, and, as alleged, would have been able to save it but for neglect of the city to keep sufficient water in the cistern. But the judgment dismissing the action was affirmed, on the ground that the cause of plaintiff's loss "was wholly disconnected from, and independent of, the city, or its acts or omissions."

That, unlike this, was an action against a municipal corporation for failure to perform what at most was an implied public duty, which, upon other than the ground just mentioned, courts in several States have held cannot be maintained. But whether the conclusion there reached was or not proper, the reason for it was not entirely pertinent; for while, in one sense, the fire which in that as in this case originated in an adjacent building, was the proximate cause of the house being destroyed, the complaint was not that the defendant was in any way responsible for the occurrence of it, but failed to perform what was assumed to be its contract duty to furnish water in cisterns with which to extinguish it, the immediate consequence of which failure was, as alleged, loss of the building. There is a clear distinction between the occurrence of a fire, the origin of which is often unknown, and for which generally there attaches no legal liability to any person, and the extinguishment of it, which generally can be accomplished by application of water, that a party may, by contract, undertake and bind himself to supply in the proper manner and time. It does not, therefore, make any difference in this case how or where the fire originated, provided appellant did not cause it; because the duty of appellee was not to prevent occurrence of it, but to keep the stipulated quantity of water in readiness to be applied to put it out.

7 L. R. A.

Waterworks, however costly and skillfully constructed and operated, are not potent enough to extinguish, with absolute certainty, and at all events, every fire occurring in a city before destruction of, or serious injury to, the property ignited, nor are they ever made with such end in view. But it is entirely practicable by that means to supply water in such quantity, and having such head or pressure, as to usually extinguish a fire before serious damage is done, when promptly and efficiently used; and parties to a contract like this must be presumed to have contemplated and agreed that such, in the natural order of things, would be the probable effect of a performance of it, else there would have been no rational motive nor adequate consideration for entering into it. But the degree of probability in every such case as this must, of course, depend upon the stage of the fire when water is applied, upon the efficiency of the firemen, and all other attendant circumstances and agencies favorable or adverse to arresting or extinguishing fires.

It seems, if the contract before us is not to be treated as meaningless and totally ineffectual for every purpose, the parties to it must be regarded as having contemplated and assented to the consequences of nonperformance, as well as the profit and advantage of performance, and consequently appellee is liable in this case for such damages as its failure or refusal to perform may have caused to appellant. The inquiry therefore is, whether, considering the purpose, character and capacity of the waterworks, and all the attending circumstances and agencies, the fire which destroyed appellant's property could and would have been prevented or extinguished before doing damage if appellee had performed its contract; and as the facts alleged in the petition and amended petition constitute a prima facie cause of action, the lower court erred in sustaining the demurrer.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed and remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer, and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

A petition for rehearing was subsequently filed, and on March 18, 1890, Lewis, Ch. J., on behalf of the court, delivered the following response:

It is not necessary to even consider whether a municipal corporation can be made liable for destruction by fire of property of its individual inhabitants, because that question is not before us. But, even assuming no action could be maintained in that case, still the doctrine of respondent superior would not, as contended, avail to relieve appellee of its own liability because the relation of principal and agent does not exist in any sense between the City of Paducah and it. On the contrary, they entered into a contract by which for a valuable consideration to be paid by taxation and by rents for private use of hydrants, appellee agreed, among other things, to keep a specified quantity of water in its stand-pipe at all times except on particular occasions mentioned, none of which existed when appellant's property was burned.

It is too plain for discussion that the City of Paducah had the power to and did make the contract for benefit of its inhabitants, and consequently each one of them has a right to sue and recover for an injury caused to him by a breach of it.

Appellee did not covenant to prevent occurrence of fires, nor that the quantity of water agreed to be furnished would be a certain and effectual protection against every fire, and consequently does not in any sense occupy the attitude of an insurer. But it did undertake to perform the plain and simple duty of keeping water up to a designated height in the stand-pipe, and if it failed or refused to comply with that undertaking, and such breach was the proximate cause of destruction of appellant's property, which involves questions of fact for the determination of the jury, there exists no reason for its escape from answering in damages, that would not equally avail in case of any other breach of contract.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

KENTON INSURANCE CO., Appt.,

v.

C. S. WIGGINTON.

(....Ky.....)

1. Failure to furnish proof of loss within the time required by a policy of fire insurance is

NOTE.—Fire insurance; provision requiring statement and proof of loss.

The Pennsylvania Act providing that proofs of loss within twenty days shall be sufficient, is for the protection of persons insured, and does not exact proof within that time. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 128 Pa. 302.

A provision for payment in sixty days after proofs of loss refers to the proofs required within thirty days, and not to other proofs required for establishing the claim. Clover v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 2 Cent. Rep. 873, 101 N. Y. 277.

The failure of the assured to serve upon the company proofs of loss within the time usually limited by such company for that purpose in its printed forms will not prevent a recovery by the assured for the breach of a parol contract to insure or to issue a policy. Nebraska & L. Ins. Co. v. Seivers (Neb.) 43 N. W. Rep. 851.

The provision in a policy requiring the insured to furnish a full and detailed statement of the loss and the amount claimed does not require that the insured shall attempt to compute or state the share of loss to be borne by each insurer where there are waived where the insured, after attempting to do everything necessary, is lulled into security by the acts of the company or its agent, and is led to believe they are preparing to adjust his loss.

2. The owner of an undivided fourth of a tract of unpartitioned land, who is merely a life tenant of the rest, to which his claim of ownership in fee is then in litigation, does not, by stating that he is the unconditional owner of the land, make a material misrepresentation which will avoid a policy of fire insurance upon a building situated thereon which provides that the application must disclose the true character of the title, and the fact of any litigation concerning it, where the building insured was remodeled from a worthless one at his own expense, and he would therefore, in partition, be entitled to it without estimating its value, and to the ground on which it stood; and where it is provided by statute that neither misrepresentations nor warranties shall affect the right to recover unless material to the risk, or fraudulent.

3. The mere expression of an opinion as to value of property by one applying for insurance thereon, cannot, in the absence of bad faith, defeat the right of such person to recover on his policy.

(December 5, 1889.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Carroll County in favor of plaintiff in an action upon a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

The case fully appears in the opinion.

Messrs. Collins & Fenley for appellant.

Messrs. George C. Drane and J. A. Donaldson for appellee.

Pryor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, the Kenton Insurance Company, made a contract of insurance with the appellee, Wigginton, by which the Company insured his dwelling-house against loss or damage by fire for the period of three years from the 2d day of November, 1886. The policy of insurance contains the usual stipulations with regard to notice and the preliminary proof as to the loss, as well as the representations by the several who are liable. Fuller v. Detroit F. & M. Ins. Co. 38 Fed. Rep. 400.

A false statement, or an overestimate of the loss, will not defeat the right to recover, where no fraudulent intent is shown. Schuster v. Dutchees Co. Mut. Ins. Co. 3 Cent. Rep. 183, 102 N. Y. 200; Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 68 Iowa, 737.

Waiver of objections to want of proof of loss.

Where the policy required proofs to be rendered as soon as possible, what is a reasonable time is a mixed question of law and fact. Am. F. Ins. Co. v. Hazen, 1 Cent. Rep. 631, 110 Pa. 590; Hickman v. Shimp, 109 Pa. 16; Miller v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 704; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 128 Pa. 302.

Omission of the company to object to the form of proofs will operate as a waiver. German Am. Ins. Co. v. Hocking, 6 Cent. Rep. 911, 115 Pa. 396. See note to Smith v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. (Vt.) 1 L. R. A. 216.

Taking cognizance of loss, and agreeing to pay.

After an insurance company has itself taken cognizance of a loss and prepared such proofs as it insured that he was the owner in fee of the property. The dwelling insured having been destroyed by fire, the appellant refused to pay the loss, for the following reasons: First. It contends that no preliminary proof of the loss was made and presented to the Company as the contract of insurance required; and, that being a condition precedent on the part of the insured, the recovery should have been denied. Second. The insured owned only an interest of one fourth in the property when he represented that he was the sole owner in fee. Third. The title to the property was in litigation in the Carroll Circuit Court when the insurance was effected by the appellee; and, the contract of insurance making the policy void if that fact is not disclosed, no recovery should be had.

The policy provides that no action shall be maintained until the proofs of loss are furnished as required by the contract, and the application must disclose the true character of the title; and, if incumbered or involved in litigation, such facts must be disclosed by the insured. An examination of this record has satisfied us that no valid defense has been made out, and the absence of the preliminary proofs essential to the demand of payment from the Company was caused by the conduct of the Company or its agents, and for which the appellee is in no wise responsible. As soon as the fire occurred, and the appellee's property was destroyed, he notified the local agent of the Company, and asked him for the usual blank forms kept and furnished by such companies to the insured as a guide in proving the loss sustained, and, in response, was told that the agent had no blank forms, but would write or see the principal agent or the home office on the subject. The principal office having been notified of the destruction of the property, and the appellee becoming restless at the delay in delivering to him the formula for making his preliminary proof, the local agent went to Covington, the place of the principal office, and was there told, in effect, that someone would be sent down to see about the matter, or to settle it, all of which was communicated to Wigginton, who relied on the statements of the local agent, that are not denied by the Company, but admitted to be true. The home office knew that the written forms had been applied for by Wigginton, the appellee, at the office of the agent at Carrollton; had been written to by this agent to send the forms, and, instead of doing so, or delivering them to the local agent, who had gone to the home office to inquire about the delay, said to the agent, "We will send someone down to see about it," and this "someone" did come, but never saw the appellee, or approached him on the subject, nor did he give the latter the opportunity of seeing him, but left the Town of Carrollton as if the matter was of no importance to the appellee or the Company. The appellee began to comply with his contract the morning after the fire, and attempted to do everything that was necessary to notify the Company of his loss, but delay after delay, resulting more from the action of the Company than that of the appellee, prevented the proofs from being made within the thirty days; and that the appellee was lulled into security by the conduct of the Company or its agents is too plain a proposition to be controverted. There was not the shadow of a suspicion that the dwelling was burned for the purpose of obtaining the insurance; and the appellee, no doubt a plain, unsuspecting farmer, confiding in the statements of the local agent, and with the full belief that this Company was preparing to adjust the loss, took no steps to present the proofs, except in the manner stated, and is now met with the defense that the Company was delaying payment for the want of the proof of loss, and the still further defense that no payment would have been made, if the proof had been furnished, because the appellee was not the owner in fee of the property insured.

deems essential to an adjustment, the insured may assume, until notified to the contrary, that additional notice and proofs are not required. American C. Ins. Co. v. Sweetser, 116 Ind. 370.

Where an insurance company forwarded blanks for proofs of loss, and the president of the company promised to pay the loss, all defenses are thereby waived except that of power and authority to make the contract of insurance. Eddy v. Merchants M. & C. Mut. F. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 49 N. W. Rep. 775.

An agreement to pay whatever appraisers would make as the amount due, as soon as the value was made, is a waiver of preliminary proofs of loss. Snowden v. Kittanning Ins. Co. 122 Pa. 502.

Where a policy taken out for the benefit of a mortgagee of the property insured contains the provision that the company, within sixty days after proof of loss, shall either pay the amount of the insurance or replace the property, or may, within fifteen days after statement of loss, notify insured of intention to rebuild or repair; and proof of loss was delivered by plaintiff to the company, and, more than sixty days before suit was brought, it delivered to defendant another proof of loss sworn to by the assured, and defendant remained silent,—it was a waiver of any defects in proof of loss. Elliot Five Cent. Sav. Bank v. Commercial U. Assur. Co. 2 New Eng. Rep. 533, 142 Mass. 142.

Receiving proofs of loss after time limited.

Rece. pt. of proofs of loss after time limited in 7 L. R. A.

policy is a waiver of the condition. Commercial U. Assur. Co. v. Hooking, 6 Cent. Rep. 315, 115 Pa. 407; Martinson v. North British & M. Ins. Co. 7 West. Rep. 637, 64 Mich. 372; Carpenter v. Continental Ins. Co. 61 Mich. 636; German F. Ins. Co. v. Grunert, 113 Ill. 60; Titus v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 81 N. Y. 419; Gane v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 109.

Deficiencies in proofs of loss are waived if the insurance company, on receiving the proofs, instead of pointing out the deficiencies, refuses to pay the loss, placing its refusal on the ground of a breach of a condition in the policy prohibiting a vacancy of the buildings insured. Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman, 127 Ill. 364.

Waiting forty-five days before claiming that there is a defect in proofs of loss furnished is a waiver of a defect in the description of other policies. Jones v. Howard Ins. Co. 28 N. Y. S. R. 844.

Imposing conditions to impede or hinder.

Where assured did all they possibly could in perfecting the proofs of loss and an express purpose to embarrass and hinder them by imposing blind conditions in the hope of being able to legally reject the proofs, appeared from the letters of the company, it was for the jury to determine whether the omission of a signature was excused and the proofs sufficient; and if they so found, it would not invalidate the policy. Martinson v. North British & M. Ins. Co. 7 West. Rep. 637, 64 Mich. 372.

The general doctrine in regard to such conduct on the part of insurance companies can be well applied in this case: The preliminary proof of loss "will be excused on the ground of waiver by the insurers, if their conduct is such as to induce delay, or to render the production or correction useless or unavailing, or as to induce in the mind of the insured a belief that no proofs will be required." May, Ins. § 468.

It appears from the application made by the appellee that the building insured stood on a tract of land containing 224 acres, and, in the answer propounded to a question as to the title, he stated that he was the fee-simple owner, or rather the unconditional owner, of the entire tract. Whether any difference exists in a case like this in the meaning of the words "the owner in fee" and "the unconditional owner" is not necessary to determine; and, in considering the question of title, the case will be disposed of as if the appellee had represented to the agent that he was the owner in fee of the entire tract of land. He in fact owned but one fourth of the whole tract in fee, with a life estate in remainder, but was then claiming a fee in the whole,—the sole question being involved in a litigation, then pending, as to the extent of his interest in the remainder, he claiming a fee, and the children of his wife by her first husband insisting that he had a life estate only. The agent, or rather Gullion, who was a sub-agent of the local agent, with whom the appellee made the contract, was fully cognizant of all the facts.

It is said, however, that this subagent was not employed by the Company, but by the local agent, without any authority from the Company to appoint him, or to conduct its business in that mode. This is doubtless the fact of the record; but the appellee, nevertheless, had not imposed on the Company by perpetrating an actual fraud, but made his representations to one whom he believed was the agent, and who knew the condition of the title. So neither Davis nor the agent of Davis was imposed on by the appellee; but, the Company ignoring the authority of Gullion, the case must be determined on the materiality of the representation made as to the title, and its effect on the Company. So we find the appellee the owner of one fourth of the entire land in fee, and a life estate in the balance, living on the land, and in a building erected out of his own means, and necessary, and we might say indispensable, as a habitation for himself and family. He is a tenant in common of the whole tract, and the dwelling insured (built at his own expense, or remodeled) was an old one that was valueless, that cost him $2,000. It is not pretended that the land cannot be divided so as to include the improvement made by the appellee, and allot to him that portion of the land where he has lived since the year 1864. He was the owner in fee of the one-fourth interest, and in good faith believed that he held the fee to the whole tract, but this court held otherwise in the case of Peak v. Wigginton, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 922 (decided at the last term).

It is manifest that in a division of this land the building would have been assigned to the appellee without estimating its value. The old building was worthless, and the entire expense incurred by the appellee in remodeling it, and the fact that the title is not purely legal, is no argument against this recovery. There was no incumbrance on this one-fourth interest, or litigation in regard to it; and, the tenant in common having the right to improve the land, and to erect such buildings as would enable him to live on it, if the other tenants get their part of the land in its unimproved state, without regard to the improvements made by their cotenant, no one will be heard to complain. The improvements in such a case, as was held in Nelson v. Clay, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 139, "will be assigned in the partition to the tenant making them."

It certainly would constitute no defense on

Where offer of proofs would be in vain.

An unqualified refusal to pay a loss, based upon facts within the company's knowledge, and made under such circumstances as to justify the insured in believing that the rendition of proofs would be a vain act, and that they would not be examined, is equivalent to an express agreement of waiver, even though the obligation to make such proofs is imposed by statute as well as by contract. Boyd v. Cedar Rapids Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 325.

Waiver of proof of loss will be inferred exclusively from recognition of liability, or denial of obligation for other reasons. Lebanon Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Erb, 2 Cent. Rep. 783, 112 Pa. 149.

Where an insurer denies all liability for loss on the ground that there has been no insurance, and the policy, if it has been issued, is void, it cannot insist upon a strict compliance with the terms of the policy as to the manner of making proofs of loss. Campbell v. Am. F. Ins. Co. 78 Wis. 300.

When the insurance company, on being notified of a loss, at once offers to pay a specific sum, denying liability for some of the articles as not being covered by the policy, this is a waiver of the preliminary proof of loss, and authorizes the insured to sue at once, without waiting for the lapse of sixty days provided for in the policy. Commercial F. Ins. Co. v. Allen, 80 Ala. 871.

Refusal to pay a policy solely on the ground that the insured has no title to the premises is a waiver. 7 L. R. A.

of objections as to the proof of loss. German Ins. Co. v. Gueck (Ill.) 6 L. R. A. 335.

If an insurance company, repudiating its contract, refuses to renew a fire policy, it is not necessary to make proof of loss as required by the policy. Gold v. Sun Ins. Co. 78 Cal. 216.

What not a waiver of proofs.

The fact that local agents of an insurance company, who are not shown to have had any authority to adjust or agree to pay a loss, promised the insured that his loss would be paid, is no waiver of proofs of loss. Von Genechtin v. Citizens Ins. Co. 75 Iowa, 544.

A letter to a person insured, advising her of her right to reopen the matter and make proofs of loss, informing her what must be established thereby, cannot be held to waive proofs of loss. Welsh v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 77 Iowa, 376.

A stipulation in a fire insurance policy, that the insured must, after a loss, forthwith give notice thereof, and that he must, as soon after as possible, render a sworn account of the loss, is material and imperative, unless waived; and the mere silence of the insurer after loss is not a waiver of the notice or of the sworn proof. And the notice will not suffice both for itself and in place of the sworn proof required, and it may be waived without waiving the sworn proof. Central City Ins. Co. v. Oates, 86 Ala. 558.

the part of the appellant if, instead of a conveyance of record, the appellee had only a bond for title, with all the purchase money paid. The representation as to the title to the entire tract was not fraudulent, but made in the best of faith; nor was it material to the risk, because the appellee was entitled to his one-fourth interest in fee, including the dwelling insured. The appellee was the unconditional owner of this dwelling, and the ground upon which it stood, free of any incumbrance; and the fact that he did not own the entire tract, although he may have so stated, could in no manner have affected the rights of the Insurance Company, or misled its agent when taking the risk; and no court, it seems to us, should hold that the fee was not in the appellee for the reason that partition had not been made.

It is further claimed that the dwelling was not of the value placed upon it by the insured. The testimony on his part shows that the building cost him $2,000, and the valuation, at best, is a mere matter of opinion, as is evidenced by the conflicting statements of witnesses in this case; and therefore, unless there is proof showing that the insured has purposely fixed a high estimate upon his property, with a view of obtaining that to which he is not entitled, the mere expression of an opinion as to value, in the absence of bad faith, cannot be held to be either defective or fraudulent.

Under the Statute of February 4, 1874, neither representations nor warranties affect the right of recovery, unless "material to the risk, or fraudulent;" and where the property belongs to the insured, or, if a joint owner, and, between him and his co-tenants, he is entitled to the property insured, the mere fact that there has been no partition, or a partition without a conveyance, if otherwise free of incumbrance or lien, will constitute no defense by the Company. The best of faith has been shown in this entire transaction, on the part of the appellee towards the appellant, and there is no reason, upon any principle of law, equity or justice, for relieving the appellant from its liability.

Judgment affirmed.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Samuel E. MERWIN, Trustee in Insolvency of the Estate of Elijah Gilbert,
v.

Sarah E. AUSTIN, Appt.

(....Conn.....)

1. A sole solvent surety for a hopelessly insolvent principal, on a debt that was due before the appointment of a trustee in insolvency, is entitled to set off his claim for payment of such debt against debts due from him to the insolvent, in a suit on them brought by the trustee, although the insolvency was not known when the debt became due and payment by the surety was not actually made until after the trustee was appointed.

2. A trustee of an insolvent, as a general rule, takes the estate subject to all outstanding equities.

(September 12, 1889.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for New Haven County disallowing her claim to set off certain demands in an action against her by the trustee of an insolvent estate. Reversed.

The case is sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry Stoddard and John W. Bristol, for appellant:

Where the defendant has, either in law or in equity or in both, a counterclaim or right of set-off against the plaintiff's demand, he may have the benefit of any such set-offs or counterclaims by pleading the same as such in his answer, and demanding judgment accordingly.

Rev. 1888, §§ 876, 877. See Norwich Printing Co. v. Kloppenberg, 50 Conn. 801.

The general doctrine that in an action at law, and without recourse to equitable principles, the debt to be set off must be due at the com-

NOTE.—Surety, paying debt of principal; rights of.

When a surety has actually paid or satisfied the obligation of the principal or any part thereof, he is entitled to be reimbursed by the principal debtor; he is entitled to the creditor's place by substitution. Smith v. Rice, 27 Mo. 506; Tiernan v. Woodruff, 5 McLean, 352; Pardee v. Van Anken, 3 Barb. 540; Elwood v. Deifendorf, 5 Barb. 413; Wood v. Jefferson Co. Bank, 9 Cow. 206; Brown v. Williams, 4 Wend. 367; Cuyler v. Ensworth, 6 Paige, 32; Eddy v. Traver, 6 Paige, 521; Cheesebrough v. Millard, 1 Johns. Ch. 414.

Entitled to relief in equity.

Courts of equity administer relief in favor of sureties whenever they can. United States v. Aborn, 3 Mason, 123.

Jurisdiction in equity extends to all those who in reality stand in a position of suretyship toward principal debtors, e. g., to a surety for a prior surety. Dering v. Earl of Winchelsea, 1 Cox. Ch. 818, 1 Lead. Cas. in A. 120, 124, 134, 4th Am. ed.; Craythorne v. Swinburne, 14 Ves. Jr. 160; Hazleton v. Valentine, 118 Mass. 472, 479; Savage v. Winchester, 7 L. R. A.

15 Gray, 458; Kontzky v. Meyer, 49 N. Y. 571; Townsend v. Whitney, 75 N. Y. 425; Harris v. Warner, 13 Wend. 400; Gahn v. Niemcewicz, 11 Wend. 312; Wesley Church v. Moore, 10 Pa. 273; Baxter v. Moore, 5 Leigh, 219; Butler v. Butler, 8 W. Va. 674; Hare v. Grant, 77 N. C. 203; Moore v. Young, 1 Dana, 517; Hamilton v. Johnston, 82 Ill. 20; Hearne v. Keath, 63 Mo. 84.

When a surety pays the debt of his principal he has a right to be substituted in the place of the creditor, as to all his remedies against the principal debtor and his estate. Van Horne v. Everson, 13 Barb. 530.

The equity of a surety to be subrogated to the rights which the creditor has against the principal debtor or his estate exists as well when the surety's property only is pledged as when he comes under a personal responsibility. Royalton Nat. Bank v. Cushing, 53 Vt. 325.

Equity requires cross-demands to be set off.

A court of equity recognizes the natural equity that cross-demands should be offset against each other and the balance only recovered, and acts upon commencement of the action, is applied only when no occasion for the exercise of equity power exists.

Henry v. Butler, 32 Conn. 141.

It does not apply to a payment by a surety to a creditor, made after action brought.

Colebrook, Collateral Secur. § 226, p. 293, citing Thompson v. McClelland, 29 Pa. 475; Beaver v. Beaver, 23 Pa. 187; Brittain v. Quiet, 1 Jones, Eq. 828; Mattlingly v. Sutton, 19 W. Va. 19.

Trustees in insolvency represent and stand in the place of the insolvent, and they have no greater rights, either at law or in equity, than the insolvent.

Palmer v. Thayer, 28 Conn. 245; Gaylor v. Harding, 37 Conn. 518. See also Boston Type & S. Co. v. Mortimer, 7 Pick. 187; Marrett v. Equitable Ins. Co. 54 Me. 587; Donnell v. Portland & O. R. Co. 76 Me. 87; Farmers Bank v. Franklin Bank, 81 Md. 404; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Oliver, 82 N. H. 172; Strong v. Mitchell, 19 Vt. 644; Drake, Attachm. § 685; White v. Wiggins, 32 Ala. 424.

Natural equity says that cross demands should compensate each other by deducting the less sum from the greater, and that the difference is the only sum which can be justly due.

Spurr v. Snyder, 35 Conn. 178; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1438, p. 1766; Clarke v. Hawkins, 5 R. L. 219; Paterson Bank Receivers v. Paterson Gaslight Co. 23 N. J. L. 238.

The insolvency of Mr. Gilbert is sufficient to give jurisdiction and power in the courts to enforce an equitable set-off, which will be allowed, although the debt of the principal to the surety be not due.

Colebrook, Collateral Secur. § 226, pp. 292, 293, citing Lindsay v. Jackson, 2 Paige, 581; Simpson v. Hart, 14 Johns. 67; Mattlingly v. Sutton, 19 W. Va. 19; Brandt, Sur. § 196; McKnight v. Bradley, 10 Rich. Eq. 557; Waterman, Set-Offs. §§ 395, 396; Pond v. Smith, 4 Conn. 297. See Coffin v. McLean, 80 N. Y. 564; Smith v. Felton, 43 N. Y. 419; Greene v. Darling, 5 Mason, 207; Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Field, 86 Ill. 270; Fulkerson v. Davenport, 70 Mo. 542; Brewer v. Norcross, 17 N. J. Eq. 225; Morrow v. Bright, 20 Mo. 293; Raymond v. Green, 12 Neb. 215; Tuscumbia, O. & D. R. Co. v. Rhodes, 8 Ala. 206; Wood v. Steele, 65 Ala. 486; Barney v. Grover, 23 Vt. 391.

As Miss Austin is a surety, she has a surety's right to compel the principal to exonerate her and appropriate any amount due the principal in payment of her debt.

Colebrook, Collateral Secur. § 226, p. 293; Nisbet v. Smith, 2 Bro. Ch. 588, note A; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. chap. 7, § 327; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 780, 849; Tyson v. Cox, 1 Turn. & R. 395; King v. Baldwin, 2 Johns. Ch. 561; Hayes v. Ward, 4 Johns. Ch. 432; 3 Pom. Eq. p. 468; Ardesco Oil Co. v. North American Oil & Min. Co. 66 Pa. 381; Norton v. Reid, 11 S. C. 593; Woodbridge v. Norris, L. R. 6 Eq. 413.

When Miss Austin became surety for Mr. Gilbert at his request, in May, 1888, thereupon an indirect or implied contract of indemnity was created at that time.

Ward v. Henry, 5 Conn. 599; Brandt, Sur. § 177, p. 255.

The payment only fixes the amount of damages for which the principal is liable under his original agreement to indemnify the surety.

Brandt, Sur. § 177, p. 255; Rice v. Southgate, 16 Gray, 142; Barney v. Grover, 23 Vt. 391.

Messrs. John W. Alling and James H. Webb, for appellee:

Appellant could have no right of set-off for a claim not due at the commencement of the suit.

Henry v. Butler, 32 Conn. 140.

She would have owned no counterclaim, until she had paid the obligation.

1 Story, Eq. Jur. 12th ed. 499, b, c, d. See Munger v. Albany City Bank, 85 N. Y. 580; Spaulding v. Backus, 122 Mass. 553.

The trustee should recover according to his title, when it accrued.

Henry v. Butler, supra; Finch v. Ives, 28 Conn. 115; Rhodes v. Seymour, 36 Conn. 1.

The indefinite extension of the rule of set-off would offend the spirit of the Insolvent Law, both as to equality, and as to an early settlement of the estate.

First Nat. Bank v. Hartford L. & A. Ins. Co. 45 Conn. 39; Tolle's App. 4 New Eng. Rep. 482, 54 Conn. 521; Nowell's App. 51 Conn.

this principle in cases where the law cannot give a remedy in a separate suit in consequence of the insolvency of one of the parties. Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Field, 86 Ill. 272; Quick v. Lemon, 105 Ill. 587; Jackson v. Bell, 81 N. J. Eq. 559. See Gay v. Gay, 10 Paige, 369; Simpson v. Hart, 14 Johns. 63; Carson v. Carson, 2 Met. (Ky.) 97; Hughes v. McCoun, 3 Bibb, 254; Edminson v. Baxter, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 112; Smith v. Field, 6 Dana, 361; Tuscumbia, C. & D. R. Co. v. Rhodes, 8 Ala. 206; Bettison v. Jennings, 8 Ark. 287; Ponder v. Cox, 23 Ga. 305; Payne v. Loudon, 1 Bibb, 518; Buckmaster v. Grundy, 8 Ill. 626; Raleigh v. Raleigh, 35 Ill. 512.

Equity follows the law.

Equity follows the law on the subject of set-off, unless special circumstances occur, or peculiar equities exist, to justify the interposition of courts of equity for protection of the rights of parties. Armstrong v. McKelvey, 30 Hun, 212; Jennings v. Webster, 8 Paige, 503.

While, as a general principle, courts of equity follow the rules of law in enforcing set-offs, they 7 L. R. A.

exercise an original jurisdiction over the subject, and in cases of peculiar equity and under special circumstances will enforce a set-off in cases not within the letter of the statute. Bathgate v. Harkin, 50 N. Y. 538; St. Matthew's Congregation v. Heise, 44 Md. 480; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1437; Smith v. Felton, 43 N. Y. 419; Smith v. Donnell, 9 Gill, 86; Cawdor v. Lewis, 1 Younge & C. (Exch.) 427; Beasley v. Darcy, 2 Sch. & Lef. 403, note; Southeastern R. Co. v. Brogden, 3 Maon. & G. 25.

The power of common-law courts to compel a set-off of judgments, upon motion, is based upon their supervisory power over their own judgments and suitors in their courts, and is governed by no fixed rules. While, in actions in equity, it is said that suitors may ask the interference of the court ex debito iustitia. Zogbaum v. Parker, 55 N. Y. 123.

A court of equity is not confined to the terms of the Statute of Set-Off, but can allow a set-off to be made in a case not within the Statute, where, from the peculiar circumstances of the case, justice cannot be obtained in a cross action. Perry v. Chester, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 137.

108. See also Demmon v. Boylston Bank, 5 Cush. 194; Aldrich v. Campbell, 4 Gray, 284; Nelson v. Harrington, 16 Gray, 189; Spaulding v. Backus, supra; Backus v. Spaulding, 129 Mass. 234; Jones v. Wolcott, 15 Gray, 541; House v. Snow, 3 Allen, 111; Myers v. Davis, 22 N. Y. 489; Martin v. Kunsmüller, 37 N. Y. 396; Newcomb v. Almy, 96 N. Y. 308; Walker v. McKay, 2 Met. (Ky.) 294; Ex parte Smith, 5 Ves. Jr. 295; Bradley v. Angel, 3 N. Y. 475; Munger v. Albany City Bank, supra; Granger v. Granger, 6 Ohio, 85; Fuller v. Steiglitz, 27 Ohio St. 855; Harris v. Taylor, 1 New Eng. Rep. 392, 58 Conn. 500; Nichols v. Dayton, 84 Conn. 65; Olmstead v. Scutt, 4 New Eng. Rep. 807, 55 Conn. 125; Parsons v. Root, 41 Conn. 161; Staniford v. Hide, 1 Root, 397.

The claims, to be entitled to dividends, must be such as existed at the time the title to the property vested in the trustee for the benefit of the creditors.

1 Story, Eq. Jur. 12th ed. § 499, b, c, d.

Pardee, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In May, 1888, Elijah Gilbert was indebted to the City Bank of New Haven by his note for $5,000, for money loaned to and used by him. For his accommodation the defendant had signed the note as surety. On November 13 the bank notified the defendant that the note was overdue and unpaid, and that it should look to her for payment. On December 5 she orally promised the bank to secure the note by a mortgage, and on December 7 duly executed and delivered it. On December 10 Elijah Gilbert was adjudicated an insolvent upon a petition filed on December 6, and served on December 7, and the plaintiff was duly appointed trustee of his estate in insolvency. On January 22, 1889, the defendant, upon the demand of the bank, paid the note from her own money and now holds it as her property, as a claim against the estate of Elijah Gilbert. The estate is also indebted to her for the rent of a store to the amount of $2,000.

The plaintiff as trustee complains that the estate has a claim against the defendant for money paid for to or her from time to time during the years 1887 and 1888; for an account on book, and upon a rent account, aggregating $4,633.02, and asks for judgment. Gilbert had been insolvent during the entire year preceding the adjudication of his insolvency; but that fact was unknown both to him and to the defendant until the adjudication.

It is the claim of the defendant that so much of the sum of $4,633.02, paid to and for her by Elijah Gilbert, as is necessary to pay the amount of $2,000 due from him to her for rent should be so applied; or, if not so applied, that she should be permitted to set off the $2,000 against the claim of the estate against her; and that she be allowed to set off such portion of the sum of $5,000 which she has been compelled to pay to the bank, as is necessary to meet the balance.

The plaintiff denies the right of set-off. The superior court determined that the defendant is entitled to a set-off to the extent of $2,000, the amount due from the estate to her for rent, but that she is not entitled to any set-off by reason of having paid the note for $5,000 to the City Bank. The defendant appeals from this denial of her right of set-off.

Upon November 13 the note for $5,000, owned by the bank, made by Elijah Gilbert, as principal and the defendant as his surety, being due and unpaid, she stood as the sole and solvent surety for a hopelessly insolvent principal upon a matured obligation: she owed a debt to the bank, and the bank had the right to compel instant payment. No circumstance was wanting to the certainty of her obligation to pay the amount of the note for the sole benefit of the insolvent principal. He having procured her suretyship for his own accommodation upon his implied agreement to save her harmless therefrom, it became his duty on November 13 to credit her upon his account with the amount of the note,—to so state the account as that he should be her debtor for a balance. He omitting to do this, it has been continuously her right since that day to ask a court of equity to compel him to do so. And, not only so, but to compel him to make such provision for the payment of the balance as would protect her from possibility of loss. For this purpose, in equity, she became, so far forth as he was concerned, the real creditor in a matured debt and could move in compelling him to instant payment. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 327, and cases there cited; 3 Pom. Eq. note to § 1417, p. 468; Bishop v. Day, 18 Vt. 88; Ardson Oil Co. v. North American Oil & Min. Co. 66 Pa. 381; Norton v. Reid, 11 S. C. 593. And this even in the absence at that time of belief on her part that he was insolvent.

That she for a long time had been and then was the sole solvent surety for a hopelessly insolvent principal, is now made certain by judicial determination; certain that she then was under an obligation to the bank, for his sole accommodation, from which there could be no release except by payment. The right to relief in equity was in her, even if she did not know it; it rests upon the existence of the fact, not upon her knowledge of it. It has been in her continuously thence to the present; she has not released it; she has not forfeited it. In her answer she moves the court to enforce it; and her motion relates back to the first moment of the existence of the right; and that was prior to the acquisition of any right by the trustee; and his right is subject to her elder and stronger equity. For, while it is true that the trustee can exercise some rights which are not in the insolvent, such as the setting aside of preferences and the recovery of property conveyed in fraud of the rights of creditors, yet as a general rule he is entitled to have and do only what the insolvent could have had and done; must take the estate with the burdens placed thereon by him, with all outstanding equities against it.

In Parsons v. Root, 41 Conn. 161, the defendant was factorized by the plaintiff as the debtor of French & Nichols; at the time of service of the factorizing process Root owed them, but he then had an unperformed contract with them upon performance of which they would be indebted to him. He subsequently performed it, and they became his debtor. This court denied him the right of set-off of any part of this indebtedness for the reason that at the time of service of the garnishee process it was uncertain whether anything would ever be due to him from French & Nichols. In effect, the court declined to make the possibility that he would complete a contract the basis of a set-off.

There is error in the judgment complained of. In this opinion the other Judges concurred.

Preston H. HODGES

v.

Edwin W. KOWING and Wife, Appls.

(...Conn....)

1. The signature of the vendor to a contract for the sale of real estate, which is otherwise sufficient, is not necessary in order to enable him to enforce it against the vendee.
2. An objection that a contract is void upon its face for uncertainty cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.
3. A contract to purchase of a man "his place" in a certain town, "containing fifteen acres more or less," sufficiently describes the property, where he resides on the premises and owns no other real estate in that town.
4. A remedy at law, in order to defeat a suit in equity, must be as complete and beneficial as the latter.
5. A suit by a vendor for specific performance of a fair contract for the sale of land cannot be defeated on the ground that there is a remedy at law.

(April 15, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Fairfield County in favor of plaintiff in an action to enforce specific performance of a contract for the purchase of certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. B. Lockwood and E. W. Seymour, for appellants:

The specific performance of a contract for the purchase of land, though possessing all the other jurisdictional requisites, will not be decreed if the plaintiff has adequate remedy at law, which is defined in Wheeler v. Bedford, 2 New Eng. Rep. 881, 54 Conn. 249.

See Rev. 1875, p. 418, § 5; Meeker v. Meeker, 16 Conn. 408; Quinn v. Roath, 37 Conn. 24; Taylor v. Atwood, 47 Conn. 509; Stuart v. London & N. W. R. Co. 1 DeG. M. & G. 721; Webb v. Direct London & P. R. Co. Id. 521; Whitney v. New Haven, 23 Conn. 681.

Such want of adequate remedy is a jurisdictional fact to be stated, proved and found before a decree of specific performance can be granted.

Dodd v. Seymour, 21 Conn. 478.

If it appears that there is adequate remedy at law, or that the contract is not equitable, reasonable, certain, on good consideration, consistent with policy, and free from fraud, suspicion or mistake, then the specific performance will not be decreed.

Bispham, Eq. § 364, p. 433; Pickering v. Pickering, 88 N. H. 400; Huntington v. Rogers, 9 Ohio St. 512; Jones v. Newhall, 115 Mass. 244; Patterson v. Bloomer, 85 Conn. 63; 5 Wait, Act. and Def. 763; Hennessey v. Woolworth, 128 U. S. 488 (32 L. ed. 500); Pom. Spec. Perf. 66.

This contract is not mutual within the meaning of that term as applied to the doctrine of specific performance. Here is no written contract on the part of the plaintiff to sell the land, as is required by the Statute of Frauds, nor any part performance to relieve the contract from the operation of said Statute. The part payment of $100 has no such effect.

Pom. Spec. Perf. 149, 150, 159, 160, § 164; Eaton v. Whitaker, 18 Conn. 229; Fry, Spec. Perf. 2d Am. ed. § 286; Benedict v. Lynch, 1 Johns. Ch. 370; Lawrenson v. Butler, 1 Sch. & Lef. 18; Bromley v. Jefferies, 2 Vern. 415; Bodine v. Glading, 21 Pa. 50; Duvall v. Myers, 2 Md. Ch. 401.

The difference in the amount of land as represented by the plaintiff, and as in fact contained in the deeds, makes it inequitable to compel specific performance. A misrepresentation made by the vendor in a matter of substance, affecting the value of the estate sold, is a good defense to a suit for specific performance, although the vendor, as well as the vendee, was ignorant of its untruth.

Best v. Stow, 2 Sandf. Ch. 298; Coles v. Bowne, 10 Paige, 526; Fry, Spec. Perf. §§ 431, 432, 458; Ainslie v. Medlycott, 9 Ves. Jr. 13, 21; Wall v. Stubbs, 1 Madd. 80; Harris v. Kemble, 5 Bligh, N. R. 780, 751; Cadman v. Horner, 18 Ves. Jr. 10; Clermont v. Tasburgh, 1 Jac. & W. 112.

The contract must be fully understood from the writing itself without the necessity of resorting to parol proof.

Pom. Spec. Perf. 226, § 161; Parkhurst v. Van Corilandt, 1 Johns. Ch. 273; Colson v. Thompson, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 841 (4 L. ed. 253); Carr v. Duval, 89 U. S. 14 Pet. 77 (10 L. ed. 361); Reed v. Hornback, 4 J. J. Marsh. 377; Ellis v. Deadman, 4 Bibb, 467; Kendall v. Almy, 2 Sumn. 278; Parrish v. Koons, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 79.

Messrs. Wheeler & Curtis, for appellee.

The remedy of specific performance upon an agreement for the sale of land is mutual, and open equally to vendor and vendee.

Cathcart v. Robinson, 80 U. S. 5 Pet. 276 (8 L. ed. 120); Old Colony R. Corp. v. Evans, 6 Gray, 30; Hayes v. Harmony Grove Cemetery, 108 Mass. 400; Richmond v. Gray, 3 Allen, 25; Hopper v. Hopper, 16 N. J. Eq. 147; Richards v. Green, 23 N. J. Eq. 587; Brooklyn Park Comrs. v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 248; Jenkins v. Fahey, 73 N. Y. 355; Bensel v. Gray, 80 N. Y. 521; Whitney v. New Haven, 23 Conn. 624; Goodale v. Hill, 42 Conn. 317.

An action for the breach of a contract for the purchase of land is not as complete or ben-

NOTE.—Specific performance.

See notes to Lindley v. O'Reilly (N. J.) 1 L. R. A. 7; Gassett v. Bogk (Mont.) 1 L. R. A. 240; Woodruff v. Woodruff (N. J.) 1 L. R. A. 389; Miller v. Cameron (N. J.) 1 L. R. A. 554; Middletown v. New-7 L. R. A.

port Hospital (R. I.) 1 L. R. A. 191; Close v. Stuyvesant (Ill.) 3 L. R. A. 161; Townshend v. Goodfellow (Minn.) 3 L. R. A. 739; Converse v. Hood (Mass.) 4 L. R. A. 521; Boggs v. Bodkin (W. Va.) 5 L. R. A. 245; Frame v. Frame (W. Va.) 5 L. R. A. 323; Tappan v. Albany Brewing Co. (Cal.) 5 L. R. A. 423.

official a remedy as an action for the specific performance of such contract.

See Munson v. Munson, 80 Conn. 435.

All that the Statute of Frauds requires is a written promise by the party to be charged to buy or sell the land at certain terms.

Sage v. Wilcox, 6 Conn. 85; Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 122; Potter v. Tuttle, 22 Conn. 515; Old Colony R. Corp. v. Evans, supra.

Where a party to a contract comes into court to seek the specific performance of such contract, against a party bound by a writing, the party before unbound, upon filing his complaint, puts himself under all the obligations of the contract, and the other party is enabled to enforce it. And thus the want of mutuality in the remedy fails to exist.

Richards v. Green, supra; Snell, Eq. p. 455; Fry, Spec. Perf. 2d Am. ed. § 297.

The land to which the contract related might be shown by parol evidence disclosing the circumstances of possession, ownership, situation of the parties, and their relations to each other and to the property at the time of the negotiations.

Mead v. Parker, 115 Mass. 415; Hurley v. Brown, 98 Mass. 548; Atwood v. Cobb, 16 Pick. 229; Slater v. Smith, 117 Mass. 97; Nichols v. Johnson, 10 Conn. 192; Annan v. Merritt, 18 Conn. 492; Fish v. Hubbard, 21 Wend. 652; Robeson v. Hornbaker, 3 N. J. Eq. 60; Barry v. Coombe, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 640 (7 L. ed. 295).

General descriptions of land in memorandums are sufficient.

Hurley v. Brown, 98 Mass. 545; Slater v. Smith, supra; Mead v. Parker, 115 Mass. 418; Nichols v. Johnson, supra. See also Atwood v. Cobb, supra; Smith's App. 69 Pa. 474; Colerick v. Hooper, 3 Ind. 818; Torr v. Torr, 20 Ind. 122; Waterman, Spec. Perf. § 152; Pom. Spec. Perf. § 161.

The memorandum discloses all that is essential—the parties, the subject matter, the price, the terms,—and, when taken in connection with the situation and relations of the parties to the land and to each other, its certainty is beyond question.

Andrews v. Bell, 56 Pa. 849; Nichols v. Johnson, supra; Annan v. Merritt, 18 Conn. 478; Grace v. Denison, 114 Mass. 16; Matteson v. Scofield, 27 Wis. 671.

Proof of fourteen acres and a small fraction satisfies the statement that there were "about fifteen acres."

Weart v. Rose, 16 N. J. Eq. 290; Winch v. Winchester, 1 Ves. & B. 376; Noble v. Googins, 99 Mass. 282, and cases cited; Morris Canal Co. v. Emmett, 9 Paige, 168; Johnson v. Taber, 10 N. Y. 319; Veeder v. Fonda, 8 Paige, 97.

The words "more or less" should be construed to qualify representations of quantity, in such a manner that, if made in good faith, neither party should be entitled to any relief on account of deficiency or surplus.

Stebbins v. Eddy, 4 Mason, 414; Jones v. Plater, 2 Gill, 128; Noble v. Googins, supra.

An agreement for the sale of land shall not be defeated by reason of excess or deficiency in quantity, unless the excess or deficiency is so great as to raise a presumption of fraud, or to destroy the purpose of the sale.

Noble v. Googins, 99 Mass. 285; Pom. Spec. Perf. § 352.
7 L. R. A.

Beardsley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 17th day of August, 1887, the defendants entered into the following contract with the plaintiff:

Stratford, August 17th, 1887.

We agree to purchase of P. H. Hodges his place in Stratford, Conn., containing fifteen acres, more or less, for the sum of nine thousand five hundred dollars; to pay six thousand cash and three thousand five hundred on bond and mortgage for one year; to take title immediately, and possession on the first of January, 1888; and have paid him one hundred dollars on account.

Edwin W. Kowing,
Eliza Kowing.

No writing relating to the contract was signed by the plaintiff. The court below, upon the petition of the plaintiff, decreed that the defendants should specifically perform the contract, from which decree they appeal to this court.

They claim that under the Statute of Frauds the plaintiff was not bound by the contract, not having signed any memorandum of it, and hence that it should not, in equity at least, be enforced against them; and make this claim the ground of one of their reasons of appeal.

The Statute requires only that the written agreement shall be "signed by the party to be charged therewith." The defendants rely upon certain cases as authority for their claim, and among others upon the cases of Benedict v. Lynch, 1 Johns. Ch. 370, and Lawrenson v. Butler, 1 Sch. & Lef. 18.

Both of these cases are in accord with the claim of the defendants; but the former case is opposed to the numerous decisions in the State of New York on the same subject, and the latter case to nearly all the English decisions.

In the case of Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. 484, Chancellor Kent, after reviewing the New York decisions, says that "it is sufficient if the agreement is signed by the party to be charged." In the same opinion he reviews the English decisions up to that time, and adds: "There is nothing to disturb this strong and united current of authority but the observation of Lord Redesdale in Lawrenson v. Butler, 1 Sch. & Lef. 18, who thought that the contract ought to be mutual, and that if one party could not enforce it the other ought not."

The authority of Lawrenson v. Butler seems not to have been recognized in England. The more recent decisions in that country are referred to in 1 Benjamin on Sales, §§ 254, 255.

There is still some conflict in the decisions in this country, but the weight of authority is that the Statute of Frauds is satisfied by the signature to the contract of the party sought to be charged only, whether the suit to enforce it be at law or in equity, and whether it relates to the sale of real or personal estate. Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. 484; McCrea v. Purmort, 16 Wend. 460; Richards v. Green, 23 N. J. Eq. 536; Old Colony R. Corp. v. Evans, 6 Gray, 33; Sutherland v. Briggs, 1 Hare, 34.

We think that there is not sufficient ground for this reason of appeal.

Another reason of appeal is, "that the specific execution of the contract should not have been decreed because it is too uncertain to be enforced, inasmuch as it could not be understood from the writing itself without the necessity of resorting to parol proof."

No objection seems to have been made to the contract when it was offered in evidence, and therefore the objection now made, that it is void upon its face, comes too late to be entitled to consideration. But the claim if seasonably made would have been unfounded.

The defendants do not specify in their reasons of appeal, or in their brief, the particulars in which they claim that the contract is deficient in certainty. We suppose their claim to be that the statement of the location of the land is too indefinite to satisfy the requirement of the Statute of Frauds. If the only description of the land had been "fifteen acres, more or less, in the Town of Stratford," there would have been force in this claim, though according to the decisions of courts of high authority such a description might have been applied to the land intended by it by extrinsic evidence.

In the case of Hurley v. Brown, 98 Mass. 545, the only description in the contract of the property agreed to be conveyed was "a house and lot on Amity Street." The court admitted evidence that there was only one house and lot on Amity Street which the defendant had a right to convey, and that the parties had been in treaty for the purchase and sale of it, and held that the subject matter of the contract might be thus identified. See also Mead v. Parker, 115 Mass. 418; Robeson v. Hornbaker, 8 N. J. Eq. 60.

In the present case the court finds that the plaintiff owned no other real estate in Stratford, and that the same was occupied by him as a homestead and residence. But we think that the description of the land in this contract is so definite as not to require a resort to extrinsic evidence to identify it, other than such as is always necessary to apply a description of real estate to the premises described.

The language of the contract is: "We agree to purchase of P. H. Hodges his place at Stratford, containing fifteen acres, more or less." The import of the word "place" in this connection is reasonably certain. Its popular and correct meaning, as thus used, is the place where one resides—his homestead. Webster's Dict.,—in verbum.

The court finds that the plaintiff told the defendants, before they signed the contract, that the place contained about fifteen acres, and that this statement was made in good faith. The defendants assign as a reason of appeal that "there was not about fifteen acres of land."

It is enough to say that the court does not find that there were not fifteen acres in the place, but evidently declined to make such a finding.

The defendants introduced the recitals in two deeds as evidence of the quantity of land in the place. One was the deed to the plaintiff of the land, in which was added to the description of the quantity of land the words "more or less," and the other was a conveyance of a small strip of the land to a railroad company, specifying the quantity conveyed. Except for the words "more or less" in the deed to the plaintiff it would have appeared that there was a fraction of an acre less than fifteen acres in the piece.

The court, referring to this evidence, says: "There was no evidence as to the exact quantity of land except the recital in said deeds." It properly regarded those recitals as inconclusive evidence.

The remaining reason of appeal is that the plaintiff had adequate remedy at law. The defendants claim that the equitable jurisdiction of the courts in this State was restricted by the provision in the old Statute last found in the Revision of 1875, p. 418, § 5, that "courts of equity shall take cognizance only of matters in which relief cannot be had in the ordinary course of law;" and that that provision is still in force.

It is unnecessary to inquire whether that provision has not, as the plaintiff claims, been since repealed by the Practice Act passed in 1879, because, in our view, it did not have the restrictive effect claimed for it. A similar claim was made by the defendant in the case of Munson v. Munson, 30 Conn. 425, and the court says the provision referred to "is simply an affirmation of a well-settled rule of equity." The rule of equity is thus stated by Judge Swift: "It is a leading principle that equity will not interpose where there is an adequate remedy at law. It is not sufficient that there is a remedy, but it must be as complete and beneficial as the relief in equity." 2 Swift, Dig. chap. 1, § 1.

In the action at law for the breach of the contract the plaintiff could only recover the excess if any of the sum agreed to be paid for the land above its market value when the contract was to be performed. Such a remedy is manifestly inadequate, and courts of equity therefore hold, as a general rule, that when a contract for the sale of real estate has been fairly entered into, the party contracting to sell, as well as the party contracting to buy, is entitled to have it specifically performed.

The cases on this question are all one way. It is true courts of equity have, in the exercise of their discretion, refused to apply the rule in certain cases where it would be productive of hardship or inconvenience. The court did so in the case of Whitney v. New Haven, 23 Conn. 624. In that case the city had contracted to purchase from the plaintiff land and water rights for the purpose of providing a water supply, and afterwards voted to abandon the project contemplated by the purchase. The court dismissed the bill for a specific performance, but remarked as follows in their opinion: "As a general rule, where a purchaser of real estate can come into a court of equity to obtain a deed of it, the vendor can come there to get his money which was agreed to be paid; but the rule is not universally true, and should not be applied, we think, where it will do unnecessary mischief to one of the parties."

In the present case the contract appears to have been fairly made, and is subject to the general rule of equity.

There is no error in the judgment complained of.

In this opinion the other Judges concurred.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Frank C. HESS, Appt.,

v.

Isaac LOWREY.

(.....Ind.....)

1. The death of one of two physicians sued as partners in an action for damages for unskillful treatment and the abatement of the action as to him does not abate it as to the survivor.
2. Declarations of a partner while he was engaged in the firm's business, although made in the course of a transaction on which an alleged liability of the firm is based, may be proved against the other partner.
3. Testimony of plaintiff in a suit against a physician as the surviving partner, in respect to the deceased partner's declarations while engaged in the business of the firm, is not inadmissible under Rev. Stat. 1881, § 498, making an interested adverse party incompetent to testify against an administrator as to matters in decedent's lifetime where judgment may be rendered against the estate.
4. The exhibition by plaintiff of an injured shoulder to the jury may be permitted in an action for unskillful treatment.
5. Evidence that a physician devotes a considerable share of his time to farming is admissible on the question of his professional skill.
6. Refusing an order for a private examination, by defendant's experts, of plaintiff, in an action for physical injuries, is not error when application is not made until after the close of plaintiff's evidence, and no reason is shown for the delay, especially where plaintiff offers to submit to examination before the jury or in the presence of his own experts.
7. A medical expert may be cross-examined by asking him whether certain statements are not made by authorities on the subject, and the statement may be read from a medical book in asking the question.
8. An objectionable instruction as to the credit and weight of the testimony of interested witnesses is not cause for reversal where there is no serious conflict between the appellant and any other witness, and nothing to show that it applied to him more than to the other party who also testified.

(January 7, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Fayette County in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for the unskillful treatment of plaintiff's dislocated shoulder. Affirmed.

The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Mellett & Bundy and Brown & Brown for appellant.

Messrs. T. B. Redding, Chambers & Hedges and Charles Roche for appellee.

Mitchell, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was originally instituted by Isaac Lowrey against Luther W. and Frank C. Hess, to recover damages for an injury sustained to the person of the plaintiff, alleged to have been caused by the negligent and unskillful manner in which the defendants, who were partners engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery, reset and treated the plaintiff's shoulder, which had been dislocated. Pending the action, Luther W. Hess died, and the case proceeded to judgment against his personal representative and surviving partner jointly. On appeal to this court, the judgment was reversed. Boor v. Lowrey, 103 Ind. 468, 1 West. Rep. 548, 58 Am. Rep. 519, and note.

On the former appeal we arrived at the conclusion that, even though the action was in form ex contractu, since the principal or only damages sought to be recovered grew out of an injury to the person, the action would not survive against the personal representative of a deceased partner. Hegerich v. Keddle, 99 N. Y. 258; Ott v. Kaufman, 68 Md. 56, 10 Cent. Rep. 107.

The nature of the damage sued for, and not the nature of its cause, determines whether or not the action survives. Cutter v. Hamlen, 147 Mass. 471, 1 L. R. A. 429; 1 Chitty, Pl. 101.

The case is here on a second appeal, and the question is now presented whether or not, the action having been abated against the estate of the deceased partner, it can be prosecuted to judgment against the survivor. That each partner is the agent of the firm while engaged in the prosecution of the partnership business, and that the firm is liable for the torts of each, if committed within the scope of his agency, appears to be well settled. Champlin v. Laytin, 18 Wend. 407; Trucker v. Cole, 54 Wis. 539; Fletcher v. Ingram, 46 Wis. 191; Taylor v. Jones, 43 N. H. 25; Schwabacker v. Biddle, 84 Ill. 517; Story, Partn. §§ 107-166; 1 Bates, Partn. § 461.

"It follows from the principles of agency, coupled with the doctrine that each partner is the agent of the firm, for the purpose of carrying on its business in the usual way, that an ordinary partnership is liable in damages for the negligence of any one of its members in conducting the business of the partnership." 1 Lindley, Partn. 299.

Thus, in Hyrne v. Erwin, 23 S. C. 226, which was an action against two physicians for an injury resulting from the negligent and unskillful setting of a broken arm, it was held that the act of one within the scope of the partnership business was the act of each and all, as fully as if each was present, participating in all that was done, and that each partner guarantees that the one in charge shall display reasonable care, diligence and skill, and that the failure of one is the failure of all. It is contended, however, that if the appellant was liable at all, he was only liable jointly with his deceased partner, and that, the action having abated as to the deceased partner, the case falls within the rule that, where one or more of the joint plaintiffs or joint defendants dies, the action shall not thereby be abated, if the cause of action survives; but, if the cause of action is one that does not survive, then the death of either joint plaintiff or joint defendant abates the whole action. Meek v. Rufner, 2 Blackf. 23; Williams v. Kent, 15 Wend. 300.

The general rule established by the cases is that, where several persons jointly commit a tort for which an action in form ex delicto may be maintained, without reference to any contract relation between the parties, the plaintiff has his election to sue all or any one of those engaged in the wrongful act, even though the existence of a contract may have been the occasion, or furnished the opportunity, to commit the act complained of. But where the action is founded on a joint contract, and is in substance, whatever its form may be, to recover damages for a breach of the contract upon which the action is predicated, all those jointly liable must be sued, in case all are alive, and within the jurisdiction of the court. Low v. Mumford, 14 Johns. 426; Weall v. King, 12 East, 452; Whittaker v. Collins, 34 Minn. 299; 1 Lindley, Partn. 482; Bish. Non-Contract Law, § 531; Chitty, Pl. 469.

In a case like the present, where the gravamen of the action is the breach of a contract, by the terms of which two persons undertook, as partners, to reset the plaintiff's shoulder, and to treat him with the skill and diligence ordinarily displayed by competent surgeons, and the action is not maintainable without referring to the contract, it may well be, even though the action be laid in tort, that the non-joinder of one of them would be ground for a plea in abatement. Collyer, Partn. § 721; Dicey, Parties, 455.

But a plea in abatement for nonjoinder of parties must, in order to be good, show that the person alleged to be jointly liable and not sued is living, and subject to the process of the court. Dillon v. State Bank, 6 Blackf. 5; Wilson v. State, Id. 212; Bragg v. Wetzel, 5 Blackf. 95; Levi v. Haverstick, 51 Ind. 236; Ferguson v. Hagans, 90 Ind. 38; Collyer, Partn. § 741; Merriman v. Barker (Ind.) 23 N. E. Rep. 992.

If, in an action against partners to recover damages for a personal injury growing out of the breach of a contract, it is necessary, as in ordinary actions ex contractu, to join all the partners, it must follow that upon the death of one, notwithstanding the action may abate as to the deceased partner, the rule applicable to ordinary actions upon contracts against partners must obtain. At the common law, the contract of partners was always treated as a joint agreement, but the firm creditors could not proceed against the estate of a deceased partner, because the death of one of the partners extinguished the contract as to him, leaving it in force as the separate engagement of the survivor. The legal remedy of the creditor was thereafter confined exclusively to the surviving partner, except as the common law was modified by statutes, or by the principles of equity. Sherman v. Kreul, 42 Wis. 83.

The right to sue for claims due the firm, as well as the liability to be sued for claims against the firm, devolved exclusively upon the surviving partner. Meek v. Ruffner, supra; McLain v. Carson, 4 Ark. 164; Childs v. Hyde, 10 Iowa, 294; Emanuel v. Bird, 19 Ala. 596; 2 Lindley, Partn. 665.

Upon the death of one partner, the creditor has a right to collect his claim at law from the survivor, or, if the cause of action survives against the personal representative, to proceed, in the manner pointed out by the Statute, against the estate of the deceased partner.

7 L. R. A.

Ralston v. Moore, 105 Ind. 243, 2 West. Rep. 747; Kimball v. Whitney, 15 Ind. 280; Gere v. Clarke, 6 Hill, 850.

If a partner dies pending an action against the firm, the death being suggested on the record, the action does not abate, but may proceed to judgment against the surviving partner unless the cause of action dies, not only as against the personal representative of the deceased partner, but as against the surviving partner also. Collyer, Partn. § 727; Pom. Rem. §§ 250, 251; Bates, Partn. § 1055; Williams v. Kent, supra.

When the damages sued for arise out of an injury to the person of the plaintiff, the cause of action dies with the person of either party; but the cause of action dies only so far as it affects the liability of the decedent, or his personal representative. Neither by the common law, nor under the Statute, does the cause of action die as to a surviving partner or defendant, who, as we have seen, remains liable for all claims against the firm. King v. Bell, 13 Neb. 409; 8 Wait, Act. and Def. 502.

While the members of the firm were all alive, each was liable in solido as principal, the firm being in law a single entity. Upon the death of one partner, his liability was extinguished, but the surviving partner, as the sole representative of the firm, continued liable. Shals v. Schantz, 85 Hun, 622.

It is only where the cause of action does not survive in favor of, or against either of, the joint plaintiffs or defendants that the death of one abates the whole action. If the action is, as doubtless it should be, regarded as a suit quasi ex contractu for damages, for an injury to the person occasioned by the breach of a joint contract, the death of one of the defendants simply severed the joint liability and extinguished the claim against the decedent, while it continued in full force as to the survivor. If the action is regarded as purely in tort, as where the injury is willful and intentional, then the liability of the defendants may be joint and several, and the death of one does not abate the action as to the other. Collyer, Partn. 6th ed. 1078, note.

The death of one partner in no wise affects the liability of the survivor, who, upon the happening of that event, becomes individually liable to make good the joint undertaking of both. Ordinarily, in actions ex delicto, where the liability arises from the misconduct or wrongful act of the parties, each is liable for all the consequences, and there is no right to enforce contribution; but this rule does not apply between partners, unless the liability resulted from a meditated or willful wrong, intentionally inflicted by the one seeking to enforce contribution. Armstrong Co. v. Clarion Co. 66 Pa. 218; Pearson v. Shelton, 1 Mees. & W. 504; Jacobs v. Pollard, 10 Cush. 287; Acheson v. Miller, 2 Ohio St. 203; Bailey v. Bussing, 28 Conn. 455; 4 Am. & Eng. Cyclop. Law, 12, 18; Lindley, Partn. 771.

That the cause of action died as to Luther W. Hess does not at all affect the question of the right of contribution between the survivor and his personal representative. The right of contribution grows out of the partnership relation, and rests upon the implied obligation of each partner to contribute his proportion to the liquidation of all partnership liabilities, unless the liability arose out of an intentional tort, committed by the partner asking contribution. That the right of contribution exists, affords a persuasive reason for holding that the action may be maintained against the surviving partner.

From every point of view the conclusion follows that the cause of action did not die as to both partners because one member of the firm died, and that the proceeding to judgment against the survivor was not of itself erroneous. The court permitted the plaintiff to testify as a witness in his own behalf, as a matter of right, and to describe the acts and repeat declarations made to him by Luther W. Hess, deceased, while engaged in resetting his shoulder, and while treating him afterwards for the injury sustained. It is insisted that this testimony was improperly admitted, because the declarations were not made in the presence of the defendant, and for the further reason that the testimony falls within the prohibition of section 498, Rev. Stat. 1881.* The declarations were made by a partner while engaged in the business of the firm, and they were therefore admissible on the ground that the law implies an agency on the part of each partner to bind the firm in respect to transactions pertaining to the business of the firm, when the declarations are made during the progress of the partnership business to which they pertain. Boor v. Lowrey, 108 Ind. 468, 1 West. Rep. 548; Williams v. Lewis, 115 Ind. 45, 14 West. Rep. 825, and cases cited.

After some hesitation we have concluded that the testimony does not fall within the prohibition of the Statute. Durham v. Shannon, 116 Ind. 403.

As we have already seen, upon the death of Luther W. Hess the plaintiff's cause of action died, because extinguished as to the decedent. The only cause of action remaining was that which existed against the appellant; and, while the transaction with the decedent is incidentally involved, his estate is not concluded by the judgment in the present case. Even though the appellant may be entitled to enforce contribution from the estate, that right cannot be regarded as settled by this judgment.

It was not error to permit the plaintiff below to exhibit his shoulder to the jury. The jury were, after seeing the condition it was in, better able to apply the evidence of the witnesses. It is settled by the decisions of this court that evidence such as that complained of is admissible. Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood, 118 Ind. 544, 12 West. Rep. 303; Hart v. State, 15 Tex. App. 202.

It appeared at the trial that the plaintiff's shoulder had been reduced or reset principally by Dr. Luther W. Hess, the father of appellant. For the purpose of affecting the knowledge and skill of the surgeon who set the shoulder, the court permitted the plaintiff to prove, by the cross-examination of the appellant, that his father was extensively engaged in farming at and prior to the time of the injury, and that he devoted a considerable share of his time to the management of several farms. The appellant complains that this evidence tended to prove that Dr. Hess was wealthy, and that it was therefore incompetent as tending to induce the jury to give enhanced damages. The evidence was not admitted for the purpose of showing the relative pecuniary condition of the parties. It would have been clearly incompetent for any such purpose. It was, however, entirely competent as tending to show that one who undertook to perform professional services requiring peculiar skill and knowledge, as well as constant study and close application, was devoting himself principally to some other avocation. After the plaintiff had closed his evidence in chief, and while the appellant was examining a medical expert as a witness, he asked the court to order the plaintiff below to submit to a private examination by the appellant's medical experts. The court refused to make the order, the plaintiff having offered to submit to an examination in the presence of the jury, or to a private examination on the next morning, or as soon as he could secure the presence of his own expert witnesses. It is undoubtedly true that the court may in its discretion, in a proper case, if application is seasonably made, require the plaintiff to submit his person to a reasonable examination, by competent physicians and surgeons, when necessary to ascertain the nature, extent and permanency of injuries; but where the application is not made until after the close of the plaintiff's evidence, and no reason is shown for the delay in making the application, it will not be error to refuse the order, especially where the plaintiff offers to submit to a private examination as soon as the attendance of medical experts on his behalf can be secured. White v. Milwaukee City R. Co. 61 Wis. 536; Miami & M. Turnp. Co. v. Baily, 87 Ohio St. 104; Schroeder v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 375; Shaw v. Van Rensselaer, 60 How. Pr. 143; Shepard v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. 85 Mo. 629; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Thul, 29 Kan. 466, 10 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 783; Thomp. Trials, § 859.

Complaint is also made that the court erred in admitting in evidence extracts from certain books or treatises on surgery. It does not appear that extracts from the books were read in evidence, or admitted in evidence as such. In the cross examination of a medical expert, the witness was asked whether certain statements were not made by certain writers on surgery, the statement referred to being read from a book held by counsel as part of the question. It is recognized as a proper method of cross-examination, in order to test the learning of a witness who testifies as an expert, to refer to books of approved authority upon the subjects under investigation. Ripon v. Bittel, 80 Wis. 614; Conn. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ellis, 89 Ill. 516; Pinney v. Cahill, 48 Mich. 584; State v. Wood, 53 N. H. 484; Rogers, Exp. Test. §§ 181, 182.

*The material provisions of that section are as follows: "In suits or proceedings in which an executor or administrator is a party, involving matters which occurred during the lifetime of the decedent, where a judgment or allowance may be made or rendered for or against the estate represented by such executor or administrator, any person who is a necessary party to the issue or record, whose interest is adverse to such estate, shall not be a competent witness as to such matters against such estate." [Rep.]

The opinion of a witness may be tested by a cross-examining counsel by reading from medical books. 2 Best, Ev. 882-884.

Medical books may be read to the jury, not for the purpose of proving the substantial facts therein stated, but to discredit the testimony of experts who refer to books as authority for or in support of their opinions. Pinney v. Cahill, supra.

Among other things, the court charged the jury that "the credit and weight that should be attached to the testimony of a witness depends upon his disinterestedness in the result of the suit and his freedom from bias or prejudice. Whenever a witness is lacking in any of these respects, it tends to a greater or less degree to weaken the force of his testimony." This instruction runs upon the very edge of propriety, and while it applies alike to the testimony of both parties, both having testified as witnesses, yet, if it had been pointed out to us, or if we could discover that there was any serious conflict between the testimony of the appellant and any other witness on any material point, we should feel constrained to reverse the judgment. Instructions such as the one in question have so often been the subject of animadversion that courts should not put their judgments in jeopardy by putting such charges in the record. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Buchanan, 100 Ind. 63-82; Dodd v. Moore, 91 Ind. 522; Woolen v. Whitacre, 91 Ind. 502; Cline v. Lindsey, 9 West. Rep. 218, 110 Ind. 837, and cases cited.

Without in any wise approving the instruction, since it was general, and may have been as injurious to one side as the other, we cannot reverse the judgment in the absence of anything to indicate that it was especially applicable to the appellant. Some of the other instructions are subjected to criticism. We have considered the objections urged, and do not find them objectionable.

The judgment is affirmed, with costs.

Petition for rehearing denied February, 1890.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

Thomas PICKLE, Appt.,

v.

PEOPLE'S NATIONAL BANK of Shelbyville and John T. Muse.

(...Tenn....)

1. The possession by a bank of a check which is not indorsed does not raise a presumption that it was paid to the payee named therein, when such payment is denied by the payee, and the only other proof of payment is a custom of the bank to pay checks without indorsement only when presented by the payee.
2. The acceptance of a check is necessary in order to give the holder thereof a right of action thereon against the bank.
3. The acceptance of a check, so as to give a right of action to the payee, is inferred from the retention of the check by the bank, and a subsequent charge of its amount to the drawer, although it was presented by, and payment made to, an unauthorized person.
4. The payee of a check which never came into his hands, but which was paid to some person who had no right to collect it, or left with the bank to be credited to him and credit not given through mere oversight, by suing the bank upon it ratifies the receipt of the check from the drawer as if it had been received by his agent for his use and benefit.

(Snodgrass and Caldwell, JJ., dissent.)

(January 16, 1890.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Chancery Court for Bedford County in favor of defendants in a suit to recover the amount alleged to be due upon a bank check. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Cooper & Frierson for appellant.

Messrs. Ivie & Ivie for the defendant Bank.

Mr. Thomas R. Myers for defendant Muse.

Lurton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in equity to recover the sum of $600, which complainant charges is due to him from either the People's National Bank or John T. Muse, both of whom are made defendants. The bill, in substance, alleges that Muse, being indebted to complainant in the sum of $600, claims on the 26th of March, 1887, to have paid the debt in a check drawn by himself, against his account with the defendant Bank, payable to complainant or his order, and that the check had been paid by the Bank, and charged up against his account. The defendant Bank claims that the check was presented to it for payment by complainant in person, and that it was paid to him. Complainant charges that the check has never been paid to him, or to his order, or to anyone authorized by him. Upon these facts he prays for a decree against the defendants or either of them, as the law and facts may justify. The defendant Muse, in his answer, admits the indebtedness as charged, but insists that he has fully paid same by drawing and delivering his check for the sum of $600 to complainant, and that the check has been paid by the drawee to Thomas Pickle, and charged up to the account of the drawer. The answer of the Bank admits the drawing of the check by Muse, payable to Thomas Pickle or order, and claims that it was presented by the payee, and paid to him in person. It admits that the check has never been indorsed by complainant, but insists that it never required the indorsement of such a check when presented for payment by the payee in person. The officers of the defendant Bank do not in their depositions pretend to any memory as to the payment of this check. They prove that it was the rule and custom of the Bank to require the indorsement of all checks drawn against it where the check is payable to the payee or order, when presented for payment by one other than the payee, but that, when presented by the payee in person, they do not require his indorsement; that the check in question bears the bank stamp of payment as of March 28, 1887, and has no indorsement; and that, in view of their custom or rule, they would not have paid such a check to anyone but complainant, unless indorsed by him. They further insist that the possession of such a check raises a presumption that it was paid to the payee named in the check.

NOTE.—Banks and banking.

See notes to Richards v. Attleborough Nat. Bank (Mass.) 1 L. R. A. 781; Lewis v. Lynn Sav. Inst. (Mass.) 1 L. R. A. 785; Atlanta Nat. Bank v. Burke (Ga.) 2 L. R. A. 96; Philadelphia Nat. Bank v. Dowd (N. C.) 2 L. R. A. 480; Manufacturers Nat. Bank v. Continental Bank (Mass.) 2 L. R. A. 699; Marshall v. 7 L. R. A.

Farmers & M. Sav. Bank (Va.) 2 L. R. A. 534; Freeman v. Citizens Nat. Bank (Iowa) 4 L. R. A. 422; National Exch. Bank v. Gay (Conn.) 4 L. R. A. 343; Cutler v. American Exch. Nat. Bank (N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 328; Harrison v. Harrison (Ind.) 4 L. R. A. 111; Fowler v. Bowery Sav. Bank (N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 145; Schluter v. Bowery Sav. Bank (N. Y.) 5 L. R. A. 541.

The possession of an order by the person upon whom it is drawn is prima facie evidence that the articles or money specified therein were delivered or paid according to the order. Kincaid v. Kincaid, 8 Humph. 17; 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 1647.

This presumption is, however, rebutted by the positive and uncontradicted testimony of complainant that he in fact never did collect the check, or authorize anyone to collect it for him. We have considered all the circumstances relied on by the defendant as tending to support the presumption of payment to complainant in person, and are of opinion that the weight of proof is that the check has never been paid to complainant. The custom of the defendant Bank to pay such checks as the one now under consideration, to the payee, without his indorsement, is the occasion of this litigation. The contrary is the usage of commerce. Such a check, returned to the drawer when paid, and credited to his account, with the indorsement of the payee, would be a voucher for such payment in favor of the drawer against the payee. But, without such indorsement, it would not be evidence, as between drawer and payee, of such payment. 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 1648.

The almost universal custom of business is to make checks payable to the payee or order, for the purpose of making the check a voucher for the payment; so the indorsement by the payee would furnish the banker very high evidence of payment in accordance with the direction of the drawer. A check drawn in favor of a particular payee or order is payable only to the actual payee, or upon his genuine indorsement; and, if the bank mistake the identity of the payee, or pay upon a forged indorsement, it is not a payment in pursuance of its authority, and it will be responsible. Morgan v. State Bank, 11 N. Y. 404; 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. §§ 1618, 1668; First Nat. Bank v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 848 [24 L. ed. 229].

This brings us to the question as to whether complainant can recover upon this check as against the Bank. While the authorities are not agreed, yet the decided weight of opinion 7 L. R. A.

is that the holder of a bank check cannot sue the bank for refusing payment, in the absence of proof that it was accepted by the bank, or that it has done some other act equivalent to and implying acceptance. This has been the uniform view of this court. Planters Bank v. Merritt, 7 Heisk. 177; Planters Bank v. Keese, Id. 200; Imboden v. Perrie, 13 Lea, 504. In the latter case the reasons for this doctrine are forcibly stated and the authorities collated by Judge Turney. We are unable to see any reason for disturbing the rule as heretofore declared by this court, especially as the decided weight of authority is in accord with our decision. National Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 152 [19 L. ed. 897]; First Nat. Bank v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 848 [24 L. ed. 229]; Carr v. Nat. Security Bank, 107 Mass. 45; Etna Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82; Seventh Nat. Bank v. Cook, 73 Pa. 485; Saylor v. Bushong, 100 Pa. 28; Purcell v. Allomong, 22 Gratt. 742; Bellamy v. Majoribanks, 8 Eng. L. & Eq. 528.

Has there been any acceptance by the defendant Bank of the check in question? It is argued that the check, having been charged up to the account of the drawer, and returned to him, is tantamount to an acceptance. The authorities are not agreed as to the effect of such an act. The case of National Bank of the Republic v. Millard was the case of a payment made of a check upon a forged indorsement. It did not appear that the check had been charged to the drawer, and there was a judgment in favor of the Bank. Mr. Justice Davis, in delivering the opinion of the court, in speaking of the effect of such a charge, said: "It may be, if it could be shown that the Bank had charged the check on its books against the drawer, and settled with him on that basis, that the plaintiff could recover on the count for money had and received, on the ground that the rule ex aequo et bono would be applicable; as the bank, having assented to the order, and communicated its assent to the paymaster, would be considered as holding the money . . . for the plaintiff's use, and therefore under an implied promise to him to pay it on demand." 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 137 [19 L. ed. 899].

In the subsequent case of First Nat. Bank v. Whitman the very question arose, when the court, through Mr. Justice Hunt, held that such a charge, having been made through mistake, and upon the assumption that it had in fact paid the check to one authorized to collect it, would not authorize the presumption of an acceptance and promise to pay it again. 94 U. S. 847 [24 L. ed. 281].

Upon the question of commercial law, we should be generally inclined to follow any well-settled line of decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States when the question was in this State res integra. This question can hardly be regarded as one of "commercial law," in the ordinary sense of the phrase. It is rather a question as to weight and sufficiency of evidence tending to prove an acceptance. We agree that the holder of a check, for want of privity, cannot recover upon the check against the bank, unless he can show an acceptance. The question presented is as to the weight to be attached to certain acts done by the Bank, and the inference fairly to be drawn from these acts. Where a bank has negligently paid a check to an improper person, it would seem that, in good conscience, the true owner and payee ought not to be remitted to his action against a palpably insolvent drawer, for thereby he may lose his debt altogether. A legal principle, however, stands in the way, in that there is no privity between himself and the bank until the bank has assented to the order of the drawee requiring it to pay the holder of the check the sum of money named. The assent which is necessary before there is any contract relation between the holder of the check and the bank is what is meant by acceptance. This assent need not be by indorsement of "Good" across the check, or by any other particular words, either in writing or oral. The question of assent or acceptance is one of fact, and may be made out by any of the methods by which a fact is proven.

Did the defendant Bank assent to the directions of its customers to pay out of its funds on deposit the sum named in the check? If so, to whom did it assent to pay this sum? The answer is found by inspection of the check. If it assented to pay the check, it undertook and assumed to pay it to Thomas Pickle, or upon his order. Now, the facts which are relied upon as making out such an assent to the direction of the drawee of this check as to bring complainant into privity with the Bank are that it received and retained the check, and that it has charged the check to the account of the drawer, and settled with him, deducting the amount of the check. Now, when a bank certifies a check as "Good," it is not only authorized, but good banking would require that such check should be then charged to the account of the drawer, as so much of his funds which they have obligated themselves to pay upon that check. Of course, if the check is never paid, or is returned, the drawer would be credited. The debiting of this check to the account of the drawer would then mean only one of two things,—that the check has been paid as ordered, or that the fund is held subject to the demand of the payee. The bank must be taken to have assented to pay it as directed; that is, to the payee or his order. That it has assented to the payment of this check is, we think, to be inferred from the retention of the check when presented at its counter, and the subsequent charge of the check to the drawer. Upon this charge to the drawer we predicate its assent or acceptance. It had no right to charge it to the drawer, and to settle his account, unless it had either paid the check to the payee named in the check, or his order, or, having accepted the check, held the fund of the drawee subject to the demand of the payee. It has not paid the check. It must therefore be held to hold the amount of the check for the payee. It cannot escape this consequence by saying that what we have done in receiving the check, and in paying it, and in debiting to the account of the drawer, is all through mistake. That would be to suffer it to escape the consequences of its own mistake, by pleading its own negligence in answer to the natural inference from its reception and retention of this check, and its subsequent charge to the drawer might enable it to shelter itself behind the technical defense of want of privity; but, on the other hand, it may result in the loss to complainant of his debt by remitting him to his action against his original debtor, whom he may be unable to coerce into payment. We think there is no inequity in holding the Bank to the inference that it has accepted this check, springing out of the fact that it has charged it up to the account of the drawer. This was clearly the view of Mr. Justice Davis, a great master in the law, as appears from his opinion in the Millard Case, supra. It has the support of the only other courts which have been called upon to pass upon this question,—the Supreme Courts of Pennsylvania and Ohio. Seventh Nat. Bank v. Cook, 78 Pa. 488; Saylor v. Brushong, 100 Pa. 23; Dodge v. Nat. Exchange Bank, 20 Ohio St. 234.

So Mr. Daniel, in his very learned work upon Negotiable Instruments, lends the support of his name to the view we have taken, saying: "There is no doubt that, if the bank pays a check upon the forged indorsement of the payee's or special indorser's name, the payee or such indorser may recover back the amount, if the check had been delivered to him, and the drawer may recover it back if he had not issued it." 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 1663.

This brings us to the question as to whether the check was ever delivered to the complainant; for it is asserted that if there has been no delivery to him he has no such title to the instrument as will enable him to maintain a suit against the Bank. Whether this check was sent to complainant, and miscarried, and fell into the hands of a stranger, or whether it was left with the Bank to be credited to the complainant, who kept his account there, and by oversight this credit was not given, is all matter of conjecture. How this check ever reached the Bank we are unable, from the proof, to determine. All we can say is that we are satisfied that it never came into the hands of complainant. Someone undoubtedly received it from Muse. By suing the Bank upon this check, complainant may and does ratify the receipt of the check from Muse. It is as if it had been received by an agent for the use and benefit of the complainant. Omnia ratihabito retrotrahitur et mandato priori æquiparatur,—a subsequent ratification has a retrospective effect, and is equivalent to a prior command Broom, Legal Max. 676. "This is a rule," says Mr. Broom, "of very wide application. . . . 'No maxim,' remarks Mr. Justice Story, 'is better settled in reason and law than this maxim; . . . at all events, where it does not prejudice the rights of strangers.' Fleckner v. Bank of U. S. 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 303 [5 L. ed. 631]."

As illustrative of the application of the rule, the author cites the case where the goods of A are wrongfully taken and sold. The owner may either bring trover against the wrong-doer or may elect to consider him as his agent, and adopt the sale, and bring an action for the price. Smith v. Hodson, 4 T. R. 211.

So, in another case it was said: "That an act done for another by a person not assuming to act for himself, but for such other person, though without any precedent authority whatever, becomes the act of the principal, if subsequently ratified by him, is the known and well established rule of law. In that case the principal is barred by the act, whether it be for his detriment or his advantage, and whether it be founded on a tort or a contract, to the same extent as by, and with all the consequences which follow from, the same act done by his previous authority.' Wilson v. Tumman, 6 Man. & Gr. 242." Broom, Legal Max. 679.

The Bank is not prejudiced by this subsequent ratification, for it dealt with the check as the property of the complainant, and undertook to pay to him or his order. The effect of this ratification is simply to make the check the property of the complainant. It does not ratify the collection of the check by one whose act in receiving it is subsequently ratified, and agency to receive a check payable to order implies no authority to indorse it in the name of the payee, or to collect it without such indorsement.

In the case of Dodge v. Nat. Exchange Bank, a certificate of indebtedness by the government to Dodge was remitted by mail to the paymaster for a check. The mail was robbed, and the certificate presented by the thief to the paymaster, and a check demanded. The latter, without requiring proof of the identity of the holder of the certificate, paid a check payable to Dodge or order, and took up the certificate. The indorsement of Dodge was forged, and the check paid. Subsequently Dodge sued the bank, and recovered, the court holding that he might ratify the taking of the check for the certificate, and sue upon it as an accepted check. 20 Ohio St. 234. See, to same effect, Graves v. American Exchange Bank, 17 N. Y. 207.

The decree of the chancellor is reversed, and judgment for complainant against the Bank for the amount of the check, and interest from date of filing of bill, and all the cost of the cause.

Snodgrass, J., dissenting:

Disagreeing with the majority upon the merits of the question decided, and strongly opposed to the policy of refusing to follow the Supreme Court of the United States on this important banking and commercial question, I am constrained to express briefly my dissent. The exact question before us, as shown in the majority opinion, was decided adversely to it in First Nat. Bank v. Whitman, 84 U. S. 343 [24 L. ed. 229], in 1877, by the Supreme Court of the United States, without dissent by any member of the court. In that court, in the Millard Case, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 152 [19 L. ed. 897], Judge Davis had doubtfully intimated that the bank might be liable to the payee of a check which it had improperly paid off to an unauthorized holder and charged to account of drawer, not, as the majority holds here, because such payment to an unauthorized holder is an acceptance and implied promise to pay the real owner or payee,—for this doctrine he repudiated,—but because of the charge to the drawer the bank might be liable to the payee for money had and received to his use. But this whole matter was the doubtfully expressed inference of argument, and was not even an affirmative dictum, which, least of all things, is entitled to serious consideration. Afterwards, when the exact question arose, with the Millard Case before it, cited in argument and referred to in the opinion, the court, on full consideration, unanimously held the bank not liable to suit on any ground. Judge Davis, who had made the dictum in the former case, it is true was not present, having just before resigned, but the other judges who made the decision were present, and all concurred in it.

7 L. R. A

The decision commands my most earnest approval; but there are additional reasons why I think it should be followed: First. It is the judgment of the highest court in the country on a general banking and commercial question, where the decisions should be treated as conclusive, as on such questions the Supreme Court of the United States follows no state construction. It is not "rather a question of the weight of evidence," as put by the majority, because we all agree that the check in the case before us was not paid to the payee, and, having determined that, we come to settle the question whether, upon this conceded condition of affairs, the payee can maintain suit against the Bank. Second. The decision should be followed because it is an original question in this State, so far as our cases go, and we should in such case, on such question, make our decisions conform to that of the United States, and thereby have but one rule applicable to our citizens. As it is, when our decisions conflict, ours, of course, can only be good as to a part of the litigation which may arise in the State, for, as to any litigants who may be carried into the federal courts by nonresidence and otherwise, the federal rule will be applied. So it will be in all cases where the national banks go into the hands of receivers, and have their affairs wound up in the federal courts, and in every case in which, by virtue of the situation of parties, or manner in which the question is involved, the federal courts have jurisdiction. Many reasons could be added, but they will suggest themselves. These are sufficient to indicate them, and outline the ground of dissent.

Caldwell, J., joins in this dissent.

E. W. COLE et al., Appts.,
v.

Joe HAND.

(....Tenn....)

One employed by a corporation on a monthly salary, who is part of the time on the road selling goods, making collections, etc., as a drummer, and the rest of the time working in a store shipping and receiving goods, moving and handling stock, etc., or making sales and collecting bills in the city, is a "clerk" within the meaning of the General Incorporation Act of 1875, § 11, making stockholders individually liable for moneys due "laborers, servants, clerks and operatives" in case the corporation becomes insolvent.

(January 21, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Davidson County in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover, under § 11 of the Act of 1875, from the stockholders of an insolvent corporation, the salary due an alleged clerk. Affirmed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gaines & Slemons, for appellants:
The remedy against the stockholder must be strictly construed, because of the nonliability of stockholders at common law.

Woods v. Wicks, 7 Lea, 45

A book-keeper who worked by the year, and often acted as manager, is not a laborer, servant or operative, nor does he come within that category.

Taylor, Corp. §§ 782, 784, note 2, citing Wakefield v. Fargo, 90 N. Y. 218; Jones v. Avery, 50 Mich. 826.

A traveling salesman is not a "laborer" within the meaning of a provision that stockholders shall be individually liable for labor performed for the corporation.

Peck v. Miller, 89 Mich. 594.

A corporation aggregate cannot be an employé of another corporation within the meaning of a statute which makes the stockholders liable for debts due and owing laborers, servants, operatives and employés.

Dukes v. Love, 97 Ind. 841.

A president of a corporation is not a laborer.

England v. Daniel F. Beatty Organ & Piano Co. 3 Cent. Rep. 494, 41 N. J. Eq. 470.

As to who is a drummer, see—

Robbins v. Shelby Co. Tanning Dist. 18 Lea, 306; Singleton v. Fritsch, 4 Lea, 96, cited in State v. Miller, 93 N. C. 511, 58 Am. Rep. 469, and in Ex parte Taylor, 58 Miss. 478, 38 Am. Rep. 336.

It may be stated as a general rule that only those who perform mental or manual labor are within the class contemplated in the Statute.

Wakefield v. Fargo, 90 N. Y. 218; Cook, Stock and Stockholders, § 215, p. 205, note 3; Adams v. Goodrich, 55 Ga. 238; Stryker v. Cassidy, 76 N. Y. 50, 32 Am. Rep. 262; Whitaker v. Smith, 81 N. C. 849, 31 Am. Rep. 508; Brockway v. Innes, 89 Mich. 47, 38 Am. Rep. 848; Pennsylvania & D. R. Co. v. Leuffer, 84 Pa. 168, 24 Am. Rep. 189.

Words in the Constitution or Statute, which have a technical meaning, are supposed to be used in that sense; but if not, then in their ordinary sense or common acceptation.

In Adams v. Goodrich, supra, a laborer was held to be one who performs manual labor. See also Heebner v. Chave, 5 Pa. 115; Pennsylvania & D. R. Co. v. Leuffer, supra; Aikin v. Watson, 24 N. Y. 432; Coffin v. Reynolds, 37 N. Y. 640; Stryker v. Cassidy, supra; Ericsson v. Brown, 88 Barb. 390.

The labor Hand did was the incident, and not the principal, of his services. Hence he cannot recover.

Cook, Stock and Stockholders, p. 229; Coffin v. Reynolds, 37 N. Y. 648.

Chief Justice Shaw defines the word "operative" thus: "Probably the primary thought which the legislators had in mind was the wages due men and women, working in manufacturing, who receive their pay usually weekly or monthly."

Thayer v. Mann, 2 Cush. 371.

Mr. Percy D. Maddin, for appellee:

It is the laborers, servants and clerks who have no voice in the management of the company, who have nothing to do with its financial or business policy, who cannot say what contracts shall and what shall not be made, it is these who are under the direction and control of the superior officers and agents of the company that are protected.

The word "servant," in our legal nomenclature, has a broad significance, and embraces all persons of whatever rank or position who are in the employ and subject to the direction and control of another in any department of labor or business. Indeed, it may in most cases be said to be synonymous with "employé."

Wood, Mast. and S. p. 2.

There is no middle ground between restricting the operation of the Statute to day laborers and applying it to all persons employed in the service of the company who have not a different, proper and distinct appellation, such as officers and agents of the company.

Conant v. Van Schaick, 24 Barb. 98; Coffin v. Reynolds, 37 N. Y. 648; Short v. Medberry, 29 Hun, 40; Sleeper v. Goodwin, 67 Wis. 590; Harris v. Norrell, 1 Abb. N. C. 127; Williamson v. Wadsworth, 49 Barb. 298.

Folkes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action at law to recover of the defendants individually the wages claimed to be due plaintiff by the Nashville Plow Company, an insolvent manufacturing corporation chartered under section 11 of the General Incorporation Act of 1875. Under the case as made in the record, the only question presented is whether the plaintiff, who was a traveling salesman or drummer in the employ of the company, can claim the benefit of said Act, as being one of the persons in favor of whom the Legislature has given an individual right of recourse over upon the stockholders. Section 11 of said Act provides for the creation of mining, quarrying and manufacturing companies, and contains this clause: "The stockholders are jointly and severally liable, individually, at all times, for all moneys due and owing to the laborers, servants, clerks and operatives of the company, in case the corporation becomes insolvent."

The proof shows that for a salary of $100 per month, payable as wanted, the plaintiff had been on the road for about twenty-three weeks, and at the factory fourteen or fifteen weeks, during the time of his employment, being out and in alternately, and for varying periods as directed and required by the company; that while on the road he sold goods by sample or photograph, made collections, settled claims and generally did any and every thing which is understood to be within the duties of a drummer working on a salary, subject to the direction and control of the general manager of the company. When not on the road, he worked in the store, shipping and receiving goods, moving and handling stock, etc. He also made sales in the city, and collected bills, when so instructed. There is due him salary for five and four-fifths months, during which time he was on the road and at the factory, about half each. Does this character of employment and service bring him within the benefit of the clause of the Act above quoted?

While there is no doubt of the power of the Legislature to impose this increased liability upon the stockholder, when it is done in the Act creating the corporation, yet, being in derogation of the common law, such statutes, so far as concerns such liability, are to be strictly construed. They are a wide departure from established rules, and, though founded upon considerations of public policy and general convenience, are not to be extended beyond the plain intent of the words of the Statute, as said by Mr. Cook in his work on Stock and Stockholders, § 214. Again, this author says, in speaking of the statutory liability of stockholders for debts of the corporation due its servants or laborers: "There has been difficulty in determining what persons are to be classed as 'servants,' but the courts are not inclined to give a broad application to the word." § 215.

It must also be borne in mind that while the Legislature has in such Acts manifested a purpose to guard and protect the wages of a certain class, it does not follow that the class should be extended by any liberality of construction, so as to include persons not named. The court should be slow to enlarge the class by any latitudinous construction, not only upon the consideration above stated, but for the further reason that the Legislature is not to be presumed to place unnecessary burdens upon the corporations of its creation. They serve a most valuable purpose in developing and building up the resources of the State. By means of the aggregation of capital, they are able to accomplish great and much-to-be-desired benefits to the public, which individual means and effort would be unable to achieve. With these general principles to direct us, we are to ascertain, as each case arises, what employé is or is not within the language of the Act. In arriving at a satisfactory conclusion, we find but little aid and comfort from the adjudged cases from the courts of other States, the same language receiving very different construction at the hands of different courts, of equally high authority, as a citation of some of them will show.

The following persons have been held not to fall within the terms "servant" or "laborer": the secretary of a manufacturing company (Coffin v. Reynolds, 87 N. Y. 640); a civil engineer (Pennsylvania & D. R. Co. v. Leuffer, 84 Pa. 168); a consulting engineer (Ericson v. Brown, 38 Barb. 890); an assistant engineer (Brooklyn v. Innes, 89 Mich. 47); an overseer on a plantation (Whitaker v. Smith, 81 N. C. 840); a book-keeper and general manager. Watfield v. Fargo, 90 N. Y. 213.

These cases seem to rest upon the idea that the terms named have reference only to persons who perform menial or manual labor, or, rather, to persons whose chief employment is to perform such labor, and not to embrace the higher class named in the authorities just cited, although each of the persons named did perform more or less of manual labor, as incidents to their employments. On the other hand, a master mechanic or machinist employed by the year was held to be embraced under a statute protecting clerks or laborers. Sleeper v. Goodwin, 67 Wis. 500.

But without further naming the cases, we refer the curious to note 1 to § 215, Cook, Stock and Stockholders, where a number of cases are to be found.

The Statute under consideration, as we have seen, uses the words "laborers, servants, clerks, operatives." We do not deem it necessary to define the terms "laborer" or "operative," as it may be said to be clear, under the principles of construction that are to govern us, that they do not include the traveling salesman on a salary of $100 per month. Whether he would be embraced under the term "servants," it would be difficult to say. He would be, if we were at liberty to accept the term in its broadest sense, as defined by Mr. Wood in his work on Master and Servant, viz.: "The word 'servant' in our legal nomenclature has a broad significance, and embraces all persons of whatever rank or position, who are in the employ, and subject to the direction or control, of another, in any department of labor or business. Indeed, it may, in most cases, be said to be synonymous with 'employé.'" § 1.

That it is, however, not used in that sense in the Statute, is shown by the fact that other terms are used, which would be altogether unnecessary and idle, if it were meant to be synonymous with "employé." We would have no room for the words "laborer, clerk" or "operative."

Webster defines "clerk," as "an assistant in a shop or store who sells goods, keeps accounts," etc. Bouvier says he is a person in the employ of a merchant, who attends to any part of his business, while the merchant himself superintends the whole; or a person employed in an office to keep accounts or records. Rapalje says: "In business law, an assistant employed to aid in any business, mercantile or otherwise, subject to the advice and direction of his employer." Rapalje & L. Law Dict. 219.

That "clerk" embraces and includes "salesman," seems beyond all doubt. If the term includes the salesman who remains in the shop or store, we can see no reason why it does not include the salesman on the road under like terms of employment. Each makes sales, collects accounts, handles goods and acts under the instruction of the employer.

It is worthy of note that the Act of 1875, chap. 143, "To Provide for the Organization of Corporations," creates an individual liability upon the stockholders to employées in different companies in different language, and some of the corporations created are left without any provision at all on the subject. Thus section 12 ("cotton compress and warehouse" companies) has the same provision that we have been considering for mining and manufacturing, viz.: "Laborers, servants, clerks and operatives." Section 18 (hotel companies). The terms are "laborers, servants and clerks." Section 21 (as to printing and publishing companies), the language is: "Journeyman for wages due, and all other servants and employées." Section 22 (as to transfer and omnibus companies), "To servants and agents." Section 24 (steamboat and packer companies), "To hands, and other employées"—while there is no provision at all on the subject as to railway, turnpike, telegraph, insurance or street railway companies, building associations, pawnbrokers, levees, banks or immigration and real-estate companies.

Whatever may have been the purpose of the Legislature in making these distinctions, they do not materially help us to a decision of the case in hand, and we have referred to it merely as a matter of interest in connection with the subject of statutory liability of stockholders, so far as concerns employées.

There was no error in the action of the circuit judge, and his judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount of the wages or salary shown to be due by the corporation will be affirmed against the stockholders sued herein, with interest and costs.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

v.

Common Council of the CITY OF DETROIT.

(....Mich....)

1. That a law would necessitate the incurring of large expense cannot be alleged as a sufficient reason for not obeying its provisions if it is otherwise valid.
2. A Registration Law providing that for the next registration the inspectors of the last election shall act, and that they cannot act out of their own precincts, and which repeals all other Registration Laws, is inoperative where the Act provides for changing and increasing the number of the precincts in such a way that some would have more than their proportion of inspectors residing therein, some less and some none at all.
3. A constitutional provision which requires a residence in the town or ward of ten days only as a condition of voting is violated by a law which compels registration, and fixes the last day therefor on the fourth Monday of October, which in some years will be more than ten days before election day.
4. A law providing but five days only in the whole year upon which a person can be registered to qualify himself as a voter, requiring his personal application therefor, with no exception in case of his sickness or absence on these days, is unreasonable and void.
5. The Legislature cannot disfranchise legal voters without their own fault or negligence in an attempt to prevent fraud.

6. A provision that naturalized voters in order to be registered must produce proper certificates of naturalization or declaration of intention or satisfactory evidence thereof other than the oath of the applicant, and which requires the name of the court in which such proceedings were had, and also the date thereof, to be proved, is unreasonable and void; especially where a person claiming to be a voter because native born may prove that fact by his own oath.
7. Male inhabitants residing in the State on the 24th day of June, 1835, being made voters in Michigan by the Constitution, although neither native born nor naturalized, a law which compels registration of voters, and provides only for native-born or naturalized citizens, is not valid.
8. No Registry Law is valid which deprives the elector of his constitutional right to vote, by any regulation with which it is impossible for him to comply.
9. Portions of an Act being declared unconstitutional, if it is apparent that the Legislature, had it foreseen this fact, would not have enacted the other portions of the Act, the whole Act must fall.

(December 23, 1889.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel the City Council of Detroit to comply with the terms of the Act of 1889, relating to the registration of voters, etc. On return to rule to show cause. Writ denied.

NOTE.—Elections; rights of voters to be registered.

The Legislature may require registration under reasonable restrictions, as proof of the possession of the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution, but the voter must have a right to prove himself to be an elector, register and vote, at any time prior to the closing of the polls on election day. State v. Corner, 22 Neb. 285.

Where an elector possessed the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution, he was vested with the right to vote; and it is not within the power of the Legislature to change, impair, add to or abridge that right in any manner. Dells v. Kennedy, 49 Wis. 555; State v. Baker, 38 Wis. 71; Daggett v. Hudson, 1 West. Rep. 781, 43 Ohio St. 548; Page v. Allen, 56 Pa. 328; Edmonia v. Banbury, 26 Iowa, 287; Monroe v. Collins, 17 Ohio St. 606; White v. Multnomah Co. 13 Or. 317.

Before an election is held, opportunity must be given to all persons entitled to register; and if this opportunity is denied, either purposely or by accident, it may vitiate the election, if it materially affects the result. McDowell v. Massachusetts & S. Construction Co. 96 N. C. 514; Goforth v. Rutherford R. Construction Co. 96 N. C. 535.

An Act providing that no person shall be entitled to be registered as a voter within thirty days of naturalization is unconstitutional. Kinneen v. Wells, 4 New Eng. Rep. 457, 144 Mass. 497.

7 L. R. A.

A law which limits the voter to seven specified days within which to register is unconstitutional. Daggett v. Hudson, 1 West. Rep. 789, 43 Ohio St. 548.

So a statute which provides that an elector must be registered on one of four specified days is unconstitutional as making "a hindrance or impediment to the right of a qualified voter to exercise the elective franchise." State v. Corner, 22 Neb. 285.

In North Carolina a "qualified voter" is one who is not only eligible to vote, but who is also duly registered. Smith v. Wilmington, 98 N. C. 848.

The Statutes of North Carolina prescribe registration as an essential qualification. Ibid.

Under the North Carolina Registration Law, a voter who has been duly registered cannot be deprived of his right to vote; nor will he lose his character as a "qualified voter" by a failure to re-register, unless a new registration is made in pursuance of the plain requirements of the law. Ibid.

An elector lawfully registered in a municipality is entitled to vote there. Gooding v. Brown, 22 Fla. 437.

A statute which attempts to take from an elector of such town his constitutional right of suffrage is unconstitutional. State v. Fitzgerald, 37 Minn. 26.

Voters and elections, see notes to Bloomer v. Todd (W. T.) 1 L. R. A. 111; Warren v. Board of Registration (Mich.) 2 L. R. A. 208; Bates v. Taylor (Tenn.) 3 L. R. A. 316.

The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Edwin F. Conely and William P. Wells, with Mr. Stephen V. R. Trowbridge, Atty. Gen., for relator.

Mr. Fred A. Baker, with Mr. John W. McGrath, City Atty., for respondent.

Morse, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the last session of the Legislature an Act was passed, entitled "An Act to Preserve the Purity of Elections, and Guard against Abuses of the Elective Franchise, in the City of Detroit." This Act was approved by the governor July 1, 1889, upon which day it took effect and became operative. Local Acts 1889, p. 994.

The relator, in his petition, sets forth that the Common Council of the City of Detroit has neglected and failed to comply with the law, and still fails and neglects to do so, although well aware that the necessity of such compliance is reasonable and urgent; and that he believes that said Common Council intends to ignore the Act entirely, and that such body intends to hold the city election to take place in November, 1889, under the Registration and Election Laws in force before the passage of this Act, the same in every respect as if no such Act had been passed. The Attorney-General therefore asks that this court issue a peremptory mandamus to compel said Common Council to re-subdivide into election precincts or districts, containing each not more than 800 electors resident therein, such wards of the City of Detroit as may require it, under this Act, and to provide suitable and proper means for the registration of electors upon such subdivision or rearrangement as the circumstances may require.

The relator, from the records in the city clerk's office, makes a showing of the number of votes cast in each election district now existing in said City, sixty-one in number, at the November election in 1888. This showing, under the Act, would necessitate the creation of 68 additional precincts, making a total of 129. Section 1 of the Act provides "that, as soon as possible after this Act shall take effect, the Common Council of the City of Detroit shall by ordinance, if it shall appear that at the election held in November, 1888, or at the election held in April, 1889, more than 500 votes were cast in any election precinct, again divide the ward or wards in which such precinct or precincts may be, and establish new election precincts or districts therein, if necessary, or rearrange the same so that each precinct shall contain, as near as may be, an equal number of electors, no precinct to contain more than 800 electors resident therein; and as often as it shall appear, after any election thereafter held, that more than 600 votes had been cast in any election precinct, said precinct shall, within six months after said election, again be subdivided, or the precincts of the entire ward be rearranged and divided, so that each precinct shall contain 800 electors, as near as may be, resident therein." And section 2 provides that for the registration, as provided by the Act, to be held in 1889, the inspectors of election selected at the last election shall act, and hereafter four persons for each election precinct, respectively, residents and electors therein, shall be selected in the manner now by law provided for the selection of such inspectors in said City, to act as a Board of Registration for such precinct, and such board shall elect one of its number as chairman. Section 3 constitutes these boards of registration election inspectors, and, in case of the unavoidable absence at any time of any member of the board, the remaining members may temporarily appoint another person to act in his stead until he appears. The remaining twenty-three sections of the Act relate to the manner and effect of the registration of voters, some of which sections will be noticed hereafter.

The Common Council of the City of Detroit, in answer to the order to show cause why the writ of mandamus should not issue to compel them to obey this law, say: "(1) That a compliance with the law would create in all 129 voting districts. The expense of such compliance for the approaching municipal election would be over $23,000, and probably $25,000. That the amount to be raised for this purpose upon the assessment and levy for taxes this year is but $6,000. The Act was passed after such assessment and levy, and makes no provision for the expense attending and necessary to its execution. There is no money in the contingent fund of the City, and such expense can lawfully be paid from no other fund. (2) There are at least 35,000 voters in the City of Detroit, of whom there are at least 5,000 foreign-born electors, who have taken out their naturalization papers, or declared their intention to become citizens, without the State of Michigan. That large numbers of persons so naturalized in other States have voted, from year to year, from five to forty years, within the City of Detroit, and their citizenship has been open and notorious, and their qualifications as electors conceded. That many of them have not now their citizenship papers, but the same have been lost or destroyed. In many instances it would be impossible to procure certified copies of the same, or any record evidence of their issue; but said electors are able to procure abundant evidence of the exercise of the rights of citizenship, and of electors. That under laws heretofore existing these men have been able to produce sufficient evidence of their rights as electors, but that the Act under consideration here practically disfranchises these, at least 15,000, people, who are in fact and in law qualified voters in said City. (3) That this law will also disfranchise a large number of electors, residents of Detroit, who do business outside of and away from said City, as such persons will necessarily be absent from the City during the days fixed by this Act for registration. (4) It will also disfranchise those persons who from sickness are unable to appear before the boards of registration on such days. (5) It will disfranchise those moving from one ward to another after the last day of registration, who are electors under the Constitution and general laws of the State as to qualifications of voters. (6) That there are at present five duly elected election inspectors in each of the present sixty-one election precincts. That for these reasons, and for other good and substantial reasons appearing upon the face of the law, the Act is inoperative, burdensome, unreasonable, unconstitutional and void."

Upon hearing and argument of this matter upon petition and answer, we, on the 11th day of October, 1889, denied the application for the writ. The reasons for so doing will now be stated.

The first objection, as to expense, we did not consider, as it could not be alleged as a sufficient reason for not obeying a valid law.

But a serious difficulty arises in the outset, as to the operation of this law. If we were concerned only with the question of dividing the wards of the City into election districts containing not more than 300 electors,—certainly a desirable thing,—there could be no hesitation in granting the writ; but the object of this Law is not simply to create voting districts when the electors shall not exceed this number, but it is a scheme for a new system of registration, and requiring that all persons not complying with the rules and regulations of such registration shall not be permitted to vote under any circumstances whatever, under heavy penalties. The machinery for the approaching municipal election is not provided by the Law, except as it undertakes to provide the same from the law now in force, and which it undertakes to repeal. By this neglect to provide for this emergency, we think the Act is inoperative. There are now 61 election districts, with five inspectors in each, making in all 305 inspectors. Under this Act there must be 120 districts. Under section 1 of the Act, by the statement of votes cast in November, 1888, found in relator's petition, there are but three wards—the Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth—that will be undisturbed. In the other thirteen wards there are precincts in each that cast over 500 votes. These wards must be rearranged and subdivided, and 120 districts created, in all, therein. There are three precincts each in the remaining wards. An inspector cannot act out of his own precinct; and consequently forty-five of those now in office will remain in these three wards, as before. But of the remaining 260 inspectors who are to act in the 120 districts to be created, none of them can act out of the wards or precincts in which they live. As far as their duties as inspectors of election are concerned, there would be no trouble, as the people at the opening of the polls would have an undoubted right to fill all vacancies by election on the spot, or to create an entire new board, if there were no inspectors left in such precinct by the new division and arrangement of the ward. But it is different with such inspectors acting as a board of registration before election day. The authority to fill vacancies, or to create an entire new board of registration, must be found in the laws. There is no inherent right in the people to do it. This Law makes no provision for filling any vacancies in the inspectors acting under the present law. There are but 260 inspectors for 120 districts,—a fraction over two for each. It must necessarily happen that in the new subdivision of these wards some precincts will have more than their proportion residing within their limits, and some less, and some will have none. If any precinct should, in such division, be left without any inspectors residing within it, the inevitable result, under this Act, would be the disfranchisement of the electors of such precinct for want of registration. People v. Koppelman, 16 Mich. 342.

There is no provision in this Act providing for any such event, and, having repealed all other Registration Laws in the City of Detroit, there are no existing statutes to aid or remedy the difficulty.

But, in my view, the Law is unreasonable and void in that it undertakes to disfranchise a large number of voters through no fault of their own, and to make an unjust and unlawful distinction between the rights of native-born and naturalized citizens and electors. The Constitution authorizes the Legislature to enact laws "to preserve the purity of election, and guard against abuses of the elective franchise;" but this does not authorize, by direction or indirection, the disfranchisement, without his own fault or negligence, of any elector under the Constitution. Article 7, § 6.

The Constitution provides that "in all elections every male citizen, every male inhabitant residing in this State on the 24th day of June, 1835, every male inhabitant residing in the State on the first day of January, 1850, who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, pursuant to the laws thereof, six months preceding an election, or who has resided in the State two years and six months, and declared his intention as aforesaid, and every civilized male inhabitant of Indian descent, a native of the United States, and not a member of any tribe, shall be an elector, and entitled to vote; but no citizen or inhabitant shall be an elector, or entitled to vote at any election, unless he shall be above the age of twenty-one years, and has resided in this State three months, and in the township or ward in which he offers to vote ten days, next preceding such election." There is also a provision as to electors in the army or navy, not necessary to be here recited. Article 7, § 1.

By this section of the Constitution it will be noticed that there are five distinct classes of persons who are made electors, and the only qualification to any of these classes is that the elector shall be of age, and have resided in the State three months, and in the township or ward where he offers to vote ten days, next preceding the election. It cannot be for a moment contended that by section 6 of article 7 the framers of the Constitution intended to give the Legislature the power to arbitrarily disfranchise any elector who is such under section 1 of the same article, or to make any difference between the rights of any of the classes of electors therein specified, or to put obstacles in the way to the ballot-box for one class, while the road is left open to another. The laws to regulate elections, and to preserve their purity, and to guard against abuses of the elective franchise, must be reasonable, uniform and impartial, and must be calculated to facilitate and secure, rather than to subvert and impede, the exercise of the right to vote. Capen v. Foster, 12 Pick. 448. Let us examine the Act before us. See Local Laws 1889, p. 994. The plan of registration under this Law is extensive and minute in its details. In this discussion we shall only concern ourselves with its general features and results. It provides that in the year 1889, and again in 1892, and every fourth year thereafter,—striking, by design or accident, a presidential election year,—there shall be a new and complete general registration of voters in the City of Detroit. And it is made the duty of every elector to see that his name is registered in compliance with the requirements of the Law; and he shall not be deemed to have acquired a legal residence in the precinct unless he has so caused himself to be registered; “nor shall any ballot be received by the inspectors at any election, under any pretense whatever, unless the name of the person offering such ballot shall have been entered in the register of the precinct in which he claims to vote as herein provided.” Sections 8 and 4. The elector must personally apply to the board for registration, and such board “shall examine each applicant.” Persons who will be of age on election days, having the other qualifications of electors, may be entered on the register. “Every applicant, in the years when a general new registration is required, who has commenced to reside in such precinct, and who has resided therein at least two days,” if he be otherwise qualified, shall be entered on the register, and can vote on election day, if he has resided therein ten full days next preceding. Section 7. The meeting of these boards of registration for 1889, and for 1892, and every four years thereafter, is first to be held on the first Monday of October, at which time the board sits for four days, and also again one day, on the fourth Monday of October.

The law makes no provision for any other registration in the years of this new or general registration. In this year the fourth Monday of October came on the 28th, and the city election on the 5th of November, there being seven days between the last day of registration and election day; but whenever the month of October begins on Sunday, Monday or Saturday, more than ten days will ensue between the last day of registration and the day of election; and, as the Act requires that the elector must have actually resided in the precinct two days before his name can be entered on the registry book, this Act, in the years of general registration, will disfranchise every voter who has not resided in his ward nineteen or more days, in the precinct, before election day, whenever the month of October begins on either one of these three days. For instance, in 1888, October began on Monday. The fourth Monday was the 22d. The general election day was November 6, leaving fourteen full days between the last day of registration and election; and, adding the two days, every elector not residing within the precinct for sixteen full days before the day of election, under this Act, would have been deprived of his vote. This would be in direct conflict with the Constitution, which makes him an elector upon a residence of ten days. No such requirement as this is reasonable. There is no good reason why the boards of registration cannot sit within the ten days before election, and thereby preserve to each elector his constitutional right. Nor is this all. If the Legislature can make the residence twelve or sixteen days, it can make it a month, three months, or one year. This, in my opinion, cannot be done indirectly, under the guise of regulation, any more than it can be done directly, as a mere exercise of the legislative will. And no one will contend that the Legislature could prescribe by statute that a resident of the City of Detroit must reside in a precinct twelve days, sixteen days or a month, before his ballot could be legally taken on election day, in the face of the Constitution, which provides that he need reside therein but ten days.

But more unreasonable yet is this Act in that it contains no provision by which a person who is sick or absent on the days of registration can vote on election day. It may be said, with some show of reason, perhaps, that a person who is absent on the registration days is himself in fault, in not returning to his home, and complying with the regulations which the Legislature have a right to prescribe; but the man who is ill, and unable to attend the meetings of the board, but who is able to be out on the day of election, is deprived of his ballot, and for no good reason, that I can see. And neither do I think there is any necessity of disfranchising a large number of business men, who will be disfranchised unless they drop important business, and travel many miles to be registered some seven or more days before election. There are, under this law, but five days in the whole year that an elector can cause his name to be placed on the registry list; and this, unmistakably, by the provisions of the Act, he must do personally.

The language of the Supreme Court of Ohio, in speaking of a similar statute of that State, which was by that court unanimously declared unconstitutional, seems very appropriate here: “It will be seen by the above there are but seven [five] days in the year when voters can register. . . . There is no provision for registering at pleasure during the earlier part of the year, and no provision for proving his qualifications on election day, and voting.” And it is declared that “no vote shall be received at any election aforesaid unless the name of the person offering to vote be on the registry,” etc. A voter who is the oldest inhabitant of the ward, and an elector in it for the greater part of his lifetime, cannot vote if from absence, however necessary or unintentional, during the seven days, his name is not on the registry. Many absentees may get home to vote, and, if they were afforded opportunities during the year, might also register, whose right of suffrage must necessarily be lost under the Act. How many mechanics may be absent, pursuing their trades, during the seven days? A large number of persons will be away on steamboat and other sailing craft, and elsewhere, earning a support. A large number of students, a great many of the class usually termed ‘commercial travelers,’ will be away, perhaps planning their trips to be home on election day. A large number of citizens in government employ, at Washington and elsewhere, will be at their posts of duty, and may return to vote, but would hardly have the opportunity to return on a different day to register. Even the members of this court might be unable to register, without a decided detriment to the public business, and might be compelled to elect between the neglect of important official duties and the loss of suffrage.” Daggett v. Hudson, 43 Ohio St. 548, 1 West. Rep. 789.

There is no State in the Union that has ever sustained a law like this, except Illinois. All of the Registration Laws that have been upheld by the courts of other States have contained some provision by which a sick or absent voter might not necessarily be disfranchised, excepting the Law of 1885 in Illinois. See People v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 587, 8 West. Rep. 522.

In Massachusetts the board must be in session one hour on the day of election. Copen v. Foster, 12 Pick. 485.

In Iowa an elector unregistered, but otherwise qualified, is permitted to vote upon showing a proper reason for not having registered in time, and furnishing the affidavit of a registered voter as to his proper residence. Edmonds v. Banbury, 29 Iowa, 267.

The Election Law of Kansas provides that the registry shall close ten days before election, but permits the voter to register at all times during the year, except on these last ten days. State v. Butts, 81 Kan. 587. See also Rev. Stat. Me. 95; Rev. N. J. p. 364, § 152; Supp. Code Md. 240 et seq.; Code Ala. p. 230, § 233; Dig. Laws Ark. 1874, p. 471, § 2328.

In Mississippi registration is required; and the registration lists are to be kept by the clerk of the circuit court, "and any person not on the lists may appear at any time before the clerk and be registered."

In Kentucky a clause in a Registration Law applying only to the City of Louisville, which provided that the elector must reside in the city one year preceding the election, was held void because the Constitution required but sixty days' residence in a precinct, and one year in Jefferson County. The balance of the law was sustained, but registration was permitted by the Act within the last three days preceding the election. Com. v. McVelland, 83 Ky. 686.

The Registry Act of Missouri requires the registration of voters to be completed ten days before the election, but this is also a constitutional requirement.

In California the elector may have his name entered on the list at any time before the poll of the election is opened; but, if he does not do this thirty days before election, he must show a good reason why he did not procure the enrollment of his name previous to said thirty days. People v. Laine, 83 Cal. 55; Webster v. Byrnes, 84 Cal. 278.

In New York, as to cities, under the Law of 1865, the board of registration met on Monday before election, which is the day before; and under the Amendment of 1873 the registry is completed on the Saturday night before election. The question of its constitutionality has not been raised.

In Byler v. Asher, 47 Ill. 101, it was held that the Registry Law of Illinois was valid; but under that Act the non-registered voter was allowed to vote on making proof, in the manner prescribed in the Statute, of his right to vote, without showing any excuse for not registering.

In People v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 587, 8 West. Rep. 522, a law was sustained which provided for the close of registration on the third Tuesday before election; but, under the Constitution of that State, a man must reside in the voting precinct thirty days before election. Nothing is said in the opinion as to persons absent or sick upon the days of registration, but 7 L. R. A.

the law makes no provision for an after registry by sick electors.

In Wisconsin a Registry Law providing that no vote should be received at any general election unless the name of the person offering to vote be on the registry as completed by the board, except in the case of a person becoming a qualified voter of the election district after the last day for the completion of the registry, who might vote on making certain specified proof of that fact, was held unconstitutional because it gave no opportunity for sick and absent persons to register and vote after the completion of the registry lists. Della v. Kennedy, 49 Wis. 555.

Under this Act, as shown by Taylor, J., in a dissenting opinion at page 569, 49 Wis., the sick or absent person, being advised of the days of registration, could send his application by writing. But in the Act before us this cannot be done. The Registry Law of Pennsylvania permits an unregistered voter to prove his qualifications and vote on election day. Re Election of McDonough, 105 Pa. 490.

In Connecticut (see Hyde v. Bruah, 84 Conn. 454), it appears from the opinion filed in that case that the registry lists must be closed on Wednesday of the week preceding the election, which would be from four to five days; but it is not stated what the opportunities are for registering before that time. In our own State the provision as to sick and absent voters is well known; and so far no great abuse to the elective franchise has been developed from the exercise of the privilege therein granted, of registering on election day. How. Stat. § 93.

The object of a Registry Law, or of any law to preserve the purity of the ballot-box, and to guard against abuses of the elective franchise, is not to prevent any qualified elector from voting, or to unnecessarily hinder or impair his privilege. It is for the purpose of preventing fraudulent voting. In order to prevent fraud at the ballot-box, it is proper and legal that all needful rules and regulations be made to that end; but it is not necessary that such rules and regulations shall be so unreasonable and restrictive as to exclude a large number of legal voters from exercising their franchise. Nor can the Legislature, in attempting ostensibly to prevent fraud, disfranchise legal voters without their own fault or negligence. The power of the Legislature in such cases is limited to laws regulating the enjoyment of the right, by facilitating its lawful exercise and by preventing its abuse. The right to vote must not be impaired by the regulation. It must be regulation, not destruction. Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 338; Della v. Kennedy, 49 Wis. 555; Edmonds v. Banbury, 28 Iowa, 267; Monroe v. Collins, 17 Ohio St. 668, 685; Daggett v. Hudson, 48 Ohio St. 548, 1 West. Rep. 739; State v. Baker, 83 Wis. 71; State v. Butts, 81 Kan. 554.

These authorities all tend in one direction. They hold that the Legislature has the right to reasonably regulate the right of suffrage, as to the manner and time and place of voting, and to provide all necessary and reasonable rules to establish and ascertain by proper proof the right to vote of any person offering his ballot, but has no power to restrain or abridge the right, or unnecessarily to impede its free exer-class. This law before us disfranchises every person too ill to attend the board of registration, and unreasonably and unnecessarily requires persons whose business duties, public or private, are outside of Detroit to return home to register as well as to vote, making two trips when only one ought to be required.

This Act is also not impartial. It seems to be aimed especially at naturalized voters, and, taken all in all, was fitly characterized by one of the counsel as "an Act to disfranchise a large number of the legal voters of the City of Detroit." In providing particularly and minutely for the forms of entry in the books of registration (see §§ 5-8), subdivision h of section 8 provides: "h. In the column headed 'Court,' the designation of the court in which, if naturalized, such naturalization was had, or, if a declaration of intention was made, the name of the court from which the certificate was issued, and if the applicant claims the right to be registered and vote as a naturalized citizen, or because he has declared his intention six months or more prior to the election, he must produce the proper certificate of such naturalization, or declaration of intention, or satisfactory evidence, other than by the oath of the applicant, must be produced, that the same was issued." By another subdivision of the same section there must be set down in this book the "date of papers," the time of such naturalization or the making of the declaration "as appears by the certificates, or other duly authenticated evidence." Subdivision g.

The essence of these requirements is that the naturalized voter must produce his certificate, or show, by evidence other than his own oath, that such a certificate was issued. And it would seem that, if he cannot procure from the records of the court evidence that such a certificate was issued, or declaration of intention made, he must produce some person, besides himself, who was present when the declaration was made or certificate issued. Perhaps, under a liberal construction of the law, one who could swear that he had seen the certificate would be a sufficient witness; but how is he to testify to the date, and the particular court that issued it, or that it was genuine? Why should a person claiming to be an elector by naturalization be debarred, if he has lost his certificate, from establishing such fact by his own oath? A person may swear that he is native born, and he is not required, also, to prove this fact by someone else, before he can be registered; but, if he wishes to show that he is an elector by naturalization, he is presumed to be unable himself to tell the truth under oath, and must be corroborated by someone. The easiest way for a person of this class, wishing to cast a fraudulent vote, would simply be to swear that he was born in the United States; and in such case a perjurer is put to less trouble to get on the registry list than an honest man who desires to show that he has been naturalized, but who, unfortunately, has lost the record evidence of such naturalization. This distinction between native-born and naturalized electors is an unfair one, and, as above shown, entirely unnecessary in order to prevent fraud. Its tendency will be to disfranchise honest men, and induce dishonest men to perjure themselves. Section 18, in reference to removals from one precinct to another, and the necessary steps to become registered in such cases, seems to be most unreasonable and unnecessary; but perhaps this is within the power of the Legislature, as it is not absolutely impossible to comply with it. But, in relation to naturalized voters, the very men who have probably lost their certificates, and cannot now replace them, are elderly men, who have been naturalized for many years, and have exercised the elective franchise in Detroit, without question, for upward of a quarter of a century. They have, many of them, no doubt, forgotten the particular name of the court in which they took out their papers; and to prove their issue by someone other than themselves would be, in some instances, impossible. A law that treats these men as men whose oaths cannot be taken in their own interest, while it permits a native-born citizen to prove his standing as a voter by his own testimony, cannot receive my sanction, as I believe such a requirement to be not only unjust, but unconstitutional, unless applied to all. Another distinction may also be noted. A native-born citizen, becoming of age between the last day of registration and the election, is permitted to vote; but a foreign-born citizen, who has taken out his first papers, and whose right to full citizenship or the elective franchise will ripen between the completing of the registry list and the opening of the polls, cannot vote.

7 L. R. A.

In this minute and detailed plan of registration, with its provisions for an elaborate registry book, only two classes of voters are recognized, to wit, native-born and naturalized. Three classes of electors, under the Constitution, are provided for, unless Indians are to be classed with the native-born citizens, without any particular designation of their own; and the male inhabitant residing here in 1850, who had declared his intention six months before an election, is to be classed with naturalized voters, and treated the same as the rest. But it is quite possible that there are persons now living in the City of Detroit who were "white male inhabitants" of this State in 1835. A man twenty-one years old then would be seventy-five now. This class were not required to be native born, nor naturalized. They were made voters because they resided here at that date. There seems to be no place for such as these in this Registry Law, unless they are native born, or can establish their naturalization. And it is by no means certain that the term "inhabitant" would not include all those who had a residence or fixed settlement and home in Michigan in 1835, although not then of age, if they have since lived in Michigan. If so, a larger number of voters would be affected by this Act, as, strictly following the law, they are disfranchised by it.

In my opinion, no Registry Law is valid which deprives an elector of his constitutional right to vote by any regulation with which it is impossible for him to comply. No elector can lose his right to vote, the highest exercise of the freeman's will, except by his own fault or negligence. If the Legislature, under the pretext of regulation, can destroy this constitutional right by annexing an additional qualification as to the number of days such voter must reside within a precinct before he can vote therein, or any other requisite, in direct opposition to any of the constitutional requirements, then it can as well require of the elector entirely new qualifications, independent of the Constitution, before the right of suffrage can be exercised. If the exigencies of the times are such, which I do not believe, that a fair and honest election cannot be held in Detroit, or in any other place in our State, without other qualifications and restrictions upon both native-born and naturalized citizens than these now found in or authorized by the Constitution, then the remedy is with the people to alter such Constitution by the lawful methods pointed out and permitted by that instrument. This disposition to hamper and abridge the rights of the people to govern themselves, upon the theory that certain communities are unfit to control their own local affairs, which seems to be growing more prevalent in our legislative bodies in this country, must, nevertheless, if the idea be a correct one, be exercised in reason, and within constitutional limits.

This Law being, in the respects pointed out both unreasonable and in conflict with the Constitution, and it being apparent that the Legislature would not have enacted the other portions of the Act had it foreseen that the courts would declare these parts unconstitutional, the whole Act must fall, and be held unconstitutional and void. Dells v. Kennedy, 49 Wis. 560, and cases cited; Duggett v. Hudson, 43 Ohio St. 548, 1 West. Rep. 789; Brooks v. Hydon (Mich.) 49 N. W. Rep. 1122.

The other Justices concurred.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

TERRITORY of Montana, ex rel. BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF CHOTEAU COUNTY, Resp't.,

v.

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF CASCADE COUNTY, Appl.

(8 Mont. 393.)

1. The County of Cascade under the Act of September 12, 1887, providing that it "shall be liable for, and shall pay, the sum of $30,000" to the County of Choteau from which it was created, giving it the option to cause warrants to be issued, which, on being indorsed "Not paid for want of funds," shall bear interest, or to issue coupon bonds and sell them, cannot discharge the debt by delivery of the bonds, but if it issues the bonds must convert them into cash and pay the debt.
2. When the Legislature directs a county to pay money to another county, and directs the county commissioners to raise it by issuing either warrants at their first general session or coupon bonds as near as may be in conformity to the General Law, the refusal of the commissioners to take action in the matter at either their first or second meeting after the direction is given constitutes a case of money "withheld by an unreasonable and vexatious delay," and it will bear interest from the date of the second meeting at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, under Mont. Comp. Stat., § 1287.

3. When the law itself imposes a duty on county commissioners as such, and they are not appointed thereto by the county, the county will not be responsible for their breach of duty, or for their nonfeasance or misfeasance in relation to such duty.
4. Under the Organic Act of Cascade County, which imposes upon its Commissioners the duty of selecting which of two methods shall be adopted in the payment of its indebtedness (the issuance of either warrants or bonds), and declares what they shall do when they have determined which method they will adopt, inas-

NOTE.—Mandamus to enforce a public duty.

In mandamus to enforce a purely public duty, not due the government as such, any private person may move as relator. State v. Weid, 39 Minn. 426.

Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the mayor and council of a city to execute duties imposed upon them as to which they are allowed no discretion. State v. Shakespeare, 41 La. Ann. —, 6 So. Rep. 592.

An alternative writ of mandamus to compel the performance of a public duty by an officer, that is coupled with the expenditure of the general fund of a county, should allege that there is sufficient money belonging to the fund that can legally be appropriated to the purpose. Miller v. State (Kan.) 22 Pac. Rep. 323.

A formal demand and refusal are not a necessary preliminary to the filing of a petition for mandamus to compel the performance of a public duty which the law requires to be done. People v. Board of Education of Upper Alton School Dist. 127 Ill. 613.

When executive officers of the government refuse to act in a case at all, or when by special statute or otherwise a mere ministerial duty is imposed upon them that is a service which they are bound to perform without further question, then, if they refuse, a mandamus may be issued to compel them. United States v. Black, 128 U. S. 40 (32 L. ed. 354).

2 L. R. A.

A ministerial duty on the part of a public officer, the discharge of which may be compelled by mandamus, is some duty imposed expressly by law, not by contract, or which arises necessarily as an incident to the office, involving no discretion in its exercise, but mandatory and imperative. State v. Whitesides, 3 L. R. A. 777 and note, 30 S. C. 579.

Mandamus is the proper proceeding when a party has a legal right to the enjoyment of which the discharge of a ministerial duty on the part of a public officer who refuses to perform it is necessary, and the party has no other adequate remedy. Ibid.

Mandamus will lie to compel the payment of warrants drawn upon a county treasurer, who had funds sufficient to pay them on their presentation. Bush v. Gelsy, 16 Or. 355.

In mandamus proceedings to compel the board of supervisors to make provision for the payment of a claim previously allowed by them against the county, it is competent to set up in defense the invalidity of the claim originally, or to plead the Statute of Limitations, or both. Board of Supra. v. Catlett (Va.) 13 Va. L. J. 611.

Mandamus to public officer; application for; real party in interest; when may issue,—see note to United States v. Hall (D. C.) 1 L. R. A. 738.

To enforce public duties, see note to Commercial U. Teleg. Co. v. New England Teleg. & Teleg. Co. (Vt.) 5 L. R. A. 161.

much as they derive their power from the law alone and none of it comes from the County, the County cannot be liable for interest on the debt for failure of the Commissioners to take action, although in violation of the plain, imperative mandate of the Statute.

5. Under Comp. Stat., p. 870, § 847, providing that a county attorney shall receive certain fees to be taxed as costs for collections made for the county, such fees may be taxed in a proceeding by writ of mandate to compel the payment of money into the treasury as well as in an action brought for recovery of the money.

6. A county attorney not being entitled under Comp. Stat., p. 870, § 847, to more than $12.00 in fees, the amount of fees already received by him must be deducted from $1,200 and the balance only taxed in his favor in any given case where the percentage allowed would make the total more than that sum.

(February 2, 1889.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the District Court for Meagher County granting a writ of mandamus directing it to provide for and pay certain money according to the direction of the Legislature, and from an order upon motion to relax costs. Affirmed in part.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wade, Toole & Wallace, for appellant:

This debt is created by virtue of the Act alone. Hence no more money can be taken from Cascade, directly or indirectly, than is ordered to be paid by the terms of the Act itself.

Laramie Co. v. Albany Co. 92 U. S. 307 (23 L. ed. 552).

The Legislature having created the debt, it has entire control both of the manner and means of its payment.

Sharp v. Contra Costa Co. 84 Cal. 291.

This writ, in effect, requires the payment of a greater debt than the Act. A vindication of this mandate of the writ could only be attempted on the theory that the officers constituting the Board of Commissioners were guilty of nonfeasance in not acting at their March session. And under such circumstances, nothing is better settled than that the county, or the municipal corporation, cannot be held liable for a violation or neglect of duty by its officers.

Cooley, Torts, p. 621; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 878, 94 Am. Dec. 461; Anne Arundel Co. v. Duckett, 20 Md. 468, 83 Am. Dec. 566; Stewart v. New Orleans, 9 La. Ann. 461, 61 Am. Dec. 218; Lloyd v. New York, 5 N. Y. 369, 55 Am. Dec. 347; Lorillard v. Monroe, 11 N. Y. 395, 62 Am. Dec. 124, note; Chumaseo v. Potts, 2 Mont. 242; People v. Tweed, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 77.

The county attorney's fees are in no event taxable as costs in this proceeding. And as to the taxability of these attorney's fees in any event, only such costs can be taxed as are expressly warranted by the Statute. And all statutes providing for a taxation of costs are strictly construed.

Toms v. Williams, 41 Mich. 552; State v. Kinne, 41 N. H. 238.

The county attorney is only allowed fees upon "collections of sums of money."

Mont. Comp. Stat. § 847, p. 870.

7 L. R. A.

Strictly construed, this would mean money, and nothing else. The word "collections," in the Act, is limited to moneys actually paid into the treasury, or at least actually collected.

Raulins v. Poindester, 27 Miss. 64; Dyer v. Gibson, 16 Wis. 557; French v. Marsh, 29 Wis. 649. See Hedges v. Lewis and Clarke Co. 4 Mont. 280.

Messrs. Carpenter, Buck & Hunt, with Messrs. S. H. McIntire and H. G. McIntire, for respondent:

Whenever a county brings an action by its county attorney and recovers judgment, such of the fees as it is liable for therein to its county attorney become a part of the costs of the action, follow any judgment it may recover, and must be taxed as such costs against the losing party.

People v. Hagar, 52 Cal. 190; Higby v. Calaveras Co. 18 Cal. 178.

What the form may be of such an action is immaterial.

Higby v. Calaveras Co. supra.

McConnell, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action brought by the respondent for a writ of mandate to compel the appellant to perform a duty imposed upon it by the second section of an Act entitled, "An Act to Create the County of Cascade, and to Define its Boundaries and Provide for its Organization, Passed at the Extra Session of the 15th General Assembly of this Territory, and Approved September 12, 1887." The transcript contains two appeals, one from a final decree directing the issuing of a writ of mandate, and the other from an order after final judgment upon motion of the appellant to relax costs. The appellant demurred to the petition for the writ of mandate upon the grounds: first, "that the same does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action;" second, "that the same does not state facts sufficient to warrant the issuance of the warrant prayed for, in that the discretion required to be exercised under the Act, by the respondent Board, was to pay either in warrants or bonds, and it appears upon the face of the petition that the discretion had been legally exercised by the respondent Board tendering payment in bonds as required by law, and the relator wrongfully refused to receive the same."

The last ground of demurrer cannot be considered because it raises a question of fact which does not appear upon the face of the petition.

The points relied upon by the appellant are: first, that the Act authorizes payment by bonds issued directly to Choteau County, and the writ denies this privilege, and, as the petition shows no default in this respect, the writ should have been denied; second, the writ improperly directs the warrants to be dated, registered and to bear interest from March 8, 1888; and, third, the writ improperly directed the issuance of a warrant in the event of the second alternative of payment being adopted. Said section 2, out of which this contention arises, is as follows, to wit: "That the present indebtedness of the Counties of Choteau and Meagher shall be apportioned between said Counties respectively, and said County of Cascade, as follows, to wit:

To the County of Choteau, the said County of Cascade shall be liable for and shall pay the sum of $30,000, and to the said County of Meagher the County of Cascade shall be liable and shall pay the sum of $8,000, which said sums shall be in full of all claims and demands against said County of Cascade for or on account of its proportion of the present indebtedness of said Counties respectively; and it is hereby made the duty of the County Commissioners of the County of Cascade to cause to be issued at their first regular session to each of said Counties a warrant or warrants on the general fund of said County for the amounts to which they may be respectively entitled as aforesaid, which said warrants, if not paid on presentation to the treasurer of said County of Cascade, shall be by him indorsed 'not paid for want of funds,' and shall thereafter bear like interest as other county warrants; or said Commissioners may issue coupon bonds of said County bearing interest at not more than 6 per cent per annum, payable in seven years, and due in fifteen years, in payment of said debt, and to pay current expenses for the first year. Said bonds shall not be sold for less than par, and shall be issued as near as may be in conformity with the General Law."

As the main question presented by the demurrer depends upon the construction to be given to said section 2 of the Act to organize Cascade County, we will consider it first.

It is contended by the appellant that said section gives the County Commissioners of Cascade County the right to elect whether they will pay the indebtedness of their County to Choteau County by issuing coupon bonds, and turning them over in payment, or drawing county warrants upon the general fund. The question is, Have they this power under section 2? We think they have not. The Act itself does not provide that the bonds shall be turned over to Choteau County. The language used in the Act "in payment of said debt," coupled with the succeeding clause, "and to Pay Current Expenses for the first year," shows manifestly that the Legislature intended to put payment of the current expenses of the new County for the first year upon a like footing with the payment of the debt to Choteau County; and no one will contend that the Legislature ever meant to issue coupon bonds and turn them over in kind in payment of the current expenses of the County. The new County was to derive territory, population and property from the mother County and the Legislature, acting as a kind of pater familias between the mother and daughter, enacted that the just and equitable portion of the debt of Choteau County, which the new County should bear, was the sum of $30,000. It is true that in the absence of such legislation the new County would not be bound in law for any part of said debt. Laramie Co. v. Albany Co. 93 U. S. 307 [23 L. ed. 552]. But the Act which declared that Cascade County should pay $30,000 had the effect of converting a moral into a legal obligation, and to liquidate the accounts between them at that amount. It then became an indebtedness in as full a sense as if it had arisen by contract between the parties. The language used is "to the County of Choteau, the said County of Cascade shall be liable for, and shall pay, the sum of $30,000." It thus creates a debt to be paid in money. But the Legislature, in view of the fact that a county can only raise money by taxation or the sale of its bonds, proceeds to direct how this debt may be paid: first, in the discretion of the County Commissioners by issuing warrants upon the general fund to be raised by taxation, or, secondly, by issuing coupon bonds and selling them, and thus raising the money with which to pay said debt. That the Legislature meant that Cascade County should sell the bonds, and pay the debt with the money thus raised, is further manifested from the provision that said coupon bonds should bear interest at not more than 6 per cent per annum, thus leaving it in the discretion of the County of Cascade to determine the rate of interest that the bonds should bear, limiting it only by the provision that the rate should not exceed 6 per cent, leaving the matter entirely within the discretion of the Commissioners to fix the interest from a nominal rate of one half or 1 per cent up to and including 6 per cent per annum. If the Commissioners should see fit, in the exercise of their discretion, to issue coupon bonds, bearing only a nominal rate of interest, which they might do under the construction contended for by the appellants, and turn said bonds over to Choteau County in kind in payment of said debt, it would practically defer payment of said debt for fifteen years, as it would be impossible for Choteau County to sell said bonds at par as provided by law. Certainly if the Legislature intended that Choteau County should receive the bonds in payment of this debt, it would not have left it at the mercy of the new County.

Said Act further provides that the bonds shall be payable in seven years and due in fifteen years, and that they shall not be sold for less than par, and that they shall be issued as near as may be in conformity with the General Law. Such a construction would present the spectacle of the Legislature solemnly declaring that in justice and good conscience as the consideration for the territory, population and property that Cascade County might derive from Choteau County, and the relief of its taxpayers from the debts of the parent county, Cascade should be liable for and should pay to said County the sum of $30,000, and then providing that instead of paying this money it might pay it in her own coupon bonds, due in fifteen years, bearing only a nominal rate of interest, issued under a law which forbade Choteau County from selling said bonds at less than par. It seems to us that such legislation would be to trifle with the rights of Choteau County and practically declare that a debt of $30,000 now due shall not be paid for fifteen years, and that in the mean time it should bear only a nominal interest, unless said County of Cascade, of its own grace, should see fit to pay it at the end of seven years. The Legislature did not mean to make such a contingency possible.

If this construction of the bond clause of said Act is the correct one, then the two propositions between which an election was to be made are so unequal that there is no room for choice. It would be to paraphrase the language of the Act, which creates the liability, so that it shall read as follows, to wit: "To the County of Choteau, the said County of Cascade shall be liable for, and shall pay, the sum of $80,000, fifteen years after date."

But it is insisted by the appellant that if the Act contemplated a cash payment from the proceeds of the bonds, it would have said so, and would have provided for the transfer of the proceeds from one county treasurer to the other. In reply to this we say that the Act provides that said bonds shall be issued as near as may be in conformity with the General Law, and when we turn to section 810 of the General Laws of the Territory, we find that "when the county commissioners of any county shall issue any bonds authorized by this Act, it shall be their duty to sell the same, and give notice by advertising in some newspaper published in the county, or if there be no newspaper published in such county, then in any newspaper published in an adjoining county of this territory, and also in one or more newspapers published in the City of New York, for a period of not less than thirty days prior to the time said bonds are to be sold; such advertisement shall be for sealed proposals, which shall state the amount of such bonds for sale, and the party or parties offering the highest price therefor shall be entitled to receive the amount of such bonds which he or they may offer to buy, but no bonds shall be sold for any price less than the par value thereof."

This is a provision for funding the floating indebtedness of the counties by authorizing them to issue bonds, sell them according to the foregoing provisions, cover the money back into the treasury, and pay them out upon presentation in their order of the outstanding warrants. The law then amply provides for the manner in which the bonds shall be converted into cash, and the proceeds transferred from the treasury of the county issuing the bonds to the creditors, be they counties or individuals.

It is further argued that these General Laws touching the management of the affairs of the counties already existing were applicable to Cascade County when organized, and that therefore there was no necessity for the Legislature, in the Act organizing Cascade County, to provide for the issuance of coupon bonds and their sale for the purpose of paying its indebtedness. The same remark would apply with equal force to the provision in said Act that bonds may be issued to pay the current expenses for the first year. The right to do this was as perfect under existing laws before the passage of this Act as it was afterwards. So, likewise, in regard to the first alternative, that the Commissioners of the County of Cascade should cause to be issued at their first regular session to each of said Counties a warrant or warrants on the general fund of said County for the amounts to which they be respectively entitled as aforesaid, which said warrants, if not paid on presentation to the treasurer of said County of Cascade, shall be by him indorsed, "not paid for want of funds," and shall thereafter bear interest as other warrants." The Legislature having declared that Cascade County owed Choteau County the sum of $80,000, without any further legislation under existing laws, upon application of Choteau County to the Commissioners of Cascade County, it would have been their duty to have issued warrants upon the general fund of the County for this indebtedness—as much so as for any item of the current expenses of said County.

So that the fact that the Legislature saw fit in the passage of this Act to put in provisions which were already provided for by existing laws is no argument in favor of the construction insisted upon by the appellant in relation to the purpose for which the coupon bonds of said County might be issued by said Commissioners.

In interpreting any clause of a section it should be construed in connection with existing laws, and should be interpreted in the light of the objects and purposes that the Legislature had in view in its enactment. Here the Legislature is about to call into existence a new county, necessarily without revenue to pay debts and meet current expenses. Time must elapse before taxes can be assessed and collected, and it was not to be supposed that there would be in the treasury of the new County, at the first meeting of the Commissioners, money enough with which to pay the sums of $30,000 and $6,000, due respectively to Choteau and Meagher Counties, and also to pay its necessary current expenses. In anticipation of this obvious condition of affairs, the Legislature provided for the issuing of warrants upon the general fund, and upon their being presented and not paid for want of funds, which they must have obviously seen must be the case, they should bear interest from the date of their indorsement by the treasurer at the usual rate at which warrants draw interest, that is 7 per cent; thus putting it in the power of Cascade County to carry the debt, until it could provide for its liquidation by taxation, or, at their election, place coupon bonds upon the market at such rate of interest as they might be able to sell them at par, not to exceed 6 per cent, and thus raise the money with which to pay in cash the indebtedness created by said Act. The Act provides that these bonds shall not be payable for seven years, and shall not be due for fifteen years, thus giving the County ample time to get its affairs upon such footing as would enable it to provide for the payment of the principal without embarrassment to its taxpayers. If the Commissioners should see fit to issue warrants upon the general fund and pay 7 per cent interest until the money could be raised to pay them, they might at any time thereafter, when in their judgment it was for the best interest of the County to do so, have issued bonds and sold them under the general law to obtain money with which to liquidate said warrants. But instead of leaving the County to the General Law as it then stood, the Legislature saw fit to insert these express provisions for its government.

2. If the Commissioners elected to issue warrants on the general fund, they had the right to the whole of the time of such meeting in which to make their election. But the failure of the Commissioners to act at this meeting ought not to defeat the rights of the respondent. Had it received its warrants it could either have had the money and the use thereof, or the interest which would have accrued. But if the Commissioners had elected the second alternative, that is to issue coupon bonds of Cascade County for the purpose of raising the money with which to discharge said debt, the inquiry arises as to whether interest should be paid upon said debt, and if so from what time shall it be computed. The Act organizing the county is silent upon this point. In other words, it does not say in so many words that interest shall be paid upon the debt until it is discharged by the proceeds of the bonds for the issuance of which it provides. On the other hand, the Act does provide that if the debt is paid by warrants drawn upon the general fund, they shall bear interest, and it provides the time from which the interest shall commence. In the absence of any special provision in the Act, we are left to interpret it in the light of the general law and with reference to the scope and purpose of the law under consideration. It is fair to assume that the Legislature acted in the belief that the Cascade Commissioners would at their first regular meeting make their election as to the method by which they would pay the debt, and that if they chose to pay it by issuing coupon bonds, they would proceed at once to advertise as required by section 810, supra, and raise the money with which to pay said debt.

It is fair to assume that the Legislature believed that bidders could be found in the markets of the world for these bonds. We observe that the Commissioners could not have issued and sold the bonds at their first meeting if they had elected to do so. We observe, further, that they were not bound to issue warrants upon a special fund which they had not had reasonable time to provide. Said warrants when presented to the treasurer and indorsed "not paid for want of funds" would draw interest under the General Law. This would not be a fair construction of the Act under consideration. We think, then, that it was the expectation of the Legislature that the County Commissioners would provide for the payment of this debt in a reasonable time, if they saw fit to sell bonds for that purpose. Certainly it was the duty of the appellant to have realized the money by the time of its second meeting, which, according to the allegations of the petition, was on the 6th of June, 1888. At this meeting an agent of Choteau County demanded of the appellant warrants upon the general fund or the money in payment of said indebtedness, and its Commissioners refused to do either. They had failed to take action in the matter at the March session, in violation of the plain, imperative mandate of the Statute. They again refused at the June session, and continue thus in open defiance of the law to the present time. We think this constitutes a case of money "withheld by an unreasonable and vexatious delay;" and that it should bear interest from the 6th day of June, 1888, at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, under section 1237 of the Compiled Statutes.

But we are met at this point with the argument that "this Board is composed of public officers, who give bonds for the faithful performance of their official duties, on which they are directly answerable for neglect or violation of duty. And in this instance, by virtue of the Act in question, they are created a special tribunal for the performance of certain public governmental functions or duties imposed by 7 L. R. A positive law. And under such circumstances nothing is better settled than that the County or other municipal corporation cannot be held liable for a violation or neglect of duty by its officers." And we are referred to the following authorities in support of this position: Cooley, Torts, p. 621; Richmond v. Long, 94 Am. Dec. 461, 17 Gratt. 873; Anne Arundel Co. v. Duckett, 20 Md. 468, 88 Am. Dec. 566, last note; Stewart v. New Orleans, 9 La. Ann. 461, 61 Am. Dec. 218; Lloyd v. New York, 5 N. Y. 369, 55 Am. Dec. 847; Lorillard v. Monroe, 11 N. Y. 895, 62 Am. Dec. 124, note; Chumassero v. Potts, 2 Mont. 242; People v. Tweed, 18 Abb. Pr. N. S. 77, referred to in note 62 Am. Dec. 124.

The doctrine of these cases is that when the law devolves upon certain public officers a duty to perform as such the rule of respondet superior does not apply to them. This rule can only apply where the relation of master and servant or principal and agent exists. In such cases the master or principal must answer for the conduct of the servant or agent within the scope of the service or agency imposed. Judge Rives, of the Supreme Court of Virginia, in the case of Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 873, 94 Am. Dec. 461, in speaking of municipal corporations, lays down this doctrine in the following language, to wit: "The functions of such municipalities are obviously two-fold: (1) political, discretionary and legislative, being such public franchises as are conferred upon them for the government of their inhabitants and the ordering of their public officers, and to be exercised solely for the public good rather than their special advantage; and (2) those ministerial, specified duties, which are assumed in consideration of the privileges conferred by their charter. Within the sphere of the former, they are entitled to this exemption; inasmuch as the corporation is a part of the government and to that extent its officers are public officers, and as such entitled to the protection of this principle; but within the sphere of the latter they drop the badges of their governmental offices, and stand forth as the delegates of a private corporation in the exercise of private franchises, and amenable as such to the great fundamental doctrine of liability for the acts of their servants.

Again the Supreme Court of the State of New York, in the celebrated case of People v. Tweed, 18 Abb. Pr. N. S. 77, lays down this doctrine as follows, to wit: "This special commission, appointed by the Legislature, whether or not they were a corporation, or a quasi corporation, it is not material to inquire. It is sufficient to say they were created, by an Act of the State, public officers, and they were invested with certain specified powers as such, to be exercised for special and limited purposes; but it was nevertheless clearly an office of public trust, to be executed for confessedly public purposes. They were not created the agents of the County of New York, or of the board of supervisors in their corporate capacity. Lorillard v. Monroe, 11 N. Y. 895, 62 Am. Dec. 120.

"The county could not be sued or made responsible for the manner in which they discharged or used the duties of their office, for their breach of duty, for misfeasance or nonfeasance, or for frauds, collusions, conspiracy or embezzlement of money."

We hold, then, that while a county is a corporation for many purposes, and as such an independent legal entity endowed by law with a limited portion of the sovereignty of the State, and as such charged with duties political and discretionary in their character, to be exercised for the public good, and that the board of county commissioners is the organ through which its functions are mainly executed, still, when the law itself imposes a duty upon its commissioners as such, and they are not appointed thereto by the county, the county will not be responsible for their breach of duty or for their nonfeasance or misfeasance in relation to such duty. The Organic Act of Cascade County imposes upon its Commissioners the duty of selecting which of two methods shall be adopted in the payment of its indebtedness, and declares what they shall do when they have determined which method they will adopt. They derive their power from the law alone. None of it comes from the County. They are in no legal sense the servants or agents of the County, so that the doctrine of respondet superior can apply to them. It follows, therefore, that the taxpayers of the County of Cascade cannot be burdened with $1 more indebtedness than the Legislative Act imposes. And when we turn to it we find that the principal sum is $30,000, and interest on warrants, if they are issued at all, from the time they are presented to the treasurer, and by him indorsed "Not paid for want of funds," at the rate of 7 per cent; but if coupon bonds are issued and sold, and the debt paid from the proceeds thereof, then no interest at all shall be paid by the County.

8. The second ground of appeal presents the question of the correctness of an item of costs of $1,582.85. Of this item the court below allowed the sum of $1,059, from which defendant appealed; no appeal on the part of plaintiff. This was taxed as the fees of the county attorney, under § 847, p. 820, Comp. Stat. This section provides, among other things, that the county attorney shall receive "for collections made for the county or territory on all sums of $500 or less, 10 per cent thereof; on all sums over $500, 10 per cent on the first $500, and 5 per cent on the excess over $500 . . . all fees in this section hereinbefore provided shall be taxed as costs." The defendant contends that the above section applies to the collections of money actually made and paid into the treasury, and not to the proceeding by writ of mandate to compel the performance of a duty, notwithstanding such duty is the payment of money into the treasury. At first we thought this position correct, but upon fuller consideration we have reached a different conclusion, and follow the construction given by the Supreme Court of California to a similar statute, in the case of Higby v. Calaveras Co. 18 Cal. 176. In this case the court says: "But it 7 L. R. A.

is argued that this case is not brought within the purview of the Statute, for the reason that this proceeding was not an action, but a mere mandate, not brought for the recovery of money, but to enforce a specific obligation, the direct effect of which was not the collection of money, but the enforcement of a ministerial duty, which resulted in securing the evidence of a debt rather than the payment of it. We think, however, that there is more ingenuity than soundness in this view. The Statute makes no other provision for this service, and we cannot suppose that the Legislature meant that the compensation of the district attorney should be made dependent upon the nature or form of the action. The substantial thing intended was a proceeding whereby the claim might be realized, and whether this were by action of debt or mandamus was not important, if this end were secured. Nor is it important whether this result be obtained by a judgment for money or for anything else which was equivalent, or could be made equivalent, to money. The assurance of the warrant by a judgment affirming the indebtedness of Amador County was in effect the collection of the money, or the securing of it to the County of Calaveras; and when that county used the warrant as money it became liable to the attorney for his fees as if the money had been directly paid to it. This would be the true construction of an ordinary contract between counsel and client, and we see no reason for a different rule here."

The argument that the fee cannot be paid until the money is collected is not sound, because the Statute provides that it shall be taxed as costs, and this should be done at the time the judgment is rendered.

Section 846, supra, provides "that in no case shall the fees allowed by this section . . . exceed in amount the sum of $1,200 in any county, and the county attorney shall furnish to the county commissioners a statement of all fees received by him, which, together with the fees allowed by the county commissioners, shall not exceed the sum of $1,200." This Statute governs in this case. By its provisions the county attorney cannot receive a greater sum as fees than $1,200; and the commissions allowed by the Statute are limited by this provision. If the county attorney who was in office when the case was tried below has received the maximum of $1,200 in fees, then he can receive no more.

The case will be remanded upon this point, with directions to the court below to ascertain by proof what amount of fees the county attorney of Choteau County has already received. This sum will be deducted from $1,200, the remainder will be taxed against the defendant and collected as costs.

Judgment modified.

DeWolfe and Liddell, JJ., concur.

Motion for rehearing overruled July 12, 1889.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

WALKER
v.
VICKSBURG, SHREVEPORT & PACIFIC
R. CO., Appt.,

(.....La. Ann.....)

*1. While it is the duty of a railroad company to stop its train at the station to which it has contracted to carry a passenger, and to land him safely and conveniently, yet the fact that the company neglects this duty, and its train passes the station without stopping, does not justify a passenger in jumping from the moving train, unless expressly or impliedly invited to do so by the employees of the company.

2. The plaintiff's act in jumping from the moving train was purely voluntary, uninfluenced by any invitation expressed or intended by the Company's employees, and excused by no impending danger or necessity of any kind, except his simple unwillingness to be carried beyond his destination; it was imprudent and dangerous, and his action for resulting injury is barred by his own contributory fault

(Watkins, J., dissents.)

(December, 1888.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for the Parish of Webster in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

*Head notes by FENNER, J.

The facts fully appear in the opinions. Messrs. Wise & Herndon and F. P. Stubbs for appellant.

Messrs. Watkins & Watkins for appellee.

Fenner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 16th of October, 1886, plaintiff was a passenger on defendant's train, having purchased a ticket from Bodeau Station to Doyline Station. The latter is a flag station, at which trains do not stop unless they have passengers to put off or take on. If a signal is given from the station that there are passengers to get on, the engineer blows two whistles to signify intention to stop. If there are passengers to put off, the conductor notifies the engineer by pulling the bell-rope, and the engineer, on receiving such signal, blows two whistles to signify the same intention. If there are no passengers to take on or put off, only one whistle is blown, and the train does not stop, but simply slackens speed to a rate of eight or ten miles an hour in passing the station, to enable the mails to be thrown on and off. On this occasion the train had been compelled to come almost to a stop about 200 yards from Doyline, on account of some oxen which were on the track. It then moved forward again, and the conductor,

NOTE.—Duty of railroads to furnish safe stations and platforms for use of passengers.

As a general rule, railroad companies are bound to keep in a safe condition all portions of their platforms and approaches thereto, where passengers taking passage on their cars would naturally or ordinarily be likely to go. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Sue, 25 Neb. 772.

The company must, for the safety of its passengers, properly light its platform within a reasonable time before the arrival and departure of trains. Grimes v. Pennsylvania Co. 36 Fed. Rep. 72.

Where a railroad train stops at a place of peril in a dark night, after notice has been given that the next stopping place would be at a certain station, the safety of the passengers requires that some notice or warning should be given them to retain their seats. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Edelstein (Pa.) 23 W. N. C. 342; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. McCormick, 124 Pa. 427.

A railroad company leaving unguarded a hole in a passageway at its station, likely to be used by persons going to and from its cars, is negligent. Green v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 36 Fed. Rep. 66.

Where a platform maintained jointly by two railroad companies for the purpose of enabling passengers to pass from the depot of one of the companies to that of the other is negligently left in an unsafe condition, both companies are liable to a passenger for injuries sustained while passing over such platform. Lucas v. Pennsylvania Co. (Ind.) 21 N. E. Rep. 972.

It is the duty of a railroad company so to fix its station or depot that a passenger who gets off at the depot or place to alight may do so without danger; and it is also its duty to fix such a way of exit from the depot over its right of way that a passenger may go away from the place at which he is invited to get on and off, without danger to life or limb; but it is not the company's duty to see him safe and secure in his exit from the track and over its right of way. Central R. Co. v. Thompson, 76 Ga. 770.

Negligence regarding stations. See notes to New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Doane (Ind.) 1 L. R. A. 157; Kelly v. Manhattan R. Co. (N. Y.) 3 L. R. A. 74; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Wortham (Tex.) 3 L. R. A. 368; Parsons v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 3 L. R. A. 683; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas (Ind.) 6 L. R. A. 193.

Railroads; reasonable rules for carriage of passengers.

Railroad companies have the power to make reasonable rules and regulations as to the manner of performing their duties as public carriers; that is to say, as to the hour and schedule time for starting and running their trains, and as to the places on the route at which particular trains shall stop in transit. Duling v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 5 Cent. Rep. 571, 66 Md. 120.

It is the duty of a passenger to inquire before embarking on a train whether it will stop at the station of his destination, and if he does so, and is misled by an agent authorized to speak for the company, he has his action against the company for the misdirection, but not for the refusal of the conductor to stop there, if it be a station at which the train is forbidden to stop by the regulations of the company. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Atchison, 47 Ark. 74.

A passenger having purchased a ticket at a reduced rate, good only on trains advertised to stop at certain stations, has no right thereunder to stop a train at a station not advertised; but if he signaled the train at a station where such train was obliged to stop when signaled, the company became liable to exemplary damages. Wilson v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. 63 Miss. 362.

Where an intending passenger purchased a ticket at the company's office when a train was about de-knowing he had this passenger to put off, attempted to signal the engineer with the bell-rope, but, owing to some tangle or disarrangement, could not do so, consequently the two whistles were not blown. The conductor, the engineer and the porter all agree on this point, and there is no contradictory statement. The porter only calls out flag-stations when there are passengers to put off and the signal to stop is blown. The plaintiff testifies that the porter did pass through the car, and call out Doyle Station, but this the porter positively denies, and, considering the uncontradicted testimony that no signal to stop was given, the fact is of little importance. The consequence was that the train passed by the station, only slackening its speed, as customary, but not stopping.

The plaintiff having several times made this same trip, and knowing his station, went out on the platform of the car for the purpose of getting off. He went down on the steps of the car, and, after passing a little beyond the station platform, seeing that the car did not stop, and, as he says, supposing that it was intended that he should get off, and that he could do so with safety, he stepped off while the train was moving; and he says that, as he was in the act of doing so, the train accelerated its motion, giving a sudden jerk, which threw him, and broke his ankle, occasioning the injuries for which his present action in damages is brought. He says that, just before he stepped off, someone called to him, "Is not this your station?" which acted in determining him to step off; but the evidence leaves no doubt that the person who asked the question was not any employé of the Company. The conductor says that, having failed to give the signal, he went through the train, after passing the station, to find plaintiff, intending to lack the train up to the station, and put him off, but failed to find him, and supposed he had gotten off when the train had stopped on account of the oxen on the track.

Under these facts, the fault of the Company, in not stopping its train, cannot be disputed. It was bound, under its contract, to stop, and safely discharge its passenger. But did its negligent failure to discharge this duty justify the plaintiff in jumping off the moving train, or absolve him from the charge of contributory negligence, which, under the settled jurisprudence of this court, is a bar to his recovery? We consider the law to be settled by the overwhelming weight of authority that while a railroad company is bound to stop its train at the station to which it has contracted to carry a passenger, and to land him safely and conveniently, the fact that the train is about to pass such a station without stopping does not justify the passenger in jumping off the moving train, unless expressly or impliedly invited to do so by the Company.

A leading case on the subject, which we select from a multitude of authorities, not only on account of the great lawyer who delivered it (Judge Black), but also because it has been expressly quoted and affirmed by this court, lays down the principle, in a state of facts strikingly similar to those before us, as follows: "The plaintiff below was a passenger in defendant's cars from Philadelphia to Morgan's parting in the direction he wished to go, and after he boarded the train he learned that it would not stop at the station for which he had purchased the ticket, he has no redress against the company. Duling v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. supra.

A railroad company, having sold a ticket to a point on its road, including a return trip, was bound to stop at the station and bring the passenger back, upon the usual signal, which had been recognized by the company, being given. Freeman v. Detroit, M. & M. R. Co. 9 West. Rep. 117, 65 Mich. 577.

Liability for injury to passenger, alighting from train.

Where the conductor has reason to believe that any passenger, on reaching the station of his destination, has not alighted, and is dilatory in the act of alighting, and he starts his train without examination or inquiry, and such passenger is in the act of alighting when the train is started, and is thereby injured, the company will be liable. Sherwood, J., dissents, on the ground that there was evidence to show the conductor that plaintiff was not in danger. Strauss v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 5 West. Rep. 433, 86 Mo. 421.

Where, before a passenger had safely alighted at a station, the conductor signaled the train to start, and jerked the passenger to the ground, injuring him, the carrier is liable. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood, 12 West. Rep. 313, 113 Ind. 544.

When a conductor is merely asked how long a train will stop at a certain station, and tells the passenger, he is not presumed to know that the latter desires to alight on business, and does not thereby assume any obligation to watch the movements of the passenger or delay the train on his account. Misouri Pac. R. Co. v. Foreman, 73 Tex. 311.

He is not bound at his peril to ascertain from any mere stranger of the existence of an agreement to change the arrangement and stop at an unusual place. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ganta, 38 Kan. 603.

A freight train accustomed to discharge passengers away from its platform, or where it is impracticable to reach it, may require them to leave at some convenient place. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Doane, 1 L. R. A. 157, 15 West. Rep. 465, 115 Ind. 433.

Where a passenger-freight train stopped at an inconvenient place, a female passenger was justified in supposing it would stop at the platform and, her presence being discovered as the train passed the station, it was negligence in the company not returning to the station or assisting her to alight from the train when it stopped, or to reach the station in safety. Ibid.

A female passenger required to alight from a freight train, beyond the station, was not negligent in not discovering gates into a private inclosure through which the station might be reached by an unmarked route; and the company is liable for injuries suffered by her falling while attempting to cross a cattle pit. Ibid.

Duty of carrier to stop train to allow passenger to alight.

It is the duty of the servants and employes on a passenger train to stop the train long enough for a passenger, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, considering age, sex and physical condition, to alight from the train safely before it is started or suffered to start. Hickman v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 8 West. Rep. 564, 91 Mo. 433; Central R. Co. v. Whitehead, 74 Ga. 441; Strauss v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 5 West. Rep. 433, 86 Mo. 421.

A sufficient time to permit a passenger to get off the train in safety means time to alight safely in the use of reasonable diligence and care, having re-

Corner. The train should have stopped at the latter place, but some defect in the bell-rope prevented the conductor from making the proper signal to the engineer, who therefore went past, though at a speed somewhat slackened on account of the switches which were there to be crossed. The plaintiff, seeing himself about to be carried on, jumped from the platform of the car, and was seriously hurt in the foot. . . . Persons to whom the management of a railroad is intrusted are bound to exercise the strictest vigilance. They must carry the passengers to their respective places of destination, and set them down safely, if human care and foresight can do it. . . . But they are answerable only for the direct and immediate consequences of errors committed by themselves. They are not insurers against the perils to which a passenger may expose himself by his own rashness and folly. . . . From these principles it follows very clearly that if a passenger is negligently carried beyond his station, where he . . . had a right to be let off, he can recover compensation for the inconvenience, the loss of time and the labor of traveling back, because these are the direct consequences of the wrong done to him. But, if he is foolhardy enough to jump off without waiting for the train to stop, he does it at his own risk, because this is gross imprudence, for which he can blame nobody but himself." Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Aspell, 23 Pa. 147.

This court long ago laid down the like doctrine in the following language: "If the daughter of plaintiff voluntarily jumped from the cars when in motion, even though it was the constant habit of the company to stop at that place, the leap not being made to avoid an imminent impending peril, produced by the misconduct of defendants, but to avoid being carried beyond her destination, she was herself guilty of such imprudence as relieves the company from the consequences of the want of caution on the part of their servants; for in such a case the accident may be attributed to the fault of both parties, which would destroy plaintiff's right to recover." And then the court quotes, with approval, the above decision of the Pennsylvania court. Damont v. New Orleans & O. R. Co. 9 La. Ann. 441.

In a very recent case we referred to this principle as an evident one, saying: "Now, supposing that any passenger on a regular train should labor under a similar mistake in believing, for instance, that the train was passing by the station to which he was destined, and, fearing that he might be carried beyond the same, should jump out as the train was pulling out of the station, and be injured by falling; could the company be held liable for injuries thus received? Evidently not." Reary v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 40 La. Ann. 82.

In the multitude of adjudications and judicial expressions on this subject, by numerous courts, there have naturally arisen varieties and conflicts of opinions, and decisions, hostile, or apparently hostile, to each other, are quoted on either side; but the weight of authority undoubtedly sustains the views above expressed, and, at all events,—what more nearly concerns us,—they have been adopted in the jurisprudence of Louisiana.

gard to all the circumstances. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lyons (Pa.) 25 W. N. C. 6.

A conductor has no right to assume, because he does not see a passenger in the coach on looking into it, that he has leaped out in the dark from the moving train; but it is his duty to know that he has a passenger for a station, to have the station announced and to stop the train. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Mask, 64 Miss. 738.

Passenger carried beyond his destination.

A passenger carried beyond his station may recover for an injury sustained by falling through a trestle work. Whether he consented to leave the train at that point, so as to waive his right, is a question for the jury. Winkler v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 3 West. Rep. 423, 21 Mo. App. 99.

The complaint in an action for carrying a passenger beyond his station should aver that under the rules of the company the train should have stopped at the station. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Bills, 1 West. Rep. 619, 104 Ind. 12.

The plaintiff is entitled to recover damages for his trouble and inconvenience in getting back to his destination. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Lockhart, 79 Ala. 815.

A railroad company which sells a ticket to a point beyond its line is liable for injuries to the passenger caused by the negligence of those in charge of the train and car at a point beyond its own line to which the passenger was carried without change of cars. Chollette v. Omaha & N. V. R. Co. (Neb.) 4 L. R. A. 136.

A woman with an infant, wrongfully carried by a train beyond her destination, and who insists on being put off, in consequence of which she has to walk back a mile, is not thereby prevented from recovering damages, where she was without money, and, if she had gone on, would have been left late at night in a strange city. Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Crisp, 73 Tex. 236.

Where a train passes the station to which the passenger was entitled to be carried, without stopping a sufficient time for him to get off, the carrier is liable in damages. The fact that the train carried freight as well as passengers makes no difference. White Water Valley R. Co. v. Butler, 12 West. Rep. 207, 112 Ind. 593.

A railroad company admitting passengers to a freight train incurs the same liability to transport them safely as if on a passenger train. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Doane, 1 L. R. A. 157, 15 West. Rep. 465, 115 Ind. 435.

If a passenger-freight train is stopped near a station, and the passengers rightfully understand they are to leave the train, the company is liable for the injuries they may sustain in so doing, to the same extent and upon the same ground as if suffered from the defectiveness of its own premises. Ibid.

Contributory negligence defeats right of action.

An administrator cannot recover for the death of his decedent, caused by negligence of a railroad company, unless decedent was in the exercise of due care for his own safety. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Fietz, 12 West. Rep. 844, 123 Ill. 518.

An adult, if guilty of any negligence, however slight, contributing directly to produce the injury to himself, cannot recover. Dowling v. Allen, 5 West. Rep. 370, 88 Mo. 293; Monongahela City v. Fischer, 2 Cent. Rep. 79, 111 Pa. 9; Western Union Tele. Co. v. McDaniel, 1 West. Rep. 274, 103 Ind. 204; Cook v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 1 West. Rep. 452, 19 Mo. App. 329.

A street railway is not liable for a personal injury when it appears that, when plaintiff signaled the conductor to stop the car, the latter rang the bell for that purpose, and the car immediately be-

The question is, then, whether the plaintiff, in jumping off the moving train, acted upon the express or implied invitation of the Company. The evidence conclusively negatives any express invitation on the part of any employé of the Company. It is equally clear that the officers in charge of the train never intended or expected that plaintiff should get off, and certainly did not slack up for the purpose of letting him get off. They acted precisely as they would have done had there been no passengers to take on or put off; for the engineer had no signal to that effect, therefore did not know that there was a passenger to put off, and only slackened the speed, as was his duty on all occasions, simply to allow the exchange of mails. Is it possible to construe this as implying an invitation? If so, such an invitation is given to everyone who wants to get off the train whenever it passes such a station.

The testimony is conflicting as to the rate of speed at which the train passed the station. Nothing can be more uncertain than such estimates, especially when made by unskilled observers. The natural and probable conclusion from the circumstances is that the train only made the usual slackening of speed for exchanging the mails. There was no reason why the engineer should have acted otherwise. Plaintiff thinks he would have landed safely but for the acceleration of speed which took place as he was in the act of jumping. But this acceleration only took place after the train had passed the platform, and after the mails had been exchanged, which was the usual and natural course. If plaintiff chose to infer an invitation to jump off from these customary acts of the Company, it was a rash conclusion. One of his own witnesses testifies that he never, at any other time, saw a person jump from a train moving as fast as that one was, although he says it was moving slowly. That plaintiff's action was imprudent is shown by the result, and, as we think, by all the circumstances. His own evidence shows that he hesitated about attempting the jump, and was only determined by the question of a third person, and the thought that otherwise he would be carried beyond his station. His act was purely voluntary, uninfluenced by any invitation expressed or intended by the employés of the Company, and excused by no impending danger or necessity of any kind, except his mere unwillingness to be carried beyond his station. It was imprudent and dangerous, and his action for the resulting injury is clearly barred by his own contributory fault. It is therefore ordered and decreed that the verdict and judgment appealed from be annulled and set aside, and that there be judgment in favor of defendant rejecting the demand, at plaintiff's costs in both courts.

Watkins, J., dissenting:

Plaintiff sued the Railroad Company for $10,000 damages for injuries he received in alighting from one of its trains while in motion, on which he was a passenger, it having passed the station to which he was ticketed without making a full stop, only slowing up to permit an exchange of mails. There was a verdict of a jury in his favor, which this court has set aside, and the substance of the majority opinion is that the act of the plaintiff was voluntary, and without invitation on the part of the officers and agents of the Railroad Company; and while the Company was, primarily, guilty of negligence in failing to carry out its contract of safe carriage, the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

The opinion puts the proposition thus: "The question is, then, whether the plaintiff, in jumping off the moving train, acted upon the express or implied invitation of the Company;" and, answering that question, the opinion says: "The evidence conclusively negatives any express invitation on the part of any employé of the Company. It is equally clear that the officers in charge of the train never intended or expected that he should get off." These dicta are the sole foundation of the opinion, and the legal proposition announced rests exclusively upon Damont v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 9 La. Ann. 411; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Appell, 38 Pa. 147, and Rearv v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 40 La. Ann. 32.

Let us see what is their purport, and what are the principles they announce, and whether they are a proper foundation for the opinion. In gan to slow down, and that plaintiff, without waiting for the car to stop, stepped from the car while it was in motion. Harmon v. Washington & G. R. Co. (D. C.) 8 Cent. Rep. 738.

One who jumps from a train moving twenty-five miles an hour, when not invited or ordered to do so by the agents of the railroad company, or not to avoid some threatened peril, is guilty of contributory negligence barring a recovery for injuries thereby received. Jarrett v. Atlanta & W. B. R. Co. (Ga.) 9 S. E. Rep. 681.

Where a person is killed or injured by attempting to jump from a railroad train while it is crossing a public street, the negligence of the railroad company in failing to ring its locomotive bell while crossing the street, as required by law, while it is clearly negligence, does not contribute to the injury; and of such failure plaintiff cannot complain; and such failure is therefore no cause for a recovery by one so injured. Central R. Co. v. Harris, 76 Ga. 501.

Where sufficient time was allowed the passenger to get off, but he did not do so, and remained on the train till it started, when he jumped off and was injured, he cannot recover for the injury. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lyons (Pa.) 25 W. N. C. 6.

A passenger who is unnecessarily and improperly upon the platform of a railroad car, knowing that the train is about to start, and who is thrown down and injured by the starting of the engine with no unusual or unnecessary jerk, cannot recover therefor. Torrey v. Boston & A. R. Co. 7 New Eng. Rep. 148, 147 Mass. 412.

The fact that he was at the time looking for some one does not exonerate him in case he was injured. Ibid.

A passenger carried beyond her stopping place, who takes the risk of getting off while the train is in motion, must take the consequences, and cannot recover against the railroad company for injuries thereby sustained. Watson v. Georgia Pac. R. Co. 81 Ga. 476.

A man who attempted, while a street-car was in motion, to step off from the front of the car with a keg of lead in his hands, is guilty of negligence which will prevent his recovering for injuries which he would not have received if he had remained on the steps, although there was negligence on the

the Damont Case none of the facts are stated. The only question discussed was the correctness of the charge of the judge quo to the jury, and the case was remanded for a new trial. The only cases cited therein as authority were Lease v. Pontchartrain R. Co. 17 La. 362, and Fleitas v. Pontchartrain R. Co. 18 La. 339. Those two cases involved claims for damages sustained by the owners of slaves who had been killed, one in attempting to cross a railroad track, and the other while lying on the track, either drunk or asleep. The mere citation of those cases as authority for the decision of that case shows how imperfectly understood were the questions involved, in 1854, when that opinion was rendered; for, of course, there being between the owners of the slaves and the railroad companies no contractual relations whatever, the former were primarily guilty of gross negligence, and the latter were without fault. But the opinion quotes with approval the paragraph from Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Aspell, which was quoted in the Damont Case, but in that extract no part of the facts of that case is recited. They are brought forward in Wood's Railway Law, at pages 1130 and 1132, and we quote them to show how very inapplicable to this case they are. They are as follows, viz.: "Whilst the train was in motion, the plaintiff leaped from the car, though warned by the conductor and brakeman not to do so, and informed him that the train would be stopped and backed to the station. . . . If he had heeded them, he would have been safely let down, at the place he desired to stop at, in less than a minute and a half. Instead of this, he took a leap which promised him nothing but death; for it was made in the darkness of midnight, against a wood-pile close to the track, and from a car going probably at the full rate of ten miles an hour."

On this state of facts both the Aspell and Damont Cases depend. On such a state of facts, of course, the plaintiffs were held to have been guilty of gross negligence, and the railroad companies without fault. But why should those decisions be cited in this case as sustaining the doctrine of contributory negligence? I confess I cannot understand, for I respectfully submit that this record presents no such case.

Nor is the case of Reary v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. at all applicable, because it was one of a little girl who received injuries in jumping from a train of cars while in motion. But she was not a passenger. The train was in the depot-yard being uncoupled at the time, and the conductor had gone home. The paragraph quoted from that case in the opinion was hypothetically stated, merely for the purpose of an illustration, and has no weight, as a part of that decision. Without antagonizing the opinion on its statement of facts, I propose to make an independent one.

As a witness, the plaintiff says that, when within 200 yards of the station of his departure, there was a yoke of oxen on the track, and the speed of the train was slackened until they were frightened off. Afterwards the speed was increased a little, the whistle blown, and it was again reduced, and slowly moved by the depot platform, while the mail was being exchanged. When the train passed the depot he thought it was running slowly enough for a man to get off without danger. The only thing that prevented him getting off safely was that the train gave a jerk forward as he got off. The train was moving all the time, but very slowly. The place where he attempted to alight was a better place to get off than that where persons usually get off. The ground was smoother. The train was running at less than one half its usual speed. When he was passing the place where the ties, etc., were lying, he thought it was not a safe place to get off. As he hurriedly made up his mind, the train passed an open place, and he got off there, because he thought it was better ground, and he could get off there without getting hurt. Using his own language, he says: "Just at the moment that I got off, the train made a jerk. I was in the act of leaving the steps, when the jerk came. I had let go the railing, and had started to step in the direction of the way the train was going, and one foot had left the steps, and the other [was] still on the steps, and [in the act of] leaving, when the jerk came." This occurrence happened at 10 o'clock A. M.

part of the carrier. Ricketts v. Birmingham Street R. Co. 85 Ala. 600.

Exception to rule of contributory negligence.

The rule that it is negligence in a passenger to jump from a moving train is subject to exceptions, —as, when the passenger is placed in peril by the default or negligence of the company, or when he leaves the train, while it is in motion, by the direction of the company's agents. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lyons (Pa.) 25 W. N. C. 6.

Where a boy sixteen years of age leaped from a train, upon which he was a trespasser, at a show of force displayed by the conductor, it was held that the company was liable. Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Pitzer, 4 West. Rep. 257, 109 Ind. 179.

A street-car passenger who has signaled for the car to stop so he may alight is not guilty of contributory negligence in going upon the step of the car when it slows up, as he has a right to expect that it will stop; and where it starts up again with a jerk before stopping, and he is thrown off, the accident is not the result of contributory negligence. Harmon v. Washington & G. R. Co. (D. C.) 17 Wash. L. Rep. 426
71 L. R. A.

A company is responsible for injuries resulting from acts done under the direction of the conductor. Bellman v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 42 Hun. 180.

Negligence cannot be imputed to a passenger, although a woman advanced in pregnancy jumped from a car to the ground in obedience to an instruction from the conductor, the train having been stopped at a place other than the usual platform. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Leapley, 4 Cent. Rep. 253, 65 Md. 571.

Where a train stops at a station and starts again before a passenger can alight, an attempt by him to leave it while it is moving, made under the conductor's direction, is not, as a matter of law, contributory negligence which will bar a recovery for injuries sustained in doing so. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Person, 49 Ark. 182.

Where the conductor announces the name of the station after the train stops, the announcement is equivalent to an invitation to alight; and if passengers are deceived by such an announcement, and are consequently injured, the railroad company will be responsible. Central R. Co. v. Thompson 76 Ga. 770.

Another witness for plaintiff states that he was present, and saw the train approach the station. Using his own words, he says: "I think the train checked up a little, west of the platform, but near it. I do not think the train stopped entirely at the station this trip. . . . I think the train came nearer stopping that day than it usually does to put off the mail. . . . About the time the locomotive got opposite the platform the train was moving very slow."

Another of plaintiff's witnesses states, using his own language: "I was at Doyline Station the day that Mr. Walker got his leg broke. I was in about fifteen steps of him when it happened. I saw him when he went to step off the train, and it appeared to me that, as he did so, the train got faster, and jerked his feet from under him. Just before and at the time he attempted to get off the train was going slow, and just as he went to step it appeared to me that it jerked his feet from under him. I do not know that it was going any slower than when they checked up for the mail. I have never seen anyone get off there when the train was running as fast as it was then, except Mr. Walker. I have frequently got on the train . . . when it was going as fast as that."

On the part of the defendant there is not a syllable of positive testimony in opposition to these emphatic statements. The conductor was sworn, and simply stated "that the average rate of running is about twenty-four and one half miles an hour on the road from Monroe to Shreveport. This was true in October, 1886. . . . The average rate of speed, when passing flag stations, when the train does not stop, is between eight and twelve miles an hour, for the exchange of mails, as above stated." This witness does not profess to have any knowledge of the occurrence, because he says: "I learned the day afterwards that Mr. Walker jumped off the train, and had broken his leg." He subsequently volunteered the statement: "I judge that the train was running at about ten miles an hour on that day, when it passed Doyline, because it usually passes at that speed when only delivering the mail."

The engineer testified that he was on this road, running a passenger engine and train, in October, 1886, but that he had "no recollection of the accident that resulted in the injury of Mr. Walker." Said he did not "recollect who was engineer on the passenger train going east, on the 16th of October, 1886."

The defendant's third witness was the porter, who states, using his own words: "I recollect the time that Mr. Walker was said to have been hurt, at or near Doyline Station." He says further: "I remember that on that day no signal was given to stop at Doyline, and I did not leave my seat."

Consequently it is established by the concurring statements of defendant's three witnesses, all of them trainmen, that they knew nothing of the occurrence, and could testify to nothing adverse to the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses. Of course the mere theoretical conjecture of the engineer, as to the speed of the train, amounts to nothing at all.

The recital of the foregoing facts is sufficient to take this case out of the principle announced in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Aspell. They plainly show the defendant in fault, and without excuse. Now, I will consider whether they show the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence to such a degree as to preclude his right to recover. A review of authorities will first be necessary.

It was decided by the Supreme Court of Tennessee, in 1887, that the act of a passenger in alighting from a train while in slow motion, who sustained injuries in consequence, has been, in the courts of several of the States, treated as negligence per se, and no damages can be recovered; but, says the court (86 Tenn. (2 Pickle) 848), "this is contrary to the current of judicial opinion, in this country at least. The true rule deducible therefrom is stated in 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1180, to be that 'in all cases the question is one of fact whether, in view of the particular circumstances, the passenger was guilty of negligence in attempting to leave the train while it was in motion. In this, as in all other matters where the safety of passengers is concerned, the company owes a duty to the passenger to act with proper care and caution; and if the motion of the train is not entirely stopped, and the passenger is expressly or impliedly invited to leave the train while moving at a slow rate of speed, he has a right to presume that it is safe for him to do so. . . . If the train is moving slowly, and there is no obvious danger in getting off, it cannot be said to be negligence per se to make the attempt, especially if the passenger is directed to do so; . . . and it would be wrong to instruct the jury that such an attempt per se constituted contributory negligence.' Id. 1129. 'As a rule, it may be said that where a passenger, by the wrongful act of the company, is compelled to choose between leaving the cars while they are moving slowly, or submitting to the inconvenience of being carried by the station where he desires to stop, the company is liable for the consequences of the choice, provided it is not exercised negligently or unreasonably.' Id. 1181, 1182."—citing Thompson, Carr. 227-267. See also Plopper v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 13 Hun, 625; Keating v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 673; and Taber v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 71 N. Y. 489.

"The earlier cases," says the Tennessee court, "establish the rule that leaving a train [while] in motion was such negligence as defeated the right of recovery, unless done to avoid danger of remaining on board; and this is still stated as the 'general rule' in many authorities. 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1126; Thompson, Carr. 267.

"But the rule we have laid down is the modern one, and formulated from the many exceptions, and this modification has been before recognized by this court. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Conner, 15 Lea, 253;" Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stacker, 86 Tenn. (2 Pickle) 845.

It was decided by the Supreme Court of Georgia, in a recent case, that "the railroad was bound to put him [a passenger] off,—to stop its train for this purpose. This it failed to do, and it was not want of ordinary care in the passenger to use the only means to get off the course of the defendant permitted." Georgia R. & Bkq. Co. v. McCurdy, 45 Ga. 289. See also Filer v. New York Cent. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 47; Lloyd v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 53 Mo. 509; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Able, 59 Ill. 181.

The proper limitation of that rule is stated in Wood's Railway Law thus: "But, generally, no recovery can be had if the cars are under such motion as to render it obviously dangerous for a person to attempt to leave them,"—p. 1136, citing Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Hendricks, 26 Ind. 223; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Aspell, 23 Pa. 147; Dumont v. New Orleans & O. R. Co. 9 La. Ann. 441; Gavett v. Manchester & L. R. Co. 15 Gray, 501.

The author then proceeds: "And, under such circumstances, it is not sufficient to charge the company that the conductor advised the passengers to make the attempt. It is the duty of the passenger to exercise his own judgment, and, if the danger was so great that a man of ordinary prudence would not have attempted it, he is guilty of such contributory negligence as bars a recovery,"—citing Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Randolph, 53 Ill. 510; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Hazard, 26 Ill. 378.

"When the danger is apparent, it must not be braved simply because the company is bound to stop the train, or because it is very important that the passenger should stop at that particular time." Wood, Railway Law, 1136.

But the rule is stated concisely to be: "But, in all cases, the question of liability must necessarily be determined by the facts and circumstances of each case,—whether the train was in rapid motion, . . . and whether the real danger was obvious." 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1187.

"But where a railway company fails to bring its train to a full stop at a station, it will be liable in damages for injuries sustained by a passenger in attempting to get off, if, under all the circumstances, it was prudent for him to make the attempt." Ill. 1148, 1149; Price v. St. Louis, K. O. & N. R. Co. 72 Mo. 414; Central R. & N. E. Co. v. Letcher, 69 Ala. 106; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697 [24 L. ed. 545]; Memphis & O. R. Co. v. Copeland, 61 Ala. 876.

The italics in preceding quotations are those of the writer.

Abbott states the rule thus: "Alighting from the car at an unsuitable place is not contributory negligence, if the train is not stopped at a suitable one, and if there is not such apparent danger as would deter a person of ordinary prudence." 2 Abbott, Dig. Corp. 598.

Beach announces the rule thus: "As in the case of boarding a railway train in motion, so it is held not contributory negligence per se for a passenger to jump off a train which is moving." Gulveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Smith, 59 Tex. 406; Lloyd v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 53 Mo. 509; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kilgore, 32 Pa. 293; Brooks v. Boston & M. R. Co. 135 Mass. 21. Whether or not a railway company shall be held liable in damages for injuries sustained by a passenger in attempting to leave one of its trains while in motion will depend upon whether, under all the circumstances, it was prudent for him to make the attempt." Beach, Contrib. Neg. p. 157, § 53, citing the following authorities, viz.: Price v. St. Louis, K. O. & N. R. Co. 72 Mo. 414; Doss v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 59 Mo. 27; Parish v. Ruen, 62 Wis. 273; Langhoff v. Milwaukee & P. du O. R. Co. 19 Wis. 449; Curry v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 43 Wis. 605; Leaiff v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 64 Wis. 228; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Person, 49 Ark. 182; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. White, 48 Ark. 495; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Mask, 64 Miss. 783; Hunter v. Cooperstown & S. V. R. Co. 112 N. Y. 371, 2 L. R. A. 832, and many other cases.

In Solomon v. Manhattan R. Co. 103 N. Y. 437, 4 Cent. Rep. 775, it was held that, to justify a recovery, the act of the defendant must put the passenger to a sudden election between alternative danger or inconvenience, or create some situation "which interfered, to some extent, with his free agency, and was calculated to divert his attention from the danger, and create a confidence that the attempt could be made in safety."

This principle has been frequently maintained and upheld by different courts, and notably in the following, viz.: South Covington & O. Street R. Co. v. Ware, 84 Ky. 267; Collins v. Davidson, 19 Fed. Rep. 83; Haff v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 14 Fed. Rep. 553; Lawrence v. Green, 70 Cal. 417; Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Miller, 46 Mich. 532; Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Carper, 112 Ind. 26, 11 West. Rep. 221; Stewart v. Boston & P. R. Corp. 148 Mass. 605, 6 New Eng. Rep. 273; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Webster (Pa.) 4 Cent. Rep. 638; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Person, 49 Ark. 182.

The rule was again formulated thus, in Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 64 Mich. 216, 7 West. Rep. 470: "In order to make him so [negligent], he must, as in all other cases, decide upon facts as they appear, as a man of ordinary care would do under the same circumstances. It is not right of any passenger to run evident risks to his safety, but the rule of prudence binding on him must be that which, under just such circumstances, would restrain all men of ordinary prudence. If the mind of an ordinarily prudent man would be impressed with the belief of danger, he has no right to incur the danger. If the danger would not be apparent, he is not negligent in acting on that assumption."

To this list might be added an almost indefinite number and variety of cases to the same effect. But it is quite sufficient to say that, on the faith of those quoted and cited, the following principles are firmly established on American jurisprudence, viz.:

- (1) That it is not per se negligence on the part of a passenger to alight from a moving train.
- (2) The question is one of fact whether, under the particular circumstances, the passenger was guilty of negligence in attempting to thus alight; and, if it appear that he was expressly or impliedly invited to leave the train while moving at a slow rate of speed, he has the right to presume that it is safe for him to do so.
- (3) When a passenger, by the wrongful act of a railroad company, is compelled to choose between leaving the cars while they are moving slowly, or submitting to the inconvenience of being carried by the station where he desires to stop, it is liable for the consequences of the choice, provided it is not exercised negligently or unreasonably, and it is not want of ordinary care in the passenger to use the only means to get off the course of the defendant permitted.
- (4) To justify a recovery, the act of the company must put the passenger to a sudden election between alternate danger or inconvenience, or create some situation which interfered, to some extent, with his free agency, and was calculated to divert his attention from the danger, and create a confidence that the attempt could be made in safety.

(b) It is the duty of the passenger to exercise his own judgment, and, if the danger was so great that a man of ordinary prudence would not have attempted it, he is guilty of such contributory negligence as bars a recovery; for, when the danger is apparent, it must not be braved simply because the company is bound to stop the train, or because it is very important that the passenger should stop at a particular place; but, in all cases, the question of liability must depend upon whether the train was in rapid motion and the danger obvious,—the question being whether, under the circumstances, it was prudent in the passenger to make the attempt to alight, and that depends upon whether the danger was imminent and obvious.

I therefore respectfully submit that the mere fact of the plaintiff having attempted to alight from defendant's train while in motion did not constitute his act contributory negligence, because it was voluntary and without an invitation, express or implied.

The act of the company put the plaintiff to a sudden election between alternative danger or inconvenience, and thus created a situation well calculated to divert his attention from that danger, and inspired a confidence in the safety of his attempt to alight therefrom. The danger does not appear to have been either apparent or imminent. I think the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the court should have been affirmed.

As was appropriately said in Williams v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 40 La. Ann. 420, in deciding a kindred question, "this court should seek to place its rulings and jurisprudence in line and in harmony with those of the Supreme Court of the United States, and of the courts of last resort of our sister States, whenever those decisions do not militate against the principles of our special and exceptional system of laws;" and it is in this spirit I have prepared this elaborate dissent, and in the hope of attaining this end that I place my views on record.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Richard B. ODOM et al.

v.

Nathaniel J. RIDDICK et al.

(.....N. C.....)

1. The undeclared lunacy of a grantor does not impair the title of a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice from his grantee.

2. A conveyance by a man of his real estate during the period in which the common-law right of married women to dower was suspended, barred all claim of his wife thereon although she did not join in the conveyance.

(January 14, 1890.)

CROSS appeals from a judgment of the Superior Court for Gates County confirming the report of a referee declaring voidable a deed to certain lands,—plaintiffs appealing from so much of the decree as made the avoidance of the deed conditional upon the repayment of the purchase money and refused to make it absolutely void, and defendants appealing from so much as held the deed voidable. Affirmed on plaintiffs' appeal; reversed on defendants'.

The action was brought by the heirs-at-law of one Oliver Odom to have a deed from him to his brother Richard declared null and void. Richard had disposed of the property conveyed by said deed and the persons holding title under his conveyance were made defendants.

The case was heard by a referee, who declared the deed voidable and directed that it be avoided upon repayment to defendants of the money paid by them for the property.

NOTE.—Bona fide purchaser.

See notes to Smythe v. Sprague (Mass.) 3 L. R. A. 622; McCleary v. Wakefield (Iowa) 2 L. R. A. 529. 7 L. R. A.

This decision was affirmed by the court, and both parties thereupon appealed.

Plaintiffs took the following among other exceptions:

1. That the court below held the findings of fact by the referee to be final.

2. That the avoidance of the deed was made to depend upon the condition that plaintiffs repay to defendants the amount of their purchase money.

3. That the deed was not held to be absolutely void as to Roxana B. Odom, wife of Oliver Odom.

Defendants excepted because the deed was held voidable and was avoided as to them upon repayment of their purchase money.

The further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. W. D. Pruden and L. L. Smith for plaintiffs.

Messrs. Battle & Mordcaid, for defendants:

A deed executed by a lunatic without guardian, like that of an infant without guardian, is not void, but only voidable.

2 Bl. Com. * 191, 192; 3 Bacon, Abr. Idiot and Lunatic, P.; 2 Kent, Com. 451; Riggan v. Green, 80 N. C. 226, and authorities cited.

The ground upon which courts of equity interpose to set aside contracts and other solemn acts of idiots and lunatics is fraud.

1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 237; Adams, Eq. 183.

If a court of equity in any case sets aside the deed of a non compos, it will ordinarily administer the equity of having him pay back to the other party the money or other thing received of him; and when it appears that the consideration is full, and the lunatic is not able to put the other party in statu quo, or if the benefit received is actual and of durable character—in either case, the court of equity will not be inclined to set aside the conveyance.

Riggan v. Green, supra, citing Carr v. Holliday, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. 844, 5 Ired. Eq. 167.

A purchaser for value from one whose deed was declared by the jury to be fraudulent and void gets a good title if he had no notice of the fraud in his vendee's deed.

Young v. Lathrop, 67 N. C. 63; Wade v. Saunders, 70 N. C. 270; Davis v. Council, 92 N. C. 725; Perry v. Jackson, 88 N. C. 103.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The reference was by consent. By its terms the referee was vested "with power, sitting as a chancellor, to decide upon the facts, and all matters of law and equity arising upon the pleadings and testimony, with liberty to either party, to except as to the referee's rulings on such matters of law and equity, and to appeal therefrom." The parties reserved the right to except only to the referee's rulings as to the law. By any reasonable construction, his findings of fact were to be conclusive. He found as a fact that the defendants purchased the land for value, and without notice of any mental incapacity on the part of Oliver Odom.

Had the defendants purchased directly from Oliver Odom for value, and without notice of his mental incapacity to make a deed, a court of equity would not ordinarily set aside the deed. Riggan v. Green, 80 N. C. 236.

We do not see that the condition of the defendants is any worse because they bought mediately, and not immediately. The presumption of law is in favor of sanity; and this presumption is so strong that when a want of it is claimed, even in a capital case, the burden is on the defendant to prove it, the presumption of sanity being stronger than the presumption of innocence. When, therefore, a purchaser sees a regular chain of title, formal in all particulars, upon the registration books, executed by grantors of full age, and not femes covert, he has a right to rely upon the presumption of sanity; and if, without any notice, or matter to put him upon inquiry, and for fair value, he takes a deed, he should be protected. Any other doctrine would place all titles upon the hazard. If the title of an innocent purchaser for value, and without notice, can be upset for the alleged mental incapacity of one grantor, it can be done though the grantor may have been a very remote one. The evidence must necessarily be sought among those friendly to the heirs of such grantor,—the neighbors and acquaintances of the party of alleged incapacity; and it would be difficult for the grantee in possession to furnish proof of the sanity of every grantor through whom he claims. Every man who shows the abnormal condition of mind which incapacitates him to make a conveyance of his property is sure to attract the attention of those around him, who have the power, and sometimes exercise it, to conceal the fact. It is a safer rule to require his heirs, or those acting for them, to take prompt steps to have the deed set aside, and parties placed in statu quo, before the property is conveyed to other parties, and while the facts are capable of full investigation, than to subject a remote grantee to maintain the integrity of his title by rebutting allegations of incapacity in a very one of a long line of grantors.

7 L. R. A.

A purchaser for value, from one whose deed was declared by the jury to be fraudulent and void, gets a good title, if he has no notice of the fraud in his vendee's deed. Young v. Lathrop, 67 N. C. 63; Wade v. Saunders, 70 N. C. 270; Davis v. Council, 92 N. C. 725; Perry v. Jackson, 88 N. C. 103.

The fact that it is found here that the defendant's grantor obtained the deed without fraud or undue influence, for a full and fair price, and acting under advice of Oliver Odom's counsel, who had been his attorney for years, surely cannot be allowed to put the defendants in a worse plight than they would have been placed if their grantor had procured the conveyance by fraud and undue influence. The great teachers of English law say that persons of non-sane memory, etc., "are not totally disabled to convey or purchase, but only sub modo. Their conveyances are voidable but not void." 3 Bl. Com. 291; 2 Kent, Com. 451.

The deed of a person of unsound mind, not under guardianship, conveys the seisin. Wait v. Maxwell, 5 Pick. 217; Crouse v. Holman, 19 Ind. 80, and cases cited.

Story, Eq. Jur. § 227, says: "The ground upon which courts of equity now interfere to set aside the contracts and other acts, however solemn, of persons who are idiots, lunatics and otherwise non compos mentis is fraud. Such persons being incapable, in point of capacity, to enter into any valid contract, or to do any valid act, every person dealing with them, knowing their incapacity, is deemed to perpetrate a meditated fraud upon them and their rights." To same purport, Adams, Eq. 183, and cases cited.

This places the doctrine upon an intelligible basis, and delivers the courts from the evident injustice and insurmountable inconvenience of declaring that all contracts made with one apparently sane, but who proves to have been insane, are void ab initio for want of consenting mind. This doctrine would give a lunatic or his heirs restoration of property sold by him without return of the money received for it, as was actually held in Gibson v. Super, 6 Gray, 279, and Rogers v. Walker, 6 Pa. 871. The correct rule is stated by Mr. Story, in section 224: "If a purchase is made in good faith, without any knowledge of the incapacity, and no advantage has been taken of the party, courts of equity will not interfere to set aside the contract, if injustice will hereby be done to the other side, and the parties cannot be placed in statu quo."

Buswell, Insanity, § 413, says: "A completed contract for the sale of lands, made by an insane vendor, without fraud or notice to the vendee of the grantor's insanity, and for a fair consideration, will not be set aside, either at law or in equity, in favor of the vendor or his representatives, except the purchase money be restored, and the parties fully reinstated in the condition in which they were prior to the purchase. This rule appears to be unquestioned in the English courts." To the same effect is the able opinion of Horton, Ch. J., in Gribble v. Maxwell, 34 Kan. 8 (decided in 1885), in which numerous authorities are reviewed and commented upon; and also in Behrens v. McKenzie, 23 Iowa, 333, delivered by a very eminent judge (Dillon), and Corbit v. Smith, 7 Iowa, 60;

Allen v. Berryhill, 27 Iowa, 584; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 946. See also Seaman v. Cobb, 85 Ill. 296; Young v. Stevens, 48 N. H. 133; Baton v. Baton, 87 N. J. L. 108; Freed v. Brown, 55 Ind. 310; Carr v. Holliday, 5 Ired. Eq. 167.

In Lancaster Co. Nat. Bank v. Moore, 78 Pa. 407, a lunatic was held liable upon a note discounted for him by the bank; and Paxson, J., says: "It would be an unreasonable and unjust rule that such persons should be allowed to obtain the property of innocent parties, and retain both the property and its price. Here the bank, in good faith, loaned the defendant money on his note. The contract was executed, so far as the consideration is concerned, and it would be alike derogatory to sound law and good morals that he should be allowed to retain it to swell the corpus of his estate." To the same purport are Person v. Warren, 14 Barb. 488, and Allis v. Billings, 6 Met. 415.

The courts have gone further, and held that when the contract is fair and bona fide, executed and completed, and the parties cannot be again put in statu quo, and there was no notice of mental incapacity, the court will not set aside the contract at all. Molton v. Camroux, 9 Exch. 437, affirmed on appeal, 4 Exch. 17; Yauzer v. Skinner, 14 N. J. Eq. 389; Niell v. Morley, 9 Ves. Jr. 478; also Lord Chancellor Truro, in Price v. Berrington, 3 Macn. & G. 498 and Lord Cranworth, in Elliot v. Ince, 7 DeG. M. & G. 475.

It is clear, from these authorities, that the conveyances of an insane person, not previously declared insane, are voidable merely, and not void; that the right to set them aside is based upon the ground of fraud; and that the court will not usually interfere, unless there has been fraud, or a knowledge of the insanity by the other party, and will then place the parties in statu quo. When, therefore, as in this case, the grantee knew of the mental incapacity of the grantor, but it is found as a fact "that no fraud was practiced upon Oliver Odom, or undue influence exercised to induce him to make the deed; that he acted under the advice of his lawyer, who had been his counsel for years; that the price paid was a full and fair consideration for the land; and that the grant or was benefited by the making of the deed, as he and his family thereby received a home and support,"—it would seem that a court of equity would not set aside such conveyance even as between the parties thereto, and certainly not without restoring the status quo ante. Selby v. Jackson, 6 Beav. 192.

"Courts of equity ever watch with a jealous care every contract made with persons non compos mentis, and always interfere to set aside their contracts, however solemn, in all cases of fraud, or when the contract or act is not seen to be just in itself, or for the benefit of such persons." Riggan v. Green, 80 N. C. 239.

The deed of Richard Odom passed the legal title, and is only voidable as to Oliver Odom upon the ground of fraud in taking title from one whom he knew to be mentally incapacitated. The property has been conveyed for a fair value to innocent parties, who took without notice.

It has been held in the leading English case of Greenhalgh v. Dore, 20 Beav. 284, by the Master of the Rolls (since Lord Romilly), that if a conveyance is made by an alleged lunatic under undue influence, and for an inadequate consideration, a purchaser from such grantee for a valuable consideration, and without notice, would be protected, as any other purchaser for value, and without notice, from a fraudulent alienee. The court instances the insecurity of purchasers, if any other doctrine should be laid down.

The case of Ashcraft v. DeArmond, 44 Iowa, 229, is not exactly in point, but illustrates the proposition that deeds from an undecleared lunatic are voidable on the doctrine of fraud. It holds that where the grantee of a lunatic took for value, and without notice, a subsequent purchaser from such innocent grantee for value, though with notice of the original grantor's incapacity, would not be affected; and cites the well-established doctrine laid down in Kerr on Fraud and Mistake, 316, and cases there quoted. Indeed, the facts in Riggan v. Green, supra, are almost identical with this in every particular, and that case should be conclusive of this.

As to exception 6 of the plaintiff, it is sufficient to say: (1) Roxana B. Odom is not a party to this action; her rights, if any, are not set up in the complaint; and the plaintiffs claim under their father, and not under her. (2) The deed from Oliver to Richard Odom was executed February 21, 1866,—two years and a half before the married women's rights were enlarged by the Constitution of 1863, and more than a year before the Act was passed restoring to married women the common-law right of dower, March 2, 1867. There was no necessity then for a wife to join her husband to convey his land. Sutton v. Askew, 66 N. C. 187. See also Code, § 2115.

Our conclusion therefore is that, upon the facts found, judgment should have been entered for the defendants. This disposes of both appeals.

In the plaintiffs' appeal, no error; in the defendants' appeal, error, and reversed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Stephen KELLY

Joseph M. BENNETT, Appt.

(...Pa....)

1. The refusal of the court to grant a nonsuit is not assignable as error.

NOTE.—Proximate and remote cause of injury.

See Read v. Nicholas, post, 120.

7 L. R. A.

2. Only one point or subject should be embraced in an assignment of error.

3. Placing an iron railing surmounted with sharp points around an area in front of a house is not negligence such as to create a liability for injuries by one of such points to the hand of a traveler, which he puts out to save himself from falling when he slips on an icy pavement.

(February 3, 1890.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 8, for Philadelphia County in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Mr. Andrew Zane for appellant.

Messrs. J. Campbell Lancaster and William Henry Lex, for appellee:

The existence of the fence was the proximate, and not the remote, cause of the injury. The peculiar injury which the plaintiff suffered is immediately traceable to the sharp picket fence, and did not arise from any other cause.

Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa. 208; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kerr, 62 Pa. 858; Fleming v. Beck, 48 Pa. 313; Reach v. Parmeter, 23 Pa. 196; Wharton, Neg. p. 60, §§ 78, 97.

Kelly stumbled or slipped; he might have recovered himself or he might have fallen to the pavement, but just at this point of the accident another independent agency intervened, and that agency alone, the sharp-pointed fence, inflicted the injury.

South Side P. R. Co. v. Trich, 10 Cent. Rep. 367, 117 Pa. 390.

The existence of such a fence was of itself a nuisance. It makes no difference that there are similar railings existing throughout the city.

Wood, Nuis. § 267; Barnes v. Ward, 9 C. B. 398; Reinhard v. New York, 2 Daly, 248.

Paxson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

While this is a plain case for a reversal, we are embarrassed by the defective manner in which it was presented. The assignments of error are very carelessly or unskillfully drawn, and do not prove the case. Indeed, if we were to stand upon mere technicalities, we would be compelled to affirm the judgment. The first assignment is to the refusal of the court to grant a nonsuit, which we have said, at least a hundred times, is not assignable as error. The second and last assignment alleges error in not affirming the defendant's second, third and fourth points. The manner of assigning these errors is wrong, as our rules require separate assignments in such cases. Only one point or subject should be embraced in an assignment of error.

The defendant's first point is as follows: "If the jury believe that the accident occurred by the plaintiff slipping on the pavement, by reason of ice or any other material, then the plaintiff cannot recover." Inadequate as this point is to reach the merits of the case, we nevertheless think it should have been affirmed, in view of the undisputed facts.

The defendant below is the owner of a dwelling-house at the northeast corner of Spruce and Quince Streets, in the City of Philadelphia. In front of his house on Spruce Street there was an iron railing about four feet high to protect an area-way, and perhaps the front of the house. The railing was pointed at the top, of the arrow-head pattern. The plaintiff, while walking along the pavement, on the afternoon of January 25, 1888, slipped by reason of the snow or ice or both, and in falling put out his hand, which came in contact with one of the points of the railing, and was lacerated. For this injury he recovered a verdict of $782 in the court below.

The defendant was not shown to have been negligent in any respect. The railing was a lawful structure. The defendant has a right to protect his area in that manner. Had he not done so, and someone had fallen therein and been injured, there would have been more reason in charging him with negligence. It is said, however, that it should have been constructed without points. This is not so clear. The points are useful in preventing mischievous boys from climbing over it. What reason has the defendant to anticipate that the plaintiff would slip and fall precisely at that spot, and that, in doing so, he would reach out his hand and strike the railing? And if he had not such reason the railing cannot be regarded, under our cases, as the proximate cause of the injury. It will not do to say that the mere fact of the injury is evidence of negligence on the part of defendant. Had there been no railing there, the plaintiff might have fallen with his head against the sharp edge of the step and received a far worse injury. And, if he may recover in the one case, why not in the other? It will not do to hold that when a man slips upon an icy pavement, the owner of the pavement, or the fence, or the steps upon which he falls, must compensate him for any injury he may receive. Few men would be willing to own property under such conditions. This plaintiff has no case, and we will not dignify it by a further discussion.

Judgment reversed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Minnesota, ex rel. ST. PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS & MANITOBA R. CO.,
v.
DISTRICT COURT OF HENNEPIN COUNTY, Resp't.

(....Minn....)

*1. Upon the laying out of a public highway.
*Head notes by DICKINSON, J.

NOTE.—Laying out highway across railroad. Land already taken by the exercise of eminent domain for a public use, and actually used for that way across the track and right of way of a railroad company, the latter is not entitled to compensation for providing and maintaining cattle-guards and sign-boards at the new crossing.
7 L. R. A.

2. It is entitled to compensation for planking the road-way where it crosses the railroad tracks, and for the maintenance of the planking.

(December 26, 1889.)

purpose, may be taken by legislative authority for other public uses. When so taken, it is presumed that the second use is not inconsistent with or de-

CERTIORARI to the District Court of Hennepin County to review an order determining the amount to which relator was entitled as damages by reason of the laying of a public highway across its tracks. Reversed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Messa, Benton & Roberts, for relator:

Railway companies are just as much the owners of their lands as private persons, and their lands cannot be appropriated without full compensation.

City Charter, chap. 10, § 5; St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Minneapolis, 85 Minn. 141.

The compensation should be a full equivalent for all damages sustained, and should be sufficient to reimburse the party whose land is taken for all additional expense caused by the improvement.

Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Denman, 10 Minn. 267, 280, 283.

When highways and railways cross each other the law has made numerous requirements of the railroad companies. They must plank the crossings (Stat. 1887, chap. 15, §§ 1, 2, p. 71); maintain cattle guards (Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 34, §§ 54, 55), and signs.

Id. 53.

Where the railway track is laid over existing highways, the burden of this extra expense justly rests upon the railway company.

State v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 85 Minn. 181.

By the same process of reasoning, where the municipality extends its highway across the railway, it should either assume the same burden or reimburse the railway for the burden so imposed.

Old Colony & F. R. R. Co. v. Plymouth Co. 14 Gray, 155, 162; Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 58 Mich. 641, 648; Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 9 West. Rep. 578, 66 Mich. 42; Rorer, Railroads, p. 54; Massachusetts C. R. Co. v. Boston, C. & F. R. Co. 121 Mass. 126; State v. Bayonne (N. J.) 17 Atl. Rep. 971; structive to the former use. Miller v. Craig, 11 N. J. Eq. 175; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417; Peoria & P. U. R. Co. v. Peoria & F. R. Co. 105 Ill. 110; Wood v. Macon & B. R. Co. 68 Ga. 539; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 112 Ill. 589; Mills, Em. Dom. 143.

The new use should be a different use, and the change should be for the benefit of the public; whether this change shall be such a benefit is for the Legislature to determine. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. 97 Ill. 506.

Under a general authority to condemn lands for streets, a street may be laid out across a railroad (St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Minneapolis, 85 Minn. 141), but not longitudinally on the railroad track. Under the condemnation of a right to cross, nothing is acquired but a mere right of way, and the place of crossing will remain in common use of the parties for the exercise of their several franchises. The power to invade the privileges of a corporation in such a manner will not be inferred from a naked grant of the power to condemn. New Jersey S. R. Co. v. Long Branch Comrs. 39 N. J. L. 28.

The condemnation of such a right of crossing is for the benefit of the public. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. supra; Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 113 Ill. 156.

In New Jersey a public road cannot be laid across a railroad within 500 feet of a public road. State v. Capner, 8 Cent. Rep. 625, 49 N. J. L. 555.

The railroad corporation across whose road another railroad or highway is laid out has the like

Robbins v. St. Paul, S. & T. F. R. Co. 23 Minn. 236.

Mr. Robert D. Russell, City Atty., for respondent:

Railroads entering cities are subject under the general authority given to towns and cities to have roads and streets laid across their track. The franchise is taken subject to any inconvenience that may arise from such opening.

Mills, Em. Dom. § 45; Hannibal v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 49 Mo. 480; Little Miami & C. & X. R. Co. v. Dayton, 28 Ohio St. 510; St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Minneapolis, 85 Minn. 141; St. Paul Union Depot Co. v. St. Paul, 30 Minn. 359.

There are inconveniences and damages resulting from the exercise of the power of eminent domain either by a railroad corporation or an individual, which cannot be calculated and need not be considered.

St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Minneapolis, 85 Minn. 141.

There are also uncertain elements which cannot enter in. For example, in Massachusetts C. R. Co. v. Boston, C. & F. R. Co. 121 Mass. 124, the court says that it is not entitled to damages for the risk of being ordered by county commissioners, when in their judgment the safety and convenience of the public may require it, to provide additional safeguards for travelers crossing its railroad.

Massachusetts C. R. Co. v. Boston, C. & F. R. Co. 121 Mass. 124; Proprietors of Locks & Canals v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 10 Cush. 335, 392; Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Old Colony R. Corp. 13 Cush. 605, 811; Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Old Colony & F. R. R. Corp. 3 Allen, 142, 146; Old Colony & F. R. R. Co. v. Plymouth Co. 14 Gray, 155; State, Central R. Co. v. Bayonne, 17 Atl. Rep. 971.

Dickinson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The writ of certiorari has been resorted to right as all individuals or bodies corporate owning lands or easements, to recover damages for the injury occasioned to its title or right in the land occupied by its road. But it is not entitled to damages for the interruption and inconvenience occasioned to its business; nor for the increased liability to damages from accidents; nor for increased expense for ringing the bell; nor for the risk of being ordered by the county commissioners, when in their judgment the safety and convenience of the public may require it, to provide additional safeguards for travelers crossing the railroad; nor for the expenses of maintaining a flagman, alleged to be necessary to guard against the greater liability to accidents occasioned by the obstruction of the view along its railroad, at the crossing of a highway, by means of the abutments of the new railroad of the other corporation. Massachusetts C. R. Co. v. Boston C. R. Co. 121 Mass. 124; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Cincinnati S. R. Co. 30 Ohio St. 604; Old Colony & F. R. R. Co. v. Plymouth Co. 14 Gray, 155; Re First Street, 58 Mich. 641. But see St. Louis, I. & C. R. Co. v. Springfield & N. W. R. Co. 96 Ill. 274; Mills, Em. Dom. 141.

A general authority to lay out streets and alleys will not justify the laying out of a street across depot grounds when the easement of the railroad company and of the city cannot reasonably co-exist. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Faribault, 23 Minn. 167; Prospect Park & C. R. Co. v. Williamson, 91 N. Y. 553.

for the purpose of bringing here for review the action of the district court, upon an appeal by the relator to that court, in proceedings for laying out a street across the right of way of the relator, the Railroad Company, within the corporate limits of the City of Minneapolis. The objection urged by the relator, and upon which the action of the district court was based, was that the damages awarded by the commissioners were inadequate. In fact no damages were awarded. The taking in question was of a strip sixty feet wide, for the purpose of a public street, across the right of way of the relator. At the request of the Railroad Company, the commissioners made, in connection with their report to the court, special findings to the effect that it would cost: (1) for planking the railway crossing for the width of thirty-two feet, $92.20; (2) for renewing and maintaining the same, $250; (3) for cattle-guards across the railroad, $211.98; (4) for renewing and maintaining the same, the interest at 6 per cent on $500; (5) for signs at crossing, $4.19; (6) for renewal and maintenance of the same, $7.

The district court, deeming that the first, third and fifth of these items were allowable, made its order to the effect that the sum of those three items be awarded to the relator, and that in other respects the report of the commissioners be confirmed.

The motion on the part of the respondent to quash this writ is denied. Granting that the court was not authorized to thus fix the amount recoverable by the relator, but, by the requirements of the city charter, it should have recommended the matter to the same, or to other, commissioners, it is enough, to entitle the relator to this remedy, that the court did, upon the report of the commissioners, determine that the relator was entitled to receive the sum of the three items above referred to, $309.37, and no more, and made its order accordingly, confirming the report of the commissioners with this modification. This was a final determination of the matter, concluding the parties so long as that order should remain in force.

The relator contends that, upon the report of the commissioners, it was entitled to have awarded to it as compensation not only the sums therein specified as the cost of planking, cattle-guards and sign-boards, but also the further sums named for the maintenance of the same. The City of Minneapolis, which is the real party in interest opposed to the relator, claims that none of these items should be allowed. It should be conceded that the relator, in acquiring its right of way, whether by purchase directly, or by statutory proceedings under the power of eminent domain, acquired property rights which are protected from divestiture by the constitutional guaranty which declares that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 36 Minn. 402, and authorities hereafter cited.

Compensation must be allowed for whatever is to be regarded as a taking of the property of the corporation for other uses. We are now called upon to determine whether, in view of the duty imposed by General Statutes upon railroad companies to provide and maintain planking, cattle guards, and sign-boards at all highway crossings, the establishing of this highway over the relator's right of way entitles it to compensation for the expense thus imposed; or, in other words, whether, in view of the fact that this statutory duty as respects this particular locality did not exist until this highway was laid out over the relator's road, and only by reason of its having been so laid out, it should be considered that the obligation to provide and maintain this plank crossing, these cattle-guards and this sign-board constitutes a taking of the property of the Railroad Company, or deprives the Company of any right of property before belonging to it.

For the present we will confine our attention to the cattle-guards and sign-boards. The necessity for these arises from the dangerous nature of the use of the railroad property; and it cannot now be questioned that, as a matter of mere police regulation, the State has the power to impose upon railroad companies the duty of maintaining these safeguards. There can be no doubt that, if no such requirement had ever been embraced in our General Laws, or in the charters of railroad corporations, and if all our railroads had been constructed without such devices for lessening the dangers incident to railroad operations, it would be within the police power of the Legislature to require all railroad companies to provide such safe-guards at all existing railway crossings.

It has been decided in this court that the police power of the State authorized such requirements as to the construction of cattle-guards and fences. Gillam v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. 26 Minn. 268; Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Waldron, 11 Minn. 515.

It is but an exercise of the everywhere recognized police power of the State, regulating by reasonable and necessary means the use of instrumentalities otherwise attended with obvious and great danger to the public. No other principle is involved in such requirements, than is involved in imposing a reasonable limitation upon the speed of railway trains at street crossings, and within the limits of thickly populated municipal districts; or in requiring a bell to be rung or whistle blown at highway crossings, or the stoppage of trains at railway crossings, and in other like provisions which are found in the statutes of every State. Such statutory regulation of the use of property does not constitute a taking of the property, or its destruction. It is only the exercise of the power of the State to reasonably control the use of property and the conduct of the individual, so far as may be necessary for the public safety; and to such control every citizen and owner of property must submit without compensation. If the Legislature, then, could constitutionally, and without providing for compensation, have imposed this duty in the case supposed, after the railroad had been constructed and put in operation, by enacting a law requiring railroad companies to construct cattle-guards across their right of way, and to erect sign-boards to notify travelers of the existence of the railroad crossing, it will be found difficult to assign a reason in support of the relator's claim for compensation in this case. Although this street was not in existence when the railroad was constructed, and hence the requirement of the General Law did not impose the duty of putting in cattle-guards and sign-boards at this place at that time, yet, as soon as the street was laid out and opened, the already existing law became applicable, and required these things to be done. But this was an exercise of the police power, as in the case before supposed. The circumstances, with reference to which the general police regulation, embodied in the General Law, had been framed, have now come to exist in respect to this particular locality, and the requirements of that law have become operative. There was no implied contract between the State and this corporation when it became incorporated that it should only be required to put in and maintain these safeguards at the crossings of streets then laid out, or at such as might be laid out prior to the construction of the railroad. The fact that not until after the construction of the railroad has the situation at this place come to be such as to require any protection from the dangers incident to railroad operation has very little bearing upon the case, if, as we think is self evident, the statutory requirement to which the corporation is subjected is merely a reasonable police regulation of its business, and not a taking or destruction of its property. When the Railroad Company accepted its charter, it received its franchises subject to the authority and power of the State, to impose such reasonable regulations concerning the use, in matters affecting the common safety, of its dangerous engine, and not merely subject to the then existing regulations as applicable to then existing conditions; and whether the obligation now in question had been imposed at this time by direct Act of the Legislature, or, as is the case, arises from the laying out of a new highway, to which the previously existing law becomes applicable, can make no difference.

The fallacy involved in the claim of the relator, and, as we think, in some decisions by which its claim is supported, arises from a failure to distinguish between rights of property which confessedly are protected under the Constitution from being devested or appropriated to other purposes without compensation, and the very different matter concerning the manner in which the owner may use his property so as not to unnecessarily endanger the public. The claim of the relator involves an assumption that when the Railroad constructed its line of road, conforming to the requirements of the law as to all then existing highway crossings, it had a constitutional right, by virtue of its priority, to always afterwards operate its road unembarrassed, by being required to observe like precautions with respect to highways that might be thereafter laid out across the railroad, except upon the condition that it should receive compensation, not merely for whatever of its required property might be taken for the other use, but also for the expense and burden of conforming its own conduct to the newly-existing conditions,—of conforming to a general police regulation of the State, not before applicable. There was no such exclusive or superior right acquired by priority of charter, or of the construction of this railroad highway. It cannot be supposed that, when its franchises were granted to this relator to construct and operate this railroad, it was contemplated, either by it or by the State, that no more public highways should be laid out which should increase the number of places where the ordinary police regulations would have to be complied with by the Railroad Company to its inconvenience and expense. On the contrary, it must have been understood and contemplated, especially in a new State rapidly advancing in population and in the development of its resources, where new towns were springing up, and new avenues for travel and traffic were becoming necessary, that new streets and roads would be and must be laid out, and that many of these would necessarily cross existing railroad lines. We cannot resist the conclusion that, so far as concerns the matter now under consideration, the charter of the relator was taken subject to the right of the State to impose this duty whenever, by reason of the establishing of new highways, it should become necessary; and hence the relator is not entitled to compensation for obedience to this requirement. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, S. & O. R. Co. 80 Ohio St. 604; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Joliet, L. & A. R. Co. 105 Ill. 388, 400, 404; Hannibal v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 49 Mo. 480; Bridgeport v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 86 Conn. 255.

We have not failed to consider the decisions in Old Colony & F. R. R. Co. v. Plymouth Co. 14 Gray, 155; Massachusetts C. R. Co. v. Boston, C. & F. R. Co. 121 Mass. 124; Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Hough, 61 Mich. 507, and State v. Rayonne (N. J.) 17 Atl. Rep. 971,—to which we have before alluded as supporting the claim of the relator. It will be observed that in Massachusetts, while compensation is allowed to the railroad company for planking cattle-guards and sign-boards, it is denied for the expense of causing a bell to be rung at a new highway crossing; and that compensation is also refused for the expense of a flagman, rendered necessary at a street crossing by reason of the obstructions caused by a new railroad crossing, by an overhead bridge, a previously established railroad. The reasons which may be sufficient to exclude the right of compensation for the necessary expense, if it be an additional expense, of ringing a bell or keeping a flagman at a crossing, would seem to be applicable also as respects cattle-guards and sign-boards. We discover no distinction in principle.

As to the planking between the rails, where the street crosses the railroad, it seems to us that a distinction exists which should affect the conclusion. The planking has little, if anything, to do with the operation or safety of railway trains. The railway having been properly and lawfully constructed, the planking becomes a proper, and perhaps reasonably necessary, incident to the construction of the highway across the existing railroad. Independent of statutory regulation of the subject, it would have been the appropriate duty of the public authorities opening such a highway to make this necessary provision for the convenience of travelers on the highway, thus overcoming an obstruction to travel which lawfully existed upon the relator's property, and which could not be removed. This might be deemed a part of the work of constructing the highway, and making it fit for travel. But while the Legislature, as may have been expedient, in view of the peculiar uses to which the rail way track is subjected, has required the Railroad Company, which necessarily has the general control of its own track, in all cases to provide and maintain the planking, that does not determine the question of compensation. If, as has been suggested, the planking is to be deemed a part of the new highway, the Railroad Company cannot be required to construct and maintain it over its own right of way without compensation. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Bloomington, 76 Ill. 447; Erie v. Erie Canal Co. 59 Pa. 174.

As respects this subject, we see no reason why the decisions above cited as supporting the relator's contention should not be followed. We therefore think that the Railroad Company was entitled to compensation for the expense of providing, and of maintaining, the planking. There can be no distinction in this respect between the original construction and the subsequent maintenance, and so the authorities above cited affirm. The law requires the Railroad Company to maintain the planking, and it must be assumed now, when damages are being assessed once for all, that this requirement of the law will remain unchanged.

The charter of the City of Minneapolis by which this proceeding is regulated provides that "the award of assessment of such commissioners shall be final unless set aside by the court for good cause shown. In case such report is set aside, the court may, in its discretion, recommit the same to the same commissioners, or appoint a new board, as it shall deem best."

We think that the report of the commissioners in this case would not justify the court in determining the question of the amount of damages upon the bare statement of the cost of putting down and of maintaining the planking. Whether there are any other considerations which could bear upon this matter, we do not know. This report should not be treated like the special verdict of a jury upon which judgment may be rendered, for the law contemplates an award by the commissioners.

The order of the court, dated on the 13th day of October, 1888, determining the amount which the relator is entitled to as compensation for this taking, is reversed, and the cause remanded, that the matter in controversy may be, by the proper order of the district court, committed again to commissioners, as prescribed by the Statute.

Esther EARL et al., Respts.,

Eugene M. WILSON et al., Appts.

(....Minn....)

*An Indian tribe within the State, recognized as such by the United States government, is to be *Head note by VANDERBURGH, J.

NOTE.—Marriage: validity governed by the law of place, where entered into.

It is a principle of universal law that marriages valid by the law governing both parties when made must be treated as valid everywhere. Beane v. Pelochoux, 73 Ill. 285; Hicks v. Skinner, 71 N. C. 536; Scheferling v. Huffman, 4 Ohio St. 241.

A marriage contract as to its effect is governed by the law of the place where it is made. Walker 7 L. R. A.

considered as a separate community or people, capable of managing its own affairs, including the domestic relations, and those persons belonging to the tribe who are recognized by the custom and laws of the tribe as married persons must be so treated by the courts, and the children of such marriages cannot be regarded as illegitimate.

(January 17, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the District Court for McLeod County granting plaintiffs motion for a new trial and setting aside the findings of the referee in favor of defendants in an action to determine an adverse claim to certain real estate. Reversed.

The land in controversy was granted by the United States under a scrip location made on behalf of one Henry F. Ortley, Jr., who died at the age of about eight years.

The defendants claim under a deed from the child's father executed after the death of the child. Plaintiffs claim under a deed from the child's mother executed subsequently to the execution of the father's deed.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Eugene M. Wilson and Francis G. Burke, for appellants:

Direct proof of a marriage is not essential, but may be established by circumstances from which marriage may be inferred.

Minn. Stat. 1878, p. 806.

Every reasonable presumption of law is to be allowed in favor of a valid marriage and legitimacy as against concubinage and illegitimacy.

State v. Worthingham, 23 Minn. 528; For v. Burke, 31 Minn. 819.

Continuous cohabitation as husband and wife establishes marriage relation without any actual ceremony.

Peet v. Peet, 52 Mich. 464.

If the father and mother of Henry F. Ortley, Jr., complied with all the customs of their tribe in entering into the marriage relation, and afterwards lived together as husband and wife, their actions constituted a marriage legal and binding and sufficient to justify the legitimacy of Henry F. Ortley, Jr., and to justify the heirship of the father in his property.

Smith v. Brown, 8 Kan. 608; Watts v. Owens, 63 Wis. 512; Dyer v. Brannock, 66 Mo. 419; Morgan v. McGhee, 5 Humph. 18; Wall v. Williamson, 8 Ala. 51, 52; Wall v. Williams, 11 Ala. 826; Oheseldine v. Brewer, 1 Har. & McH. 152; Johnson v. Johnson, 30 Mo. 72; Sutton v. Warren, 10 Met. 451; Senser v. Bower, 1 Penr. & W. 450, 452; Kobogum v. Jackson Iron Co. 76 Mich. 498.

Messrs. R. H. McClelland and H. J. Peck, for respondents:

A custom of cohabitation between parties will not constitute marriage under the law, so that the property rights growing out of legitimate marriage relations will apply.

v. Forbes, 31 Ala. 9; Peake v. Yeldell, 17 Ala. 686; Laffite v. Lawton, 25 Ga. 305; McLeod v. Board, 30 Tex. 238; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 46 Hun, 82, 10 N. Y. S. R. 746.

Its validity is not affected by the subsequent removal of the parties with their property into another State. De Lane v. Moore, 55 U. S. 14 How. 253 (14 L. ed. 409); O'Neill v. Henderson, 15 Ark. 235; Smith v. Chapell, 31 Conn. 599; Young v. Templeton,

"Marriage is a civil status of one man and one woman united in law for life."

Bishop, Marr. and Div. § 8; Rapalje & L. Law Dict.; Schouler, Husband and Wife, § 2.

The rights, obligations and duties arising from it are matters of municipal regulation over which parties have no control.

Fraser v. State, 8 Tex. App. 263, 30 Am. Rep. 140.

Cohabitation and reputation alone are not marriage.

Reading F. Ins. & T. Co. v. Riegel, 4 Cent. Rep. 678, 113 Pa. 204; State v. Worthingham, 23 Minn. 528; Fox v. Burke, 31 Minn. 319.

Cohabitation between an Indian man and woman, according to the customs of this tribe, which left the parties free to dissolve the connection at pleasure, is not a marriage.

State v. Ta-cha-na-tah, 64 N. C. 614; State v. Harris, 63 N. C. 1; Roche v. Washington, 19 Ind. 58, 81 Am. Dec. 376; Noel v. Ewing, 9 Ind. 37; Compo v. Jackson Iron Co. 50 Mich. 578; Fellows v. Denniston, 23 N. Y. 420.

Vanderburgh, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question presented by the record is whether Henry F. Ortley, under whom defendants claim title, and Jane Ortley, were husband and wife, so that the former, under the Laws of Inheritance and Descent in this State, became entitled to the land in controversy as the heir-at-law of Henry F. Ortley, Jr., deceased, who was the patentee of the land, and is admitted to have been the child of the parties first named. It is denied by the respondents that Jane was the lawful wife of the first-named Henry Ortley. The case was tried before a referee, who found for the defendants on the issue presented, and among other facts that the child Henry F. Ortley, Jr., was born in 1849, in what is now the Town of Bloomington, Hennepin County, in this State, and that he died in the same place about the year 1859, and was a half-breed or mixed blood of the Sioux Nation of Indians; that at the time of his birth his parents had been living and cohabiting together as husband and wife, and continued so to do, from about the year 1848, for the period of sixteen years, during which time several children were born unto them, including Henry, and during all this time they continued to reside in Bloomington with and among the tribe of Sioux Indians, and that they were married about the year 1848, in accordance with the usage and custom of the tribe with which they lived. And in respect to this Indian custom it is found that among the Indian tribe there was a custom or law that any member of the tribe who desired to obtain a wife might purchase one, and the man and woman would thereupon, in accordance with such custom, live and cohabit together as husband and wife without other or further marriage ceremony; and that, in accordance with the usage and established custom prevailing among them, the parties might either of them also divorce themselves by dismissing or abandoning the other, without further ceremony, and thereupon either was at liberty to take another husband or wife, and that among the tribe referred to there was no other custom, law or form of marriage. These parties must be deemed to be, as the referee found they were, husband and wife, under the custom and law of their tribe, and the sole remaining question is whether such Indian marriages should be treated as valid, and the children of such marriages legitimate. The distinct tribal relations of these Indians were during the time in question still maintained; and they were recognized by the United States as a distinct political community. U. S. v. Shanks, 15 Minn. 369.

And where the tribal relation is still recognized by the government as existing, in its dealings with them, the fact that their primitive habits have been modified by their intercourse with the whites does not authorize a State to treat them as subject to its laws in respect to their relations and dealings with each other. Kansas Indians, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 787 [18 L. ed. 667].

The general rule is that marriages valid by the laws of the country where they are entered into are binding here, though not solemnized in accordance with the provisions of our laws; and the same rule must be adopted in relation to these Indian marriages, where the tribal relation still exists. Under the laws of the United States they are recognized as capable of managing their own affairs, including their domestic relations, and those persons who were recognized by the Indian custom and law as married persons must be so treated by the courts, and their children cannot be regarded illegitimate. Kobogum v. Jackson Iron Co. 76 Mich. 498, and cases cited; Boyer v. Dickey, 58 Mo. 510; Sutton v. Warren, 10 Met. 452.

The estate of Henry F. Ortley, Jr., therefore, was inherited by his father, and the defendants 4 La. Ann. 254; Wilder's Succession, 22 La. Ann. 219; Dubois v. Jackson, 49 Ill. 49; Dougherty v. Snyder, 15 Berg. & R. 84; Townsend v. Maynard, 45 Pa. 198; Le Prince v. Guillemot, 1 Rich. Eq. 187; Lott v. Bertrand, 26 Tex. 654.

A marriage according to the custom of an Indian tribe need not be contracted in the territory of that tribe in order to be valid. La Riviere v. La Riviere, 97 Mo. 80.

Indians in tribal relations, not citizens of State.

Indians within a State are not citizens or members of the body politic, but are considered as independent tribes governed by their own laws and usages. Holden v. Joy, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 211 (21 L. ed. 523); Goodell v. Jackson, 20 Johns. 665; Jackson v. Wood, 7 Johns. 290; Strong v. Waterman, 11 Paige, 607.

7 L. R. A.

No state laws have any force over Indians in their tribal relations. Kansas Indians, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 787 [18 L. ed. 667]; New York Indians, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 781 [18 L. ed. 708]; United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375 (30 L. ed. 223); United States v. Holliday, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 407 [18 L. ed. 182]; United States v. Shanks, 15 Minn. 369 (Gil. 322); Dole v. Irish, 2 Barb. 639; Hastings v. Farmer, 4 N. Y. 293; Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 1 (8 L. ed. 25); Worcester v. Georgia, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 515 (8 L. ed. 439); Wall v. Williamson, 3 Ala. 48; Wall v. Williams, 11 Ala. 826; Morgan v. McGhee, 5 Humph. 13; Johnson v. Johnson, 30 Mo. 72; Boyer v. Dively, 58 Mo. 510; Tuten v. Byrd, 1 Swan. 106; Jones v. Lancy, 2 Tex. 342.

The civil laws of the State do not extend to an Indian country within a State (United States v. Shanks, 15 Minn. 369), nor to Indians maintaining tribal relations. United States v. Payne, 4 Dill. 389.

are the lawful owners of the land in controversy.

Order granting new trial reversed, and case re- manded, with directions to render judgment for the defendants upon the report of the referee.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

J. W. HANSON, Resp't.,

v.

R. A. GRAHAM, App't.

(.....Cal.....)

Where a man has a settled abode for the time being in another State for the purpose of business or pleasure, he is a nonresident within the meaning of the Attachment Law.

(January 27, 1890.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the Superior Court for San Diego County refusing to dissolve an attachment. Affirmed. Commissioner's opinion.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Mr. F. W. Burnett, for appellant:

A residence cannot be lost till another is gained.

Cal. Pol. Code, § 53.

Residence can only be changed by union of act and intent.

Eck v. Hoffman, 55 Cal. 501.

There must be a concurrence of act and intention, in order to effect such a change in the status of a party as to subject him to foreign attachment. He must not only intend to make the change permanent, but that intention must have reference to an accomplished fact so far as his own departure and selection of a new domicile are concerned.

Wade, Attachm. § 17.

Messrs. Henderson & McDonald for respondent.

Hayne, C., filed the following opinion:

This is an appeal from an order refusing to dissolve an attachment. The attachment was issued upon an affidavit that the defendant was a nonresident, and the motion to dissolve was upon the ground that the affidavit was not true, and that the defendant was a resident. The affidavits read upon the hearing consist in great part of mere conclusions and statements on information and belief. The following facts, however, appear to be undisputed: The defendant, Graham, was a contractor for the building of railroads and other similar works. In 1834 he left his former residence, and established himself in Victoria, B. C. In 1886 he left that place, and finally settled in San Diego, with the intention of engaging in business there. While in San Diego he lived in hotels and lodging houses. After about ten months, business became dull, and he stored his contractor's tools and implements, and in June, 1888, went to Chili for the purpose of engaging in business there. In October, 1888, the attachment was levied, at which time he had not returned from Chili. It further appears that the purpose of going to Chili was to get contracts in his line of business, of which he had heard. So much is undisputed. It does not distinctly appear how long such contracts would take to fill. In this regard the plaintiff states in his affidavit, upon information and belief, that the defendant had gone to Chili with the intention "of engaging in railway contracting involving millions of dollars and years of time for completion, the said work necessitating an extended residence of many years' duration," and that, should it be necessary for him to return to the United States, such return would be only for the temporary purpose of arranging his business affairs in said County of San Diego preparatory to the removal of said outfit to the Republic of Chili.

The defendant produced many affidavits to the effect that Graham had stated before leaving that he intended to return shortly; and the affiants offer their conclusions to the effect that he always intended to return, and that he was still a resident of California. As above stated, the affidavits on each side are vague and unsatisfactory. We think that it sufficiently appears, however, that defendant went to Chili for the purpose of prosecuting his business of contractor there, and that, if successful in obtaining contracts, he would remain at least as long as would be necessary for their completion; and that he had been gone about four months without returning.

Upon these facts the question arises whether the judge of the court below was right in holding that the defendant was a nonresident. The Statute in relation to attachments provides that the writ may issue when the defendant is "not residing" in this State. Code Civil Proc. § 537.

In the next section it is provided that the plaintiff must present an affidavit that the defendant "is a nonresident." These two phrases seem to have been used as equivalent in meaning. Whether they are so in strictness or not need not be considered. But we think that the residence referred to is an actual, as contradistinguished from a constructive or legal, residence; and that there may be such an actual residence, notwithstanding a general intention to return to the place of legal residence or domicile. This was held in a well-considered case in Virginia, in which the facts were nearly the same as those involved here. There a person domiciled in Washington City removed to Virginia with the intention of remaining there for nine months, or for such additional time as might be required to complete certain contracts for building parts of a railroad. He rented his residence in Washington, but without any intention of abandoning his domicile there, and during his stay in Virginia he always claimed Washington as his place of residence, and declared his intention of returning there as soon as his contracts should be completed. Upon these facts it was held that, for the purposes of the Attachment Law, he was a resident of Virginia; and the court said: "It is apparent that the word 'residence,' like that of 'domicil,' is often used to express different meanings, according to the subject matter. In statutes relating to taxation, settlements, right of suffrage and qualification for office, it may have a very different construction from that which belongs to it in the statutes relating to attachments. In the latter actual residence is contemplated, as distinguished from legal residence. . . .

While, on the one hand, the casual or temporary sojourn of a person in this State, whether on business or pleasure, does not make him a resident of this State, within the meaning of the Attachment Laws, especially if his personal domicile be elsewhere; so, on the other hand, it is not essential he should come into this State with the intention to remain here permanently, to constitute him a resident." Long v. Ryan, 30 Gratt. 720.

Decisions similar in principle have been made in other States. Frost v. Briabin, 19 Wend. 11; Krone v. Cooper, 48 Ark. 547; Morgan v. Nunes, 54 Miss. 311; Burrill v. Jewett, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 701; Haggart v. Morgan, 5 N. Y. 428; Naslor v. French, 4 Yeates, 241; City Bank v. Meritt, 18 N. J. L. 184; Stout v. Leonard, 37 N. J. L. 495; Swaney v. Hutchins, 18 Neb. 266.

And the rule seems to rest upon sound principle. The reason of allowing an attachment against a nonresident was that it was one mode of acquiring jurisdiction in a suit against him. And this purpose would not be satisfied if the debtor could preserve a constructive residence in the State by virtue of a general intention to return, when he was in fact residing in another State. The rule, indeed, has not gone so far as to cover the case of a mere transient journey. But where a man has a settled abode for the time being in another State for purposes of business or pleasure, we think that both reason and authority require him to be treated as a nonresident of this State, within the meaning of the Attachment Law. We have not overlooked section 52 of the Political Code.*

But if a different rule is there provided, we think that the provision was not intended to apply to the Attachment Law. In the light of these principles, we think that it does not appear that Graham was a resident of California after his departure for Chili. It having been shown that he left the State for the purpose of engaging in business in a foreign country, a prima facie case of nonresidence was made out, and we do not feel that we can say that the contrary was shown. We therefore advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: Belcher, C. C.; Foote, C.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons given in foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

*That section provides: "In determining the place of residence, the following rules are to be observed: (1) It is the place where one remains when not called elsewhere for labor or other special or temporary purpose, and to which he returns in seasons of repose. (2) There can only be one residence. (3) A residence cannot be lost until another is gained. . . . (7) The residence can be changed only by the union of act and intent." [Itap.]

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Lyman BAIRD et al., Appls.,
v.

Elias SHIPMAN, Admr., etc., of Joseph Gar- nett, Deceased.

(.....Ill.....)

An agent who has complete control and management of real property of a non-resident is personally liable for injuries sustained by a third person in consequence of the dangerous condition of the premises at the time when they were leased by him to a tenant.

(January 21, 1890.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Mr. L. H. Boutell, for appellants:

Agents are not liable to third persons for damages caused by their negligence. The agent is liable to his principal for neglect, and the principal alone is liable to third persons.

Story, Ag. § 808; 8 Sutherland, Damages, p. 60; Hell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray, 309.

But even in the case of a contractor, if the owner retains a supervisory power over the work, it is held that the owner, and not the contractor, is liable to third persons for acts of negligence.

Schwartz v. Gilmore, 45 Ill. 455; Chicago v. Jones, 60 Ill. 387.

Messrs. Cameron & Hughes, for appellee.

An agent is in general not liable to third parties for acts of negligence, nor for a mere non-performance of duty. As such he is only liable to his principal, and the principal is liable to the third party.

To this general rule there are, however, certain well-known and well-recognized exceptions, among which are:

1. That he is personally liable to third persons for misfeasance, for doing something which he ought not to have done.

Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray, 309, 63 Am. Dec. 741.

2. Where a principal engages an agent to do a certain work, and to take entire control of it, and the principal does not interfere, but leaves it entirely with the agent, the agent and not the principal will be liable to third parties for injuries or damages sustained by the negligent or unskillful manner in which the work is done.

Hilliard v. Richardson, 3 Gray, 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743; Scammon v. Chicago, 25 Ill. 424; Schwartz v. Gilmore, 45 Ill. 455; Pfau v. Will-tamson, 63 Ill. 16; Hale v. Johnson, 80 Ill. 185; Kepperly v. Ramsden, 83 Ill. 354.

3. Agents who have taken control of work for their principals are liable to third parties for torts committed by the agents' sub-employés. Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48.

Per Curiam:

The following opinion of the Appellate Court fully presents the question arising upon this record:

GARNETT, P. J.:

This is an appeal from a judgment for damages, founded on the alleged negligence of appellants, by which the death of Joseph Garnett, appellee's intestate, is said to have been caused. The place where the injury happened was in a barn situated on premises on Michigan Avenue, in Chicago, belonging to Aaron C. Goodman, who was then, and for several years before had been, a resident of Hartford, Conn. Appellants were his agents for renting the premises during the years 1884 and 1885, and during both years were carrying on the real-estate business in Chicago. On the trial, evidence was given tending to show that they had in fact complete control of the premises, with the residence and barn thereon, repairing the same, in their discretion; and there was no proof that in such matters they received any directions from the owner.

The property was rented by appellants to Emma R. Wheeler and A. R. Tillman from April 1, 1884, to April 30, 1885, and to Emma R. Wheeler from May 1, 1885, to April 30, 1886. Both leases were in writing, and by the terms of each lease the tenants covenanted to keep the premises in good repair. The tenant in the last lease rented the premises to Nellie E. Pierce, who occupied the same from April 28 to September, 1885. The evidence tends to prove that when the lease was made to Emma R. Wheeler the large carriage door to the barn was in a very insecure condition, and that appellants, through one Warner, the manager of their renting department, verbally agreed with Mrs. Wheeler to put the premises in thorough repair. Nothing was done to improve the condition of the door; and on June 12, 1885, while the deceased, an expressman by occupation, was engaged in delivering a load of kindling in the barn for one of the parties living in the house, the door, weighing about 400 pounds, fell from its fastenings, and injured him to such an extent that he died the next day.

Appellants make two points: (1) that the verdict is clearly against the weight of the evidence; (2) that they were the agents of the owner (Goodman), and liable to him only for any negligence attributable to them.

There is nothing more than the ordinary conflict of evidence found in such cases, presenting a question of fact for the jury; and the finding must be respected by this court, in deference to the well-settled rule.

The other point is not so easily disposed of. An agent is liable to his principal only for mere breach of his contract with his principal; but he must have due regard to the rights and safety of third persons. He cannot in all cases find shelter behind his principal. If, in the course of his agency, he is intrusted with the operation of a dangerous machine, to guard himself from personal liability he must use proper care in its management and supervision, so that others in the use of ordinary care will not suffer in life, limb or property. Suydam v. Moore, 8 Barb. 358; Phelps v. Wait, 30 N. Y. 78.

It is not his contract with the principal which exposes him to or protects him from liability to third persons, but his common-law obligation to so use that which he controls as not to injure another. That obligation is neither increased nor diminished by his entrance upon the duties of agency; nor can its breach be excused by the plea that his principal is chargeable. Delaney v. Rochereau, 84 La. Ann. 1123.

If the agent once actually undertakes and enters upon the execution of a particular work, it is his duty to use reasonable care in the manner of executing it, so as not to cause any injury to third persons which may be the natural consequence of his acts; and he cannot escape this duty by abandoning its execution midway, and leaving things in a dangerous condition, by reason of his having so left them without proper safeguards. Osborne v. Morgan, 130 Mass. 102.

A number of authorities charged the agent, in such cases, on the ground of misfeasance, as distinguished from nonfeasance.

Mechem, in his work on Agency, § 572, says: "Some confusion has crept into certain cases from a failure to observe clearly the distinction between nonfeasance and misfeasance. As has been seen, the agent is not liable to strangers for injuries sustained by them, because he did not undertake the performance of some duty which he owed to his principal, and imposed upon him by his relation, which is nonfeasance. Misfeasance may involve, also, to some extent, the idea of not doing, as where the agent, while engaged in the performance of his undertaking, does not do something which it was his duty to do under the circumstances,—does not take that precaution, does not exercise that care, which a due regard for the rights of others requires. All this is not doing; but it is not the not doing of that which is imposed upon the agent merely by virtue of his relation, but of that which is imposed upon him by law, as a responsible individual, in common with all other members of society. It is the same not doing which constitutes actionable negligence in any relation." To the same effect are Lottman v. Barnett, 62 Mo. 159; Martin v. Benoit, 20 Mo. App. 263; Harriman v. Stowe, 57 Mo. 98; Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray, 309.

A case parallel to that now in hand is Campbell v. Portland Sugar Co. 62 Me. 552, where agents of the Portland Sugar Company had the charge and management of a wharf belonging to the company, and rented the same to tenants, agreeing to keep it in repair. They allowed the covering to become old, worn and insecure, by means of which the plaintiff was injured. The court held the agents were equally responsible to the injured person with their principals.

Wharton, in his work on Negligence, § 535, insists that the distinction, in this class of cases, between nonfeasance and misfeasance can no longer be sustained; that the true doctrine is that when an agent is employed to work on a particular thing, and has surrendered the thing in question into the principal's hands, then the agent ceases to be liable to third persons for hurt received by them from such thing, though the hurt is remotely due to the agent's negligence, the reason being that the causal relation between the agent and the person hurt is broken by the interposition of the principal as a distinct center of legal responsibilities and duties, but that, even where there is no such interrupting of causal connection, and the agent's negligence directly injures a stranger, the agent having liberty of action in respect to the injury, then such stranger can recover from the agent damages for the injury. The rule, whether as stated by Mechem or Wharton, is sufficient to charge appellants with damages, under the circumstances disclosed in this record. They had the same control of the premises in question as the owner would have had if he had resided in Chicago, and attended to his own leasing and repairing. In that respect, appellants remained in control of the premises until the door fell upon the deceased. There was no interruption of the causal relation between them and the injured man. They were, in fact, for the time being substituted in the place of the owner, so far as the control and management of the property was concerned. The principle that makes an independent contractor, to whose control premises upon which he is working are surrendered, liable for damages to strangers caused by his negligence, although he is at the time doing the work under contract with the owner (Wharton, Neg. § 440), would seem to be sufficient to hold appellants. The owner of cattle, who places them in the hands of an agister, is not liable for damages committed by them while they are under control of the agister. It is the possession and control of the cattle which fix the liability; and the law imposes upon the agister the duty to protect strangers from injury by them. Ward v. Brown, 64 Ill. 307; Osburn v. Adams, 70 Ill. 291.

When appellants rented the premises to Mrs. Wheeler in the dangerous condition shown by the evidence, they voluntarily set in motion an agency which, in the ordinary and natural course of events, would expose persons entering the barn to personal injury. Use of the barn, for the purpose for which it was used when the deceased came to his death, was one of its ordinary and appropriate uses, and might by ordinary foresight have been anticipated. If the insecure condition of the door fastening had arisen after the letting to Mrs. Wheeler, a different question would be presented; but, as it existed before and at the time of the letting, the owner or persons in control are chargeable with the consequences. Grilley v. Bloomington, 68 Ill. 47; Tomis v. Hampton (Ill.) 21 N. E. Rep. 900.

Neither error is well assigned, and the judgment is affirmed.

We fully concur in the legal proposition asserted in the foregoing opinion, and deem it unnecessary to add to what is therein said in support of that proposition.

The judgment is affirmed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS (3d Div.).

Riley READ, Appt.,

v.

Moses H. NICHOLS et al.

(.....N.Y.....)

1. A special question withdrawn from the jury by consent of both parties before the general verdict was rendered cannot be considered on appeal as part of the findings and verdict, even if the word "Yes" is written under it.
2. Where several buildings in succession take fire, each from another, and burn, the sparks which set the first one on fire being carried past the last one burned by a strong wind, which subsided and changed its direction before the last one took fire, while lack of fire apparatus and ladders prevented the extinguishment of the fire at the beginning, the burning of the last building is not the proximate result of the setting fire to the first one.

3. An exception to "refusals to charge as requested" is not sufficiently definite, where some of the requests were given as requested, others modified and some refused.

(January 14, 1890.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of the Delaware Circuit in favor of defendants in an action to recover damages for the burning of plaintiff's buildings through the alleged negligence of defendants. Affirmed.

NOTE.—Negligence; damages for injuries caused by.

In general, if a voluntary act, lawful in itself, may naturally result in the injury of another, or the violation of his legal rights, the actor must, at his peril, see to it that such injury or such violation does not follow, or he must expect to respond in damages therefor; and this is true regardless of the motive or the degree of care with which the act is performed. Georgetown, B. & L. R. Co. v. Eagles, 9 Colo. 544.

Where a statute or municipal ordinance imposes upon a person a duty designed for the protection of others, if he neglects to perform the duty he is liable to those for whose protection it was imposed for any damages resulting proximately from such neglect, and of the character which the statute or ordinance was designed to prevent. Osburne v. McMasters, 40 Minn. 108.

The owner of an unguarded area, which is so near to an alley as to endanger persons passing along the alley, is liable for damages sustained to persons passing along the alley, by reason of such excavation being left unguarded. Bond v. Smith, 44 Hun, 219.

He was held liable in damages for an injury to the plaintiff, who fell into the area in the nighttime while searching for her child supposed to be in defendant's factory. Croghan v. Sohiale, 1 New Eng. Rep. 305, 58 Conn. 186.

Where the owner of a lot situated in a large city uses gunpowder to blast out rocks on his lot, he is liable for the damages proximately and naturally resulting to the house of the adjoining owner from

Sparks from the smoke-stack connected with defendants' shop set fire to the house of one E. D. Read, which was communicated from there through the blacksmith shop, barn and saloon to plaintiff's houses situated on Main Street, as shown by the following diagram:

Plaintiff's houses were burned and he brought this action to recover inter alia damages therefor.

The other material facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. A. Taylor, for appellant:

What is the proximate cause of an injury is ordinarily a question for the jury, and not a question of science or legal knowledge.

See Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469 (24 L. ed. 256); Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hope, 80 Pa. 878; Kellogg v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Wis. 224; Fent v. Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. 59 Ill. 849; Perley v. Eastern R. Co. 98 Mass. 414; Higgins v. Dewey, 107 Mass. 494; Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns. 381; Vandenburgh v. Truax, 4 Denio. 464; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397; Webb v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 420; Putnam v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co. 85 N. Y. 108; Pollett v. Long, 56 N. Y. 300; Smith v. British & N. A. R. M. Steam Packet Co. 86 N. Y. 408; Loverly v. Manhattan R. Co. 99 N. Y. 158.

The case of Ryan v. New York Cent. R. Co. 85 N. Y. 210, should not be held to be controlling where there is a positive and unlawful act of the defendant which was the cause of the plaintiff's injury.

See Loverly v. Manhattan R. Co. 99 N. Y. 166. The true inquiry is whether the injury sustained was such as, according to common experience and the usual course of events, might reasonably be anticipated.

2 Sedgw. Damages, p. 862, note; Atina Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117 (24 L. ed. 395).

The proximate cause is the efficient cause,—the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. It is only where the causes are independent of each other that the nearest is to be charged with the disaster.

Peppers v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 67 Mo. 715; Sauter v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 66 N. Y. 50; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kel-

the act of blasting, whether the damage was caused by rocks thrown against the house, or by a concussion of the air around it. Colton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 155.

Where a child of tender years was injured by the explosion of a torpedo negligently left by the servants of a railroad company, and placed where children were in the habit of passing, such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury sustained. Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 9 West. Rep. 438, 45 Ohio St. 11.

The negligent act of a gas company's agent in turning off the gas from plaintiff's premises in such a manner that when plaintiff's wife went into the cellar with a lighted candle an explosion occurred was the proximate cause of the injury, and the company is properly held bound for his negligence. Louisville Gas Co. v. Gutenkuntz, 82 Ky. 432.

Damages for injury to a conductor, caused by a collision which would not have happened if a telegraph operator at a way station had delivered to the conductor the message despatched to him to hold his train at that station until another passed, instead of another order which he negligently handed him, may be mitigated by the fact that the conductor received the written order without inquiry; but a recovery is proper, as the first and proximate cause of the injury was the operator's negligence. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. De Armond, 86 Tenn. 73.

The proximate, and not the remote, cause to be regarded.

To render a person liable for damage caused by his negligence, it must appear that the damage was the ordinary or probable consequence of his negligent act. Kuhn v. Jewett, 82 N. J. Eq. 647; Scott v. Shepherd, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. *649, 7th Am. ed. 754, 2 7 L. R. A.

W. Bl. 822; Sharp v. Powell, L. R. 7 Q. P. 259; Broom, Maxims; Mayne, Damages, 3d ed. 30.

The burden is on the plaintiff to sustain his allegations as to the injury sustained by him; to entitle him to recover, he must produce evidence sufficient to satisfy the jury that he has sustained an injury, and that such injury was the direct and proximate consequence of the defendant's negligence, to constitute an actionable tort. Central R. Co. v. Freeman, 75 Ga. 331.

The negligence must be the proximate, and not the remote, cause of the injury. Henry v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 76 Mo. 288; McClelland v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 94 Ind. 276; Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 54 Mich. 55.

Injury must be the proximate consequence of the act complained of; and if there be no intermediate efficient cause, the act must be considered as reaching to the effect. Georgetown, B. & L. R. Co. v. Eagles, 9 Colo. 544.

When injury was occasioned by one of two causes, for one only of which defendant is responsible, plaintiff must show that the damage was produced by that cause. Searles v. Manhattan R. Co. 2 Cent. Rep. 442, 101 N. Y. 661.

Whether a superintendent, in placing a dynamite magazine, should have known he was exposing men to danger, is a question for the jury. Tissue v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 2 Cent. Rep. 556, 112 Pa. 91.

The question as to whether a given act of negligence was the proximate cause of the injury complained of, is, where the character of the facts are such that different conclusions may be drawn from them, a question for the jury. Dunn v. Cass Ave. & F. G. R. Co. 3 West. Rep. 424, 21 Mo. App. 183.

Whether public user of a path across railroad tracks exists, and whether the company exercised ordinary care as regards speed and signals in a given case, or was guilty of negligence which was logg, supra; 1 Bouv. L. Dict. 247; Markle v. Worcester, 4 Gray, 412.

The factory of the defendants was a public nuisance. "Whatever unlawfully annoys or does damage to another is a nuisance."

8 Bl. Com. chap. 1, p. 51; 1 Sedgw. Damages, p. 289.

Every individual who suffers actual damage from a nuisance may maintain an action for his own particular injury though there may be others equally damaged.

1 Sedgw. Damages, p. 290, citing Smith v. Lockwood, 18 Barb. 209.

A nuisance, in legal phraseology, is applied to that class of wrongs that arise from the unreasonable, unwarrantable or unlawful use by a person of his own property. Generally, negligence is not an essential element in an action for nuisance.

Tremain v. Cohoes Co. 2 N. Y. 168; Wilson v. New Bedford, 103 Mass. 261; Cahill v. Eastman, 18 Minn. 824.

The erection or maintenance of a nuisance is sufficient, in either case, to create a liability against all persons concerned therein. Any person contributing to a nuisance is liable therefore either jointly with others or alone.

Chenango Bridge Co. v. Lewis, 68 Barb. 111; Loose v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476; Addison, Tort, § 288.

Morris. H. & W. J. Welsh, for respondents:

As matter of law the damages are remote and not the immediate result of defendants' negligence, and they are not liable.

Ryan v. New York Cent. R. Co. 85 N. Y. 210; Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa. 293;

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kerr, 63 Pa. 353; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Muthersbaugh, 71 Ill. 572; Reiper v. Nichols, 31 Hun, 491; Pennsylvania Co. v. Whitlock, 99 Ind. 16, 60 Am. Rep. 71.

There must be a line somewhere where the liability ends, else private individuals and corporations run hazards of which they little dream, and courts universally may find an emergency in which they will be compelled to recognize some such doctrine as has been laid down positively in New York and Pennsylvania, and conditionally in Illinois.

5 Alb. L. J. 811.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court submitted to the jury five written propositions, with instructions that each be answered as they should determine the fact to be. Plaintiff's counsel excepted to such submission. It is unnecessary to determine whether the question sought to be presented by such exception merits consideration, for it was subsequently waived. The consent of counsel for both plaintiff and defendants that the written questions be withdrawn, upon which consent the court withdrew them, constituted a waiver of the exception taken to their submission. The first of the five propositions submitted appears to have had the word "Yes" written underneath it, while the others do not purport to have been passed upon in any way. The plaintiff in this court insists that it should be regarded and treated as a fact found by the jury. This cannot be done, for it is not before us in such a way as to render it effectual for such purpose.

the proximate cause of the injury,—are questions of fact for the jury. Taylor v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 4 Cent. Rep. 628, 113 Pa. 162.

Proximate and remote cause of injury. See notes to Lapine v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. (La.) 1 L. R. A. 878; Smethurst v. Independent Cong. Church (Mass.) 2 L. R. A. 696; Hill v. Port Royal & W. C. R. Co. (S. C.) 5 L. R. A. 349; Erickson v. St. Paul & Duluth R. Co. (Minn.) 5 L. R. A. 788.

Rub. applied to contributory negligence.

Plaintiff's negligence, in order to bar a recovery, must have been a proximate cause of the injury. Cornwall v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 97 N. C. 11.

Where negligence is the basis of the action, the plaintiff must prove that his negligence did not proximately contribute to the injury for which he sues. W. U. Teleg. Co. v. McDaniel, 1 West. Rep. 273, 103 Ind. 294.

When a father sues for an injury to his minor child, his neglectful conduct proximately contributing to the injury is a bar to the action, unless the injury was caused by the wanton, reckless or intentional negligence of the defendant's employees, after having discovered the peril of the child, or when they ought to have discovered the peril. Pratt Coal & Iron Co. v. Brawley, 33 Ala. 371.

One whose vehicle standing on a street in violation of a municipal ordinance is injured by being driven against by another vehicle cannot recover, if such violation was the cause of injury. Newcomb v. Boston Protective Dept. 6 New Eng. Rep. 232, 146 Mass. 566.

In case of a collision between the cars of a railroad company and the engine of a dummy street-railway, the rule that the dummy line cannot recover if its negligence contributed proximately to the collision is not applicable to a passenger on the 7 L. R. A.

dummy line suing the railroad company for negligence. Georgia Pac. R. Co. v. Hughes, 87 Ala. 610.

Where a woman is fatally injured while attempting to put out a fire kindled by a locomotive on property in which she has no interest, and when her own residence was in no danger of being destroyed by the fire, the proximate cause of her injury is her own voluntary act, and she cannot recover in an action against the company. Pike v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (N. H.) 89 Fed. Rep. 255.

Injuries to a valuable mare, caused by a barbed-wire fence, are the proximate result of a wrongful act in leaving open the fence enclosing the pasture in which she was running, thus permitting her to escape. West v. Ward, 77 Iowa, 323.

Proximate cause of injury; instances.

The proximate cause of damage by fire carried from one building to another through intermediate means is a question for the jury. Adams v. Young, 3 West. Rep. 145, 44 Ohio St. 80.

Where fire has been negligently communicated to property, and by subsequent agencies it is carried to other property, the party first setting out the fire will be held liable. Poeppers v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 67 Mo. 715; Coates v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 61 Mo. 38; Krippner v. Biehl, 28 Minn. 139; Atkinson v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 60 Wis. 141; Kellogg v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Wis. 223; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469 (24 L. ed. 356); Henry v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 50 Cal. 183; Adams v. Young, supra.

If, through the negligence of a railroad company, sparks and cinders alive with fire escape from its engine and set fire to a house, the company is liable for all the loss of life and property destroyed by such fire without contributory negligence on the part of the party bringing the action; and the loss

The jury stated to the court, through their foreman, that they had agreed upon a general verdict. Thereupon the court suggested the withdrawal of the special questions. Both counsel consented. The court announced that the special questions were withdrawn from the jury, and then a general verdict in favor of the defendants was rendered. The special questions having been withdrawn from the jury, by consent, before the general verdict was rendered, it is apparent that no basis exists upon which to predicate a holding that the special questions constituted a part of the finding and verdict of the jury. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendants, and, the general term having affirmed, we have but to consider the exceptions taken by the plaintiff.

Our attention is directed by the appellant to but three exceptions, aside from those already considered: The first relates to the granting of a nonsuit as to the defendant Moses H. Nichols. The general term held that the evidence was not sufficient to warrant a verdict against him. Such holding is in accord with our view, after carefully considering the evidence adduced for the purpose of charging him with liability.

The second was in reference to the exclusion of testimony offered by the plaintiff for the purpose of proving the amount of damages sustained by the destruction of the buildings situated on Main Street. The evidence was excluded upon the ground that defendants' alleged negligence was not the proximate cause of such burning. In view of the verdict of the jury in favor of the defendants upon the issue submitted, and involving the liability of defendants to the plaintiff for the negligent burning of other buildings on the same occasion, it is not apparent how the rejection of such evidence can be deemed to have resulted prejudicially to the plaintiff. The plaintiff sought to prove all the damages done to his real estate. The court excluded some evidence because considered too remote; and, the jury having found in favor of the defendants, it is not conceivable that the exclusion of certain elements of damage to plaintiff's real estate could have affected the result. If, then, it be conceded that the learned court erred in its ruling in that regard, the error is not of such a character as to justify a reversal of the judgment. But we are of the opinion that the ruling of the court was abundantly supported by authority.

May 29, 1882, a strong wind from the northwest carried sparks from a smoke-stack belonging to the defendants to the roof of an old, three-story wooden building, the property of one E. D. Read, a distance of 280 feet south, 22½ degrees east from the smoke-stack. The sparks were carried across Main Street, and nearly diagonally across Read Street, at its junction with Main, and past, but not over, the buildings in question to the E. D. Read house. The fire on the roof was seen as soon as it commenced to burn, but the Village of Hancock, in which these buildings were located, did not possess any fire apparatus, and there were no ladders in the vicinity of sufficient length to enable the persons present to either gouge upon the roof, or throw water upon it. From the E. D. Read building the fire communicated to the blacksmith's shop on the of life is not too remote from the neglect to constitute a liability. Rajnowski v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. (Mich.) 41 N W Rep. 847.

Where defendant's negligent act was the proximate cause of a horse running away it was the primary cause of the injury, and defendant is liable. See Lee v. Union R. Co. 12 R. I. 383.

Where fire from a locomotive fell upon a horse on the street, rendering him unmanageable, and producing injury to a pedestrian on the sidewalk, the railroad company was held liable. Lowery v. Manhattan R. Co. 99 N. Y. 158.

For other cases of frightened horses running away and causing injuries, see Billman v. Indianapolis C. & L. R. Co. 78 Ind. 166; Forney v. Geldmacher, 75 Mo. 113; Turner v. Buchanan, 82 Ind. 147.

So a municipal corporation has been held liable for injuries caused by a horse frightened through its neglect. Crawfordsville v. Smith, 79 Ind. 308; Atlanta v. Wilson, 59 Ga. 544; Bennett v. Fifeild, 13 R. I. 120; Perkins v. Fayette, 68 Me. 152.

Where horses frightened by the upsetting of a vehicle, caused by an obstruction in the highway, due to the negligence of town authorities, ran away, and, after following the highway for some distance, turned upon a railroad track, and were killed by a passing train at quite a distance from such obstruction, it was held that the town authorities were not liable. West Mahanoy Twp. v. Watson, 8 Cent. Rep. 223, 113 Pa. 574.

Remote cause of injury; instances.

Where one places a steam boiler upon his premises, and operates the same with care and skill, so that it is no nuisance, in the absence of proof of fault or negligence on his part, he is not liable for damages to his neighbor occasioned by an explosion of his boiler. Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 4 Cent. Rep. 484, 113 Pa. 128.

Negligence in standing on the step of a car platform while the train is in motion is not the proximate cause of an injury received by being struck by the lever or signal of a switch, which scraped the sides of the cars as the train passed. Boss v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 5 Dak. 308.

Plaintiff's goods were shipped on a canal boat, and were injured by reason of an extraordinary storm. It appeared that the boat would have passed the point of accident before the flood, but that defendant used a lame horse and did not make the usual time. It was held, the act of God was the proximate cause, and defendant not liable. Gleeson v. Virginia Midland R. Co. (D. C.) 5 Cent. Rep. 442, 5 Mackey, 356.

Where evidence shows that defendant's negligence was a remote cause of plaintiff's loss, the court may instruct the jury to find for defendant. West Mahanoy Twp. v. Watson, 8 Cent. Rep. 223, 113 Pa. 574.

The mere act of shooting a dog, although in itself a tort, is not the proximate cause of an injury to another who is startled and frightened by the report of the gun, and in consequence, owing to previous delicate health, becomes seriously ill. Renner v. Canfield, 36 Minn. 90.

The stoppage of gas-pipe is not the proximate cause of an accident during an experiment for the purpose of increasing the pressure. Taylor v. Baldwin, 78 Cal. 517.

One who, to save himself from falling on an icy pavement, stretched out his hand, which was injured by coming in contact with a pointed railing in an area front, cannot recover damages from the owner of the building. Kelly v. Bennett, ante, 20.

north; thence in a westerly direction, across Read Street, to a barn of the plaintiff, which was destroyed. The next building to burn, situated northerly from the E. D. Read house, was Mallory's saloon. From that building the fire spread to and destroyed the buildings in question. After the E. D. Read house commenced to burn, and before either of the buildings of plaintiff on Main Street took fire, the wind died down, and changed to a slight breeze from the south. Unless, then, a party can be held liable for all buildings which may be burned, so long as the first cause can be traced to his negligent act in setting fire to his own or a neighbor's building, without reference to a change of wind, absence of fire apparatus, or other intervening and contributing causes, then the court did not err in holding that the burning of such of plaintiff's buildings as were situated on Main Street was not the proximate result of the alleged negligent act of the defendants in permitting sparks to escape so as to set on fire the E. D. Read house.

Certainly, the facts here presented are much more favorable to the defendants than they were in Ryan v. New York Cent. R. Co. 85 N. Y. 210. That case has been distinguished by this court in Webb v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 420; Pollett v. Long, 58 N. Y. 200, and Lowery v. Manhattan R. Co. 99 N. Y. 158,—but it has never been overruled; and the rule still obtains in this State that when the facts are undisputed the court may, under some circumstances, determine, as a matter of law, whether the act complained of is the immediate or remote cause of the injury.

In the Webb Case the property of the plaintiff destroyed was contiguous to that of the defendant, and the evidence tended to show that from the place where the live coals dropped to the lands of the plaintiff there was an accumulation of combustible matter, and that it was a time of drought. Judge Folger, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Nor am I able to confine the act of negligence to the dropping of the coal from the engine, and thus, separating it from all the other concurring acts and omissions of the defendant, make that the solitary, prime cause of a series of causes."

In Pollett v. Long, supra, defendant's dam was defective, and in consequence gave way. The volume of water thus suddenly precipitated upon a dam below tore it out and a little further down the stream a third dam was washed away. In an action to recover for damages sustained by the tearing out of the third dam, the trial court charged the jury that, if there was sufficient water in the middle pond to materially increase the volume and force of the stream, then plaintiff could not recover for injuries to the lower dam, as the damages would be too remote. This was held error. Judge Grover, after discussing the Ryan Case, said: "Assuming this rule was correctly applied in the case of Ryan v. New York Cent. R. Co. . . . it comes far short of sustaining the proposition under consideration."

In Lowery v. Manhattan R. Co., supra, a coal of fire dropped from an engine of the defendant upon the back of a horse, causing him to run away. The driver attempted to rein him against the curb-stone, for the purpose of arresting his progress. The wagon passed over the curb-stone, and thence over the plaintiff, injuring him. A recovery by the plaintiff was sustained. Judge Miller, in his opinion, said "that the Ryan Case is clearly distinguishable from the case at bar."

If it may be said that the rule laid down in the Ryan Case has been broadened somewhat by the decisions referred to, it cannot be contended that it has been so far modified as to permit a holding that the burning of the Main Street buildings was the ordinary and natural result of the act complained of. If it could be so held, then, however many buildings might be burned, if the fire but spread from one building to another, the negligent party would be liable to respond in damages to every owner, even if, as in this case, the course of the wind had so changed as to drive the flames and sparks of burning buildings in a direction other than was possible at the moment of the performance of the wrongful act. We think the court did not err in holding that the damages sustained by the burning of the Main Street buildings were not the proximate, but the remote, result of the acts complained of.

The third relates to the disposition of plaintiff's requests to find, and especially to the qualified manner in which the court charged the thirteenth request. At the close of the evidence the counsel for the plaintiff presented to the court thirteen separate requests to charge. Some were charged as requested, some charged in a modified form, and others refused. At the close of the charge counsel stated that he excepted "to the refusals to charge as requested by plaintiff's counsel, in so far as the court did refuse, and to each of the refusals to charge as requested." An exception thus taken is not sufficiently definite and specific to present a question for review. Smedis v. Brooklyn & R. B. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 13; Newall v. Bartlett, 114 N. Y. 399.

The judgment should be affirmed.

All concur, except Follett, Ch. J., and Potter, J., not sitting.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

George W. LAWTON et al. Appts.,

William N. STEELE, Respt.

(...N. Y....)

1. The taking of fish with nets in specified

NOTE.—Fisheries; power of State Legislatures to regulate.

It is plainly within the province of the Legislature to determine and regulate the use of all common waters may be prohibited by the Legislature and the setting of nets for that purpose declared to be a public nuisance.

2. The public remedy for the abatement of a nuisance by judicial prosecution in rem or in personam is not exclusive when the Statute in a particular case gives a remedy by summary proceedings to determine and regulate the use of all common waters and public rights and easements. Com. v. Essex Co. 18 Gray, 226.

statement, and the remedy is appropriate to the object to be accomplished.

3. Where a public nuisance consists in the location or use of tangible personal property so as to interfere with or obstruct a public right or regulation, the Legislature may authorize its summary abatement by executive agencies, without resort to judicial proceedings, and any injury or destruction of the property necessarily incident to the exercise of the summary jurisdiction interferes with no legal right of the owner.
4. The destruction by a public officer of nets for catching fish, set in violation of law, is proper, reasonable and necessary for the abatement of the nuisance, and when done summarily under authority of a statute it neither constitutes a taking of property without due process of law nor renders the officer liable to damages therefor.
5. Where the void provisions of a statute are separable from the valid ones, the court will sustain the valid ones while rejecting the others.

(February 25, 1890.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, reversing a judgment of the Jefferson Circuit in their favor in an action to recover damages for the conversion of their fishing nets by defendant. Affirmed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Mr. E. C. Emerson for appellant.

Mr. Elon R. Brown, for respondent:

For the protection of the fish, and for the maintenance of equality in respect to the right to fish, the State may regulate fisheries, if the regulations are reasonable, and do not extend beyond the prevention of threatened injuries. See Holyoke Water Power Co. v. Lyman, 32 U. S. 15 Wall. 500 (21 L. ed. 133); Com. v. Chapin, 5 Pick. 199; Com. v. Essex Co. 13 Gray. 247; State v. Snover, 42 N. J. L. 341; Doughty v. Conover, Id. 193.

In the last case the statute under consideration prohibited the use of fish nets at certain times of the year in particular counties. See also Inland Fishing Comrs. v. Holyoke Water Power Co. 104 Mass. 444, 6 Am. Rep. 247.

Fisheries, even in waters not navigable, are so far public rights that the Legislature of the State may ordain and establish regulations to prevent obstructions to the passage of the fish, and to permit the usual and uninterrupted enjoyment of the right of the riparian owners. Holyoke Water Power Co. v. Lyman, supra.

On the grant from Charles II., Duke of York, of what is now New Jersey, the soil under the navigable waters, with the right of fishing, both for shell fish and floating fish, passed, as an incident of sovereignty, in trust for the public. Martin v. Waddell, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 367 (10 L. ed. 99); Russell v. Jersey Co. 56 U. S. 15 How. 426 (14 L. ed. 757).

Such soil and rights of fishing passed to the twenty-four proprietors from the Duke of York, and from them back to the Crown, upon their surrender in 1702. By revolution they passed from the Crown to the State of New Jersey. Martin v. Waddell and Russell v. Jersey Co. supra.

Whatever soil below high-water mark is within the exclusive ownership of a State is held by it subject to and in trust for the enjoyment of the public rights of fishery, and is under the control of the State to regulate the modes of that enjoyment, so as to prevent acts which would render the public right less valuable or destroy it altogether. 7 L. R. A.

The right and duty to regulate, control and protect the fisheries in navigable waters along the shores of the ocean and of the Great Lakes has always been within the province of the States owning the adjacent territory.

Smith v. Maryland, 59 U. S. 18 How. 71 (15 L. ed. 269); Smith v. Levinus, 8 N. Y. 472.

One owning all around a lake may not take fish contrary to statute if the lake connects with public waters.

State v. Roberts, 59 N. H. 256, 47 Am. Rep. 199.

The State possesses ample authority to rid the fisheries of such devices as are destructive of them without negotiations with or judicial proceedings against the offending owners who have constructed or placed such devices in the fisheries in violation of the law protecting the same.

Phelps v. Racey, 60 N. Y. 10, approved in State v. Snover, 42 N. J. L. 345; and Magner v. People, 97 Ill. 332; Williams v. Blackwall, 3 Hurlst. & C. 33; Smith v. Levinus, 8 N. Y. 472.

The Legislature may, by virtue of its police powers in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, declare that a nuisance which was not before a nuisance, or legalize a nuisance so that no one will have the right to abate it.

Coe v. Schulte, 47 Barb. 65. See Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98; Reg. v. Crawshaw, Bell, C. C. 803, 80 L. J. N. S. M. C. 58; McLaughlin v. State, 45 Ind. 339; Monroe v. Gersper, 33 La. Ann. 1011; State v. Towler, 13 R. I. 661; Davis v. Sawyer, 133 Mass. 239; Sawyer v. Davis, 136

Smith v. Maryland, 59 U. S. 18 How. 71 (15 L. ed. 269).

Each State owns the beds of tide-waters within its jurisdiction, subject to the paramount right of navigation. Fisheries belong to the State. Ibid.; McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391 (24 L. ed. 248).

The rights of navigation and commerce are always paramount to those of public fisheries. Stockton v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 1 Intern. Com. Rep. 411, 32 Fed. Rep. 2.

Me. Rev. Stat., chap. 40, § 70, prohibiting the use of a net, other than a dip-net, in fresh water, applies to the Grand Pond in Kennebec County, Maine. State v. Towle, 6 New Eng. Rep. 644, 30 Me. 349.

The spreading of nets by vessels from the lake, three miles up the Grand River from its mouth, is a violation of Mich. Laws 1885, Act No. 10. People v. Kirsch, 12 West. Rep. 62, 67 Mich. 59.

A law forbidding the catching of fish by seines, nets or traps, in the waters of the State, interferes with no constitutional right. State v. Blount, 36 Mo. 543.

North Carolina Acts 1875, chap. 115, § 153, does not preclude one engaged in a seine-fishery from removing stakes put to operate a pond-net. Hettrick v. Page, 32 N. C. 66.

Under the proviso to Tenn. Acts 1879, chap. 108, making the penalties prescribed inapplicable "to persons owning private ponds, and to those owning the land on both sides of a running stream, the same being closed by a substantial fence," one who catches fish with a net in such a stream by verbal permission from the owner of the land, although in his absence, commits no violation of the law. Maney v. State, 6 Lea. 313.

Vt. Act 1832, No. 117, § 2, prohibiting all net fishing in Lake Champlain, or in rivers emptying into the lake within ten miles from the mouth, is held constitutional as a regulation, and not prohibiting the fishing. Drew v. Hiltner, 56 Vt. 641.

Mass. 289; Miller v. New York, 109 U. S. 885 (27 L. ed. 971); Leigh v. Westervelt, 2 Duer, 618; Harris v. Thompson, 9 Barb. 350.

The means of abatement must likewise be within the reasonable discretion of the law-making power.

Kellogg v. Thompson, 66 N. Y. 88; Rockwell v. Nearing, 85 N. Y. 302.

Fish nets are within the definition of a nuisance.

Wood, Nuts, 1; State v. Snover, 42 N. J. L. 341; Williams v. Blackwall, 2 Hurlst. & C. 33; Penal Code, § 885.

The legislative discretion is properly exercised in providing that in the abatement of a nuisance deliberately caused, property of trivial value, used as a means to create it, should be destroyed summarily.

Penal Code, Gambling Kits, §§ 338, 345, 346.

Andrews, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The conclusions of the trial judge that Black River Bay is a part of Lake Ontario, within the meaning of chap. 141 of the Laws of 1886, and that the nets set therein were set in violation of the Act, chap. 591 of the Laws of 1880, as amended by chap. 817 of the Laws of 1883, were affirmed by the general term. The trial judge in his careful opinion demonstrated the correctness of these conclusions, and nothing can be added to re-inforce the argument by which they were sustained.

The point of difference between the trial court and the general term relates to the constitutionality of the section of the Act of 1880, as amended in 1883. That section is as follows: "Sec. 2. Any net found, or other means or device for taking or capturing fish, or whereby they may be taken or captured, set, put, floated, had, found or maintained in or upon any of the waters of this State, or upon the shores or islands in any waters in this State, in violation of any existing or hereafter enacted statutes or laws for the protection of fish, is hereby declared to be, and is, a public nuisance, and may be abated and summarily destroyed by any person; and it shall be the duty of each and every (game and fish) protector aforesaid and of every game constable, to seize and remove and forthwith destroy the same, . . . and no action for damages shall be maintained against any person for or on account of any such seizure and destruction."

The defendant justified the seizure and destruction of the nets of the plaintiffs, as a game protector, under this Statute, and established the justification, if the Legislature had the constitutional power to authorize the summary remedy provided by the section in question. The trial judge held the Act in this respect to be unconstitutional, and ordered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, for the value of the nets. The general term sustained the constitutionality of the Statute and reversed the judgment. We concur with the general term, for reasons which will now be stated.

The legislative power of the State, which, by the Constitution, is vested in the Senate and Assembly (§ 1, art. 3), covers every subject which, in the distribution of the powers of government between the legislative, executive and judicial departments, belongs by practice or usage, in England or in this country, to the legislative department, except in so far as such powers have been withheld or limited by the Constitution itself, and subject also to such restrictions upon its exercise as may be found in the Constitution of the United States. From this grant of legislative power springs the right of the Legislature to enact a Criminal Code, to define what acts shall constitute a criminal offense, what penalty shall be inflicted upon offenders, and generally to enact all laws which the Legislature shall deem expedient for the protection of public and private rights, and the prevention and punishment of public wrongs.

The Legislature may not declare that to be a crime which in its nature is and must be under all circumstances be innocent, nor can it in defining crimes, or in declaring their punishment, transgress any fundamental right secured by the Constitution. But it may, acting within these limits, make acts criminal which before were innocent, and ordain punishment in future cases where before none could have been inflicted. This in its nature is a legislative power which by the Constitution of the State is committed to the discretion of the legislative body. Barker v. People, 8 Cow. 686; People v. West, 8 Cent. Rep. 758, 106 N. Y. 293.

The Act in question declares that nets set in prohibited waters are public nuisances, and authorizes their summary destruction. The Statute declares and defines a new species of public nuisance, not known to the common law, nor declared to be such by any prior statute. But we know of no limitation of legislative power which precludes the Legislature from enlarging the category of public nuisances, or from declaring places or property used to the detriment of public interests or to the injury of the health, morals or welfare of the community, public nuisances, although not such at common law. There are, of course, limitations upon the exercise of this power. The Legislature cannot use it as a cover for withdrawing property from the protection of the law, or arbitrarily, where no public right or interest is involved, declare property a nuisance for the purpose of devoting it to destruction. If the court can judicially see that the Statute is a mere evasion, or was framed for the purpose of individual oppression, it will set it aside as unconstitutional, but not otherwise. Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98; Harlan, J., Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 661 [31 L. ed. 210].

There are numerous examples in recent legislation of the exercise of the legislative power to declare property held or used in violation of a particular statute a public nuisance, although such possession and use before the statute was lawful. The prohibitory legislation relative to the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors in various States has in many cases been accompanied by provisions declaring the place where liquor is unlawfully kept for sale, as well as the liquor itself, a common or public nuisance; and while the validity of prohibitory statutes in their operation upon liquors lawfully acquired or held before their passage, and in respect of the procedure authorized thereby, have been the subject of much contention in the courts, the right of the Legislature by a new statute to impose upon property held or used in the violation of law the character of a public nuisance is generally admitted. See Wynhamer v. People, 18 N. Y. 378; Fisher v. McGirr, 1 Gray, 1; Mugler v. Kansas, supra.

The law-making power is not exhausted by a single exercise, nor limited to subjects covered by the common law.

The legislative power to regulate fishing in public waters has been exercised from the earliest period of the common law. The Statute, 2 Hep. VI., chap. 15, prohibited the use of nets in the Thames, if they obstruct navigation or the passage of fish. Lord Hale, in his treatise, De Jure Maris, page 23, says that "the fishing which the subject has in this or any other public or private river or creek, fresh or salt, is subject to the laws for the conservation of fish and fry, which are many."

In this State many statutes have been enacted, commencing at an early period, regulating the right of fishing in the waters of the State, prohibiting the use of nets or the taking of fish at certain seasons, and for the protection of certain kinds of fish. 1 Rev. Stat. Ed's ed. p. 687 et seq.; 4 Rev. Stat. Ed's ed. p. 96 et seq.

It has become a settled principle of public law that power resides in the several States to regulate and control the right of fishing in the public waters within their respective jurisdictions. Smith v. Maryland, 59 U. S. 18 How. 71 [15 L. ed. 269]; Hooker v. Cummings, 20 Johns. 101; Smith v. Levinus, 8 N. Y. 472; 8 Kent, Com. 415.

We think it was competent for the Legislature, in exercising the power of regulation of this common and public right, to prohibit the taking of fish with nets in specified waters, and by its declaration to make the setting of nets for that purpose a public nuisance. The general definition of a nuisance given by Blackstone, vol. 3, p. 215, is "anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience or damage."

It is generally true, as stated by a recent writer (Wood, on Nuisances, § 11), that nuisances arise from the violation of the common law, and not from the violation of a public statute. But this, we conceive, is true only where the statute creates a right or imposes an obligation and affixes a penalty for its violation, or gives a specific remedy which by the terms of the statute or by construction is exclusive. See Bulbrook v. Goodere, 8 Burr. 1770.

But the principle stated has no application where the statute itself prescribes that a particular act or property used for a noxious purpose shall be deemed a nuisance.

The Legislature, in the Act in question, acting upon the theory and upon the fact (for so it must be assumed) that fishing with nets in prohibited waters is a public injury, have applied the doctrine of the common law to a case new in instance but not in principle, and made the doing of the prohibited act a nuisance. This we think it could lawfully do. The more difficult question arises upon the provision in the second section of the Act of 1883, which authorizes any person, and makes it the duty of the game protector, to abate the nuisance caused by nets set in violation of law, by their summary destruction. It is insisted that the destruction of nets by an individual, or by an executive officer so authorized, without any judicial proceeding, is a deprivation of the owner of the nets of this property, without due process of law, in contravention of the Constitution. The right of summary abatement of nuisances without judicial process or proceeding was an established principle of the common law long before the adoption of our Constitution, and it has never been supposed that this common law principle was abrogated by the provision for the protection of life, liberty and property in our State Constitution, although the exercise of the right might result in the destruction of property. This question was referred to by Sutherland, J., in Hart v. Albany, 9 Wend. 590. He said: "If this is a case in which the corporation or any other person had a right summarily to remove or abate this obstruction, then the objection that the appellants by this course of proceeding may be deprived of their property without due process of law, or trial by jury, has no application. Formal legal proceedings and trial by jury are not appropriate to, and have never been used in, such cases." See also opinion of Edmonds, Senator, in S. O. p. 609.

In the Licenses Cases, 46 U. S. 5 How. 504 [12 L. ed. 256], Judge McLean, speaking of this subject, said: "The acknowledged police power of a State often extends to the destruction of property. A nuisance may be abated. Everything prejudicial to the health and morals of a city may be removed."

In Rockwell v. Nearing, 85 N. Y. 308, Porter, J., speaking of the constitutional provision, said: "There were many examples of summary proceedings which were recognized as due process of law at the date of the Constitution, and to them the prohibition has no application."

Quarantine and health laws have been enacted from time to time from the organization of our state government, authorizing the summary destruction of infected cargo, clothing or other articles, by officers designated, and no doubt has been suggested as to their constitutionality.

In Hart v. Albany, supra, a question was raised as to the validity of a city ordinance, subjecting a float moored in the Albany Basin to summary seizure and sale upon failure of the owner to remove the same after notice. The court held the ordinance to be void as not within the power conferred upon the city by its charter, but it was held that the common-law right of abatement existed, although the removal of the float in question involved its destruction.

Van Wormer v. Albany, 15 Wend. 263, sustained the right of the corporation to dig down a lot in the city, to abate a nuisance, although in the process of abatement buildings thereon were pulled down.

In Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. 397, the court justified the act of the defendant, as an individual citizen, in tearing down a filthy tenement house which was a nuisance, to prevent the spread of the Asiatic cholera.

These authorities sufficiently establish the proposition that the constitutional guaranty does not take away the common-law right of abatement of nuisances by summary proceedings, without judicial trial or process. But in the process of abating a nuisance there are limitations both in respect of the agencies which may be employed, and as to what may be done in execution of the remedy. The general proposition has been asserted in text books, and repeated in judicial opinions, that any person may abate a public nuisance. But the best-considered authorities in this country and England now hold that a public nuisance can only be abated by an individual where it obstructs his private right, or interferes at the time with his enjoyment of a right common to many, as the right of passage upon the public highway, and he thereby sustains a special injury. Brown v. Perkins, 12 Gray, 89; Colchester v. Brooks, 7 Q. B. 339; Dimes v. Petley, 15 Q. B. 276; Fort Plain Bridge Co. v. Smith, 30 N. Y. 44; Harrower v. Ritson, 87 Barb. 301.

The public remedy is ordinarily by indictment for the punishment of the offender, wherein on judgment of conviction the removal or destruction of the thing constituting the nuisance, if physical and tangible, may be adjudged, or by bill in equity filed in behalf of the people. But the remedy by judicial prosecution in rem or in personam, is not, we conceive, exclusive, where the statute in a particular case gives a remedy by summary abatement, and the remedy is appropriate to the object to be accomplished. There are nuisances arising from conduct, which can only be abated by the arrest and punishment of the offender, and in such cases it is obvious that the Legislature could not directly direct the sheriff or other officer to seize and flog or imprison the culprit. The infliction of punishment for crime is the prerogative of the court and cannot be usurped by the Legislature. The Legislature can only define the offense and prescribe the measure of punishment, where guilt shall have been judicially ascertained. But as the Legislature may declare nuisances, it may also, where the nuisance is physical and tangible, direct its summary abatement by executive officers, without the intervention of judicial proceedings, in cases analogous to those where the remedy by summary abatement existed at common law.

Marvin, J., in his able opinion in Griffith v. McCullum, 46 Barb. 561, speaking of the remedy for the abatement of nuisances, says: "That which is exclusively a common-law or public nuisance cannot be abated by the private acts of individuals. The remedy is by indictment or criminal prosecution, unless the statute has provided some other remedy."

The cases of Hart v. Albany, Van Wormer v. Albany and Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, supra, show that the public remedy is not in all cases confined to a judicial prosecution. But the remedy by summary abatement cannot be extended beyond the purpose implied in the words, and must be confined to doing what is necessary to accomplish it. And here lies, we think, the stress of the question now presented. It cannot be denied that in many cases a nuisance can only be abated by the destruction of the property in which it consists. The cases of infected cargo or clothing and of impure and unwholesome food are plainly of this description. They are nuisances per se, and their abatement is their destruction. So also there can be little doubt, as we conceive, that obscene books or pictures, or implements only capable of an illegal use, may be destroyed as a part of the process of abating the nuisance they create, if so directed by statute. The keeping of a bawdy house, or a house for the resort of lewd and dissolute people, is a nuisance at common law. But the tearing down of the building so kept would not be justified as the exercise of the power of summary abatement; and it would add nothing, we think, to the justification, that a statute was produced authorizing the destruction of the building summarily as a part of the remedy. The nuisance consists in the case supposed in the conduct of the owner or occupants of the house, in using or allowing it to be used for the immoral purpose, and the remedy would be to stop the use. This would be the only mode of abatement in such case known to the common law, and the destruction of the building for this purpose would have no sanction in common law or precedent. See Babcock v. Buffalo, 56 N. Y. 268; Barclay v. Com. 25 Pa. 503; Ely v. Niagara Co. 36 N. Y. 297.

But where a public nuisance consists in the location or use of tangible personal property, so as to interfere with or obstruct a public right or regulation, as in the case of the float in the Albany Basin (Hart v. Albany, 9 Wend. 571) or the nets in the present case, the Legislature may, we think, authorize its summary abatement by executive agencies, without resort to judicial proceedings, and any injury or destruction of the property necessarily incident to the exercise of the summary jurisdiction interferes with no legal right of the owner. But the Legislature could not go further. It could not decree the destruction or forfeiture of property used so as to constitute a nuisance, as a punishment of the wrong, nor even we think to prevent a future illegal use of the property, it not being a nuisance per se, and appoint officers to execute its mandate. The plain reason is that due process of law requires a hearing and trial before punishment or before forfeiture of property can be adjudged for the owner's misconduct. Such legislation would be a plain usurpation by the Legislature of judicial powers, and under guise of exercising the power of summary abatement of nuisances, the Legislature cannot take into its own hands the enforcement of the criminal or quasi criminal law. See opinion of Shaw, Ch. J., in Fisher v. McGirr, supra, and in Brown v. Perkins, 12 Gray, 89.

The inquiry in the present case comes to this: whether the destruction of the nets set in violation of law, authorized and required by the Act of 1883, is simply a proper, reasonable and necessary regulation for the abatement of the nuisance, or transcends that purpose, and is to be regarded as the imposition and infliction of a forfeiture of the owner's right of property in the nets, in the nature of a punishment. We regard the case as very near the border line, but we think the legislation may be fairly sustained on the ground that the destruction of nets so placed is a reasonable incident of the power of the abatement of the nuisance. The owner of the nets is deprived of his property, but not as the direct object of the law, but as incident to the abatement of the nuisance.

Where a private person is authorized to abate a public nuisance, as in case of a house built in a highway, or a gate across it, which obstructs and prevents his passage thereon, it was long ago held that he was not required to observe particular care in abating the nuisance, and that although the gate might have been opened without cutting it down, yet the cutting down would be lawful. Lodis v. Arnold, 2 Salk. 458, and cases cited.

But the general rule undoubtedly is that the abatement must be limited by necessity, and no wanton and unnecessary injury must be committed. 8 Bl. Com. p. 6, note.

It is conceivable that nets illegally set could, with the use of care, be removed without destroying them. But in view of their position, the difficulty attending their removal, the liability to injury in the process, their comparatively small value, we think the Legislature could adjudge their destruction as a reasonable means of abating the nuisance.

These views lead to an affirmance of the order of the general term.

The case of State v. Snover, 42 N. J. L. 841, tends to sustain the conclusion we have reached. The action in that case was trespass, for entering the plaintiff's lands, bordering a non-navigable stream in New Jersey, and destroying a fish basket, in the waters diverted therefrom, placed for the catching of fish, contrary to a statute. The court held the statute to be a justification.

The case of Williams v. Blackwall, 2 Hurlst. & C. 33, arose under an Act of Parliament which authorized the summary destruction, by fish wardens, of what was known as salmon engines, being fish nets set in violation of the Act. The case is not an authority upon the power of our Legislature under the limitations of the State Constitution, but the legislation upon which the action was founded shows that in a country governed by the principles of Magna Charta, such legislation is not deemed inconsistent with the fundamental doctrines of civil liberty. It is insisted that the provision in the Act of 1883 authorizes the destruction of nets found on the land, on shores or islands adjacent to waters, where taking of fish by nets is prohibited, and that this part of the Statute is in any view unconstitutional. Upon this premise it is insisted that the whole section must fall, as the Statute, if unconstitutional as to one provision, is unconstitutional as a whole. This is not, we think, the general rule of law where provisions of a statute are separable, one of which only is void. On the contrary the general rule requires the court to sustain the valid provisions, while rejecting the others. Where the void matter is so blended with the good that they cannot be separated, or where the court can judicially see that the Legislature only intended the Statute to be enforced in its entirety, and that by rejecting part the general purpose of the Statute would be defeated, the court, if compelled to defeat the main purpose of the Statute, will not strive to save any part. See Fisher v. McGirr, supra.

The order granting a new trial should be affirmed, and judgment absolute ordered for the defendant on the stipulation, with costs.

All concur, except O'Brien, J., not sitting

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

J. G. C. RAPPLEYE, Assignee, etc., of Young Brothers, Appt.,

v.

RACINE SEEDER CO.

(....Iowa....)

1. The right to assign a contract under Code, § 2084, giving the assignee a right of action in his own name, does not permit one who has ordered machines, agreeing to give his own notes therefor and turn over as collateral any notes taken by him from purchasers, to assign the contract so as to substitute another in his stead whose note must be accepted in lieu of his own.
2. A contract for the sale of articles for which the purchaser's note is to be taken may be rescinded on his insolvency before delivery, and the seller cannot be compelled to accept the note of the assignee for creditors.

(January 31, 1890.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Polk County in favor of defendant in an action to recover damages for the alleged breach of a contract for the sale of certain agricultural implements. Affirmed.

NOTE.—Contract; rescission. See notes to Osgood v. Bauder (Iowa) 1 L. R. A. 656, and Katz v. Bedford (Cal.) 1 L. R. A. 326.
7 L. R. A.

Statement by Granger, J.:

Action for breach of contract in the sale of certain seeders, in which the court, without the intervention of a jury, found the following facts:

"First. That prior to October 14, 1884, the firm of Young Bros., the plaintiff's assignors, were a copartnership engaged principally as manufacturers' agents in sale of agricultural implements throughout the State of Iowa, having their place of business at the City of Des Moines, in said State. Second. That on the 19th day of August, 1884, the Racine Seeder Company, of Racine, Wis., the defendant herein, made with said Young Bros. the contract introduced in evidence, and marked 'Exhibit A,' as alleged in plaintiff's petition. Third. That by said contract the defendant sold to Young Bros. nine hundred Strowbridge broadcast sowers, for which payment was to be made by the promissory notes of Young Bros. as implements were delivered, and in consideration for such purchase the defendant granted to said firm the exclusive privilege of selling said implements in the western half of the State of Iowa. Young Bros. were to canvass said territory, and solicit written orders for said Strowbridge sower, in the name of defendant, using blank orders prescribed by it; and the orders thus taken were to be turned over to the defendant, and thereupon the implements were to be shipped by the defendant to the various purchasers, at the time stated in such orders. Young Bros. were further required to take promissory notes in settlement for implements thus sold, when sales were not for cash; and such notes were to be turned over to the defendant, in addition to the contracts before mentioned, as collateral security for the notes of Young Bros. If implements were sold for cash, the same was to be immediately applied by Young Bros. on the purchase price of the implements contracted for.

Fourth. That upon the faith of the above contract, Young Bros. proceeded to canvass the territory assigned them, taking orders for the said implements, and turning them over to defendant, and otherwise performing their part of said contract, and up to the 14th of October, 1884, had sold about three hundred of said implements, at prices varying from $16.50 to $18.75. Said contracts were identical in form with Exhibit A, hereto attached.

Fifth. That on the 14th day of October, 1884, the said Young Bros. made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors to one Isaac Henshie, who continued to perform the duties of said assignee until his death, on December 8, 1884; that the record of the instrument found on pages Nos. 10, 11, 12 and 13 of book No. 154 of Chattel Mortgage Records, in recorder's office of Polk County, Iowa, introduced in evidence, is a true copy of said general assignment; that by said assignment all rights under said contract of Young Bros. with defendant passed to said assignee; that the plaintiff in this cause is the successor in office to said Isaac Henshie as assignee of said Young Bros., duly appointed by the Circuit Court of Polk County, Iowa, on or about the 18th day of December, 1884.

Sixth. That on the 5th day of November, 1884, the defendant sent to Young Bros., recent place of business, by messenger, the letter of that date set out in defendant's answer herein, giving notice of its refusal to go on with the contract before mentioned; that the defendant intended by the notice given in said letter to put an end to the contract entirely, and the same was understood and treated by the assignee of Young Bros. as so intended; that soon after the service of the above notice the defendants entered the same territory which had been granted by said contract to Young Bros., made new contracts in its own name, with some of the persons with whom Young Bros. had contracted for the sale of said implements, and sold large numbers of the same to divers other persons in said territory.

Seventh. That, as soon as practicable after entering upon his duties as assignee of said Young Bros., the said Isaac Henshie sought legal advice with reference to his rights as such assignee under said contract, and was advised that he had a right under the law to go on with the same, and require performance thereof on the part of defendant; and there was evidence tending to show that he thereupon procured an agent to further canvass the territory named in said contract, and was otherwise arranging to go on with the same, when he received said defendant's letter of November 5, 1884, giving notice of its refusal to perform said contract. Such evidence was, in substance, that said assignee called in from the road one William Gracey, who had previously been employed by Young Bros. to sell said Strowbridge sower, the goods handled by Young Bros., in said territory; that said Gracey was subsequently in the city; and that the account-book kept by the assignee showed an account with William Gracey, in which appeared the following entry: "October 20, 1884. Commenced work at sixty dollars per month and expenses;" that said Gracey received money from said assignee, and subsequently took the two orders for thirty-five of said Strowbridge sowers, which were introduced in evidence, and marked 'Exhibit B' (22 and 23), but this was no evidence that the defendant had knowledge of these matters; that at the time said letter of November 5, 1884, was received from the defendant said assignee had not had a reasonable time in which to perfect arrangements for going on with said contract.

Eighth. That said Strowbridge broadcast sower is a patented article, of which defendant was the sole manufacturer. About the month of February or March, 1885, however, a similar sower was put upon the market by the Joliet Wire Company, of Joliet, Ill., at less than this contract price; but this was considered by the defendant to be an infringement on the Strowbridge patent.

Ninth. That at no time has defendant either made or tendered to plaintiff, or to his predecessor in office, the said Isaac Henshie, or to said Young Bros., any compensation whatever for the labor or moneys expended by them, or for any portion of their performance of said contract, or made or offered in any manner to place the said persons, or either of them, in statu quo.

Tenth. That defendant never delivered, nor tendered a delivery of, any portion of said nine hundred Strowbridge sowers sold to said Young Bros., although such delivery was demanded, to the number of said implements named in said orders turned over to said defendant, if such orders constituted a demand; and said defendant refused to deliver any portion of said implements, or to perform its part of said contract in any respect whatever. But no demand was made upon defendant for performance of said contract, unless the delivery of said orders constituted such demand.

Eleventh. That neither the plaintiff nor his predecessor in office, the said Isaac Henshie, ever tendered the defendant any security in lieu of the promissory notes of Young Bros. agreed to be made, or made application to the court for authority to carry out said contract, or to require said defendant to accept any security in lieu of said notes, or gave defendant any notice that he intended to carry out said contract."

As a conclusion of law, the district court found with the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

Messrs. Cummins & Wright and N. B. Raymond for appellant.

Messrs. Lehmann & Park, for appellee:

In order to obtain the contract Young Bros. represented themselves as solvent when in fact they were insolvent. A party's false statement of his own solvency is ground for rescinding the contract which it induces.

1 Wharton, Cont. § 262; 5 Walt, Act. and Def. 680, and cases cited; Owego Starch Factory v. Lendrum, 57 Iowa, 573

The partial performance which the law considers as an obstacle to rescission is a partial performance as between the parties.

Benson v. Cowell, 52 Iowa, 187.

The requirement that parties should be placed in statu quo as a condition precedent to a rescission, does not hold in cases of fraud—these are an exception to the rule.

3 Parsons, Cont. 780; Hendrickson v. Hendrickson, 51 Iowa, 68. See also American Wine Co. v. Brasher, 4 McCrary, 247.

When the buyer becomes insolvent, the seller may withhold delivery of the goods until he is paid or secured.

Mihill's Mfg. Co. v. Day, 50 Iowa, 250; Benjamin, Sales, § 1016.

An assignee does not stand in all respects in the place of his assignor. He cannot in all matters continue the business of the assignor. "It can only be allowed from the necessity of the case, and where it is manifestly for the benefit and advantage of the creditors and those interested in the estate."

Burrill, Assignm. pp. 600-603.

The trustee has a right to elect to complete the contract by paying cash within a reasonable time.

2 Addison, Cont. p. 488. See also 1 Wharton, Cont. § 298; Benjamin, Sales, § 1119; Smith v. Gordon, 2 N. Y. Legal Obs. 825; Streeter v. Sumner, 31 N. H. 558.

Granger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The point receiving the principal attention in argument is as to the effect on the contract of the insolvency of Young Bros., and the assignment for the benefit of their creditors. Perhaps it may be better stated as a query, thus: Was the insolvency and assignment a justification for the defendant Company in rescinding the contract? The answer to this question is a practical determination of the case, as to the plaintiff's cause of action. Its consideration has led counsel for appellant to consider at some length the law as to the assignment of contracts, and it is urged that the assignment in question is within its contemplation. A salient feature of the case is the manner or method of payment by Young Bros. for the seeders. The contract was for 900 seeders, to be delivered on the orders of Young Bros., for which the firm was to give its notes. Young Bros. were to deliver the seeders to purchasers from them, and settle for the same either by receiving cash or notes. If cash, it was to be turned over to defendant, to apply on the notes of Young Bros. If notes, they were to be turned over to defendant as collateral security for the notes already given by Young Bros. It is said in argument that the district court held the rescission valid because, after the assignment, Young Bros. were not in a position to give their notes in pursuance of the terms of the contract; from which we infer this view of the court: That the defendant was entitled, under the contract, to the notes of Young Bros., aided collaterally by the notes taken by them in the sales of the seeders. As between defendant and Young Bros., nothing less could be regarded as a compliance with the contract. It could hardly be claimed that Young Bros., in a settlement for the machines, could substitute in lieu of their note that of another person or firm, regardless of the question of solvency or value, even though aided by the collateral notes as agreed upon, for the sole and conclusive reason that their engagements are for notes signed by them. Such a rule needs no elaboration.

The argument, then, leads us to the query, Without reference to the statutory assignment for the benefit of creditors, could Young Bros. have so assigned the contract, without the consent of defendant, as to substitute another in their stead for performance, and whose note must be accepted in lieu of theirs by the defendant? This leads us to consider the authorities cited. Counsel for appellant quotes from Code, § 2084, as follows: "Instruments in writing, by which the maker promises . . . to pay or deliver any property or labor, or acknowledges any money or labor or property to be due, are assignable by indorsement thereon, or by other writing; and the assignee shall have a right of action in his own name." Counsel then say: "Under the very broad language of this provision, this court has held that all contracts are assignable, even in cases where, by the terms of the instrument, its assignment is prohibited," and reference is made to Moorman v. Collier, 33 Iowa, 188, and First Nat. Bank v. Carpenter, 41 Iowa, 518.

Section 2084 is a part of the chapter on "Notes and Bills;" and the section deals only with instruments in writing, and tells how they may be transferred, and who may sue thereon. In both of the cases to which reference is made the court had under consideration the validity of the transfer of an instrument in writing for the payment of money; and the language used in each case is not too broad, if properly limited by the subject of its application. In Moorman v. Collier the language relied on is that "all instruments, under our statute, are assignable;" and the statement takes as authority Revision, § 1796, which corresponds with section 2084 of the Code, and the language of the case is only as to "instruments." It does not say, "all contracts." The case evidently means all instruments for the payment or delivery of money, property or labor, as specified in the section and chapter. The case of First Nat. Bank v. Carpenter was an action on a written guaranty, which was held assignable; and in its discussion this language is used: "Generally, by the common law, a guaranty is not negotiable, or in any manner transferable, so as to enable the assignee to maintain an action thereon. . . . But under our Statutes this and every other kind of contract is assignable." It cites for support Code, §§ 2082-2087, inclusive; and it is said in the opinion that "even in a case where, by the terms of the instrument, its assignment is prohibited, it may be assigned." The sections referred to are the six first sections in the chapter on "Notes and Bills," which chapter, of course, has reference to other instruments than notes and bills; and the provisions, in brief, as to assignments are that a party entitled to recover on an instrument or an open account may transfer his right of recovery to another; but there is nothing in the language of the chapter to indicate a legislative intent to authorize a party to a contract by assignment to transfer his obligations to perform to a third party, and thus effect his release, without the consent of his obligee.

Let us suppose that A contracts in writing to render service, as a traveling salesman, to B, for a specified compensation. Under the law, if B shall be indebted to A on the contract, A may assign his claim. But suppose A should assign his contract to C, whereby C was to receive the pay and render the service. Must B accept that? B has contracted for the services of A. He is entitled to that; and, before B can be required to pay either to A or his assigns, he must have what he contracted for. The law will permit a person to assign what is his, either in possession or by right of action, but not his obligations to another; and such is the substance of the provisions of the Statutes on the subject of assignments referred to.

Thus we think that Young Bros. could not, without reference to the assignment for the benefit of creditors, have so assigned the contract in question, without the consent of the defendant, as to have required defendant to have accepted in lieu of theirs the notes of their assignee.

We may then inquire if there is anything in the statutory assignment for the benefit of creditors to change the rule? It is urged that the statutory provision as to assignments for the benefit of creditors is broad enough to enable the assignee to execute any contract that might come into his hands. The difficulties of the case are not with the provisions of the Statute as to the authority of the assignee. They are more with his incapacity or indisposition to execute the contract. We should not lose sight of the real question under consideration by a contemplation of what the assignee could have done if defendant, after insolvency, had been willing to deliver the seeders. It may be conceded that the contract could thus have been executed by the assignee on behalf of Young Bros. But the query is, Had the defendant the right to refuse delivery of the seeders after insolvency and assignment? In other words, had it the right to terminate the contract? If it were a case of insolvency without the assignment, we think it would be conceded on authority that the obligation to deliver could only be on a tender of a cash payment in lieu of notes agreed upon. Pardes v. Kanady, 100 N. Y. 121, 1 Cent. Rep. 250.

Does the fact of the assignment affect the rights of the defendant? The reason of the rule in cases of insolvency is too manifest to need explanation. A person who contracts to deliver property on a credit, in anticipation of a solvent purchaser, ought not to be required to deliver it after insolvency, which is a practical confession by the purchaser of his inability to comply with the terms of the contract. If to the fact of insolvency is added that of an assignment for the benefit of creditors, why should the rule be changed? If the delivery is excused in case of insolvency because the property will not be paid for, the same reasons exist for excusing the delivery after assignment. If the insolvent did not possess a right to enforce the contract except by cash payment, he could convey no greater right to his assignee. The argument deals with the question of the right of appellant to a delivery of the seeders upon cash payment therefor. To our minds, the record does not present the question for consideration. The contract was not to pay cash, but to settle by note. After insolvency defendant was not required to anticipate a readiness for cash payment; and, if either Young Bros. or plaintiff desired to make such payment, a tender to that effect should have been made. Soon after the assignment, defendant, as it should, gave notice that because of the insolvency and dissolution of the partnership the contract was rescinded. This notice was to Young Bros. If the assignee then desired to pay in cash, and have the seeders delivered, the proposition or tender should have been made. But neither the pleadings in the case, nor the findings of the court, deal with this question. The case in the district court seems to have been tried upon an issue as to the right of the assignee to carry out the contract by giving his note in lieu of that of Young Bros. The pleadings and findings have to do with a willingness on the part of the assignee to carry out the contract; but it appears only to have been a carrying out of the contract as Young Bros. were authorized to do, and not by payments in cash. A reference to the eleventh finding shows that the assignee has never in any manner indicated to defendant a purpose or desire to secure or perform the contract. Insolvency, in such cases, implies an inability to perform, on which the defendant might rely until otherwise assured.

Appellant contends, with much zeal, that the mere fact of insolvency does not put an end to the contract of sale; and several authorities are cited in support of the rule. It is not necessary for us to state an opinion on a state of facts so broad. The case Re Phania Ressemer Steel Co., L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 106, cited by appellant, bears upon the question of when the facts will justify a seller on credit in refusing to deliver because of the subsequent insolvency of the purchaser. The facts in that case are that the Carnforth Iron Company, in October, 1874, contracted to supply iron to be delivered monthly, and to be paid for in installments, but on credit. The installments were delivered till in February, 1875, when the purchasing company called a meeting of its creditors, and said it was carrying on business at a loss, and was short of capital, and asked for an extension of time, which the creditors refused. The selling company then refused to deliver the iron except upon cash payments, and the purchasing company then rescinded the contract. The selling company then asked for damage, which the court held could not be recovered; holding that there was no such declaration of insolvency as to justify the selling company in refusing to deliver. The syllabus of the case, which appears to be supported by the opinion, deduces a rule as follows: "In order to justify the vendors, in such a case, in exercising their right of refusal to deliver, there must be such proof or admission of the insolvency of the purchasers at the time as amounts to a declaration of intention not to pay for the goods." The case does not appear to be an authority against the right of refusal to deliver where the fact of insolvency exists, and is so evidenced as to amount to a declared purpose not to pay. It is the fact of the insolvency that seems to be the turning point in the case, and that would surely seem to be the reasonable rule.

The case of Morgan v. Bain, L. R. 10 C. P. 15, also cited by appellant, was one for the delivery of iron on credit; and the purchasers became insolvent. Lord Coleridge, Ch. J., in his opinion, said: "It is not disputed that upon the occurrence of insolvency the vendor would not be bound to deliver to the insolvent purchaser an installment of the iron becoming due, without a tender of the price." Brett, J., in the same case, said, without committing himself to the theory that the mere fact of insolvency would per se put an end to the contract, that such fact, with that of notice to the seller of the insolvency, would justify an assumption by the seller that the purchaser intended to abandon the contract. The notice upon which he relied, and gave his adherence to the holding in that case, was the commencement of insolvent proceedings under the Bankrupt Act. In this case the fact of the insolvency is unquestioned, and a like notice is given by an insolvent proceeding for the benefit of creditor. Hence it seems the defendant, in this case, is within any of the rules cited. Other authorities cited by appellant are not more favorable to his position.

2 Defendant presented a counterclaim, based on an open account alleging a balance due of $27.98, as to which the court established a claim against the estate of Young Bros. for $27, based on the following finding of facts: "Twelfth. On defendant's counterclaim, the court finds that defendant received orders from Young Bros. for the goods mentioned in the account under dates September 5, 6, 8, 15 and 17, 1881; that these orders were treated in the usual way, the usual directions given for shipping, and the goods charged on the books to Young Bros.; that both of Young Bros.

were on the witness stand, and neither of them denied having received the goods; that, the balance of defendant's counterclaim not being denied, the defendant should recover the sum of $27.98, less the sum of $300 due the plaintiff for commission earned by Young Bros. under the contract of 1883, declared on in plaintiff's petition."

It is urged that the proofs are not sufficient to sustain the finding. The argument concedes a practical dispute in the testimony, and the finding has the force of a verdict by the jury. The evidence is such that we cannot interfere.

3. It is next said that it was error to enter a personal judgment against the assignee. The assignment is in these words: "The court erred in rendering a personal judgment against the plaintiff herein for the balance due upon defendant's counterclaim, for the reason that such judgment is contrary to law and the evidence. Said defendant was entitled only to the establishment of his claim as a creditor of said estate." The assignment is not sustained by the record. The judgment of the court is merely the establishment of a claim against the estate. It is not a personal judgment. It would only be subject to pro rata payment, like other claims. The wording of the judgment is "that such be and is hereby established as a claim against the estate of Young Bros., and against the said Rappleye as their assignee." These words have no other meaning than the establishment of the claim.

It would appear that appellant has based this assignment rather upon statements in the abstract with reference to the judgment than upon record of the judgment as copied in the abstract.

Affirmed.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

W. H. PATTERSON, et al., Piffs. in Err.,
v.
Anna Leckie, Defendant, and Bryan LAW-RENCE, Claimant.

(....Ga....)

1. A court of law having equity juris-

isdiction cannot exercise it without pleadings suitable for the purpose.

2. The exercise of a power of appointment by will on the part of one having a life interest in trust property with power of appointment as to the portion remaining after her death, to confirm title to a person who had previously

NOTE.—Execution of power to appoint by will.

A wife may have power to appoint certain property by will and not by deed or by deed and not by will. Re Harvey's Estate, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 216.

If the power authorize an appointment by deed, its execution by her may be "immediate" during her lifetime; if by will only, then the disposition cannot take effect until after her death. See Hulme v. Tenant, 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 4th Am. ed. 600; Bradley v. Westcott, 13 Ves. Jr. 445, 451; Reid v. Shergold, 10 Ves. Jr. 370, 380; Anderson v. Dawson, 15 Ves. Jr. 522; Hentley v. Thomas, Id. 500; Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. Jr. 580; Socket v. Wray, 4 Bro. Ch. 483; Lee v. Muggieridge, 1 Ves. & B. 118; Nixon v. Nixon, 2 Jones & La T. 416; and see Noble v. Willock, L. R. 8 Ch. 778; Bishop v. Wall, L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 194; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 31.

The same formalities are not necessarily requisite in executing a power, as in disposing of separate property; the terms prescribed by the power should furnish the criterion. Sohley v. McCeney, 36 Md. 206.

The appointee under a special power must be competent to have taken immediately from the donor. Robinson v. Hardcastle, 2 T. R. 241.

If a married woman has a life estate, and she is clothed with a general power of appointment over the corpus of the property, and she exercises the power, the appointed property is not thereby made applicable to the payment of her debts, excepting only those which are fraudulent, that is, her liabilities arising from fraud. Vaughan v. Vanderstegen, 2 Drew. 165, 363; Shattock v. Shattock, L. R. 2 Eq. 182, 35 Beav. 489; Hobday v. Peters, 28 Beav. 354, 356; Blatchford v. Woolley, 2 Drew. & Sm. 204; But see London Chartered Bank of Australia v. Lempière, L. R. 4 P. C. 572; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 30.

While a wife may execute a power of appointment conferred upon her, in favor of her husband, yet she cannot convey her land directly to him except as allowed by Code, §§ 1835, 1836. Sims v. Ray, 36 N. C. 37.

purchased it for a valuable consideration from the appointor and trustee under an order of court, does not make the property assets of the appointor's estate liable in equity for her debts.

3. Property disposed of by will under a power of appointment cannot be held liable for the appointor's debts even if it otherwise might be, unless the appointor's assets are insufficient to pay such debts.

(November 18, 1889.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Richmond County to review a judgment in favor of claimant and against plaintiff in an action to recover a demand against a decedent's estate out of property alleged to be assets thereof. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. Leonard Phinixy, for plaintiffs in error:

The execution of a general power of appointment converts the estate into assets for the payment of debts, and the creditor has a preference over the appointee.

Cutting v. Cutting, 20 Hun, 360; Tallmadge v. Still, 21 Barb. 34; Harrison v. Battle, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. 213; Jenney v. Andrews, 6 Madd. 264; Vaughan v. Vanderleggen, 2 Drew. 165; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 176, note; 2 Sugd. Powers, 28, 29; 2 Wms. Exrs. 1685; Schouler, Exrs. p. 222; 4 Kent, Com. p. 340; Clapp v. Ingraham, 126 Mass. 200-202; Johnson v. Cushing, 15 N. H. 298, 41 Am. Dec. 694; Com. v. Duffield, 12 Pa. 279-281; Barford v. Street, 16 Ves. Jr. 185. The appointee will be treated as a trustee for the creditors.

Johnson v. Cushing, supra; Leigh v. Smith, 8 Ired. Eq. 442, 42 Am. Dec. 182.

The court below had before him all the papers and all the evidence, was sitting both as judge and jury, and could have framed an equitable judgment or decree. No objection was made to the forum, the pleadings, or the evidence, in the court below. It is too late to make it here.

Furr v. Edleman, 80 Ga. 660.

Mr. Bryan Cumming, for claimant:

In Brindley v. Cochrane, 112 U. S. 351 (28 L. ed. 769), the court says that under the common law "a judgment against the party having a power of appointment, with the estate vested in him until and in default of appointment, was defeated by the subsequent execution of the power in favor of a mortgagee."

See Com. v. Duffield, 12 Pa. 277; Story, Eq. Jur. § 176, note 3; 4 Kent, Com. 340; Cook v. Walker, 15 Ga. 457, 462.

Blandford, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 12th of March, 1866, Samuel Leckie, of Richmond County, conveyed to John Coskery, as trustee, and his successors in office, a certain tract or parcel of land in the City of Augusta, "in trust, for the sole and separate use, benefit and behoof of Anna Leckie, wife of the said Samuel Leckie, wholly free from, and not subject to, the debts, contracts or liabilities, past, present or future, of the said Samuel Leckie, or any future husband of the said Anna Leckie, for and during the term of her natural life, and, on her death, to such person or persons, or for such purpose or purposes, as she, the said Anna, by her last will and testament, duly executed, may designate and appoint. But, should the said Anna die without having made and executed such last will and testament, then the said property, or any property which may be then held in lieu thereof, shall be equally divided, share and share alike, between Samuel Leckie, the son, and Louisa Jones Leckie, the daughter, of the said Samuel and Anna, the child or children of a deceased child to stand in place of and represent the parent." And power was given to the trustee, with the consent of Anna Leckie, to sell the property, the proceeds to be reinvested in other property. Samuel Leckie, Sr., died July 9, 1874. Samuel Leckie, Jr., died July 20, 1877, leaving issue.

On the 14th of April, 1886, the judge of the superior court, at chambers and in vacation, granted an order authorizing the sale to Bryan Lawrence of the property conveyed by said deed of trust, the consideration being $2,500, and the sale private. Notice of the application for this order of sale was not given to the minor heirs-at-law, and they were not present, or represented by guardian ad litem, when the order was granted. On the 15th of April, 1886, a deed was made to Bryan Lawrence, reciting that it was in pursuance of said deed of trust and order of court. This deed was signed by Anna Leckie and by Luke Dunn, trustee. The money arising from the sale of said property was partly used in paying off incumbrances in the nature of taxes and judgments against the trust property, and $500 of the same was invested in the name of Luke Dunn, trustee, in stock of the Mutual Real Estate & Building Association, which stock the trustee obtained leave to sell by an order of the superior court, granted on the 16th of December, 1886. It is not known what became of the remainder of the purchase money.

On the 9th of February, 1888, Anna Leckie made a will, in which she devised to Bryan Lawrence the land already conveyed to him under the order of sale. On the 20th of February, 1888, she died. On the 13th of December, 1888, this property was levied on under a fi. fa. obtained upon a judgment in favor of Patterson & Co. against Anna Leckie, July 2, 1877. A claim was thereupon interposed by Lawrence. The case was submitted to the judge of the superior court, without the intervention of a jury, for his judgment and decision thereon. Upon the trial, William H. Fleming testified that he drew Mrs. Leckie's will and was a witness to it; that he thought she made it in order to confirm the title in Lawrence to the property for which he paid $2,500 on the 15th of April, 1886; that the witness at the time of said sale had paid the proceeds to the trustee in her presence; and that she made the will freely because she thought she was morally bound to give a good title if she could possibly do so. The court held and decided that Lawrence got a good title as against the creditors of Mrs. Leckie, and that his claim must therefore be sustained. To this judgment of the court below the plaintiffs in execution excepted, and assigned error therein.

It is insisted by counsel for the plaintiffs in error that, inasmuch as this property was conveyed to a trustee for the use of Mrs. Leckie during her lifetime, with a power of appointment in her by will, and, inasmuch as she exercised that power by her will, the property was assets for the payment of her debts. Whether, according to the current of authority, this property would be equitable assets for the payment of the debts of the appointor in this case would depend: (1) upon whether Mrs. Leckie had any other property sufficient to pay her debts; (2) upon whether this power of appointment was an absolute right of property; and (3) upon whether the appointee was a volunteer, or a bona fide purchaser of the property appointed to him.

It is very manifest, in this case, that the power of appointment was exercised by the testatrix, on account of the fact that the property had been previously sold by the testatrix and her trustee to the claimant, for a valuable consideration; and this would take the case out of the general rule that where property is conveyed to one for life, with a general power of appointment by deed or will, and such power is exercised, the property is converted into assets in equity for the payment of the appointor's creditors. This distinction is clearly recognized in the authorities hereinafter referred to. It is manifest from this record that the power of appointment was exercised in favor of Lawrence, because of the purchase which he had previously made from the appointor and her trustee, and for which he had paid a valuable consideration; and, furthermore, this property cannot be considered assets of the appointor, so as to make it liable for her debts in a court of law. All the authorities treat it as only equitable assets. According to most of them, this power of appointment is such an equitable relation to the property as would make it liable in equity for the appointor's debts. Where the power of appointment is not exercised, all the authorities agree that the property is not liable, either in law or in equity, for the payment of the debts of the person in whom the power resided.

The plaintiffs in error contend that, inasmuch as equitable jurisdiction is conferred upon courts of law in this State, there is no necessity for them to resort to a court of equity. This might be true if the plaintiffs in error had had pleadings suitable for the purpose, but in this case there are no pleadings, except the execution and the entry of the sheriff thereon, and the claim interposed by the defendant in error, and the mere issue, thus made up, as to whether the property is or is not subject. It is certainly a proceeding at law, and not an equitable proceeding. There are no allegations by which a court of law could exercise the jurisdiction of a court of equity. Before a court of law could exercise such jurisdiction, there must be sufficient pleadings to authorize it to do so.

A power of appointment is not an absolute right of property. Holmes v. Coghill, 7 Ves. Jr. 506.

It is not an estate, and has none of the elements of an estate. Burleigh v. Clough, 52 N. H. 267; Goodill v. Brigham, 1 Bos. & P. 197; Eaton v. Straw, 18 N. H. 320; 4 Kent, Com. 319; Pulliam v. Byrd, 2 Stroob. Eq. 134; Livingston v. Murray, 68 N. Y. 455; Williman v. Holmes, 4 Rich. Eq. 475.

An unexecuted power of appointment vests no interest in the donee, whether annexed to a particular estate or not, and therefore is not assets for the payment of the debts of the deceased donee. Harrison v. Battle, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. 213.

We do not decide whether the execution of a general power of appointment would convert an estate into assets in equity for the payment of debts. Upon this subject see Cutting v. Cutting, 20 Hun, 860; Tallmadge v. Sill, 21 Barb. 84; Harrison v. Battle, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. 213; Harrington v. Harte, 1 Cox, Ch. 131; Jenney v. Andrews, 6 Madd. 284; Fleming v. Buchanan, 8 De G. M. & G. 976; Vaughan v. Vanderstegen, 2 Drew, 165; Shattock v. Shattock, L. R. 2 Eq. 187; Wales v. Bowditch (Vt.) 4 L. R. A. 819; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 176, note; 2 Sugd. Powers, 28, 29; 2 Wms. Exrs. 6th Am. ed. 1695, 1696.

In George v. Milbank, 9 Ves. Jr. 190, and Hart v. Middlehurst, 3 Atk. 377, it is held that it is against volunteers only that creditors have this preference in equity, and a bona fide purchaser under a voluntary appointee would be protected. We think the cases referred to are sufficient to illustrate the rule we have laid down in this case.

We are forced to the conclusion that the judgment of the court below is right: (1) because the proceeding is not an equitable proceeding to subject this property to the payment of the debts of the donee; (2) because the appointee in this case was not a volunteer, but was a bona fide purchaser; and (3) because it is not shown that deceased did not have sufficient assets to pay plaintiff's claim.

Judgment affirmed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS.

Anthony J. THOMAS et al.

v.

WABASH, ST. LOUIS & PACIFIC R. CO.

(40 Fed. Rep. 123.)

1. A title reading "An Act to Facilitate the Norm.—Statutes; constitutional provisions as to title of Act.

See notes to Titusville Iron Works v. Keystone Oil & L. R. A.

Carriage of Passengers and Property by Railroad Companies" is insufficient, under a constitutional provision requiring the title of an Act to express the subject thereof, to sustain a statute which, after providing that all railroad companies having a terminus upon any navigable river shall have power to own water craft for transportation across it, provides that no right shall exist to condemn any real estate for landings, and that the Co. (Pa.) 1 L. R. A. 361; People v. McElroy (Mich.) 2 L. R. A. 609; Astor v. New York Arcade R. Co. (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 799; Evansville v. State (Ind.) 4 L. R. A. 98.

Act shall apply only to such railroad companies as owned the landing for such water craft.

2. A statute giving to any railroad company that owns landing places the right to own water craft for transportation across a navigable river at its terminus, but which declares that no right shall exist under the Act to condemn any real estate, and that the Act shall apply only to such companies as own the landings for such water craft, is in violation of the constitutional provision against local or special laws for granting any special or exclusive privilege, immunity or franchise.

3. If constitutional and unconstitutional provisions of an Act are perfectly distinct and separable, the former may stand though the latter fail.

(October 15, 1883.)

INTERVENING petition by the St. Louis & Cairo and the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Companies for the condemnation of certain land in the possession of plaintiffs as receivers of the Cairo, Vincennes & Chicago Railroad Company, to be used for an incline and transfer boat landing. Judgment for petitioners.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Messrs. Lansden & Leek, E. L. Russell and H. S. Greene for petitioners.

Messrs. John M. Butler and S. P. Wheeler for the receivers.

Allen, J., delivered the following opinion: This case has been before the court, in one form and another, for nearly two years. The intervening petitioners instituted proceedings in the Circuit Court of Alexander County, Ill., to condemn one acre and a fraction of land, situated between the bank of the Ohio River and the water for the purpose of building thereon an incline, to be used for the transportation of cars down to the river, and thus, by means of transfer boats, form an unbroken connection with railroads on the other side, for the benefit of their through freight and passengers. The strip of land sought to be condemned being in the possession of Thomas & Tracy, receivers, appointed by the court, of the Cairo & Vincennes Railroad, and claimed by them as the property of that corporation, the case was transferred to this court, and afterwards a hearing was had before the district judge and a jury, resulting in a holding by the court that the strip of land was subject to condemnation for the purposes set forth in the intervening petition, and the assessment by the jury of damages, to be paid by the St. Louis & Cairo and the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Companies, in the sum of $5,000. Subsequently, upon argument before the circuit and district judges, a rehearing was granted in the case, upon the distinct ground that the Act of the Illinois Legislature, entitled "An Act to Facilitate the Carriage and Transfer of Passengers and Property by Railroad Companies," approved May 24, 1877, presented an insuperable barrier to such condemnation. 34 Fed. Rep. 774.

Afterwards, upon further argument, the matter was postponed, pending the suggestion of the court that the receivers sell to the intervening petitioners for a fair price, to be agreed upon, so much of the ground as might be necessary for the purposes of their incline. The St. Louis & Cairo and their lessees, the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, having, as they report, wholly failed, after repeated efforts, to purchase from the receivers the land for their incline, asked that the constitutionality of the Act of the Legislature before referred to, and popularly known as the "Water-Craft Act," be set down for argument. There being no serious contention that any other difficulty to the condemnation than this Water-Craft Act existed, and its constitutionality being challenged by attorneys for intervening petitioners, the court set down the question for argument, and it was ably and elaborately argued, by eminent counsel, representing the receivers, as well as the St. Louis & Cairo Railroad Company and its lessees, the Mobile & Ohio, before the district judge. So much of the Act in question as is here necessary to be considered is as follows: "An Act to Facilitate the Carriage and Transfer of Passengers and Property by Railroad Companies.

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the people of the State of Illinois, represented in the General Assembly, that all railroad companies incorporated under the laws of this State, having a terminus upon any navigable river bordering on this State, shall have power to own for their own use any water-craft necessary in carrying across such river any cars, property or passengers transported over their lines or transported over any railroad terminating on the opposite side of such river to be transported over their lines; provided, that no right shall exist under this Act to condemn any real estate for landing for such water-craft, or for any other purpose. And this Act shall only apply to such railroad companies as own the landing for such water-craft."

The validity of this Act is denied, and the counsel questioning its constitutionality contend:

First, that it is in conflict with the 18th section of the 4th article of the Constitution of Illinois, which is in the following language: "Every bill shall be read at large on three different days in each House; and the bill and all amendments thereto shall be printed before the vote is taken on its final passage, and every bill having passed both Houses shall be signed by the speakers thereof. No Act hereafter passed shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title. But if any subject shall be embraced in an Act which shall not be expressed in the title, such Act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed; and no law shall be revived or amended by reference to its title only, but the law revived or the section amended shall be inserted at length in the new Act."

And, second, that it is in conflict with section 23 of the same article, which provides: "The General Assembly shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say . . . for granting to any corporation, association or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity or franchise whatever."

Third, that it is in conflict with article 11, § 14, of the State Constitution of 1870, which reads as follows: "The exercise of the power and the right of eminent domain shall never be so construed or abridged as to prevent the taking by the General Assembly of the property and franchises of incorporated companies, already organized, and subjecting them to the public necessity, the same as of individuals."

In addition to these objections, it is contended that the Act is also repugnant to the spirit and import of the State and Federal Constitutions, intended to secure equality of rights to every citizen, natural and corporate. Grave and important constitutional questions are thus brought before the court, and its decision upon them demanded.

It is with extreme unwillingness that a federal court will assume to hold as void the Acts of the Legislature of a State, especially when such Acts have not been passed upon by the state court. And if any well-grounded doubt exists as to their constitutionality, whenever by any system of fair reasoning any possible construction that is consistent with reason can be given by which the courts can hold them constitutional, and give such interpretation to the statutes as to make them valid, they will always do so. But courts, however unpleasant the duty, will always, when properly called upon, considerately review the acts of a coordinate branch, and, while hesitating to hold them void for unconstitutionality, yet, when they find them in bold defiance of the Constitution, seeking to override some valuable right or privilege of the citizen or of the public, will not shrink from the performance of the high duty imposed upon them by the law.

The first objection argued to the validity of a portion of the Water-Craft Act, namely, that it embraced subjects not expressed in the title, must be tested and disposed of by the decisions and their analogies of the Supreme Court of Illinois, this 13th section of the 4th article of the State Constitution having repeatedly been before that tribunal for exposition and interpretation. The object of the constitutional provision was praiseworthy. Its evident purpose was to prevent fraudulent and vicious legislation, by requiring the title to give a fair indication of the substance of the Act,—such a certain indication as would notify members of the Legislature, the public at large, and more particularly all persons having an interest in the matter, of the contents of the Act, so as to put them on their guard. Whenever the title of the Act has a scope so clear as to indicate its general purpose, then its more specific purposes may be left to the body of the Act itself. The title of this Act is: "To Facilitate the Carriage and Transfer of Passengers and Property by Railroad Companies." This title, it must be confessed, is at once captivating and delusive. The entire public would most likely unite, and the desire become a common one, to facilitate the carriage and transfer of passengers and property by railroad companies, but not the slightest intimation is given as to the means to be employed whereby this transfer is to be facilitated. Indeed, it would seem difficult, by any combination of words, to make a title to any Act more general. The body of the Act authorizes all railroad companies, having a terminus upon any navigable river bordering on the State of Illinois, to own for their own use any water-craft necessary in carrying across such river any cars, property or passengers transported over their lines, or transported over any railroad terminating on the opposite side of such river, to be transported over their lines, with a proviso that no right shall exist under the Act to condemn any real estate for a landing for such water-craft, or for any other purpose, and that the Act itself shall only apply to such railroad companies as own the landing for such water-craft. It is assumed that this Act confers a new power on railroad companies,—that of using and owning water-craft to transfer freight and passengers across the river; and it may be assumed that it also takes away from certain railroad corporations rights with which they had become vested under the General Incorporation Law of the State, particularly the power to make such terminal enlargements, and variations of their terminal privileges, not constituting a new enterprise, as the commerce of the country and the traffic of their roads require. It cannot be well questioned that railroads, whose lines terminated on the bank of one of the navigable rivers bordering on this State, where their business required it, had the power, prior to the Water-Craft Act of 1877, to extend their tracks, or build side tracks, to the edge of the water, and condemn land subject to condemnation for that purpose. Under this Act railroad companies cannot condemn land at all, however necessary it may be, to reach the water.

After such examination and reflection as I have been enabled to bestow on the question, I am unable to reach the conclusion that the title of this Act fairly or sufficiently gives notice or information of the scope and substance in the body, or indicates with reasonable certainty the purposes intended to be effected; but, on the contrary, I am clearly of opinion that the title is misleading, and not as broad as the Act. This view is supported by the following authorities: People v. Mellen, 32 Ill. 182; Lockport v. Gaylord, 61 Ill. 276; People v. Wright, 70 Ill. 888; People v. Institution of Protestant Deaconesses, 71 Ill. 229; Middleport v. Aina L. Ins. Co. 82 Ill. 565; People v. Hazelwood, 116 Ill. 327, 8 West. Rep. 588; Leach v. People, 122 Ill. 421, 10 West. Rep. 617; Dolese v. Pierce, 124 Ill. 140, 13 West. Rep. 866; Cooley, Const. Lim. 147-151.

The second point argued in connection with the alleged invalidity of the Legislative Act presents a most important question: Does the Water-Craft Act grant, and was it intended to grant, any special or exclusive privilege, immunity or franchise whatever to any corporation? If it does, it is special legislation, prohibited by the Constitution. The fundamental idea of the authors of the Constitution, expressed in a declaration clear and explicit, was doubtless to secure some reasonable degree of equality and uniformity of right and privilege between the different railroads in the State, which are required to perform important services to the public. In the first part of the Act under consideration no principle of uniformity of right or privilege is violated. All railroad companies incorporated under the laws of the State, having a terminus on any of the navigable rivers on its borders, are given power to own for their own use water-craft necessary in carrying across such river cars, property or passengers transported over their lines, or transported over any railroad terminating on the opposite side of such river, to be transported over their lines. It has already been mentioned that the concession seems to have been made, on the argument, of the grant of a new power to the class of Illinois railroads terminating on bordering navigable waters. Up to the approval of the Act in question, these railroads, by the General Incorporation Act, with the view of merely enlarging their terminal facilities, had the undoubted right of going to the water,—to transports or ferry-boats. It was because they did not possess the power to own and use such transports or ferry-boats back and forward between terminal points on opposite sides of these rivers that the Legislature was appealed to, and the new power given. The Legislature, in answering this appeal, did a wise thing, in the first clause of the Act, by granting to these railroad corporations the privilege of ferrying,—carrying goods and passengers through, on through cars, putting them on boats and transferring them across the river, and expediting railroad business and accommodating the public by staplifying the number of intervening agencies.

The Act, however, seems to have gone much further than the interests of commerce or of the public demanded. The parties seeking this legislative aid,—a ferry franchise, in addition to a railroad franchise,—were not satisfied with a general grant of power to all railroads having the same terminus, but sought to accomplish the double purpose of getting this new power for themselves, and keeping everybody else from getting it, as far as they could. By providing that no railroad company should be given power to condemn land for a landing for such water-craft, and that the Act should only apply to such companies as own the landing for such water-craft, the objectionable and vicious features of this legislation clearly appear. The new power enabled railroad companies owning land for a landing to own and use water-craft necessary in ferrying passengers and property across a river, but disabled companies not owning such land from exercising this most important franchise or privilege. I have had occasion before to state that, under the General Incorporation Act, railroad corporations, whose lines terminated on a bordering navigable stream, had the power to go to ferries, when they did so by merely enlarging their terminal facilities; but the portion of the Act now being considered takes away an existing power, by declaring that they shall not exercise the power of eminent domain to the extent of getting down to a ferry-boat; that they can neither use a transfer boat nor get to a landing. The additional power, or enlarged franchise, to own and use boats to carry freight and passengers across the river is limited "to such railroad companies as own the landing for such water-craft." Corporations not fortunate enough to own the land, it may be in consequence of a refusal by rival corporations to sell what they do not need for their own purposes, are denied alike the privilege of owning water-craft and of condemning land to reach a ferry-boat which may be used or owned by others. It cannot be denied that the operation of this part of the Act is partial and unequal.

Here are two railroad companies,—the Cairo & Vincennes, represented by the receivers, Thomas & Tracy, and the St. Louis & Cairo, by intervening petitioners,—both terminating on the bank of the Ohio River at Cairo. They owe a common duty to the public, and this duty grows correspondingly with the demands of commerce, and public necessity and convenience. The Cairo & Vincennes answers the demand of the public for boats transferring across the river cars, freight and passengers connecting on the opposite side with other railroad lines, and thus securing unbroken transportation. The St. Louis & Cairo, when called on for a similar service, is unable to respond. It avows its willingness to do so, and its anxiety to discharge its duty to the public, but it does not own the land for a landing for transfer-boats. The owner of this land, the Cairo & Vincennes, will not sell it, and this Water-Craft Act prohibits its condemnation. Is it not perfectly manifest that the Cairo & Vincennes, under this Act, enjoys a special privilege or immunity over the St. Louis & Cairo? Or, to put it differently, are not all the railroads not owning land for a landing, and unable to purchase the same, discriminated against, and a special privilege granted to such, and such only, as own the landing? If in this controversy only these two Railroad Companies were interested,—if it were a contest of mere private right between them,—different considerations might arise. But they are both "railroad companies, incorporated under the Laws of this State," enjoying franchises to be used in the interests of the public. The one owning the landing would in all probability promise the public to serve it efficiently, faithfully and cheaply; but the public, unwilling to accept such assurances, very properly demand that all the avenues for the transaction of the commerce of the country be kept open, and that no agency be crippled which has for its object the promotion of the public interests.

In the discussion of this question, counsel for the receivers emphasized the argument that the Legislative Act could be upheld upon the ground that railroad companies terminating on a river bordering on a State, and owning a landing for water-craft, constitute a class; that the Legislature intended to classify railroads terminating on navigable bordering streams into such as owned land for a landing for water-craft and such as did not, and that a railroad corporation not owning a landing for water-craft can only claim such privilege, immunity or franchise as belongs to any other company or corporation in that class. A number of authorities were cited to sustain this view; among others Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155 [24 L. ed. 94].

This position cannot be sustained, nor do the authorities referred to support it. There is but one classification of railroad companies under the Act, and that is such as have "a terminus upon any navigable river bordering on this State."

The supreme court, in 94 U. S. supra, quotes approvingly, an Iowa case being under consideration, from McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 343, wherein it is said: "These laws are general and uniform, not because they operate upon every person in the State, for they do not, but because every person who is brought within the relations and circumstances provided for is affected by the law. They are general and uniform in their operation upon all persons in the like situation, and the fact of their being general and uniform is not affected by the number of persons within the scope of their operation." "The Statute" (of Iowa), says Chief Justice Waite, "divides the railroads of the State into classes, according to business, and establishes a maximum of rates for each of the classes. It operates uniformly on each class, and this is all the Constitution requires."

It seems probable that the authors of the Act under consideration prepared it with reference to this doctrine of classification. But it gives them no support. Every privilege, immunity or franchise enjoyed or used by one railroad company terminating on the Ohio River at Cairo should be extended to every other railroad terminating there. It is impossible, by any fair reasoning, or upon any principle of justice to the public, to sustain the contention that one of these railroad corporations loses an almost invaluable privilege of serving the public because only of not being able to purchase land for a transfer or ferry landing. All the incorporated railroad companies terminating at Cairo exercise their franchises by virtue of grants from the sovereign power. The State, in granting the charters, necessarily in every instance reserved the right to regulate and control the corporations in the public interest. No one or more of these companies can be permitted, under the semblance of a state grant or authority, to exercise rights and privileges in connection with facilitating the commerce of the country which are denied to others. And if the exercise of such power and authority by the one or more is rightful, the denial of the same immunities and privileges to others is illegal and oppressive; and any Act pretending to confer authority for such discrimination is void. The Water-Craft Act, therefore, has not only a false and deceitful title, but its purpose was to confer special privilege upon certain corporations, and to deny to others of the same class the exercise of the same rights. The following authorities are referred to in support of this view, that the Act is in conflict with the 22d section of the 4th article of the Constitution of Illinois. Myer v. Partridge, 82 Ill. 273; People v. Cooper, 83 Ill. 586; People v. Meech, 101 Ill. 200; Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 805, 5 West. Rep. 155; Cooley, Const. Lim. 889-896.

The views already expressed and the conclusions reached render it unnecessary to consider the 14th section of article 11 of the Constitution of 1870, or the 2d section of the 4th article of the Constitution of the United States, both of which have been referred to as authority against the validity of the Act in question. They were cited to sustain the position that a statute is unconstitutional which selects particular persons, natural or corporate, from a class or locality, and subjects them to peculiar rules, or imposes upon them special obligations or burdens, from which others in the same locality or class are exempt. This position is so nearly self evident as not to require authority to support it. In my view, the provisions of the Water-Craft Act, limiting the right to own and use boats and water-craft to such railroad companies as own the real estate for a landing, and withholding the right from companies not owning the land for a landing, are obnoxious to both objections urged against its constitutionality, and cannot be upheld as valid or binding. Of course this conclusion in no manner affects provisions of the Act which are constitutional. The constitutional and unconstitutional provisions of this Act are perfectly distinct and separable, so that the first may stand, though the latter fall.

The salutary and useful provision permitting all Illinois railroad companies terminating on any navigable river bordering on the State to own and use water craft as a means of increasing their capacity to serve the public is unexceptionable; but the proviso restricting the use of this additional franchise to companies owning land for a landing is void.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

John WOOD, Jr., Resp't.,

v.

ST. PAUL CITY R. CO., Impleaded, etc., Appl't.

A. & P. ROBERTS & CO., Resp'ts.,

v.

SAME, Appl't.

Robert ALLISON et al., Resp'ts.,

v.

SAME, Appl't.

(....Minn....)

*1. Whether the authority of notaries public to administer oaths be of statutory origin, or founded on customary law, it is now universal, and should be judicially recognized as one of their general powers, and affidavits, authenticated by the official seals of notaries of other States, placed on the same footing as their authentications of commercial documents.

*Head notes by MITCHELL, J.

7 L. R. A.

2. An affidavit to a statement of account for a mechanics' lien, under Gen. Stat., chap. 90, sworn to before a notary in another State, and authenticated by his official seal, is sufficient.

(January 20, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendant, The St. Paul City Railway Company, from orders of the District Court for Ramsey County denying its motions for new trial in actions to enforce certain alleged mechanics' liens in which judgments had been entered for plaintiffs. Affirmed.

The cases sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. H. J. Horn, for appellant:

Such a lien is the creature of statute and can only exist by virtue of a compliance with its provisions.

Rugg v. Hoover, 28 Minn. 404.

The oath of the claimant or his agent verifying the account or claim is an indispensable requisite of the Statute.

§ 7, chap. 90, formula in § 18, Id.; Colman v. Goodnow, 36 Minn. 9.

The oath required implies an oath administered by an officer authorized so to do, by the laws of Minnesota, and administered within his jurisdiction.

The Statutes of this State have in several instances given foreign notaries power to act. But not in a case such as the present.

See Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 26, § 7; chap. 78, §§ 85, 86; chap. 40, § 7, subd. 2.

Expressio unius est exclusio alterius.

The State obviously, to prevent inconvenience to nonresident claimants, authorizes an agent to make the oath.

See § 7, chap. 90; Clark v. Schatz, 24 Minn. 800; 2 Jones, Liens, § 1451; Benedict v. Hall, 76 N. C. 113; Kirksey v. Bates, 7 Port. (Ala.) 529; Chandler v. Hanna, 78 Ala. 890.

Messrs. Rogers, Hadley & Selmes, for Wood and Roberts et al., respondents:

A notary public is not merely an officer of the country by which he is appointed and in which he is authorized to act, but he is an officer recognized by all countries; and especial importance has always been attached to the office for the reason that certain official acts performed by him within the territory for which he is appointed are recognized as authoritative the world over; and among the acts which he is thus recognized as having the authority to perform is that of administering an oath.

Brooke, Notaries, p. 19; Cole v. Sherard, 11 Exch. 482; Omealy v. Newell, 8 East, 804; Haggitt v. Iniff, 5 DeG. M. & G. 910; Ex parte Worsley, 2 H. Bl. 275; Waltrond v. Van Moses, 8 Mod. 821.

It is generally recognized in the courts of this country that affidavits may be taken before notaries public in the other States, and that they have the same effect and authenticity as if taken in the State where they are used.

Conolly v. Riley, 25 Md. 403; Stephens v. Williams, 46 Iowa, 540; Denmead v. Maack, 2 McArthur, 477; Fellows v. Menasha, 11 Wis. 562; Marshall v. Mott, 13 Johns. 423; Tucker v. Ladd, 4 Cow. 47; United States v. Libby, 1 Woodb. & M. 221.

The notary public being an officer recognized the world over, his seal proves itself, and it is not necessary that it should be authenticated.

Conolly v. Riley, Stephens v. Williams and Fellows v. Menasha, supra.

In the absence of any evidence upon the matter, the presumption would be that the laws of Pennsylvania, like the laws of our own State, authorize notaries public to administer oaths.

Cooper v. Reaney, 4 Minn. 528; Brinkhall v. Van Campen, 8 Minn. 18; Conolly v. Riley, supra; Rape v. Heaton, 9 Wis. 328; Walsh v. Dart, 12 Wis. 635; Shumway v. Lenkey, 67 Cal. 458; Martens v. Lash, 61 Cal. 622; Hickman v. Alpaugh, 21 Cal. 226; Allen v. Watson, 2 Hill, L. 819; Crafts v. Clark, 38 Iowa, 237; Wright v. Delafield, 23 Barb. 498 513; Hall v. Pillow, 31 Ark. 82; Wharton, Ev. § 814.

Messrs. John B. & W. H. Sanborn, for Allison et al., respondents:

All that the Statute requires is, that the claimant shall make his statement in writing, make oath thereto and file in the office of the Secretary of State.

An oath is a pledge given by a person making it, that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God.

2 Bouvier, L. Dict. p. 248.

This pledge may be given, and this oath may be made, in any country, and before any officer authorized to administer an oath.

In the case at bar the officer before whom these oaths were taken was authorized to administer an oath by the laws of the State of Pennsylvania.

Purdon's Dig. pp. 1270-1273.

His certificate, signature and seal prove that the oath was administered, and this establishes these liens.

Browne v. Philadelphia Bank, 6 Serg. & R. 485.

In England, as far back as the memory of man extends, notaries public were authorized to administer oaths, and by the statutes of England, and the statutes of every State in the United States, they are now so authorized.

Brooke, Notaries, pp. 19, 20.

Under the common law and the practice of the courts of England, oaths and affidavits taken before notaries public in foreign countries, accompanied with evidence that, by the laws of such countries, they were authorized to administer oaths, have been received and used in England as far back as the history of jurisprudence runs.

Omealy v. Newell, 8 East, 804, 868, citing — v. Brown, decided by Lord Mansfield, and Voght v. Elgin, Hil. 38 G 8, decided by Lord Kenyon; Cole v. Sherard, 11 Exch. 482; Haggitt v. Iniff, 5 DeG. M. & G. 810.

The courts will take judicial notice of the official seal of a foreign notary public attached to an affidavit, and oaths and affidavits required by the laws can be lawfully taken before notaries public of foreign States having authority to administer oaths.

Conolly v. Riley, 25 Md. 403, 419, 420; Fellows v. Menasha, 11 Wis. 562, 563; Denmead v. Maack, 2 McArthur, 477; Stephens v. Williams, 46 Iowa, 540; United States v. Libby, 1 Woodb. & M. 225, 226.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 90, §§ 6, 7 (relating to mechanics' liens), provides that the statement of the account, required to be filed and recorded, shall be verified by the oath of the party or his agent, but is entirely silent as to where or before whom such affidavits shall be made. To hold that the Statute requires them to be made within the State, or, if without the State, that the oath must be administered by a commissioner for the State of Minnesota, would be to put a construction upon the Act at once unauthorized by its language, and unsuited to the business habits and necessities of the country. Nothing short of express legislation would justify any such rule. We think these affidavits may be made in another State, before any officer authorized by the laws of such State to administer oaths. Of course, if taken in another State, they must be duly authenticated, so as to show on their face the official character of the officer, as well as his authority to administer oaths.

In each of the present cases the affidavit was sworn to in Pennsylvania before a notary public of that State, who authenticated it by signing the jurat, and affixing his notarial seal. If, instead of being affidavits, these had been certificates of protest or authentications of similar commercial documents, it is elementary law that the notary's seal would prove itself, without any further proof of his official character or of his authority to do the act. A public notary is considered, not merely an officer of the country where he is admitted or appointed, but as a kind of international officer, whose official acts, performed in the State for which he is appointed, are recognized as authoritative throughout the world over. Defendant's counsel concedes that this is true as to all his acts in the way of the authentication of what he terms commercial documents, but insists that, outside of such matters, a notary has no power, in the absence of statutory authority, to administer oaths. Although this is sometimes stated in the books as being the law, yet its correctness may well be doubted.

The powers of a notary, which is a very ancient office, are largely founded on customary law. The English notaries have always considered themselves authorized to administer oaths and whatever chance for doubt about it there might have been was set at rest by the Act of 5 and 6 Wm. IV., chap. 62, § 15; Brooke, Notaries, 20.

Affidavits taken before notaries in foreign countries have uniformly been received by the courts of England in judicial proceedings without any other proof of their official character or their authority to administer oaths than their notarial seals. Omealy v. Newell, 8 East, 864; Walton v. Van Moses, 8 Mod. 322; Haggitt v. Iniff, 5 De G. M. & G. 910; Cole v. Sherard, 11 Exch. 482.

It was said in Omealy v. Newell, supra, that this had been the uniform practice "as far back as living memory could trace it." The same practice seems to have obtained in the American courts. United States v. Libby, 1 Woodb. & M. 221; Denmead v. Manck, 2 Mo. Arth. 472; Tucker v. Ludd, 4 Cow. 47; Conolly v. Riley, 25 Md. 402.

This practice has also long prevailed in this State, especially in the probate courts and in the proof of claims in insolvency proceedings. It is true, as counsel suggests, that these are rules of practice as to which the courts are to some extent a law unto themselves; but the fact is important, and in point, as a recognition, not only of the regularity of affidavits sworn to outside the State, but also of the general power of notaries to administer oaths without proof of statutory authority to do so. As a matter of fact, in every State and Territory in the Union notaries have power to administer oaths, and for the last forty years affidavits sworn to before a notary in any State of the Union, and authenticated by his notarial seal, have been admissible in all the federal courts, without any proof of their authority to administer oaths. It is true that perhaps in every State the powers of notaries, including that of administering oaths, have been regulated by statutes, which, however, are largely declaratory in their nature. But whether this authority be of statutory origin, or founded on customary law, the recognition of its existence has become so general, if not universal, that there is now no good reason why it should not be judicially recognized as one of the general powers of notaries, and affidavits authenticated by seals of notaries of other States placed on precisely the same footing as their certificates of protest or authentications of so-called commercial documents. Some other objections are raised to these affidavits, but none of them are, in our judgment, substantial.

The order appealed from is, in each case, affirmed.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Mary J. MOORE et al.
v.
John E. SANFORD et al.

(...Mass....)

1. The owners of lands taken under the provisions of chap. 290, Acts 1884, authorizing the taking of certain lands for the use of the Commonwealth, are not, by filing a petition for damages for such taking as prescribed by such Act, estopped from instituting proceedings to dispute the validity of the taking and test the constitutionality of the Act, at least if they have not voluntarily proceeded to judgment upon their petition.

2. Although the determination of the Legislature is not conclusive that a purpose for which it directs property to be taken is a public use, yet it is conclusive, if the use is public, that a necessity exists which requires the property to be taken.

NOTE.—Eminent domain; exercise of right a political, not a judicial, question.

It is for the Legislature to determine what objects are of such public importance as to justify the exercise of the right of eminent domain. Mims v. Macon & W. R. Co. 3 Ga. 332.

The property or policy of the condemnation of private property for a public use is a legislative, and not a judicial, question; and courts will not interfere to declare the Act void unless it is plain that there is an attempt to procure property for a private use or to accomplish an end not public in its character. Central R. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 31 N. J. Eq. 475; Pittsburgh v. Scott, 1 Pa. 309; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Pittsburgh, W. & K. R. Co. 17 W. Va. 812; Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 584.

So the public necessity which exists for the use of the property and the extent to which the power should be exercised is a legislative question. Sudler v. Langham, 34 Ala. 811; Farham v. Decatur Co.

3. The reclamation of flats situated upon Boston Harbor and substantially useless in their original condition, for the avowed purpose of improving the harbor and of providing better and more complete accommodations for the railroad and commercial interests of the City of Boston, by filling such flats with solid earth, is a matter of such public benefit that the flats may be taken by the Commonwealth for such purpose under the power of eminent domain, notwithstanding a possible pecuniary benefit to the Commonwealth may be contemplated by the sale of the flats when filled. Hence chap. 290, Acts 1884, which provides for such taking, is not unconstitutional as authorizing the taking of land for a use not public.

(February 23, 1890.)

ON reservation by the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County (Knowlton, J.) for the consideration of the full court, upon bill, answer, replication and agreed facts, of a suit brought to test the validity of an attempted taking of plaintiff's property under an alleged exercise of the right of eminent domain. Bill dismissed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Mrsrs. Charles T. Gallagher and Hollis R. Bailey, for plaintiffs:

The taking was unconstitutional, for the reason that the purpose for which the land was taken was not a public use.

Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417; Re Eureka Basin W. & Mfg. Co. 96 N. Y. 42, 48. See Lewis, Em. Dom. § 205.

If a private use is combined with a public use in such a way that the two cannot be separated, the whole act of taking is invalid.

Lewis, Em. Dom. § 206; Atty-Gen. v. Eau Claire, 87 Wis. 400; Sadler v. Langham, 84 Ala. 811; Harding v. Goodlett, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 41.

Plaintiffs have not lost their right to dispute the validity of this so-called taking of their land. They gave reasonable notice of their intention to test the validity of the taking, and brought this suit as soon after as they reasonably could, under all the circumstances.

Warren v. Spencer Water Co. 8 New Eng. Rep. 111, 143 Mass. 14.

Mr. Harvey N. Shepard, for defendants:

Petitioners have stood by and allowed the board of harbor and land commissioners, on behalf of the Commonwealth, to expend money upon said lands, and otherwise improve the same, without the least objection or protest on their part. Under these circumstances, the petitioners have waived any right to question the validity of the said taking, and this court is not now called upon to consider, upon this application by them, the constitutionality of the Act.

Gray v. Bartlett, 20 Pick. 186; Pittkin v. Springfield, 112 Mass. 509.

The taking was for filling and improvement of these flats as a material benefit to the Harbor of Boston, and an increase of its capacity, and an accommodation to its commercial and railroad enterprises. These are public uses, and the question of necessity belongs exclusively to the Legislature, and is determined by its Act.

Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417; Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 438.

The Commonwealth can appropriate land, when compensation therefor is provided, in order to improve the harbor of its most important port, and to give better railroad facilities to its capital city.

Boston & R. Mill-Dam. Corp. v. Newman, 12 Pick. 467.

Devens, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The first question presented by the report is whether the plaintiffs, by filing their petition under chap. 290 of the Act of 1884, for the damages sustained by the taking of their lands under the authority given by that Act, have admitted the validity of the taking, and thus waived any right by a proceeding such as that adopted in the case at bar, to dispute the validity of the taking and the constitutionality of the Act assuming to authorize it.

This cause does not belong to that class of cases where the selection of one remedy necessarily implies that any other remedy or any ground therefor is waived. It certainly would be unjust if a party who reasonably deemed that a statute by authority of which this property was taken, was unconstitutional, should be compelled to elect whether he would seek for damages under the Act, and thus formally admit that his property was lawfully taken, or abandon any claim therefor and rely solely on his remedy for an unlawful taking. As in Acts of the nature of that which we are considering, the time within which damages may be applied for is usually limited, it would be quite probable, before a decision could finally be reached as to the validity of the taking, the time within which he could apply for damages would have expired; and if such taking were held valid, he would thus be deprived of any remedy for the value of his property. His only safe course would be to file a petition for his damages under the Act while he proceeded by other means to test its constitutionality. If in the latter proceeding it was held that the taking was valid, he could then proceed under his petition for damages. The plaintiffs were entitled to have the question of the constitutionality of the Act determined, and under their petition for damages they were, by necessary inference,

Justices, 9 Ga. 341; Sherman v. Buick, 23 Cal. 255; Contra Costa C. M. R. Co. v. Moss, 23 Cal. 823; Napa Valley R. Co. v. Napa Co. 30 Cal. 435; Indianapolis Water Works Co. v. Burkhart, 41 Ind. 364; Challiss v. Atobison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 16 Kan. 117; Tracy v. Elizabethtown, L. & B. S. R. Co. 80 Ky. 259; North Missouri R. Co. v. Gott, 25 Mo. 540; Hingham & Q. Bridge & Turnp. Corp. v. Norfolk Co. 6 Allen, 353; Bonaparte v. Camden & A. R. Co. Baldw. 205; Concord R. Co. v. Greeley, 17 N. H. 47; Re Union Ferry Co. 98 N. Y. 139; Smith v. Gould, 50 Wis. 681.
7 L. R. A.

The question of necessity or propriety may, however, be delegated to boards of commissioners or to the courts; but in the absence of such delegation the legislative determination is conclusive. Lecoul v. Police Jury, 20 La. Ann. 308; Powers' App. 29 Mich. 504.

See generally, as to the exercise of the power of eminent domain, notes to Pittsburgh, W. & K. R. Co. v. Benwood Iron Works (W. Va.) 2 L. R. A. 680, and Barre R. Co. v. Montpelier & W. R. Co. (Vt.) 4 L. R. A. 765.

compelled, in that proceeding, to admit that it was constitutional. Pitkin v. Springfield, 112 Mass. 509.

But the mere fact that they filed a petition for the purpose of saving their rights to damages if their view of the constitutionality of the Act proved erroneous ought not to prevent them from having that question settled in another proceeding to which the inquiry was appropriate. Perhaps, if they had voluntarily proceeded to judgment in their petition,—for the plaintiffs ought not to be allowed to experiment in order to ascertain what damages they might obtain before testing the constitutionality of the Act,—certainly if they had collected the damages which had been awarded under such a petition, it would be held that they had finally elected this as their remedy, and that they could not afterwards test the constitutionality of the Act to which they had thus given full assent. But the same effect should not be given to a petition filed only as a prudent precaution to guard their rights in a contingency that might thereafter arise.

In the case at bar it appears that the plaintiffs, living at a distance from the Commonwealth, knew of the taking only toward the expiration of the year; that they filed their petition hurriedly in order to protect such rights as they might have. While this took place in 1884, no answer to the petition was filed until 1886, nor was any movement made by either party for a trial of the petition until 1887, there having been negotiations between the parties looking to a settlement. An auditor was appointed to hear the petition in 1887 for the assessment of damages. Before this time, and before proceeding with the auditor, the counsel of plaintiffs informed the defendants that they intended to dispute and test the validity of the taking, and constitutionality of the Act, and the right of an auditor to proceed. It further appeared that during the year which followed, the then counsel for the plaintiffs became incapacitated by ill-health, and was compelled to go away for nearly a year, and that on his return other counsel was retained, who brought this bill forthwith when an auditor was appointed. The case is still pending before him, only a small part of the plaintiffs' evidence having been heard. Under these circumstances, the plaintiffs have not, by an election, deprived themselves of the right to test the validity of the taking. The delays which have occurred appear, with the exception of that resulting from the ill-health of their counsel, to have occurred from causes for which they were mutually responsible.

It is not contended by the plaintiffs that any requirement of the Statute was omitted in the taking of their land, or that proper provision was not made for compensation to them, but they urge that the Statute is unconstitutional, as the taking of the land which is authorized was not for a public use. While the determination of the Legislature is not conclusive that a purpose for which it directs property to be taken is a public use, it is conclusive, if the use is public, that a necessity exists which requires the property to be taken. In determining whether a statute is within the legitimate sphere of legislative action, all reasonable presumptions are to be made in favor of its validity, and it must be so regarded, unless it is shown to be otherwise by those who assail its constitutionality. Opinions of Justices, 8 Gray, 21; Wellington, Petitioner, 16 Pick. 96; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417.

The purposes of the Act as declared therein, its general structure, the nature of its provisions, its probable operation and effect, are all to be considered in determining whether it is a lawful exercise of legislative power.

If we examine the Act of 1884, we find that while it was contemplated that the flats owned by the Commonwealth, when filled, would be sold, and that a possible pecuniary benefit would accrue to the Commonwealth thereby, yet that the right of eminent domain which was to be exercised by taking certain flats owned by others without which the reclamation of flats could not be effected, was for the avowed purpose of improving the Harbor of Boston, and also of providing better and more complete accommodations for the railroad and commercial interests of the city by the solid land which would take the place of the flats over which the tide ebbed and flowed.

The Act of 1884 declares that "for the purposes of the reclamation of the Commonwealth's flats at South Boston, and the improvement of Boston Harbor, contemplated and authorized by chap. 289 of the Acts of the year 1875, the board of harbor and land commissioners is hereby authorized to take, in the name and behalf of the Commonwealth," certain lands of which the previous Act referred to had authorized the purchase. The Act of 1889, chap. 446, authorized the board of harbor and land commissioners to make certain purchases of flats for the purpose of making more available for sale the flats of the Commonwealth, "in the Harbor of Boston, and perfecting and improving the same." The Act of 1875, chap. 289, while in terms it does not speak of the improvement of the Harbor of Boston, authorizes the improvement, filling and sale of the Commonwealth's flats, requires a plan to be prepared to be approved by the governor and council, setting forth what portions of these lands, when reclaimed, shall be devoted to railroad or commercial purposes, and what to general purposes. Apparently the Act we are immediately considering was rendered necessary by the reluctance of other owners of flats to sell their property or join in the proposed improvement. The message of his excellency, the governor, in 1869, which has been made a part of the agreed facts is relied on by the plaintiffs to maintain their contention that the project which the Commonwealth entered into, and by reason of which their land was taken, was a mere land speculation.

But while this message, as to the Acts referred to, contemplates that portions of the land reclaimed may be sold to advantage, it also urges that their reclamation will benefit the Harbor of Boston, as well as provide important public accommodation. That the improvement of Boston Harbor is an object of a public nature, and thus that lands taken for this purpose are taken for a public use, can hardly be controverted. It is not necessary that the entire community should directly enjoy or participate in an improvement or enterprise in order to constitute a public use, and a benefit to the principal harbor of the Commonwealth is much more than a local advantage. Now, when we consider that Acts of Incorporation have been granted, and fully recognized as constitutional, which authorized the taking of private property for the purpose of carrying forward enterprises such as the construction of railroads, or which tend to the prosperity and welfare of large portions of the community, should we be willing to say, even if no improvement of Boston Harbor formed a part of the purpose, that the Legislature might not properly provide for the reclamation of a large body of lands, such as flats, substantially useless in their original condition, for railroad and commercial purposes, by taking, with proper compensation, such of them as were necessary for the accomplishment of the object? Talbot v. Hudson, supra; Lancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 423; Boston & R. Mill-Dam Corp. v. Newman, 12 Pick. 467.

The plaintiffs offer no evidence that the declared purposes of the Act, or those fairly inferrible from it, were not its real purposes. Even if it be true that the Commonwealth, as the result of the enterprise, expects to sell its lands to advantage, many enterprises of great public utility are of advantage to individuals. Boston & R. Mill-Dam Corp. v. Newman and Talbot v. Hudson, supra.

If lands are taken for a public use and for the benefit of the community, it is not of importance that individuals, or, as in this case, the Commonwealth, may derive incidental advantage therefrom.

The cases cited by the plaintiffs to this proposition that if a private use is combined with a public use in such a way that the two cannot be separated, the whole act of taking is invalid, do not affect the case at bar. No land is here taken for a private use, although an incidental and private advantage may arise from such taking for a public use.

Bill dismissed.

William E. RAMSDELL, Admr., etc., Appt.,

NEW YORK & NEW ENGLAND R. CO.

(....Mass....)

An administrator has no right, under the Employers' Liability Act, chap. 270, Laws of 1887,

NOTE.—Action for damages for death caused by negligence.

Ind. Rev. Stat. 1891, § 286, providing that in certain cases a guardian may sue for injury or death of his ward, and that in a suit for injury the damages shall be for the benefit of the ward, gives a guardian no right of action for the death of a minor instantly killed, who has a mother living, where the guardian has paid no expenditures from the property of the ward as a result of the accident. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Goodykoontz, 119 Ind. 111.

Under the Texas constitutional provision for the bringing of an action for exemplary damages by "the surviving husband, widow or the heirs of his or her body," of one who has been killed by gross negligence, no one else can bring such action. Hence such an action by a parent cannot be maintained. Winnt v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex.) 5 L. R. A. 172.

Under Ky. Gen. Stat., chap. 57, § 8, providing that 7 L. R. A.

to recover damages on account of the death of his intestate from injuries caused by the employer's negligence, in addition to his right as legal representative to recover the damages which accrued to the intestate in his lifetime.

(February 27, 1890.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Suffolk County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action to recover compensation for the death of plaintiff's intestate which was alleged to have resulted from the negligence of defendant's servants. Affirmed.

The declaration alleged that on January 8, 1889, plaintiff's intestate received personal injuries while in defendant's employ in consequence of which he died in a few hours. That the injuries resulted from a defect in some of the appliances furnished to plaintiff's intestate with which to do his work, which defect arose from, and had not been discovered and remedied owing to, the negligence of defendant or of some employé intrusted with the duty of seeing that such appliances were in proper condition. That plaintiff had duly given written notice to defendant of the time, place and cause of said injury. That plaintiff brings this action under the provisions of chap. 270, Laws of 1887, to recover compensation for the death of said intestate, and not for his suffering.

Defendant demurred and the demurrer was sustained, whereupon plaintiff took this appeal.

Messrs. C. G. Fall and G. D. Burrage, for appellant:

Section 2 of the Act says that, in cases of instant death, the damages shall be the same as may be recovered for death not instantaneous; and what these are, section 3 tells us by saying that, "in case of death," compensation, etc., "may be recovered in not less than $500 and not more than $5,000, to be assessed with reference to the degree of culpability of the employer herein, or the person for whose negligence he is made liable." Here is a rational measure of damages for both cases of death— instantaneous and not instantaneous. Upon the defendant's contention, if there is any measure of damages at all for instantaneous death, it is one which is self-contradictory and inappli-the "widow, heir or personal representative" of one killed by another's negligence may sue for damages, the word "heir" means "child," and does not include parents or collateral relatives. Jordan v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. (Ky.) 118 W. Rep. 1013.

Children claiming title to land by a deed executed in 1856 to their father who has left the State and has not been heard from for seven years, can sue as his heirs-at-law. Henderson v. Bonar (Ky.) 118 W. Rep. 800.

Damages for death caused by negligence. See note to Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Buok (Ind.) 2 L. R. A. 530.

Statutory action for, see notes to Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Corrigan (Ohio) 3 L. R. A. 235. Winnt v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex.) 5 L. R. A. 172.

For injuries inflicted beyond state limits, see note to Usher v. West Jersey R. Co. (Pa.) 4 L. R. A. 261.

cable. In such a case, the court will so construe the Statute as to save it from inconsistency and absurdity.

Com. v. Kimball, 24 Pick. 866, 870; Philadelphia v. Bridge Ave. Pass. R. Co. 102 Pa. 190, 197; Com. v. Conyngham, 66 Pa. 99; Henry v. Tilton, 17 Vt. 479, 486; Jeffersonville v. Weems, 5 Ind. 547; State v. Clark, 29 N. J. L. 96; Gilkey v. Cook, 60 Wis. 133.

The court has already decided that it ought to "construe the Statute liberally in favor of employes."

Ryall v. Mechanics Mills (Mass.) 5 L. R. A. 667.

Messrs. H. E. Bolles and R. M. Saltonstall, for appellee:

The Statute makes no provision for recovery by an administrator for the death of an employé in any case, whether instantaneous or otherwise.

The Statute creates two distinct causes of action,—the common-law action for damages sustained in the lifetime, which is made to survive by statute, and the statutory action based on the death. The damages which the employé suffered in his lifetime may be recovered by his administrator under section 1, clause 3, of the Act, and damages on account of instant death may be recovered in an action brought by the widow under section 2 of the Act.

Com. v. Metropolitan R. Co. 107 Mass. 236.

Knowlton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff sues as administrator, and expressly states in his declaration that he brings his action "under the provisions of chapter 270 of the Acts of 1887, to recover compensation for the death of the said intestate, and not for his suffering." We are thus brought directly to the question whether this Statute, commonly called the Employers' Liability Act, gives an administrator a right of action on account of the death of his intestate, in addition to his right as legal representative to recover the damages which accrued to the intestate in his lifetime.

Clause 3 of section 1 of the Statute provides that, where an employé is injured from either of the causes previously named, "the employé, or, in case the injury results in death, the legal representatives of such employé, shall have the same right of compensation and remedies against the employer as if the employé had not been an employé of, nor in the service of, the employer, nor engaged in its work." This plainly gives an executor or administrator a right to proceed in the right of his testator or intestate and recover all damages which the deceased person suffered to the time of his death. It does not purport to make the death a substantial cause of action. It gives only "the right of compensation and remedies," and it gives them to the employé, or to his legal representatives in case of his death. It implies that his representatives are merely to succeed to his rights and remedies. But the law recognizes no "right of compensation" for the death of a person, and gives to a deceased person no remedies founded on his death. There are a few cases in which remedies are given by indictment, or to an executor or administrator for the benefit of relatives, where death has been caused by the fault of another, such as the negligence of a railroad corporation or other common carrier of passengers, or the neglect of one whose duty it is to keep a way in repair. Pub. Stat. chap. 112, § 213; Stat. 1838, chap. 243; Pub. Stat. chap. 73, § 6, chap. 52, § 17.

These remedies are not general, but are strictly limited by statutes. Most of them are of a kind to which the Statute which we are considering could not apply. Moreover, when they exist they are given where death is instantaneous, or without conscious suffering, and also where it is not. Com. v. Metropolitan R. Co. 107 Mass. 236.

If this clause gave a right of action for the death of an employé as an extension to his representatives of a right which under one or two statutes belongs to the representatives of others, who are not employes, it would necessarily include the right where death is instantaneous. But manifestly that was not intended.

The next section of the Statute deals expressly with such cases in a different way. It is quite apparent that the third clause of the first section gives the legal representatives of a deceased employé merely a right to recover the damages to which the employé was entitled at the time of his death. This is conceded by the plaintiff in his argument.

Section 2 relates to cases, "where an employé is instantly killed or dies without conscious suffering," and in such cases gives a right of action to his widow, or, if there is no widow, and there are next of kin dependent on his wages for support, then to such next of kin. These two are the only sections of the Statute which give to anybody a right to sue. Section 3 relates to the amount of compensation and to the notice to be given as a condition precedent to the maintenance of a suit.

The damages to be assessed under this section in case of death are those to be recovered by the widow or next of kin in a suit brought under section 2. The expression "compensation in lieu thereof," does not very aptly characterize the recovery authorized; for there is no mode of estimating "compensation" for the death of a man, and the amount to be recovered is required to be assessed with reference to the degree of culpability of the employer. So, too, the words in the second section, which state that the recovery by the widow or next of kin shall be "in the same manner and to the same extent as if the death of the deceased had not been instantaneous, or as if the deceased had consciously suffered," can hardly be used with liberal accuracy, for there was no law under which a widow or next of kin could recover at all for the death of the husband or relative until this Statute was passed. The meaning obviously is that the right of action given in the first part of the section shall not be affected by the fact that the deceased died instantaneously or without conscious suffering. The words last quoted cannot point to a standard for the measurement of damages. No such standard exists under the circumstances and conditions to which they profess to refer.

The first section of the Statute is to be construed as giving a right of action to the employé, or in case of his death to his legal representatives suing in his right; the second section as giving a right of action to the widow or next of kin, without indicating anything as to the mode of assessing damages; and the third section as settling the amount to be recovered, first, in cases under the first section, and secondly, in cases under the second section.

Judgment affirmed.

Lucius R. BATES et al.

INHABITANTS OF WESTBOROUGH.

Lucius R. BATES

INHABITANTS OF WESTBOROUGH.

(....Mass....)

1. A municipal corporation is liable for injuries to a land owner, caused by the backing up of water in a drain which he has a right to maintain, by reason of negligence on the part of the corporation in permitting the channel into which such drain opens, and which is part of the sewerage system of the corporation, to become obstructed, or in maintaining the same too small in size without any defect in the original plan, or of the diversion by it of surface water from its natural course, and turning such quantities of it into such channel that its capacity for carrying off the drainage is not equal to the demand made upon it.
2. The expiration of a license given to a town to maintain a drain over lands of the licensor will not relieve the town from liability for injuries caused by the subsequent obstruction of the drain when such drain was the necessary outlet of the sewerage system of the town, and there is nothing to show abandonment thereof on the part of the town, but its use is continued the same after as before the license expired, and the town afterward obtains the further right to continue it.

(February 27, 1880.)

ON defendants' exceptions from the Superior Court for Worcester County (Staples, J.), taken in actions to recover damages for injuries to plaintiffs' property by reason of the flooding thereof with surface water from a drain by reason of the alleged negligence of defendants, in which verdicts were returned for plaintiffs. Overruled.

The cases were brought for injuries occurring during different periods of time. In other respects they were similar, and were tried together.

At the trial plaintiffs relied alone upon the eighth count of the declaration, which is in substance as follows:

"And the plaintiffs say that they are and have been, from December 1, 1885, to the date of this writ, the occupants of a shop and a parcel of land connected therewith, . . . and that there is connected with the land which they occupy a ditch by which the land is drained, which ditch follows the natural drainage of the surface of the land; and they have had during all of the time of their occupancy of said land and shop a right to drain their land by said ditch; and said ditch has during such time been connected with and has entered into a common drain, which passes under Brigham Street, a public street in said Westborough, and thence under the Boston & Albany Railroad, and thence through the land of one Timothy A. Smith; and that said drain is the natural course of the drainage of the land occupied by the plaintiffs; and that they have had, during all of such time, a right of drainage through said common drain; but the defendants have constructed a large number of drains or sewers, through and by which large quantities of water, which would not otherwise flow through said Brigham Street drain, were turned into said Brigham Street drain, so as to choke it up, so that the water from the land occupied by the plaintiffs could not flow through said Brigham Street drain, but was kept and retained upon the said land. . . . And it was the duty of the defendants to keep said drain clear and unobstructed, but that the defendants carelessly and negligently allowed

NOTE.—Municipal corporation liable for creation of a nuisance.

A municipal corporation is no more exempt from liability in case it creates a nuisance, either public or private, than an individual. Hughes v. Fond du Lac, 73 Wis 383.

A general grant of power in a municipal charter to establish a sewer system affords no justification for the action of the authorities in unnecessarily exercising the power so as to create a nuisance injurious to private rights of property. Edmondson v. Moberly, 36 Mo. 523.

A municipal corporation is liable for its negligence in devising a plan of sewerage, as well as for improper construction according to the plan. Seymour v. Cummins, 119 Ind. 148.

While a city or town is not liable in tort for injuries caused by the plan or scheme of a sewer laid out by the board of aldermen, it is liable for the negligence of its servants in carrying out the plan in constructing the sewer. Stock v. Boston, 149 Mass. 410.

The construction of a sewer is not a public work for the benefit of the people of the State, so as to shield the corporation from liability to persons whose property is damaged during the progress of the work. Denver v. Rhodes, 9 Colo. 564.

Although a municipal corporation is not liable for failure to exercise discretionary power to build culverts and sewers, if it undertakes to exercise that power it is bound to exercise reasonable care in the execution of the work, and is liable for damages occasioned by the negligent construction of such work. Frostburg v. Hitchins, 70 Md. 66.

A municipality constructing drains and sewers when under no obligation to do so is liable for damages where the work is performed negligently or the management thereof is negligent. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Davis, 10 Cent. Rep. 553, 68 Md. 231.

It is held in Canada that a municipal corporation may be sued for negligence in the construction of a sewer, for wrongfully obstructing a drain or watercourse or for diverting a stream of water on the plaintiff's land. Farrel v. London, 12 U. C. Q. B. 343; Reeves v. Toronto, 21 U. C. Q. B. 157; Perdue v. Chinguacousy Twp. 25 U. C. Q. B. 61.

A municipal corporation is liable to one upon whose lands it conducts surface water wrongfully diverted from its natural channel. Clark v. Rochester, 43 Hun, 271; Evansville v. Decker, 84 Ind. 325; Crawfordsville v. Bond, 96 Ind. 236; Lipes v. Hand, 2 West. Rep. 314, 104 Ind. 508; Rice v. Evansville, 6 West. Rep. 242, 106 Ind. 7; Terre Haute v. Hudnut, 11 West. Rep. 333, 112 Ind. 542-548; Pye v. Mankato, 36 Minn. 373.

The City of Boston, which, acting under Mass. Stat. 1874, chap. 196, undertook to alter, deepen and said drain to become obstructed, so that the water from the land occupied by the plaintiffs could not flow through said Brigham Street drain, but was kept and retained upon said land; . . . and said sewers were so badly and negligently constructed, and so negligently and improperly managed and cared for, that the said Brigham Street drain became filled with earth and refuse, so that the water from the land occupied by the plaintiffs could not flow through said Brigham Street drain, but was kept and retained upon said land, and the water collected by said drains and sewers was turned into said Brigham Street drain and into the aforesaid ditch, and thereby was caused to flow upon the land occupied by the plaintiffs; . . . and because said water was so collected by said defendants, said defendants were bound to keep said Brigham Street drain clear and unobstructed, but they allowed said drain to become so filled with earth and refuse that the water could not flow through said Brigham Street drain, but was kept and retained upon the land occupied by the plaintiffs; . . . and the defendants have entered upon the land of said Smith, and have obstructed and hindered the flow of the water upon said Smith land, and made and placed upon said land a box or trough, which was made of boards or planks, for the water to flow in, but said box or trough was so small and narrow that the water which passed through said drain under Brigham Street could not flow through said box or trough, but was stopped and held back, so that the water was kept back and retained upon the land occupied by the plaintiffs, to the great injury of the plaintiffs' business, and to their injury in a special manner, in that they were deprived of the use of their lands and buildings, for drying hats and bonnets, and large quantities of gasoline were lost and destroyed, and their supply of gas was cut off, so that they could not carry on their business, and much other damage and injury was done to their business."

The following diagram gives the relative situation of the drains:

The jury returned verdicts in favor of plaintiffs, and defendants took exceptions.

The facts further appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank P. Goulding and W. T. Forbes, for defendants:

A town is not liable for the acts of the high-widen a brook, and in so doing enlarge the culverts under roads above the land of an owner, so as to permit the water to flow down in excessive quantities, without having made a provision to enlarge the outlet or to keep the lower part of the stream unobstructed, to allow the excessive flow of water to escape, whereby such owner's property was damaged, is liable for the injury. Boston Belting Co. v. Boston, 149 Mass. 44.

Municipal corporation liable for creating nuisance. See notes to Chapman v. Rochester (N. Y.) 1 L. R. A. 296; Seymour v. Cummins (Ind.) 5 L. R. A. 128.

Liable in damages for neglect of duty.

Where a duty is a corporate duty in respect of its special or local interests, and not, as a public agency is, absolute and perfect, and not discretionary or judicial in its nature, and one owing to the plaintiff or in the performance of which he is specially interested, the corporation is liable in a civil action for the damages resulting to individuals by its neglect to perform the duty, or for the want of proper care or want of reasonable skill of its officers or servants acting under its direction or authority in the execution of such a duty, on the same principles and to the same extent as an individual or private corporation would be under like circumstances. Lloyd v. New York, 5 N. Y. 586; McCullough v. Brooklyn, 28 Wend. 458; 3 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 381.

But legal negligence cannot be predicated of an omission by a municipal corporation to do what it had no legal right to do. Veeder v. Little Falls, 1 Cent. Rep. 523, 100 N. Y. 343.

7 L. R. A.

A municipal corporation is liable for negligence in the ministerial duty to keep its sewers in repair as respects persons whose estates are connected therewith by private drains, in consequence of which such persons sustain injuries which would have been avoided had the sewers been kept in a proper condition. Child v. Boston, 4 Allen, 41; Lloyd v. New York, 5 N. Y. 386.

Chatsworth Run sewer in Baltimore is public, and the city is responsible for injuries from neglect to keep it in repair. Krans v. Baltimore, 2 Cent. Rep. 629, 64 Md. 491.

While a municipal corporation cannot be compelled to provide waterways of sufficient capacity to carry off all surface waters likely to accumulate in the streets, yet such as the city has provided it is bound to keep in repair and free from obstructions, so that, up to their original capacity, they shall be efficient. Denver v. Rhodes, 9 Colo. 554.

If the sewer is negligently permitted to become obstructed or filled up so that it causes the water to back-flow into cellars connected with it, there is a liability therefor on the part of the municipal corporation having the control of it. Barton v. Syracuse, 36 N. Y. 54; New York v. Furse, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 612; Wilson v. New York, 1 Denio, 595; Mills v. Brooklyn, 32 N. Y. 499; 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 936.

There is considered to be no liability in Massachusetts on the part of a city for failing to keep a public cesspool and sewer in repair, in consequence of which waste water accumulates and flows into neighboring cellars not connected with the sewer. Barry v. Lowell, 5 Allen, 127.

way surveyors, done in the course of constructing or repairing highways, which cause surface water to accumulate and flow upon lands outside the highways.

Flagg v. Worcester, 18 Gray, 601; Barry v. Lovell, 8 Allen, 127; Franklin v. Fisk, 13 Allen, 211; Turner v. Dartmouth, 18 Allen, 291; Kennison v. Beverly, 6 New Eng. Rep. 133, 146 Mass. 467; Emery v. Lovell, 104 Mass. 18, 16; Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 220; Manners v. Haverhill, 135 Mass. 165; Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171.

There is no allegation in the declaration that the box was put in during the time covered by the actions, nor that it was maintained during that time by the town. The only ground the liability of the town for this cause can be placed on is, that it created a nuisance on the land of Smith, and is liable perpetually for the continuance of said nuisance until abated, although its title, interest and right in the land ceased long before the injury complained of. A proposition so broad as that cannot be sustained.

Thompson v. Gibson, 7 Mees. & W. 459; Perrin v. Case, 5 Coke, 100 b; Westbourne v. Mordant, Cro. Eliz. 191; Rosewell v. Prior, 2 Saik 466; Cheatham v. Hampson, 4 T. R. 318; Blunt v. Aikin, 15 Wend. 522; Waggoner v. Jermaine, 8 Denio, 806; Wood, Nuis. 78; McDough v. Gilman, 3 Allen, 264; New Salem v. Eagle Mill Co. 133 Mass. 10; Prentiss v. Wood, 132 Mass. 480.

Messrs. W. S. B. Hopkins and J. E. Bee-man for plaintiffs.

Holmes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These are two actions of tort depending upon the same state of facts to recover for the overflowing of the plaintiffs' land with water from the defendants' drain and set back in the plaintiffs' drain. There was evidence tending to show the following facts, which we assume to be true, for the purposes of this decision.

The plaintiff had gained a prescriptive right to discharge water from his land by a drain to a culvert running under Brigham Street, the Boston & Albany Railroad and beyond, the water being carried from the further side, of late years, by a box drain.

There is a system of drains under different highways, converging into one under Brigham Street, which also discharges through the same culvert. Some, at least, of these drains, including that through Brigham Street, were built by the defendant Town and belonged to it, and the Town had a right to discharge through the culvert. The box drain on the other side of the culvert was built by the Town upon land of one Smith, under a lease or license granted for a nominal sum. The lease expired more than six years before the date of the writ. But the box drain remained and received the drainage as before, of which it was the necessary outlet. Smith did not object, but, it seems, had further negotiations with the Town which have resulted in the building of a new drain since these actions were brought.

The effect of the system of drainage was to bring down and to discharge through the culvert more water, and to discharge it more rapidly than otherwise would have been the case. Within six years before the date of the writs, the culvert had been filled up more or less, the box drain had failed at times to discharge the water freely, and the drain on the plaintiffs' side of the culvert had become filled up. From some or all of these causes, the plaintiffs' land was flowed as alleged.

The plaintiff got verdicts under instructions allowing him to recover if the Town had failed to use reasonable precautions in keeping the culverts free from obstructions or had been guilty of negligence in maintaining a box drain of too small size or in improperly constructing or negligently maintaining other drains, that by themselves, or in connection with the culvert, made a faulty arrangement for disposing of the surface water, and thus had caused the damage.

These, we believe, are the only facts needing mention. The plaintiff went to the jury on the eighth count alone, which made some of the defendants' requests for rulings immaterial, and we cannot adopt the defendants' construction of a further remark to the jury, upon which they base an important part of their argument. The jury were told that if they should find that not all the acts alleged in the eighth count operated to produce injury, but that some of them did, they could still find on that count in favor of the plaintiffs. We think that this was not intended and could not have been understood to mean that any one act alleged would be sufficient, but simply reinforced what had been said already, and meant that less than all the acts alleged would be enough if the facts found by the jury satisfied the conditions of liability which had just been stated to them in detail.

If a private land owner collects surface water into a definite, artificial channel and discharges it upon his neighbor's land, he is liable to an action. White v. Chapin, 13 Allen, 516, 520; Curtis v. Eastern R. Co. 93 Mass. 423, 481; Rathke v. Gardner, 134 Mass. 14, 16; Juckman v. Arlington Mills, 137 Mass. 277, 288; Cassidy v. Old Colony R. Co. 141 Mass. 174, 179, 1 New Eng. Rep. 606.

And when the defendant would be liable for a direct discharge, we apprehend that he would be liable also, if the water was reflected upon the plaintiff's land by an obstacle to its direct course, when that obstacle was set up by the defendant, or was negligently allowed to remain when he ought to remove it. We think also that it would not matter that some water would reach the obstacle if the defendant's drain were not there, provided the drain brings down more than otherwise would come, and causes the flooding of the plaintiff's land by this excess. Curtis v. Eastern R. Co. supra.

Again, the ordinary liability of a tortfeasor who should stop a drain belonging to the plaintiff, would exist if he should stop that drain by causing an otherwise lawful discharge of water into the outlet of the plaintiff's drain, the water thus discharged acting as a dam or obstacle to the plaintiff's water.

A town has no prerogative to flood the lands or to stop the drains of other land owners without paying for it, and if it does so without authority of law, it is liable to an action of tort. Hill v. Boston, 123 Mass. 844, 358. See Hitchins v. Prossburg, 68 Md. 100, 10 Cent. Rep. 539.

It is true that a town is not liable for interrupting the flow of surface water or for discharging or turning surface water upon adjoining land to a considerable extent, if not through a definite channel; but this is because no land owner is liable for doing so. Emery v. Lovell, 104 Mass. 18, 17, explaining Barry v. Lovell, 8 Allen, 128, and Turner v. Dartmouth, 18 Allen, 291. See Gannon v. Hargadon, 10 Allen, 106; Franklin v. Fisk, 18 Allen, 211; Vates v. Smith, 100 Mass. 181; Morrill v. Hurley, 120 Mass. 99.

So a town is not liable to an action at common law for acts which are done under a statute, for instance, in the repair of highways, or, it seems, in the construction of sewers, for which the statute provides a remedy by petition. Emery v. Lovell, supra, explaining Flagg v. Worcester, 18 Gray, 601; Manning v. Lovell, 130 Mass. 21, 22; Nealley v. Bradford, 145 Mass. 561, 5 New Eng. Rep. 515. See Hill v. Westjill, 133 Mass. 433; Perry v. Worcester, 6 Gray, 544; Benjamin v. Wheeler, 8 Gray, 409, 15 Gray, 486.

But the case is different when a city or town has caused the plaintiff's land to be flowed in a way which would be actionable as against a private person, and which cannot be taken to have been contemplated by the statute under which it acts, or to have been paid for by the compensation allowed in respect of the original scheme. Thus, in the instance of sewers, it is settled that if the plaintiff can prove that the injury was caused by the negligence of the city, either in the original construction of the sewer, or in not keeping it free from obstructions, he may maintain an action against the city. Emery v. Lovell, 104 Mass. 18, 17; Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 231; Murphy v. Lovell, 124 Mass. 564; Tindley v. Salem, 187 Mass. 171, 172; Stinchfield v. Newton, 143 Mass. 110, 115, 2 New Eng. Rep. 526; Child v. Boston, 4 Allen, 41, 52.

So if by a system of drains a city artificially diverts surface water from its natural course and accumulates it upon the plaintiff's land in such quantities as to create a private nuisance, it may be liable to an action. Manning v. Lovell, 130 Mass. 21, 25; Brayton v. Fall River, 113 Mass. 218, 226.

So if it negligently fails to keep a culvert under a highway in such condition as not to obstruct a natural stream. Parker v. Lovell, 11 Gray, 858.

Emery v. Lovell, and the cases following it, have reinforced the distinction established in Child v. Boston, that while no action lies for a defect or want of sufficiency in the plan or system of drainage adopted in the exercise of a quasi judicial discretion, under powers especially conferred by statute, the duty of keeping the common sewers in repair and free from obstructions after they have been constructed and have become the property of the city under such authority, is a ministerial duty, for neglect of which the city is liable to any person injured. The same is true of the duty actually to construct them with reasonable care and skill. And there is no difference in these duties whether the city has acquired the right to maintain the sewer by prescription or has laid it under the statute. See Gould v. Boston, 120 7 L. R. A.

Mass. 800, 806; Phelps v. Mankato, 23 Minn. 276, 279; Bradbury v. Benton, 69 Me. 194.

It was not intended to overrule or to modify the well settled rules which we have stated, by the decision in Kenston v. Beverly, 146 Mass. 467, 6 New Eng. Rep. 183. In that case the damage was caused by percolation from a catch basin which seems to have been incident only to an open gutter by the side of the highways. Assuming that there was evidence for the jury that there was such an artificial accumulation of water as to fall within White v. Chapin and Manning v. Lovell, and that the trouble was due to negligence in construction rather than to the plan adopted, still it may be that the town was not liable in the absence of such evidence that it did the work, as was found in Deane v. Randolph, 132 Mass. 475; Wakron v. Haverhill, 143 Mass. 582, 3 New Eng. Rep. 683; Doherty v. Bruintree, 148 Mass. 495, 497.

It may be that defects in such a catch basin are to be regarded as defects in surface drainage within the limits of the highway, and therefore as defects in the repair of the highway the charge of which is committed by statute to the highway surveyors. Highway surveyors in the performance of their statutory duties are held to be public officers and not agents of the town, partly because of the town's want of control over them, and partly because the duty to repair the surface of highways is regarded as a public duty from which the town derives no special advantage in its corporate capacity. Walcott v. Swampscott, 1 Allen, 101; Barney v. Lovell, 108 Mass. 570, 571; Tindley v. Salem, 187 Mass. 171, 174; Blanchard v. Ayer, 148 Mass. 174, 176.

For these and perhaps other reasons, it is held that towns are not liable for defects in such repair apart from statute, except in such cases as we have mentioned. White v. Phillipston, 10 Met. 103, 110; Bigelow v. Randolph, 14 Gray, 541, 543; Oliver v. Worcester, 103 Mass. 489, 490; Hill v. Boston, 123 Mass. 344, 350.

It seems that this irresponsibility is not confined to nonfeasance or to damage in the highway, to persons traveling there, but extends to cases of misfeasance (see Walcott v. Swampscott and Tindley v. Salem, supra, Manners v. Haverhill, 135 Mass. 165), and to injury to persons or property outside of the highway. Holman v. Townsend, 13 Met. 297; Smith v. Dedham, 8 Cush. 522. See Benjamin v. Wheeler and Turner v. Dartmouth, supra; Brasley v. Southborough, 6 Cush. 141.

But it is settled by the cases which we have cited (Emery v. Lovell, etc.) that there is no such immunity with regard to sewers and main drains. These belong to the cities and towns by statute (Pub. Stat. chap. 50, § 1); and although the road commissioners who are given authority to maintain them, by the same section, are probably no more the agents of the towns than highway surveyors, when exercising highway surveyors' duties (Barney v. Lovell, supra; Nealley v. Bradford, 145 Mass. 561, 564, 5 New Eng. Rep. 515), still perhaps they have not so exclusive an authority over sewers, and at all events the interest of the towns in the sewers is so distinct from that of the public at large that they are held, with reason, to the ordinary responsibilities of owners. See, further, Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 500; Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 208; Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 324.

A further objection is taken by the defendants, with regard to the box drain, that a tenant is not liable to third persons for damages subsequently caused by a structure lawfully erected and simply left by him upon his landlord's premises after the expiration of his lease. We certainly are not disposed to deny that proposition when the circumstances are such that the tenant may be held to have abandoned the structure, and the landlord may be held to maintain it. Blunt v. Aikin, 15 Wend. 522; Waggoner v. Jermaine, 8 Denio, 306. See Clifford v. Atlantic Cotton Mills, 146 Mass. 47, 49, 5 New Eng. Rep. 566.

But the tenant's liability will continue if he still maintains the structure, and in a case like this the question whether he does so or not will depend upon evidence which, necessarily, is slight, so far as it is drawn from subsequent acts. If the Town abandoned the drain, natural causes would still carry water through it as before; if it maintained it, there was nothing in particular for the Town to do, unless the drain should need repairs.

Perhaps the strongest evidence is found in the original transaction. Whether the leave to maintain the drain for five years, given by Smith, was a lease or a license, it is very plain that the limit of five years was fixed simply in order to preserve rights. Neither party can have expected that the drain was to be given up at the end of that time. The case is wholly different from the ordinary one of a tenant leaving a fixture. The same need which led to the agreement was likely to continue, and it would seem from the report adopted by the Town that already the box drain was the necessary outlet of the system of drains and sewers belonging to the Town heretofore mentioned. It is a fair inference that what should be done later was left to further negotiations, which seem from the vote of November 8, 1887 to have been had, and to have been successful. So far as the Town added to its system of drains, it showed its intention to continue to use the box drain. It did continue in fact to discharge the water from that system through the box drain, and it negotiated with Smith, as we have said. There was ample evidence that the Town used the box drain after the five years. What would be the liability for bringing down water against an obstacle not under the defendant's control, under circumstances otherwise like the present, we need not consider. Any insufficiency that there may have been in the drain seems to have been due to negligence in its construction or maintenance, not to a defect in the original plan. See Will v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 375; Perry v. Worcester, 6 Gray, 544, 547.

Exceptions overruled.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Board of Commissioners of JAY COUNTY, Appl.,
v.

David T. TAYLOR et al.

(.....Ind.....)

A contract by which a board of county commissioners attempts to employ a legal adviser for a period of three years to commence three months in the future and after the time for the election of a person to fill the vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of office of one member of the board, the term of employment extending over a period during which all the members of the board as constituted at the time of the contract will retire therefrom unless re-elected, is against public policy and void.

(Elliott and Coffey, JJ., dissent.)

(February 4, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jay County in favor of plaintiffs in an action upon a contract to pay plaintiffs for legal services to be rendered by them. Reversed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Messrs. Thomas Bosworth and Frank H. Snyder, for appellant.

Messrs. Taylor & Hartford, appellees, in person.

Berkshire, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellees sued the appellant upon the following contract:

This memorandum of agreement made this day between the Board of Commissioners of Jay County of the first part and Taylor and Hartford of the second part, witnesseth that the party of the first part has this day employed and hired the party of the second part as county attorney for Jay County, in the State of Indiana, for a period of three years from the 5th day of December, 1887; the said party of the second part hereby agreeing to attend to all litigations in which the Board of Commissioners of Jay County, is a party, in any of the courts of the State of Indiana, and at all times to render and give the Board of Commissioners of Jay County or any member thereof, legal advice at their reasonable request; and also to legally advise and direct any officer of said County of Jay as they may reasonably request from time to time, on all matters of law pertaining to their said offices.

In consideration of such legal services as aforesaid, the party of the first part, the Board of Commissioners of Jay County, promise and agree to pay the party of the second part, Taylor and Hartford, the sum of $200 per year, payable quarterly; and in case they have to go to any other county to litigate any action in which the Board of Commissioners is a party, to pay their reasonable expenses, including railroad fare and board incurred in attending to such litigation.

*NOTE.—See Barnard v. Knox Co. (Mo.) 2 L. R. A. 438.

In witness whereof, the party of the first part and the party of the second part have hereunto set their hands and seals this 14th day of September, 1887.

L. J. Craig,
R. McKinley,
Taylor & Hartford.

The complaint is in two paragraphs, to which demurrers were addressed and overruled by the court, and one of the errors assigned rests upon the ruling of the court in overruling said demurrers; but as counsel for the appellant waive this alleged error in their brief we are not called upon to consider the questions thereby raised.

The appellant answered the complaint in three paragraphs, the first being a general denial.

Demurrers were addressed to the second and third paragraphs; the demurrer to the second paragraph was overruled and the demurrer to the third paragraph sustained and exceptions taken.

At the request of the appellant the court made a special finding, and upon the facts found stated as conclusions of law that the contract was valid and binding upon the appellant, and that the appellees were entitled to recover the sum of $50. The appellant excepted to the conclusions of law and judgment was rendered for the appellees.

The substance of the third paragraph of answer is about as follows: At the time the contract mentioned in the complaint was entered into, the Board had in its employ as its attorney and legal adviser one John M. Smith, whose term of employment continued until the — day of December, 1887, at which date the Board would be reorganized, the term of one of its members expiring and that of another commencing; that the said contract was an employment for a period of time commencing in the future and after the reorganization of the said Board, and was executed for the purpose and with the intention of binding the Board as it would be organized on said — day of December, 1887, to accept the services of legal advisers not of its own selection; that appellees never assumed the duties of county attorneys under the said contract, and that the Board as thereafter constituted had employed Thomas Bosworth as its legal adviser, who is still serving in that capacity.

The answer was not skillfully drawn and is not specific in its averments. If the averments in the answer were as broad as the facts stated in the special finding (not in detail, but as would be proper in pleading), the questions intended to be presented could be considered with much more satisfaction by this court.

In considering the answer we must not overlook the character of the contract which is the foundation of the action.

The contract, to say the least of it, is a remarkable one, entered into under unusual circumstances and which would seem to indicate that the motive which prompted its execution was not the welfare of the public. By its terms and conditions the services of the appellees are contracted for for a period of three years from December 6, 1887, and at a time when the Board had an attorney employed whose term of service would not expire for three months and not until after the reorganization of the Board, as stated in the answer. We know as a matter of law that within the time over which the employment under the contract extended the Board must be reorganized at least three times, because of the expiration and commencement of the terms of its members; that before the said 6th day of December, 1890, there will not be a single member of the Board whose term had commenced and was running at the date of the contract, unless thereafter re-elected.

It is admitted by the demurrer that the contract was entered into for the purpose and with the intention of binding the new Board (so to speak) to accept the services of legal advisers not of its own choosing.

If the contract, such as it is and entered into for the purpose stated in the answer, is not contrary to public policy, then the demurrer was properly sustained to the answer; but if not a valid and binding contract for the reason that it is against public policy, the demurrer should have been overruled.

In considering this question the effect upon the public interest must have a controlling influence. To assume that the contract is voidable only is to concede that the Board had the power to enter into such a contract, and if power existed to make the contract it must be regarded as valid and binding, unless tainted with fraud sufficient to avoid or rescind it.

The execution of the contract for the purpose of binding the Board in the future and after there has been a change in its membership, will not of itself constitute fraud. McCormick v. Boston, 120 Mass. 499; Bay State Brick Co. v. Foster, 115 Mass. 481; Benjamin v. Wheeler, 8 Gray, 409; Soon Hing v. Oronoley, 113 U. S. 708 [28 L. ed. 1145]; Ogleby v. At-trill, 105 U. S. 605 [26 L. ed. 1186].

The contract must be regarded as a valid and binding contract, or as void ab initio because of the fact that it is a contract which is against public policy.

The Board of Commissioners has authority to employ counsel in matters pertaining to the business of the county, and to give to the members of the Board legal advice in relation to their official duties.

If the contract in question is binding, the Board of Commissioners at one session may employ counsel to serve the Board as then organized, and at the same time employ counsel to serve it in advance and at a time when it is known the membership of the Board will be different.

It is true that under the contract in question the beginning of the term for which the appellees were employed was only postponed three months from the date of the employment, but in the mean time the term of office of one member of the Board expired and that of another began; and if, under such circumstances, attorneys could be employed three months ahead, why not for one, two or three years in advance?

But the most obnoxious feature which we find in the contract is the length of time for which the appellees were employed. We know, as a matter of law, as we have already said, that the membership of the Board will be changed as much as three times from the date of the employment to the expiration of the time of service, unless some of its members are re-elected, and in that case the terms of office will be different. Unless some of its members are re-elected there must be an entire change in the membership of the Board between the date of the employment and the expiration of the time covered by the contract. This contract deprives the Board, as reorganized from year to year, of the right to employ its attorney for the next following year.

If such contracts are binding, then no difference how distasteful an attorney may be to the members of the Board, or how little confidence they may have in his ability, legal learning or honesty, so long as he performs the conditions of the contract on his part they are bound to recognize him, accept his services and assume the responsibility.

And if the contract in question, extending, as it does, over a period of three years, is valid, why may not a like contract covering a period of six, nine or a dozen years be upheld?

Our conclusion is that the contract is against public policy and void.

In St. Joseph & Denver City R. Co. v. Ryan, 11 Kan. 602, 15 Am. Rep. 357, it is said by the court: "Railroad corporations are, as we have seen, public agencies and perform a public duty. They are agencies created by the public, with certain privileges and subject to certain obligations. A contract that they will not discharge or by which they cannot discharge those obligations is a breach of that public duty and cannot be enforced."

This portion of the opinion is quoted with approval by the Supreme Court of Iowa in the case of Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 53 Iowa, 126. See Fuller v. Dame, 18 Pick. 472, opinion by Shaw, Ch. J., which is a leading case upon the subject under consideration; Guernsey v. Cook, 120 Mass. 501.

In Craft v. McConoughey, 79 Ill. 346, the Supreme Court of Illinois said: "Whatever is injurious to the interest of the public is void on the ground of public policy." This language is quoted and approved in the recent case of People v. Chicago Gas Trust Co., decided by the same court in a learned and exhaustive opinion. (Ill.) 22 N. E. Rep. 798.

In Wiley v. Baumgardner, 97 Ind. 66, whatever is injurious to public interest is recognized as contrary to public policy.

It is evident that the contract involved in this litigation is of that character. It ties the hands of the Board of Commissioners and is prejudicial to the free exercise of its power and functions for the public good.

In West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Ohio River Pipe Line Co., 22 W. Va. 600, 48 Am. Rep. 527, the court says: "The common law will not permit individuals to oblige themselves by contract either to do or not to do anything when the thing to be done or omitted is in any degree clearly injurious to the public," citing Chappel v. Brockway, 21 Wend. 159. See People v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. supra.

The case of Reubelt v. Noblesville, 106 Ind. 478, 4 West. Rep. 509, is relied upon by the appellees. That case involved the right of the school trustees of the town to employ a school superintendent for the following school year, and before the reorganization of the school board in June, as provided by law. The appellee rested its case upon the construction to be placed upon § 4439, Rev. Stat. 1881, claiming that, by the provisions of that section, the board of school trustees as organized in May could not elect a superintendent for the next school year, and thereby bind the board as organized in June, and the case went off upon that question. In that case the employment was only for one year. We apprehend that, if the board of trustees had undertaken to employ the superintendent for three years, a different conclusion would have been reached.

We have not overlooked the suggestion made by counsel for the appellees that the Board of Commissioners is a corporation, and continues as such notwithstanding its membership may be changed, and is liable for all contracts which it has the power to make.

But the question before us is one of power, and, as we have said, we do not think the Board had the power to make the contract in suit.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the third paragraph of answer.

Elliott, J.:

I dissent from the prevailing opinion because I think the contract operated to retain the attorneys and they are entitled to some compensation. An attorney who is retained is entitled to compensation, although he may not actually render any services.

Coffey, J., concurs with Elliott, J.

Petition for rehearing overruled April 5, 1890.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. CO.,
Appt.,
v.

GILBERT, PARKS & CO.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. To be valid a contract restricting a carrier's liability must be fairly obtained, just and reasonable.

2. A condition in a bill of lading which 7 L. R. A.

limits the carrier's liability is reasonable if coupled with compensating advantages to the shipper, and the latter has the alternative of getting rid of the condition by paying a reasonably higher freight rate.

3. A "fire clause" in a bill of lading exempting the carrier from liability for loss by fire is not valid, where transportation under the rules of the common law is not offered as an alternative, and no reduction of rates is made as a consideration for the exemption.

4. Mere acquiescence by shippers in the use of bills of lading containing a clause exempting from liability for fires will not show the reasonableness of the exemption, where the shippers have not had an opportunity of selection between bills of lading with and those without this clause.

5. New facts declared in an affidavit for a new trial will be insufficient if they transpired after the cause of action accrued and were in no wise connected therewith.

(Folkes, J., dissents.)

(January 30, 1890.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Davidson County in favor of plaintiffs in an action to recover the value of certain cotton which was burned while in possession of defendant for transportation. Affirmed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Mr. Baxter Smith for appellant.

Messrs. Dickinson & Fraser for appellees.

Caldwell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 18th day of October, 1885, W. F. Embry, as agent of Gilbert, Parks & Co., delivered seven bales of cotton to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company at Columbia, Tenn., for shipment to his principals at Nashville. Before its departure, and while yet in the depot of the Company at Columbia, it was destroyed by fire. Thereafter Gilbert, Parks & Co. sued the Railroad Company for non-delivery. The action originated before a justice of the peace, from whose judgment there was an appeal to the Circuit Court at Nashville. Here the case was tried by his honor, the circuit judge, without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs for the agreed value of the cotton, interest and costs. The Railroad Company has prosecuted an appeal in error to this court.

There is no controversy about the consignment, loss and value of the cotton; nor is there any denial that the defendant Company would be liable for the loss, under the rules of the common law. These are all conceded. But it is insisted in behalf of the Company that its common-law liability was limited by special contract, and that special contract is relied upon in bar of any recovery. The bill of lading under which the shipment was to be made is produced in evidence. It contains a fire clause which stipulates that the Company shall not be liable for loss or damage by fire. This is the special contract through which exemption from liability is sought. The plaintiffs deny the validity of that stipulation, and thus the issue for our determination is presented.

It is now too well settled to admit of debate that the common-law liability of common carriers may be limited by special contract, even to the extent of denuding them of the character of insurers, except as against their own negligence, or that of their agents and servants; and the limitation may be, and is generally, embraced in the bill of lading delivered to the shippers at the time. It is not every such special contract, however, that is effective. To be valid, it must be fairly obtained, and just and reasonable. Under the English Railway and Canal Traffic Act of 1854 (17 and 18 Vict. chap. 81, § 7), such stipulations are called "conditions," and they can be upheld only when they "shall be adjudged . . . to be just and reasonable." The same criterion is uniformly applied in this country, and no limitations of the carrier's common-law liability, in whatever form made, will afford protection unless just and reasonable in the eyes of the law. New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 857 [21 L. ed. 627]; Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 113 U. S. 838 [23 L. ed. 720]; Marr v. W. U. Teleg. Co. 85 Tenn. (1 Pickle) 542; Merchants Dispatch Transp. Co. v. Bloch, 86 Tenn. (2 Pickle) 397.

Though such is the generally accepted test, the use of these words ("just and reasonable") will not always meet the requirements of investigation. What will be just and reasonable in one case may not be so in another. The justness and reasonableness of the condition or limitation must of necessity depend upon the peculiar facts and circumstances of every case,—the nature of the article to be conveyed, the hazard of the transportation, the surroundings of the parties at the time, and the mutual advantages given and received.

Referring to the burden and weight of proof, an eminent British author says: "The burden of proving the reasonableness of a condition lies upon the company. The most cogent evidence in favor of reasonableness is to show that the condition was not forced upon the customer, but that he had a fair alternative of getting rid of the condition, and yet agreed to it." Redman, Railway Carr. 2d ed. p. 66, citing Lewis v. Great Western R. Co. 47 L. J. N. S. Q. B. 181.

In further treating on the same subject, the same writer, on page 71, says: "To enable a company to rely on an alternative contract offered to the customer, it must appear that such alternative was itself reasonable. A company cannot offer the choice of two unreasonable conditions, and then rely on the one actually chosen,"—citing Lloyd v. Waterford & L. R. Co. 15 Ir. C. L. 87.

To the same effect as the latter quotation is the Marr Case, decided by this court in 1886. There the telegraph company was shown to have had four different rates of charges, with as many different degrees of liability. They were all held to be unreasonable, and the fact that the customer choosing one rate had the option of taking any one of the other three was of no avail to the company, in an action for damages. Marr v. W. U. Teleg. Co. 85 Tenn. (1 Pickle) 545.

The alternative must be both reasonable and bona fide. If either unreasonable or colorable only, it will be unavailing as a defense to the action against a carrier. A company standing before the public as a common carrier, and enjoying the advantages and franchises as such, must be ready to do the business of a common carrier, with the full measure of responsibility imposed by the common law; and it may at the same time offer to do the same business with a limited liability, the limitation resting upon a sufficient consideration. An offer or readiness to transport the goods of its customer with the one or the other degree of responsibility, at his option, is as little as can be required of any common carrier. Less than this does not present a bona fide and reasonable alternative. Reduction of freight charges is the usual consideration for the diminution of responsibility on the part of the company. One of the leading principles deducible from the English cases is stated by Mr. Redman in these words: "A condition is reasonable which reduces a company's liability to a minimum, if it is coupled with compensating advantages to the customer (such as cheapness of carriage), and the latter has the alternative of getting rid of the condition by paying a reasonably higher rate." Redman, Railway Carr. p. 75, § 2.

This language puts the law clearly, and meets our unqualified approval. It is reproduced as the law of the two countries in a recent American work. 3 Am. & Eng. Cyclop. Law, 819.

These clauses, similar to the one before us, when based upon a sufficient consideration, have by the Supreme Court of the United States, and by this court, been held to be valid, and to protect the company from liability for loss by fire, caused otherwise than by the negligence of the company or its agents. York Mfg. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 107 [18 L. ed. 170]; Dillard v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 3 Lea, 288.

In the latter case, the court said: "A lower rate of freight, or something equivalent, will be a sufficient consideration for the stipulation." 3 Lea, 293.

In the former it is broadly intimated that a reduction of charges will be presumed to be the consideration for such a stipulation, the language of the court being: "There is no evidence that a consideration was not given for the stipulation. The company, probably, had rates of charges proportioned to the risks they assumed from the nature of the goods carried, and the exemption of losses by fire must necessarily have affected the compensation demanded." 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 113 [18 L. ed. 172].

In speaking of the stipulation for a limited liability in a railroad ticket, the New York Court of Appeals said: "Like all contracts, to render such an one valid, it is indispensable that it have some consideration, which it would not have if the passenger paid the full fare fixed by law . . . If the service is reduced, the amount of the reward must be reduced in proportion; and, if the company is relieved from risk, it must make compensation for that relief by the reduction of fare or otherwise." Bissell v. New York Cent. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 442.

The performance of an act which a party is under a legal obligation to perform does not constitute a good consideration for a promise. Addison, Cont. § 4.

Hence a mere agreement by a common carrier to transport goods furnishes no consideration for a stipulation for less than common-law liability. Lawson, Carr. § 212.

Having laid down the principles of law by which this case must be decided, we proceed to give them application to the facts disclosed on the trial. In doing this it is necessary to state the material facts not already recited. I. Bailey says: "Have been freight agent at Columbia for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, for about nine years. I received the cotton in 7 L. R. A.

question from W. F. Embry, agent of plaintiffs. Nothing was said about accepting the bill of lading. No objection was made to the same. The regular rate on the bill of lading was $1 a bale. The regular tariff rate for each 100 pounds is 37 cents, and, estimating a bale of cotton at 600 pounds, would make the cost of shipping between those points (Columbia and Nashville) $1.85 per bale. If this bill of lading had been declined (the one the cotton was shipped under), the shipper would have had to ship by the regular tariff rates, $1.85 per bale, without the fire clause. I do not know how long this form of bill of lading has been in use, but it has been in use for several years, and was acceptable to the shipping public, and no complaint had been made of it. I do not think there was any fire clause in the one used prior to this. At the time the cotton was shipped I had no other form of bill of lading to ship cotton under. I had no authority as freight agent to make any different contract, or to ship goods under any other bill of lading than the one under which these goods were shipped. Nothing was said between Mr. Embry and myself about a special rate, but he took the bill of lading offered without objection, and shipped under this. I would not have shipped this cotton any other way. The rate of $1 a bale has been such about six years, under the bill of lading such as this cotton was shipped under. I have no bill of lading to issue where goods are shipped under tariff rates. No cotton has ever been shipped under tariff rates. Every shipper in Columbia knows that I have the tariff rates posted up in my office. Have told W. F. Embry about the tariff rates, but do not remember when. The rate on cotton was the same before the insertion of the fire clause as it is now. If objection had been made about this bill of lading, I would have refused to receive the goods until I had authority from Mr. Champe. A schedule with the exemptions was posted up in a conspicuous place in my office at Columbia, but the name 'cotton' did not appear in it, but it would have come under our losses; and had frequently talked with Mr. Embry, plaintiff's agent, about the two rates before this shipping."

Mr. Champe testified. "I am general freight agent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company at Nashville. If Mr. Bailey, our freight agent at Columbia, had informed me that Mr. Embry refused to ship his cotton under this bill of lading, in this case I would have instructed him (Mr. Bailey) to ship the said cotton by the regular rates of 37 cents per 100 pounds, which would have been done by telegraph. The only two rates we have are the rates under this bill of lading and the tariff rates. This bill of lading, as far as I know, has been in use a long number of years."

The foregoing is the whole of the testimony of these two witnesses. It is quoted at length, to show the whole case as made by the defendant. It introduced no other witness. Leonard Parks, one of the plaintiffs, stated, in substance, that he had been a shipper over the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company many years; that the Merchants' Exchange at Nashville protested against the introduction of the fire clause in the defendant's form for bills of lading, and gave the Company notice of that protest; and that the rate from Columbia to Nashville was not reduced when the fire clause was inserted, but remained the same as before.

Under these facts, we agree with the learned circuit judges in holding that the Company is liable for the value of the cotton. The special contract for exemption from liability for loss or damage by fire is by this record shown not to be just and reasonable. It was the primary duty of the Company to hold itself in readiness to transport goods, under the rules of the common law, with all the responsibility of a common carrier. This it did not do. Its agent was furnished with no form for bill of lading for such a shipment. More than that, he had no authority to receive the goods for shipment with such responsibility attaching to the Company. He says he had no authority to make any contract but the one he did make, and that he "would not have shipped this cotton any other way." He submitted no alternative to the plaintiffs, and had no authority from his principal to do so, and would not have done so if requested. True, he says he would have asked for permission to ship under contract without fire clause if the bill of lading with it had been refused by the customer, and Mr. Champe says he would have granted such permission. What stronger proof could there be that the Company was not offering, or ready, or was pretending, to do business, except upon the most restricted liability? Why the necessity of asking and granting permission to do a thing which the law requires it to be in constant readiness to do? This is the permission that should have been granted in the first instance. From the moment of his employment, the agent should certainly have been clothed with authority to do that which the law required him to do, and after that he could have been authorized to do that which the law permitted him to do. That he frequently talked with Embry "about the two rates" is an unimportant circumstance as we see it. If he at the same time told Embry what he tells the court,—that he was authorized to issue but the one bill of lading, and that he would ship the cotton no other way,—he would certainly not have made the case any better for the Company; and if he withheld those additional facts, they remain facts in the case nevertheless, and cannot be rejected because not disclosed to the customer.

Again, no consideration for the fire clause passed to the shipper. The responsibility of the carrier is reduced to a minimum, it is true, but there is no corresponding reduction in freight charges. There is no reciprocal concession of legal rights by carrier and shipper. The advantage is all on one side. It is distinctly shown that the rate charged under the bill of lading in this case is the same that was charged before the insertion of the fire clause, and that no reduction was ever pretended to be made on account of the introduction of such clause, and the customer's assent thereto. The agreement to carry for a price which the Company was accustomed to charge, without the fire clause, is no consideration for the diminution of liability by the insertion of such clause. It is said that it is bad faith on the part of plaintiffs to complain of this clause now, when they may have received the benefit of reduced rates in the past on account thereof. It is unnecessary to decide what force there might be in the suggestion, if based upon the real facts of the case. The answer to it upon this record is that no such benefit has been enjoyed by the plaintiffs. It is true one of the plaintiffs says he has been the defendant's customer for many years, both before and since the introduction of the fire clause; but it is also true, as already seen, that the price charged has been the same all the time.

? L. R. A.

It is still further suggested that the shipping public at Columbia have acquiesced in this form of bill of lading for some years without complaint. Such is the proof in the case; and this fact would go towards establishing the justness and reasonableness of the exemption claimed, if the Company had all the while been ready to carry goods with or without the fire clause, and had accordingly given its customers a fair opportunity of selecting for themselves which they would take. But acquiescence alone will not justify the limitation. The words of Mr. Justice Bradley in the Lockwood Case are pertinent at this point: "The carrier and his customer do not stand on a footing of equality. The latter is only one individual of a million. He cannot afford to higgie, or stand out and seek redress in the courts. His business will not admit such a course. He prefers rather to accept any bill of lading, or sign any paper the carrier presents; often, indeed, without knowing what the one or the other contains. In most cases he has no alternative but to do this, or abandon his business." From defendant's own showing, our conclusion is that the stipulation relied upon is invalid, and affords no protection whatever.

The second and last assignment of error relates alone to new facts declared in an affidavit produced on the motion for a new trial. As to this, it is sufficient to say that such facts, if considered, could not possibly have changed the result, being alone with respect to matters transpiring subsequently to the shipment and loss of the cotton, and in no wise connected therewith.

Let the judgment be affirmed.

Folkes, J., dissenting:

I regret exceedingly my inability to concur with the majority of the court in the opinion just rendered. To my mind, a most dangerous and perplexing innovation is established, though clothed in the garb of harmless and well settled propositions. The objections to the opinion do not lie on the surface, but lurk in the application of those general principles to the particular facts of the case. Let us analyze the decision, and ascertain what is exactly the point adjudged. It is this: That a railroad company, dealing with a merchant who has been engaged for twenty years as a shipper over its road, issues a bill of lading for a reduced rate, containing the familiar, if not now almost universal, clause of exemption from loss by fire. The shipper has been in the habit of shipping the same character of freight, on the same character of bill of lading, for six or nine years, containing the same exemption. Nearly three years after the goods were lost by fire, without negligence on the part of the Company (so far as any proof tends to show), the shipper institutes a suit before a magistrate, in which it is stated upon the face of the warrant that it is for a "debt due by failure to carry and deliver cotton according to contract." A judgment is rendered for the plaintiff, simply and alone because it was developed in the proof that the agent of the Railroad Company did not have on hand, at the time of shipment, any other form of bill of lading than the one used, and that no demand or request was made for any other form of bill of lading; but that, if the shipper had requested a form of bill of lading with the common-law liability of the carrier unlimited, there would have been delay in the issuance of the same until such a time as it would have taken the agent to telegraph from Columbia, the point of shipment, to Nashville, to the office of the head of the transportation department, when a reply would have been instantly returned authorizing the agent to issue the form of bill of lading requested; in which event the freight charge would have been $1.85 per bale, instead of $1 per bale, the amount charged upon the bill of lading issued with the limited liability. That it is between forty and fifty miles from Columbia to Nashville, and it does not appear that there was any immediate occasion for haste in the shipment of the cotton, nor that the time taken in telegraphing for instruction would have delayed shipment beyond the period that it would necessarily have been delayed in waiting for the next regular freight train.

Such a conclusion and such a holding are not sustained by the authorities as I understand them. On the contrary, it appears to me to be in direct opposition to the principles settled in cases of the highest authority, which have been approved and announced by our own court. It is stated to be placed, by the majority of the court, upon the general principle that all contracts for the limitation of the common-law liability of carriers must be fair and reasonable, — a doctrine sound in its statement, but, as I respectfully submit, misconceived in its application to the case at bar. The reasonableness per se of the rule which allows a stipulation for exemption from loss by fire, not occasioned by the negligence of the carrier, is abundantly established by the overwhelming weight of authority; and in the language of this court in the case of Dillard v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 2 Lea, 293, "it subjects to less restraint the great interests of the commerce, upon which so much of our modern civilization rests," — quoting in this case the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 860 [21 L. ed. 627], where it is said by Mr. Justice Bradley: "A modification of the strict rule of responsibility, exempting the carrier from liability for accidental losses, where it can be safely done, enables the carrying interest to reduce its rates of compensation, thus proportionately relieving the transportation of produce and merchandise from some of the burden with which it is loaded." Again: "The natural presumption would be that the shipper was apprised of the contents of the receipt, and assented to its terms, and that a lower rate of freight, or something equivalent, will be a sufficient consideration for the stipulation;" and, to quote from the language of Judge McFarland in the case of Ohnell v. Adams Exp. Co. 1 Cent. L. J. 7 L. R. A.

188, "this . . . would certainly be so where the terms of the contract were in accordance with the course of business of the company, to which the shipper had assented in previous transactions."

The length to which the opinion of the majority goes makes extremely pertinent the language of this court in the case of Dillard v. Louisville & N. R. Co. supra: "Some courts, while yielding to the current of authority on the main point, have at the same time run counter to it, and involved themselves in useless refinements, by refusing to recognize what Judge McFarland very properly calls the 'natural presumption' arising from the acceptance by the shipper of a bill of lading embodying the stipulations, and by requiring an uncertain quantum of evidence abundant to establish a contract. It were better to adhere to the old law, and refuse to recognize the modern innovations, than to resort to such niceties, which must lead to harassing litigation, and render it difficult, if not impossible, for the profession to advise. It is the dictate of common sense that, when a written instrument is received in the execution of a contract, its contents are known and assented to, and a fortiori if there be nothing to raise a contrary presumption."

Now, I respectfully, but earnestly, submit that the opinion of the majority in this case is doing just exactly what was so earnestly reprehended in the case from which we have quoted, where the language of Judge McFarland in the Ohnell Case was adopted, as deploring the introduction of any modification requiring an "uncertain quantum of evidence, and resorting to such niceties as must lead to harassing litigation, and render it difficult, if not impossible, for the profession to advise." Heretofore, when the shipper presented to his counsel a bill of lading containing the "fire clause," further inquiry was made for the ascertainment as to whether or not there had been any negligence on the part of the Company, and, when told that there was no proof of negligence attainable, the lawyer could with certainty state that there was no liability. Under the new order of things which this opinion establishes, as I understand it, the attorney would proceed to inquire whether the shipper had been tendered or offered any other form of bill of lading, and when told that no such offer had been made he would then be told the Company was liable because he, the shipper, "had not had an opportunity of exercising the option" of accepting a limited or unlimited liability bill of lading; and if the shipper should further inform his attorney that he had made no request for a different form of bill of lading, and that he had for years been shipping on identically the same form of bill of lading, he would be told that that would not prevent a recovery for the value of the freight, for the reason that in the case of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gilbert it had been decided that the railroad company would be liable unless it should, with the burden of proof upon it, affirmatively show that such opportunity had been tendered to the shipper, and declined by him; and that it would make no difference if in twenty years as a shipper no such bill of lading had been asked for, where the company had failed to provide such a form, or authorized its agent to issue one, if the shipper had asked for it. In other words, it is not necessary to show that the shipper wanted another form of bill of lading, and it is not sufficient to show that he knowingly accepted the bill of lading containing the "fire clause," but you must go further, and ascertain whether the agent of the Railroad Company would have issued him another form, containing the common-law liability, if he had asked for it. I very much fear that such a conclusion cannot but lead to unnecessary litigation, and great confusion and uncertainty in the administration of justice. It invites and renders necessary the performance of an idle ceremony, meaningless and deceptive, as a preliminary to the obtaining of the benefit by the common carriers of the country of the privilege that is abundantly and universally admitted to exist. The carrier must have on hand and tender a form of bill of lading which the previous dealings with the shipper has informed the carrier is not wanted. The plaintiff shows by his own testimony that he knew all the facts; that for twenty years he had been a shipper of cotton over this road. The opinion of the majority is not as full as it might be in its statement of the testimony of the plaintiff Parks, in this: that after stating that the Merchants' Exchange, in Nashville, had protested against the introduction of the "fire clause" in the defendant's form of bill of lading, and had given notice of that protest, it fails to show that this was after the loss of these goods by fire, or, at least, that the language of the witness is susceptible of this interpretation. The language of the plaintiff is as follows: "As a member of the Merchants' Exchange I know that the exchange held a meeting and protested against the insertion of this fire clause in this bill of lading and a copy of this protest was served against the Railroad Company after the loss of these goods by fire. I went to Louisville to see Mr. Knott who is the general traffic manager of this railroad. I told him that myself and other merchants of Nashville were anxious that he should make two rates for the shipment of cotton, one of which should exclude the fire clause." There being no punctuation of the above in the transcript, it is difficult to say whether the language, "after the loss of these goods by fire," applied to the time of the protest, or to the time of his going to Louisville to see Mr. Knott. But it is immaterial, for the reason that, if it applies to the time of the protest, it shows affirmatively that he had knowledge of the fire clause, and with that knowledge purposely accepted a bill of lading giving him the benefit of a reduced tariff, without calling for the common-law liability; and, if it applies to the time of his going to Louisville, of course it was incompetent, and should not have been admitted in evidence.

That the "fire clause" is not unfavorably considered, is shown by the case of York Mfg. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co., 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 107 [18 L. ed. 170]. In that case the plaintiff's positions were: first, that Trout & Co., agents at Memphis, who shipped the cotton and received the bill of lading, had no authority to consent to such a condition; second, that it did not appear that any consideration existed for such limited liability in the reduced rate of fare or otherwise. Let us see how this tribunal answered these questions. It said: "The first of these positions is answered by the fact that it nowhere appears that the agents disclosed their agency when contracting for the transportation of the cotton. So far as the defendant could see, they were themselves the owners. The second position is answered by the fact that there is no evidence that a consideration was not given for the stipulation. The company, probably, had rates of charges proportioned to the risks they assume from the nature of the goods carried, and the exception of losses by fire must necessarily have affected the compensation demanded. Be this as it may, the consideration expressed was sufficient to support the entire contract made."

7 L. R. A.

This case has, in terms, been approved by this court in Owrell v. Adams Exp. Co., supra. If the spirit of this decision is followed, there is no trouble in reaching a fair and reasonable result in the case at bar. It would say that Embury did not disclose his principals. He confessedly knew of the fact that the Company had two rates,—one with, and one without, the "fire clause,"—for he had, in the language of the witness, "frequently talked with Embury, the plaintiff's agent, about the two rates before this shipment," and his knowledge and acceptance was the knowledge and acceptance of the plaintiff. Second, it would say that the proof shows that if dissatisfaction had been expressed with the $1 rate, accompanied with the limited liability, the shipper could have obtained the $1.85 rate, if he had waited for a few moments for a telegram from the agent at Nashville, and that, in the absence of proof that the necessity for the shipment of the cotton was so pressing that a delay would have been injurious, such delay would not be wrong or negligence on the part of the carrier, especially where it does not appear that there would have been any delay in the shipment; for the Company was under no obligation to send this cotton by a special lightning express, but had the right to hold it until the next regular freight train coming to Nashville. It would further say that a limitation in favor of the Company, and with a reduced rate, will not deprive the Company of its benefit, when the shipper has had the advantage of such reduced rate, simply because it appears, in a suit brought nearly three years afterwards, that the Company did not have on hand a form of common-law bill of lading. Moreover, it would have been held that, having gotten the benefit of the lower rate for the six or nine years, it was too late now to say that he was not bound because he was not offered any other rate.

The shipper is charged with knowledge of the law that authorized him to demand a common-law liability of the carrier, and his acceptance in silence of the bill of lading with the "fire clause" is a waiver of such demand of right, in the absence of fraud, where it appears that there was a difference in the freight charges for a limited and for an unlimited liability. Not having spoken when it was his duty to have done so, the law now enjoins silence, when he has for years pocketed the fruits of his silence heretofore. The limitation of the carrier's liability as an insurer against fire is not to be confused with limitations that are not favored, and with efforts to avoid the consequences of the negligence of the carrier or his agents. When, therefore, we have to deal with a limitation against loss by fire, without fault or negligence on the part of the carrier, there is no reason why the same general principles applicable to knowledge and estoppel between individuals other than carriers should not apply. For instance, the presumption of acquiescence is made where the shipper receives a bill of lading containing this limitation without complaint; and that he is estopped to say that he was ignorant of the contents of the bill of lading, as we have already seen, is fully established in this State in East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Brumley, 5 Lea, 401, and Dillard v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 2 Lea, 288. But suppose our predecessors had looked at the cases cited, and decided them in the spirit and on the logic of the case at bar, such presumption and estoppel would have been refused recognition. In the language of the opinion of the majority here, the inquiry there would have been, Is the limitation "fair and reasonable?" to be determined upon the facts of each case as it arises, "with the burden of proof on the carrier to show it fair and reasonable in each case." And it would have been held unfair and unreasonable to bind the shipper to a loss that, in his ignorance of the terms of the bill of lading, he had never assented to.

But we have only to turn to approved textbooks to see that this fire limitation is favored and that knowledge does estop in a contract with a common carrier, as with other people. Mr. Hutchinson, in his excellent work on Carriers, says, speaking of knowledge: "The theory upon which they all stand is that if a party, knowing his published terms, employs the carrier without objection, a contract according to those terms is implied between the employed and employer." Again, this author says: "Every man of ordinary intelligence knows that no individual or company engaged in the business of carrying to distant places now undertakes to carry his goods subject to the old common law liability of the carrier. He knows, moreover, that bills of lading are constantly given, not only as the evidence of the receipt of the goods, but as an express and direct notice that they will be carried on certain terms. Knowing this he cannot be willfully blind, and plead ignorance, when it was his duty to know; and knowing in such cases is assenting. If it was his intention to hold the carrier to his common-law liability, he should have said so, and have either declined to employ him, or sued him for his refusal, after tendering a reasonable sum for his services or risk." And he says this is in accordance with the English and American decisions, and adds: "Nor is there anything unreasonable in this." Hutch. Carr. §§ 238-240.

Now, if this be true of a shipper making his first shipment, how much more emphatic is it by way of estoppel against a shipper of twenty years with the same company, where the last six or nine years' business was upon the identical bill of lading sued on here. Does not his previous acquiescence and acceptance of this particular bill of lading, without complaint or demand, amount to a waiver of the offer or tender of another form? It would seem so. 7 L. R.A.

And if the offer or tender be waived, then it must be that the Company need not, as to such shipper, certainly, have had on hand, or been prepared to issue instantly, a common-law bill of lading, that the shipper's long course of dealing led the carrier to believe would not be called for. Again, at section 241 of Hutchinson on Carriers, it is said: "Accordingly, when the owner of the goods accepts a [bill of lading or receipt] he is conclusively presumed, in the absence of fraud and imposition, to have assented to all the terms and conditions."

We have at the present term held, what had been heretofore approved by this court, that an insurance company would be conclusively adjudged to have waived a written stipulation, in its policy, concerning the void character of insurance upon property on leased ground, where that fact is not written on the policy, because it would be a fraud upon the insurer to allow the insurance company to hold the premium on a policy known by it to have been void at the time of its issuance. Home Ins. Co. v. Stone River Nat. Bank (Tenn.) 12 S. W. Rep. 915.

Now, we are unable to see why the same principle would not preclude a party, who has for years accepted the benefit of a reduced rate of freight in consideration of a limited liability of the carrier, from defeating that stipulation by saying, after the loss, that "you did not give me an opportunity to elect which form of bill of lading I would take." The shipper, having gotten the benefit of the reduced rate, should not be heard to say the contract was void, and so known to him at the time. If the one proposition can be accepted as sound, I see no occasion for refusing to apply the same principle to this case. They both relate to insurance against fire only. It will not do to say that the public character and public duties of the carrier require that a different rule should be applied to it than would be applied in the case of the insurance company; for in the case at bar it concerns alone the benefit or advantage that the particular shipper has already derived by his silence, and gives the Company the benefit of a clause which has been repeatedly said to be reasonable.

Nor does it suffice to say that this court has held in Marr v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 85 Tenn. (1 Pickle) 529, that it is not necessary for a party dealing with one of these public corporations to speak. In the Marr Case there were four alternatives presented, all of which were held to be "unreasonable and oppressive," and the effort was to escape liability for a loss occasioned by the negligence of the telegraph company, while the exemption of the carrier from the liability of an insurer, for a sufficient consideration, is not unreasonable or unfavored; on the contrary, as we have seen and have said, adopting the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in York Mfg. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 112 [18 L. ed. 171], there is no "good reason on principle why parties should not be permitted to contract for a limited responsibility. The transaction concerns them only. It involves simply rights of property, and the public can have no interest in requiring the responsibility of insurance to accompany the service of transportation in face of a special agreement for its relinquishment." But the opinion of the majority attempts to make out a case, and seems to take it for granted that it has made out a case, where as a matter of fact there was no consideration for such limited liability, because, forsooth, it is said the rate of $1 on the bill of lading with the "fire clause" was the same as the rate six or nine years before on the bill of lading without such "fire clause." The fact that the rate today on the bill of lading with the fire limitation is the same as it was years ago without such limitation is no proof that the rate of to-day is not fixed in consequence of such limited liability, even in the absence of all other proof on the subject. Before any probative effect can be given this fact or circumstance, to overcome the presumption of a consideration, you have to negative the idea and destroy the right of the carrier to change its tariff of charges from time to time, to meet competition, and other exigencies. I say, in the absence of proof (except that relied on by the majority as showing no consideration, to wit, $1 before and $1 after the adoption of the "fire clause") it does not follow that at the time of the issuance of the particular bill of lading sued on here there was not another and a higher rate for the full common-law liability. The consideration need not be great, because, in the language of the books, some consideration, however slight, is sufficient, and the consideration will be presumed from the manifest and absolutely necessary difference of responsibility.

But we are not left to fall back on these well-settled principles, nor to indulge in presumption; for the proof is clear and uncontradicted that at the time of the issuance of this bill of lading the rate for cotton, with the common-law liability, was $1.85. This positive and uncontroverted proof surely cannot be overcome by a presumption predicated upon the mere fact that six or nine years before this time the Company carried the common-law liability at $1, the same price that it now charges for the limited liability; nor can this proof be affected, one way or the other, by the fact that the Company had no printed bill of lading on hand, and had not instructed its agent in relation thereto. While, in the opinion of the majority, this fact may make the Company liable, as not giving the shipper opportunity to get something he did not ask for, and did not want, it cannot disprove the uncontradicted fact that there were two rates, one of which could be obtained instantly at $1 with the limitation, and the other at $1.85 without any limitation, obtainable by waiting until the agent could telegraph to the general freight department at Nashville. It must be noticed that there was no occasion to telegraph to Nashville to ascertain what the common-law liability rate was. This was known to the agent, and is positively testified to by him, and that it was $1.85 per bale, and this was also known to the plaintiffs through their agent, Mr. Embry. The telegram was therefore necessary, not to ascertain the rate, but merely to get instructions as to the issuing of such a form. It does not seem that there was any more necessity for the Company to keep on hand a form of bill of lading that was never called for than there would be for a merchant to keep on hand goods for which there is no demand. Indeed it may be safe to say that the Company would have a right to make a rule that where it was to be held liable as an insurer against loss by fire, for such combustible material as cotton, notice should be given the home office by the local agent, so that special provision might be made to protect itself by obtaining reinsurance, provided that it did not cause such delay as would incommode or injure the shipper. If the shipper wanted insurance, there were two avenues open to him to obtain it—one by paying the Company the increased rate of freight, the other, by insuring in a regular insurance company; and it is a matter of common information that insurance can be obtained from an insurance company, generally, for a smaller amount than is usually charged by the carriers for the insurance liability. Certainly it seems to me, with due deference to my learned associates that every principle of justice and fairness revolts at the idea of allowing the shipper to have insurance where he has knowingly refused to apply and pay for it, either to the transportation company or to the insurance company. To hold the transportation company now liable as an insurer is to do so upon ex post facto inquiry, aliunde the contract, and in violation of what I regard as elementary principles of law and morals.

If the opinion of the majority concerned alone the disposition of the case in hand, I would have been content with the mere announcement of my non-concurrence. But where the spirit and tendency of the decision appear to me hurtful, I deem it my duty to point out, even at the expense of weariness to myself and the bar, the dangers to which it may lead. The spirit and tendency to which I refer are to be found in the strictness with which the common law liability of the carrier is sought to be enforced, and the severe conditions imposed as necessary to obtaining the benefit of a contract for limited liability. Indeed, the difference between myself and the majority may be said to be that, in my opinion, a contract for exemption from loss by fire, not resulting from the negligence of the carrier, should be construed liberally and fairly, in accordance with the intention of the parties, in the absence of fraud or imposition, while the majority opinion applies a degree of strictness in considering such contract which, in many cases in practice, would amount to prohibition. It seems to me that every exemption or condition is, in the opinion of the majority, placed upon the same footing, and construed with equal strictness, without regard to the policy which should govern in the treatment of the sundry exemptions. This is happily illustrated by the quotation with which the majority opinion closes, as follows: "The carrier and his customer do not stand on a footing of equality. The latter is only one individual of a million. He cannot afford to higgie or stand out, and seek redress in the courts. His business will not admit of such a course. He prefers, rather, to accept any bill of lading, or sign any paper the carrier presents, often, indeed, without knowing what the one or the other contains. In most cases he has no alternative but to do this, or abandon his business." Such language may be well enough in the case in which it was used, when applied, as was done there, to a case where the carrier was seeking to obtain the benefit of a contract exempting it from a claim for damages for a personal injury to a passenger, occasioned by the carrier's own negligence; but the same language, when applied to a contract exemption for loss by fire, without negligence, becomes misleading, and tends, though unintentionally, to inflame the mind of the trier, whether judge or jury. The quotation I respectfully suggest is as inapplicable to the facts of the case at bar as it is to the law. To my mind the case in hand, instead of being viewed in the light of the quotation above, should have been decided in the light of the language of the same judge, in the same case, where, speaking of such exemption as is the subject of decision in the case at bar, he says: "A modification of the strict rules of responsibility, exempting the carrier from liability for accidental losses, where it can be safely done, enables the carrying interest to reduce its rate of compensation, thus proportionally relieving the transportation of produce and merchandise from some of the burdens with which it is loaded;" which, as we have seen, has been approved by our own court. For the reasons stated, I am constrained to dissent from the views of the majority, both as to the conclusion reached, and the reasoning upon which such conclusion rests. This I do with great respect for my esteemed associates, whose views are the result of a careful consideration of the case. From my point of view, the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed, and judgment rendered here for the defendant.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Jeremiah O'LEARY

v.

BOARD OF FIRE & WATER COMMISSIONERS of the City of Marquette, App't.

(....Mich.....)

A municipal agency incorporated for the protection of the city from fire and for supplying water, and without means of raising money by taxation, is not liable to an action for injuries resulting from negligence of its servants.

(January 24, 1890.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Marquette County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from the negligence of defendant's servants. Reversed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Mr. F. O. Clark, for defendant, appellant:

A public corporation is not liable to an action by individuals, unless the right of action be given by statute.

White v. Charleston, 2 Hill, L. 571; Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84; McCutcheon v. Homer, 48 Mich. 486; Kincaid v. Hardin Co. 58 Iowa, 430; Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284; Dodd v. Olmstead Co. 30 Minn. 96; Bigelow v. Randolph, 14 Gray, 541; Lill v. Boston, 123

Mass. 353; Riddle v. Proprs. Locks and Canals on Merrimac River, 7 Mass. 186; Leoni Tup. v. Taylor, 20 Mich. 143; Cooley, Const. Lim. 241-247; Ang. & A. Corp. 719-762; Hamilton Co. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109.

A township is not liable for the misfeasance or nonfeasance of one of its officers, but the remedy is against the delinquent officer himself.

Fish v. Dodge, 38 Barb. 163; Robinson v. Chamberlain, 84 N. Y. 389.

In order to create a right of action, against a quasi municipal corporation, as created by statute, there must be some statutory provisions for such liability or there is no right of action.

Hedges v. Madison Co. 6 Ill. 567; Ang. & A. Corp. §§ 24, 629; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 118, 139; Morey v. Newfane, 8 Barb. 652; St. Johns v. McFarlan, 38 Mich. 72; Dargan v. Mobile, 31 Ala. 469; Forsyth v. Atlanta, 45 Ga. 152; Buttrick v. Lovell, 1 Allen, 172; Walcott v. Thompson, Id. 101; Hafford v. New Bedford, 16 Gray, 297; Fisher v. Boston, 101 Mass. 87; Grube v. St. Paul, 34 Minn. 402; Voorath v. Hoboken, 6 Cent. Rep. 338, 49 N. J. L. 285; Hines v. Charlotte (Mich.) 1 L. R. A. 844.

Messrs. Mapes & Kinkade for plaintiff, appellee.

Campbell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff was injured by falling into a ditch

NOTE.—Public agencies not liable for negligence of their servants.

A personal injury caused by the negligence of an agent or servant of a public charitable corporation does not give a right of action for damages against a corporation. Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 1 L. R. A. 417, and note, 120 Pa. 624.

So where the corporation was a public charitable institution (McDonald v. Mass. General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432); or was a mere agent to perform a duty for the benefit of the public under the authority of law. Benton v. Boston City Hospital, 140 Mass. 13.

But a corporation the membership in which is 7 L. R. A.

limited to officers and agents of fire insurance companies, being a private, and not a public, corporation, nor a public charity, is liable for the negligent act of its servants notwithstanding the fact that the saving of life and property is referred to in its charter in general terms. See Newcomb v. Boston Prot. Dept. (Mass.) 6 L. R. A. 778.

So a cemetery corporation is not a public charity and is liable to the owner of a grave for the negligent burial of a stranger therein. Donnelly v. Boston Catholic Cem. Asso. 5 New Eng. Rep. 741, 146 Mass. 163; Old South Society v. Crocker, 119 Mass. 23; Evergreen Cemetery Asso. v. Beecher, 3 New Eng. Rep. 308, 53 Conn. 551; Re Deansville Cemetery Asso. 66 N. Y. 599.

jug by the servants of defendant for laying water-pipes. He recovered damages to an extent not held by the trial judge to be beyond the merits of the case; and, if defendant is liable at all, there seems to be nothing in the record to show error in holding the judgment regular and proper in law, although, as not uncommon in such cases, the jury gave the plaintiff the benefit of all the disputed facts. But it is claimed that under the Statutes regulating its powers, and those of the City of Marquette, the defendant cannot be held legally responsible for the negligence of its servants in an action in tort for damages. That the individual wrong-doer, if there was one, by whose misconduct plaintiff was hurt, is responsible, is not disputed. Whether the corporation in charge of the public ways is liable is not before us. The sole question is whether this corporation, which is created to subserve certain important municipal purposes, has been made responsible by law for such accidents, when, if not incorporated, it is not shown that it would be, is the only matter for our consideration; and the differences existing under different charters are such as to leave the matter to be decided by its own facts. The defendant was incorporated by "An Act to Create a Board of Water Commissioners in the Village of Marquette, and to Define its Powers and Duties," approved March 2, 1869. The subsequent incorporation of the city merely made the necessary changes to meet the change in government. Although not in terms declared to be a corporation, the powers given them are in such language as to make them such. They are liable, as well as competent, to be impleaded, to make contracts, and hold property, to have a seal and make by-laws, and generally "to do all legal acts which may be necessary and proper to carry out the effect, intent and object of this Act." As all of their powers are confined legally to the scope of the Statute, it is necessary to consider them. The members derive their appointment from the corporate body of the city, and not from the people. By section 6 they are required "to examine and consider all matters relative to supplying said [City] of Marquette with a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome water for domestic use, also to provide suitable and efficient means for the extinguishment of fires." This is the general and sole purpose of all their incidental powers. By subsequent sections they are empowered, under approval of the electors by vote on that question, to issue bonds to a limited extent, and, if unable to pay, to renew them. They are authorized to report to the city council, which is empowered, but not expressly required, to raise by tax any sums beyond the revenue of the Board necessary to pay principal or interest on the bonds, or "any deficiency in operating expenses." They are authorized, "after the necessary means have been procured, as herein provided," to purchase necessary lands and materials, and construct reservoirs, buildings, machinery, and fixtures to supply water, and to provide means for fire protection, and are given, for the purposes of the "fire department," the powers which were before possessed by the village. They are empowered to lay pipes for water, and to build hydrants, and to employ such persons as they deem necessary to perform their duties. They have power to levy water rates on consumers on an equitable basis. They can procure lands by condemnation, where needed, and, on payment of the damages into the city treasury, may get the title. All materials contracted for or procured by them are exempt from execution.

It may be important, in this connection, to consider the legal position of this Board in its functions. While it is a local corporation, created to serve municipal purposes, it is in no sense a municipal corporation, within the legal meaning of that term. It has been settled in this State that there can be no municipal corporation that is not the direct representative of the people of its locality. Atty. Gen. v. Detroit, 58 Mich. 218; Allor v. Wayne Co. Auditors, 43 Mich. 76; People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44; Metropolitan Police Board v. Wayne Co. Auditors, 68 Mich. 576, 18 West. Rep. 487; People v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 238; People v. Detroit, 29 Mich. 108; Buller v. Detroit, 48 Mich. 552.

In several of these as in other cases the doctrine has been recognized that the establishment of corporations to act as municipal boards or agencies did not give them any governmental municipal authority; and it is difficult to see how the incorporation or non-incorporation of the same board can change its character in the performance of public duties. The furnishing of water and the establishment of a fire department are among the almost universal functions of cities; and the incorporation of water and fire boards appointed by the city is only a convenient way of removing that business from the constant interference of the ordinary city authorities, with such safeguards as are deemed best for that purpose. It was held in Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84, that cities and municipalities are not usually responsible in damages for the neglect of persons in public office, unless made so by statute; and it has been held in numerous cases since that the statute liability cannot be enlarged. Detroit v. Putnam, 45 Mich. 268; McKellar v. Detroit, 57 Mich. 158; McArthur v. Saginaw, 58 Mich. 357; Williams v. Grand Rapids, 59 Mich. 51; Keyes v. Morcellus, 50 Mich. 439.

On the other hand, it was held in Detroit v. Corey, 9 Mich. 165, that where a city is engaged in making a work which is its private property as a municipality, and not a mere public easement, and done under city employment or contract, it is responsible for injuries caused by neglect in its process of construction, as it is for any such action as directly injures private property. Pennoyer v. Saginaw, 8 Mich. 534; Ashley v. Port Huron, 85 Mich. 296; Defer v. Detroit, 67 Mich. 846, 11 West. Rep. 530.

But it is not usually liable in other cases. If this defendant was the representative directly of the people of Marquette to govern the city, with power to tax the people to carry out its plans, and held the property in its charge by proprietorship for its own purposes, it would seem to come within the Corey Case. But a city represents the people for all the strict purposes of local government, and has power to raise its own revenue. The Legislature, in requiring towns, cities and villages, to answer in damages for neglect to keep roads in repair, at the same time found it necessary to remove one of the recognized difficulties arising from lack of funds, by enabling them to provide by taxation for all such purposes. The purposes for which the present municipal agency was created are entirely for the protection of the city from fire, and for promoting its health, by a supply of good water. The defendant is only enabled to obtain and hold such property as will be instrumental to that end. Every seizure of such property, if allowed, would be a diminution of the power of defendant to perform its public duties in regard to public health and safety. It not only has no taxing power, but the city has no power to give it any taxes, except such as will enable it to pay its bonds, and "meet any deficiency in operating expenses." Its property is not subject to execution. It cannot be true that such an agency can be officially liable to suits for liabilities, where it has no legal means of raising funds for payment. As already suggested, unincorporated boards are not so liable; and there is no obvious reason why the mere fact of incorporation, with no change of powers, can change their liabilities.

We cannot consider, on this record, any other question but the liability of this Board. We know of no other instance in which a public board can be subjected to suit without means of raising money from the taxpayers. It is for the Legislature to determine how far, if at all, a body whose negligence, if it is so called, is imputed, and in no sense actual, shall be made subject to suit for the misconduct of its employés. There are many cases where such liability does not exist, except against the immediate individual wrong-doer. The person injured is not harmed any more where there are several persons liable than where there is only one. Imputed negligence is purely a question of public policy, and subject to legislative regulation. No one can be bound by this record, except the immediate parties to it, and it would be improper to go beyond it.

The judgment should be reversed, with costs, and without a new trial.

Champlin, Ch. J., and Morse and Long, JJ., concurred; Grant, J., did not sit.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

William MYHAN and Wife, Appts.,

LOUISIANA ELECTRIC LIGHT & POWER CO.

(.....La. Ann.....)

- *1. A master who carries on an imminently dangerous undertaking, such as the generation and distribution of electricity, is bound to know the character and extent of the danger, and to notify the same to the servant specially and unequivocally, so as to be clearly understood by him.
2. Absence of actual knowledge is no exculpation. Constructive or obligatory knowledge supplies it. Such knowledge is presumed, juris and de jure, to exist.
3. The servant is not required to know

*Head notes by BERMUDEZ, Ch. J.

latent, but only patent, defects. Actual knowledge must be established by the master, on whom rests the burden of proof.

4. The servant has a right to assume superior knowledge in his employer, to rely on his prudence and judgment, and to believe that he will not unnecessarily jeopard his person and life by avoidable risk.

5. Verdict quashed, judgment reversed, and judgment rendered for plaintiffs for $2,000.

(December 2, 1890.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans in favor of defendant in an action to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death, and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

NOTE.—Master not to expose servant to extraordinary risks.

It is the duty of the master, so far as he can, by the use of extraordinary care, to avoid exposing his servants to extraordinary risks, but he is not bound to guarantee them against such risks. Southwest Virginia Imp. Co. v. Andrew, 13 Va. L. J. 64, 17 Wash. L. Rep. 599; Tissue v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 112 Pa. 91, 2 Cent. Rep. 596.

He must use reasonable diligence in seeing that the place where the service is to be performed is safe for that purpose, and to guard against the risk of accident to his employés. Bennett v. Syndicate Ins. Co. 30 Minn. 254; Foster v. Pusey (Del.) 13 Cent. Rep. 47; Hungerford v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 43 N. W. Rep. 324.

Dangerous occupations demand correspondingly greater care on the part of persons engaged in them; but if one so engaged be injured by the neglect of the master, not freed from liability therefor by some contractual relation, such master cannot avoid such responsibility because such injured person was knowingly engaged in a dangerous employment. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Conroy, 63 Miss. 562.

The rule that where the dangers of employment are clearly known and open to observation as to both master and servant the former is not liable does not apply where a servant known to be inexperienced is set to work, without being cautioned, with machinery known to the master to be unusually dangerous. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Frawley, 7 West. Rep. 44, 110 Ind. 18.

It is the duty of the master who sets the servant to work in a place of danger, to give him such notice and instruction as is reasonably required by reason of the youth or inexperience of the servant. This duty is not confined to cases where the servant is a "man of manifest imbecility." Atkins v. Merrick Thread Co. 3 New Eng. Rep. 39, 142 Mass. 431.

It is the duty of the employer to inform the employé of increased danger in the change of machinery, unless the changes and increased danger are so apparent that he ought to take notice. Hawkins v. Johnson, 2 West. Rep. 290, 105 Ind. 29; Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Gaffney, 4 L. R. A. 860, 119 Ind. 455.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Mr. George L. Bright, for appellants:

Where the injury is caused partly by the negligence of a fellow servant, and partly by the failure of the company to provide proper and suitable apparatus, the negligence of the co-servant will not exonerate the company from the consequences of its own default.

Towns v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 37 La. Ann. 632; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cummings, 106 U. S. 700 (27 L. ed. 266); Ellis v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 95 N. Y. 546. See also Sullivan v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 39 La. Ann. 800; Moses v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. Id. 650; Hanson v. Mansfield R. & Transp. Co. 38 La. Ann. 112; Ketchum v. Texas & P. R. Co. Id. 778; Faren v. Sellers, 39 La. Ann. 1020.

The caution required is according to the maturity and capacity of the child, a matter to be determined in each case by the circumstances of that case.

Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 401 (21 L. ed. 114); Sioux City & Pac. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657 (21 L. ed. 745).

If the defendant is guilty of gross negligence, he cannot set up a trifling negligence or inadvertence of the plaintiff as a defense.

Field, Damages, § 168, pp. 159, 163; Wharton, Neg. §§ 300, 301.

An employé has a right to rely upon the care and superior knowledge and judgment of his employer.

Wood, Mast. and S. 681, 788, 763; 2 Wharton, Neg. p. 975, § 215; Ellis v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 95 N. Y. 546; Faren v. Sellers, 39 La. Ann. 1020; 2 Thompson, Neg. p. 975.

As to the proper amount of damages, see:

Choppin v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 17 La. Ann. 19; Summers v. Crescent City R. Co. 84 La. Ann. 130; Vredenburg v. Behan, 83 La. Ann. 627; Ketchum v. Texas & P. R. Co. 38 La. Ann. 777; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Thompson, 64 Miss. 581; Wardle v. New Orleans R. Co. 35 La. Ann. 202; Peniston v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. 34 La. Ann. 778; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 401 (21 L. ed. 114); Houston v. Vicksburg, S. & Pac. R. Co. 39 La. Ann. 799; Sioux City & Pac. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657 (21 L. ed. 745).

It is negligence in a mining company to fail to inform its employé of any danger from an unexploded blast in the vicinity of which such employé is working, of which the company or its foreman knows, or by the use of reasonable diligence ought to know. Kelley v. Cable Co. 7 Mont. 70.

In such case the employé has a right to presume that his employer has done his duty in reference to the ascertainment of any danger from such blast. Ibid.

An employé who contracts for the performance of hazardous duties assumes such risks as are incident to their discharge from causes open and obvious, the dangerous character of which he has opportunity to ascertain. Southwest Virginia Imp. Co. v. Andrew, 13 Va. L. J. 684, 17 Wash. L. Rep. 599.

He does not assume any risk incident to the use of defective appliances or machinery, of which he is ignorant. Carpenter v. Mexican Nat. R. Co. 39 Fed. Rep. 315.

The master is bound to see that the servant has 7 L. R. A.

Messrs. Farrar, Jonas & Kruttschnitt for appellee.

Bermudez, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action in damages, brought by a father and mother, under the provisions of article 2815 (2294), Rev. Civil Code, as amended in 1884 p. 94, No. 71. They aver, substantially, that their minor son, Edward, aged about eighteen years, while in the employ of the defendant Company, was, on the 8th of August, 1888, killed by the gross negligence and fault of the latter. The amount claimed is $25,000. The defense is a general denial, and contributory negligence. The case was tried by a jury, who rendered a verdict in favor of defendant Company. From the judgment thereon against them the plaintiffs appeal.

The charge made against the defendant is that the accident occurred by its gross negligence and fault, which consisted in using wires which were not perfectly insulated, which formed a network on the floor, whereas they should have gone direct from the dynamo to the ceiling, and should have been placed beyond the reach of the employés. In exoneration, the Company charges, counter, that the young man, instead of approaching the dynamo No. 35 in the reasonable and proper manner required by the circumstances, did so, deliberately, from the front, and deliberately straddled the two current-bearing wires leading from it, one to the ceiling and one to dynamo 50, which was coupled with dynamos 35 and 36, into a series of three; that, by the movement thus occasioned, one of the wires touched the interior of the boy's thigh, and the other one the exterior of his buttock, thus making a circuit through his body, the shock of which threw him on the dynamo, and thence on the floor, where he lay upon these wires, breaking the circuit in his fall, and receiving the full force of it, which produced instant death.

The stubborn facts of the case are that Edward Myhan, a young man of about eighteen years, was in the employ of the Company, on the 8th of August, 1888, as night-oller, in the dynamo-room of their plant, in this city; that during the night of that day, while in the discharge of his duties as oiler, pressing tallow down in the box of a dynamo, he came in con-knowledge of that fact. McDonald v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (Minn.) 43 N. W. Rep. 330.

Such employé is entitled to recover of the company, which knew of or could have discovered their condition by the exercise of reasonable diligence. Carpenter v. Mexican Nat. R. Co. supra.

A master having charge of the work himself is guilty of negligence if defective appliances are furnished, or the structure upon which the servant is required to work is built in an unsafe manner. Kysari v. Marsh, 74 Wis. 562.

The servant is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence because he works in the vicinity of dangerous machinery, knowing its condition, the measure of the duty of the two in that regard not being the same. Wuotila v. Duluth Lumber Co. 37 Minn. 153.

So it is negligence on the part of a railroad company to allow its employé to pass over a defective bridge, known to the corporation and not known to the servant. Nason v. West, 2 New Eng. Rep. 74, 73 Me. 263.

tact with one or more wires, on or near the floor; and that he was instantly killed. There were only two persons present when the accident occurred,—the electrician in charge of the dynamo-room, and a fellow dynamo oiler.

The former (Crowley) says that from January, 1886, to August 14, 1888, he was employed by the defendant corporation as chief dynamo-man in their large plant in New Orleans. There were about 60 dynamos in the establishment, arranged on the floor in series of three, each three connected to the plug-board. He knew Edward Myhan, and had known him for nineteen months previous to his death, which occurred on August 8, 1888, at about 11 o'clock in the night, in the arc-light dynamo department of the defendant corporation. He was in the act of lubricating the dynamo box with tallow. Owing to the arrangement of the wires on the floor, he had to stand astride the wires in order to get at the box. While in this position, one of his legs came in contact with a wire, and he received the full force of the electric current. At that time the witness was about twenty feet away. His attention was attracted by a dull thud and a flash. On turning around, he saw Myhan on the floor. He had broken the circuit in his fall. The witness pulled one of the wires from under his body; raised him in his arms; sent for the superintendent, who at once came down. Myhan gave one or two gasps thereafter, and then expired.

The witness further states: Edward Myhan was killed by the fault of the Company defendant. The fault was in the arrangement of the dynamo wires. Part of the dynamos on the opposite side were properly arranged. Each dynamo was connected with the plug-board by two wires running from the dynamo to the ceiling direct. On the other side, where Myhan was killed, three dynamos were connected to the plug-board by two wires; part of these wires running along the floor of the building, and part of them along the ceiling. A proper arrangement would have been to connect each dynamo by two wires direct to the plug-board, and all the wires passing direct from the dynamos, to and along the ceiling, to the plug-board. The arrangement of the wires on the floor was the cause of the death of Edward Myhan; for, had they been connected from the dynamo to the ceiling, there would have been no danger in standing where Edward Myhan received the shock which caused his death. The Company, in the judgment of the witness, was negligent and careless in the arrangement of part of its wires on the floor. He says that he frequently told the manager of the Company, and also the superintendent, who were in charge of the plant, at different times during his services for the Company, that there was great danger in leaving the wires on the floor and unprotected. No notice, says he, was ever taken of the warning, except they would remark they would attend to it by and by, or when they got a new superintendent, or offered some excuse of the kind, until the day after Edward Myhan was killed, when the superintendent and the general manager told him to get carpenters and have nail poles put on the dynamo frames, to attach the knobs, known as "insu-lators," to the poles, and raise the wires from the floor, and run them on the insulators, which he did.

7 L. R. A.

Another witness (Sittig) a fellow servant of Myhan, who was also present at the sad occurrence, was heard. He was in the employ of the Company when he testified, and had been previously, and was in such employ when Myhan was killed. Myhan walked to the machine, straddled the wire, and put his hand on the cup; and, as he did so, one wire rested a little above his knee, on the left leg, and the other touched him on the right leg, on the inside, and he put both hands on the cup, and he fell with his back on the machine. Crowley ran him (witness) away, and told him he would get killed. He was walking to Myhan when he was killed. Saw him drop. He had his hand on the tallow cup, shoving down the tallow. He fell on the dynamo with his back. There were two wires attached to the dynamo, leading to another dynamo, near the end. There were three dynamos connected by wires, two leading to each dynamo. The wires were on the floor. Nearly all the dynamos were in this way,—three to the circuit. Wires were on the floor, where the men had to walk. The morning after the killing the witness went home, and when he returned, in the afternoon (6 P. M.), he found that some of the wires had been raised, with poles, overhead.

Two other witnesses (Burns and Bogel) testify in corroboration, except as to the circumstances of the accident. They establish the notices to the manager and superintendent; the dangerous character of the wires; the neglect, after notice, to remove them. The change of the wires after the accident is shown by another witness, Wilson.

An electrician (Derbin) employed in defendant's plant across the river says that the wires there are not laid on the floor, but run to the ceiling. Another electrician (Krapp), of the Edison Company, who had charge of the Edison station in the day-time, as dynamo-man, says that he is an electrician; has been in the business some four or five years. He has visited the dynamo-room in question. Some wires were placed overhead, and others, coming down, connecting one machine, partly laid on the floor and partly brought up again and brought back. There is no doubt the safer way is to lay the wires from the ceiling, as is usual. He would not run them on the floor, but on the ceiling. It is practicable to insulate wires. By passing rubber tubes over them, contact with them will not create a current. Commercial insulated wire will not do. He would not straddle wires; not in that situation.

There is other testimony in the record, to show the age, habits, qualities of Edward Myhan; his earnings; his devotion to his parents; their circumstances, and need of his assistance; the condition of his body after the accident; and also testimony to show that the notices testified to were not given.

We have been at some pains to state the facts as sworn to by the witnesses, although this was not strictly necessary. From the proof in the record, it more clearly appears that the young man was in the discharge of his functions as an employé of the Company when he came in contact with a charged wire, in consequence of which he was instantly killed. It is therefore undeniable that the wire or wires which he touched, or which touched him, were dangerous. Had they not been dangerous, they would not have killed him. He might have received a shock only, even becoming unconscious; but he would not have died from contact therewith. The Company's representatives had been warned several times of the dangerous character and condition of the wires on the floor,—of the propriety, at least, if not the necessity, of running them up to the ceiling; but the warnings remained unheeded. The representatives of the Company, to whom it is said that the warnings were given, denied that they ever were; but this denial is of a weak character. The affirmative testimony, corroborated as it is, outweighs the negative, and justifies the inference that the notices given were unheeded, because they were forgotten. At any rate, it was the duty of the defendant Company to have known of the dangerous character and condition of the wires. The knowledge they ought to have had, the law presumes, juris et de jure, they had. Even had the Company's representatives sworn that they did not know of the same, such ignorance on their part would not have exculpated them. A superior is presumed to know, and in law knows, that which it is his duty to know, namely, whatever may endanger the person and life of his employé in the discharge of his duties.

In such cases the superior is bound specially to warn the employé of the nature of the danger, and will not be excused, in case of injury, unless he does prove that the employé well knew of the danger, and, notwithstanding, exposed himself willingly and deliberately to it. In this case there is no evidence showing that the Company, or any of its officers, ever notified Myhan of the dangerous character of the wires in question, about which he had to move, or that he knew of the same. The burden of positive proof was on the defendant. The great presumption, not to say the certain proof, is that he was totally unaware of the same; for it cannot for one instant be reasonably supposed that, had he known that by coming in contact with the wires they would have stricken him down dead, he would have done so, thereby committing suicide. It is manifest that, had the wires been laid as is usually done, or even been properly insulated, coming in contact with them could not have, as it did, produced death.

The testimony of the electrician in charge of the dynamo-room at the time the accident took place, and who was no longer in the employ of the Company when he testified, is clear that Myhan had to stand astride the wires to get at the box; but this seems to be denied by the Company, who says that Myhan could and ought to have got to them in another, which was the proper, way. Its theory on the subject is purely hypothetical. It in no manner accords with the established facts, and the great presumptions arising from them. Even if it were otherwise, the most material, the staring, fact remains, that the wires were dangerous; that the Company knew them to be such; that it did not specially warn Myhan, and did not show that he knew that they were of that character. The Company admitted their perilous nature, not only by laying one in the very room, and in their plant across the river, in the manner in which they ought to have been placed, but also by having the wires put in the proper condition immediately after the accident.

Based on sound reason and justice, the law, as expounded by jurisprudence, is clear that it is not contributory negligence to engage in a dangerous occupation (Beach, Contrib. Neg. 870; Wood, Mast. and S. 763); that the risk assumed by the servants is the ordinary hazard, incident to the employment, and this is synonymous with unavoidable accident (Wood, Mast. and S. 738); that, unless the act is necessarily and inevitably dangerous, no negligence can be imputed (Beach, Contrib. Neg. 870; Wood, Mast. and S. 763); that the servant has a right to rely on the care and trust, the superior knowledge, information and judgment of the employer, and to act upon the presumption that the latter would not expose him to unnecessary risk, and has taken all necessary precautions (Wood, Mast. and S. 681, 738, 739, 749, 751, 763; 2 Thompson, Neg. 975); that an employé is not bound to inquire as to latent, but only patent, defects; that he has the right to presume that this inquiry has been made by the employer upon whom the duty devolves, and, although the servant may know of the defects, this will not defeat his claim, unless it is shown that he knew that the defects are dangerous (Whart. Neg. § 214; Wood, Mast. and S. 736-739); that the master is liable for subjecting the servant, through negligence, to greater risks than those which fairly belong to the employment, and the servant need only, in order to recover, to raise a reasonable presumption of negligence or fault on defendant's part. Wood, Mast. and S. 777; Faren v. Sellers, 39 La. Ann. 1020.

Considering the facts and the law, we are driven to the conclusion that the Company is responsible.

The other question to be considered is the quantum of damages to be allowed. This is not an easy task, in the absence of any rule or precedent by which to be governed. The testimony shows that the plaintiffs move in the humbler walks of life; that the husband is a policeman, on a salary of $50 per month; that he has five children, and provides for three of them, and for his wife; that Myhan was at the time of his death between eighteen and nineteen years of age, with a bright prospect of existence before him; that he was then earning $25 per month, which, as a dutiful son, he employed to minister unto the wants of his father's family. Of his presence among them, and of that assistance, they are forever deprived. The probability is that, as he was a robust young man, attentive to his duties, and kind to his parents, he would have advanced in life, and bettered his and their condition. In the course of years, he would have accumulated earnings to some reasonable extent, due regard being had to his personal wants and necessities. It is for the deprivation of his presence and support that his father and mother are entitled, under the provisions of the law, to relief. While we consider the claim which they have set up for indemnity at $25,000 is excessive, and admit that it is almost impossible, systematically, to figure out by items what amount.

may prove to them an adequate relief, we think, under a somewhat instinctive appreciation, considering that, as it is a probability that in the course of time the circumstances of Edward Myhan might have changed, had he lived, an allowance of $2,000 would not be unreasonable, and would relieve his parents awhile, to some extent, from the immediate consequences attending the severe injury inflicted on them.

It is therefore ordered and decreed that the verdict of the jury herein and the judgment of court thereon be annulled and set aside; and it is now ordered and adjudged that the plaintiffs, William Myhan and Catherine Crow, his wife, receive from the defendant, the Louisiana Electric Light & Power Company, the sum of $2,000, with legal interest thereon per annum from the rendition of judgment till paid, and all costs of suit.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

L. L. PORTER

v.

J. W. POWELL, Appt.

(....Iowa....)

1. It is the legal, as well as the moral, duty of parents to furnish necessary support to their children during minority, and, although a parent cannot be charged for necessities furnished by a stranger for his minor child, except upon an express or implied promise to pay for the same, such promise may be inferred on the grounds of the legal duty imposed.
2. A partial emancipation of a daughter fourteen years of age by permitting her for three years thereafter to reside thirty miles away, controlling and using her own wages without furnishing her with any money or means of support, will not exempt the father from liability for necessary services of a physician employed by her in sickness, where it does not appear that he intended to waive the right to exercise parental authority over her.

(Beck, J., dissent.)

(January 29, 1890.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Dallas County in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover compensation for professional medical services rendered to defendant's minor daughter. Affirmed.

The court below found that plaintiff was entitled to recover from defendant for the services sued for, and rendered judgment in his favor, but certified the following question to this court for its opinion:

"Is a father legally liable to a physician [for the] latter's services in professionally treating the minor daughter of said father dangerously attacked with typhoid fever, who at the date of said treatment was seventeen years of age and was then and had been residing away from her father's house for three years prior to the rendition of said services, earning and controlling her own wages, and providing herself with clothing, at a place thirty miles distant from her father's place of residence, the father not furnishing or agreeing with his daughter to furnish her with any money or means of support but consenting to her absence from home; the said professional services being rendered at the request of the said minor daughter,—but were rendered and furnished without the procurement, knowledge or consent of defendant, and without knowledge of the sickness until

NOTE.—Obligation of parent to support infant child.

A father is bound to support his minor child if he be of ability, even though the child has property of his own. Braden v. Mercer, 5 West. Rep. 195, 44 Ohio St. 39; Wood's Estate, 13 Phila. 301; Buckley v. Howard, 35 Tex. 555; McKnight v. Walsh, 23 N. J. Eq. 136; Stevens v. Stevens, 23 N. J. Eq. 236; Hines v. Mullins, 25 Ga. 606; Addison v. Bowie, 2 Bland, Ch. 606; Tompkins v. Tompkins, 18 N. J. Eq. 303; Myers v. Myers, 2 McCord, Ch. 214; Stovall v. Johnson, 17 Ala. 14; Thompson v. Dorsey, 4 Md. Ch. 149; Hillsborough v. Deering, 4 N. H. 86; Litchfield v. Londonderry, 39 N. H. 247; Cromwell v. Benjamin, 41 Barb. 558; but compare Re Marx, 5 Abb. N. C. 224; Holtzman v. Castleman, 2 McArthur, 555; Trimble v. Dodd, 2 Tenn. Ch. 500.

If the father is not able to support them he will be allowed a reasonable compensation out of their estate for their support. Dawes v. Howard, 4 Mass. 97; Newport v. Cook, 2 Ashm. 33; Dupont v. Johnson, 1 Bailey, Eq. 279; Godard v. Wagner, 2 Strobb. Eq. 1.

It is only under peculiar circumstances that he will be allowed to charge them for their maintenance and education. Tanner v. Skinner, 11 Bush, 120; Cowls v. Cowls, 8 Ill. 435.

To obtain such allowance, he must show that he is without means (Haas v. Koehrscheid, 6 Ind. 67), and he will be allowed for their past maintenance. Presley v. Davis, 7 Rich. Eq. 105.

He is not necessarily absolved from this obligation. 7 L. R. A.

tion because the child has voluntarily left home. People v. Strickland, 13 Abb. N. C. 473; Gotts v. Clark, 78 Ill. 223; compare, however, Angel v. Mollan, 16 Mass. 28.

An express or implied promise by the father is necessary to bind him for necessities furnished his infant child by a stranger. Carney v. Barrett, 4 Or. 171; McMillen v. Lee, 78 Ill. 448; Freeman v. Robinson, 38 N. J. L. 383; Kalley v. Davis, 40 N. H. 187.

The mother is not liable for their support and education during the life-time of the father. Glad-ding v. Follett, 35 N. Y. 532, 2 Den. 53.

But if she has supported them out of her own estate she cannot claim reimbursement out of their estate without showing a contract with their guardian to pay therefor. McDaid's Estate, 14 Phila. 258.

A widow is bound to support them, if of sufficient ability. Deidham v. Natick, 16 Mass. 140; Nightingale v. Wittington, 15 Mass. 272.

But she is not compellable, if the child has an estate sufficient for its own support. Dawes v. Howard, 4 Mass. 97; Whipple v. Dow, 2 Mass. 415.

By the common law, in Massachusetts the father is bound to support his minor children, even if he de erts them. Gleason v. Boston, 3 New Eng. Rep. 772, 144 Mass. 25; Dennis v. Clark, 2 Cush. 347.

A father must support a minor child, notwithstanding a decree divorcing his wife a vinculo for his misconduct allowed her alimony, but with no demand was made for the payment of said services by plaintiff, the attendance of plaintiff being from day to day for a period of twenty days."

Messrs. W. W. Cardell and R. S. Barr, for appellant:

Parents are not obliged to support their minor children, independent of statute; for the statutes are only indemnifying in their nature in favor of municipalities, and do not extend to individuals.

Farmington v. Jones, 86 N. H. 271.

With this exception, the obligation is only a moral one, and, unless it is founded upon a prior legal liability, it has no binding force from a legal point of view.

Kelley v. Davis, 49 N. H. 187; Raymond v. Loyl, 10 Barb. 483; Gordon v. Potter, 17 Vt. 348.

While minor children live with and are supported by their parents, or one standing in loco parentis, their services belong to those holding the parental relation.

Monaghan v. School District, 88 Wis. 100; Coffin v. Shaw, 3 Ware, 82; Benson v. Remington, 2 Mass. 118; Angel v. McLellan, 16 Mass. 28.

Support and services are dependent upon each other.

The Etta, 1 Ware, 474.

As the statutes are intended only for indemnity of the public against paupers, and not for the reimbursement of the individual who may have relieved the sufferings and distress of needy persons, a promise cannot be inferred, even though notice be given by one who has provided the support.

Farmington v. Jones, supra.

Parents are not liable upon any contracts made by their minor children unless they have expressly or impliedly authorized them to be made.

1 Story, Cont. § 83 and note, 82b and note; Raymond v. Loyl, supra; Weeks v. Morrow, 40 provision for the child's support, whose custody is given her. Pretzinger v. Pretzinger, 18 West. Rep. 483, 45 Ohio St. 453; Courtright v. Courtright, 40 Mich. 683; Plaster v. Plaster, 47 Ill. 290.

The fact that on a decree for divorce the children were in the custody of a third person will not affect his obligations to support them. McCarthy v. Hinman, 35 Conn. 538.

But a father is not liable for its support after the custody of the child has been given to the mother by decree of court. Brow v. Brightman, 138 Mass. 187.

Emancipation of infant.

A child upon arriving at full age will be held prima facie to be emancipated. Poultney v. Glover, 23 Vt. 323.

But this rule does not apply to a child of unsound mind. Scranton v. Danville, 106 Pa. 446; Overseers of Washington v. Overseers of Beaver, 8 Watts & S. 548; Shippen v. Gaines, 17 Pa. 88; Toby Twp. Overseers of Poor v. Madison Overseers of Poor, 44 Pa. 60; Penn. Twp. Overseers of Poor v. Selinsgrove Overseers of Poor (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 587.

Marriage of a minor son emancipates the son. Dick v. Grissom, 1 Freem. Ch. (Mass.) 428; White v. Henry, 24 Me. 531.

So a minor daughter is emancipated by marriage, and the consent of the father will be implied by the circumstances. Buckport v. Rockland, 56 Me. 22. 7 L. R. A.

Me. 151; Kelley v. Davis, supra; Owen v. White, 5 Port. (Ala.) 435; Clark v. Gotts, 1 Ill. App. 455; Bailey v. King, 41 Conn. 335; Kernolle v. Caldwell, 46 Ind. 153; Rogers v. Turner, 59 Mo. 116; Harper v. Lemon, 33 Ga. 227; Clark v. Clark, 46 Conn. 586; Byers v. Thompson, 66 Ill. 421; 2 Kent, Com. 11th ed. 190, note 3; Gordon v. Potter, 17 Vt. 348.

There is no common-law liability to provide a maintenance for minor children, such liability being provided by—43 Eliz. chap. 237; 1 Story, Cont. note 1, p. 240; 1 Bl. Com. 449; Story, Cont. notes bottom p. 142.

When a child voluntarily leaves its father, he is not liable for its contracts for necessities. Story, Cont. § 82 and note 1; 5 Wait, Act. and Def. § 1, p. 50.

Before the father can be held liable either an express promise or circumstances from which a promise may be inferred is essential, in all cases, to bind him for necessities furnished his minor child by a third person.

Gotts v. Clark, 78 Ill. 229; Fowlkes v. Baker, 29 Tex. 135; Schouler, Dom. Rel. 329; Swain v. Tyler, 26 Vt. 9; Thauer v. White, 12 Met. 843; McMillen v. Lee, 78 Ill. 443.

Messrs. D. W. Woodin and F. H. Perry, for appellee:

The leading duties of the parents as to their children, recognized in the common law, are: first, to protect; second, to educate; third, to maintain, them.

Schouler, Dom. Rel. 3d ed. § 233; Gilley v. Gilley, 4 New Eng. Rep. 494, 79 Me. 292.

The father cannot by consent or any agreement dispose of his child and discharge himself of his obligations.

Hunt v. Hunt, 4 G. Greene (Iowa) 222.

Independent of any statute, parents are bound to contribute to the support of their minor children.

Johnson v. Barnes, 69 Iowa, 643; Dawson v. Dawson, 12 Iowa, 514; Furman v. Van Sise,

A father may give to an infant son his time, and in such case the son's earnings belong to the son. Bobo v. Bryson, 21 Ark. 387; Lyon v. Bolling, 14 Ala. 753; Fairhurst v. Lewis, 28 Ark. 435; Rush v. Vought, 55 Pa. 437; Chase v. Smith, 5 Vt. 558; Tillotson v. McCrillis, 11 Vt. 477; Morse v. Welton, 6 Conn. 547; Jenney v. Aden, 12 Mass. 375; Reams v. Watkins, 27 Mo. 518; Everett v. Sherfey, 1 Iowa, 856.

Where a child has been emancipated he ceases to follow any settlement thereafter acquired by his father. Orneville v. Glenburn, 70 Me. 363.

The parol emancipation of a minor is revocable until acted upon. Abbott v. Converse, 4 Allen, 530.

A parent may emancipate an infant child, and confer a right upon it to acquire property and possess it as against all persons whatsoever. Stanley v. Nat. Union Bank, 115 N. Y. 123, 23 N. Y. S. R. 966.

A father who has given his son the right to his own wages can revoke the privilege whenever he chooses. Agricultural & M. Asso. v. State (Md.) 18 Atl. Rep. 37.

Children are not emancipated at twenty-one years of age, who are compelled to remain longer with their parents on account of some infirmity of body or mind rendering them incapable of taking care of themselves. Poor Overseers of Gregg Twp. v. Poor Overseers of New Berlin (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 528; Poor Dist. of Curwensville v. Poor Dist. of Knox Twp. (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 535.

56 N. Y. 439, 443; Gilley v. Gilley, 4 New Eng. Rep. 494, 79 Me. 342; Van Valkinburgh v. Watson, 18 Johns. 480; Garland v. Dover, 19 Me. 411; Dennis v. Clark, 2 Cush. 352, 353; Reynolds v. Sweetser, 15 Gray, 80; Hall v. Weir, 1 Allen, 261; Camerlin v. Palmer Co. 10 Allen, 689.

Strangers can recover for necessities whether the father knew they were being furnished or not.

1 Parsons, Cont. 6th ed. pp. 809, 810.

Given, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. Appellant's contention is that the obligation of parents to support their minor children is only a moral one, and is not enforceable in the absence of statute or promise; that such promise is not to be implied from mere moral obligation, nor from the Statute providing for the reimbursement of the public; and that an omission of duty, from which a jury may find a promise by implication of law, must be a legal duty, capable of enforcement by process of law. At first glance, this view of the law seems opposed to our natural sense of justice; yet it is not without support in the authorities. Such is held to be the law in New Hampshire and Vermont. See Kelley v. Davis, 49 N. H. 187; Karrington v. Jones, 89 N. H. 271; Gordon v. Potter, 17 Vt. 348.

A different doctrine has long since been held in this State.

In Dawson v. Dawson, 12 Iowa, 518, this court held that "the duty of the parent to maintain his offspring until they attain the age of maturity is a perfect common-law duty."

In Johnson v. Barnes, 69 Iowa, 641, which was an action by the mother, who had been divorced, against the father, for support furnished their children, the court says: "As there was no promise, the question to be determined is whether one can be inferred in favor of a wife, who supports her child, as against her husband, who has without cause abandoned her and his child. The obligation of parents to support their children at common law is somewhat uncertain, ill defined and doubtful. Indeed, it has been said that there is no such obligation. . . . But we are not prepared to say that this rule has been adopted in this country, and it should be conceded, we think, that, independent of any statute, parents are bound to contribute to the support of their minor children, and that such obligation rests mainly on the father, in the absence of a statute, if of sufficient ability; and that, in favor of a third person, who supports a child, a promise to pay may and should be inferred on the ground of the legal duty imposed."

In Van Valkinburgh v. Watson, 18 Johns. 480, it is said: "A parent is under a natural obligation to furnish necessities for his infant children; and, if the parent neglect that duty, any other person who supplies such necessities is deemed to have conferred a benefit on the delinquent parent, for which the law raises an implied promise to pay on the part of the parent."

In 5 Wait, Act. and Def. 50, the author says: "The duty of parents to support, protect and educate their offspring is founded upon the nature of the connection between them. It is not only a moral obligation, but it is one which is recognized and enforced by law. . . . In 7 L. R. A.

order to hold the person liable in any case for goods furnished, either actual authority for the purchase must be shown, or circumstances from which such authority may be implied . . . The legal obligation of parents in respect to support extends only to those things which are necessary; and if a parent refuses or neglects to provide such things for his child, and they are supplied by a stranger, the law will imply a promise on the part of the parent to pay for them."

Without further citation of authorities, we announce as our conclusions that it is the legal as well as moral duty of parents to furnish necessary support to their children during minority; that a parent cannot be charged for necessities furnished by a stranger for his minor child, except upon an express or implied promise to pay for the same; and that such promise may be inferred on the grounds of the legal duty imposed.

2. It is further contended on behalf of appellant that the facts certified show an emancipation of his daughter, such as to relieve him from liability for the services sued for; that support and services are reciprocal duties, and if one is withheld the other may be withdrawn. Parents are entitled to the care, custody, control and services of their children during minority. To emancipate is to release, to set free. It need not be evidenced by any formal or required act. It may be proven by direct proof or by circumstances. To free a child, for all the period of minority, from care, custody, control and service would be a general emancipation; but to free him for only a part of the period of minority, or from only a part of the parent's rights, would be limited. The parent, having the several rights of care, custody, control and service during minority, may surely release from either without waiving his right to the other, or for a part of the time without waiving as to the whole. A father frees his son from service. That does not waive the right to care, custody and control, so far as the same can be exercised consistently with the right waived. He frees his son of eighteen from service for one year. That does not waive the right to his services after the year; and if the waiver has been for an indefinite period the parent may assert his right to the services of the child at any time within the period of minority, subject to the rights of those who have contracted with the child on the strength of the waiver as to services. In the law of contracts, where a father expressly or impliedly, by his conduct, waives his right generally to the services of a minor child, such child is said to be emancipated. The child may sue, under such circumstances, on such contracts as are made with him for his services. Nightingale v. Withington, 15 Mass. 272; McCoy v. Huffman, 8 Cow. 84; Stiles v. Granville, 6 Cush. 458; Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 267.

There is nothing in these authorities, nor any reason, against the view expressed, that emancipation may be general or limited. There is no direct evidence as to the purpose of the defendant with respect to his daughter; but we are to say, from the circumstances shown, whether they evidence either a general or limited emancipation.

The case of Berrett v. Sherfey, 1 Iowa, 358, relied upon. That was an action to recover damages of the defendant for having harbored and retained the plaintiff's minor son in his employ. The issues and circumstances were quite different from those certified in this case. The court says: "There could be no such harboring as would render the defendant liable to the father in this action, if the son was in truth emancipated, and, if the son was not emancipated, it will still be a question whether there was such harboring as renders the defendant liable. By 'emancipation,' in this connection, we understand such act of the father as sets the son free from his subjection, and gives him the capacity of managing his own affairs as if he was of age."

The following is given as a condensed statement of the facts: "In the spring or summer of 1852, plaintiff's son, a minor of the age of seventeen, went to reside at defendant's house, and was then and afterwards employed by him as a hired hand for over one year, the defendant paying the son full wages for his services. In February, 1853, plaintiff sued defendant to recover for the services, in which suit the judgment was for the defendant. The son was of a dissatisfied and roving disposition, careless and improvident in his habits, not under parental control, and, either through willfulness or negligence, had not received the education proper for a person of his age and condition. In December, 1851, a misunderstanding arose between the parent and the child, which resulted in the son's leaving home, and residing and working at various places, before he went into the defendant's service. After said December, 1851, the father did not, apparently, have or exercise the proper and necessary control and authority over the said minor that a parent of a well-regulated family ought and should exercise, and permitted and sanctioned the hiring out of said minor at various places, and at different employments, away from home; but who made the contracts, or received the pay, is not stated nor proven. The father had also stated that he had no control over his son, and had in some instances waived his authority over him. It also appears that on the 11th of September, 1852, the plaintiff, by publication in a newspaper, forewarned all persons from crediting his said son on his account, avowing, also, therein that he would pay no debts of his contracting, and that he would not fulfill any contracts, or pay debts, entered into by him." The court says: "From these circumstances, to mention none others, we think the court might fairly conclude there was a manumission or emancipation up to the time above stated, and that there was no liability for giving the son shelter, residence and a home. At least, we think it so fairly deducible from the facts that we should not disturb the conclusion."

The circumstances disclosed in this case are these: The defendant's daughter, at the age of fourteen, went to reside away from her father's house, at a place thirty miles distant, where for three years she contracted for, earned and controlled her own wages, and provided herself with clothing, her father consenting thereto, he not furnishing, or agreeing to furnish, her with any money, or means of support. That, while thus absent, she was dangerously attacked with typhoid fever, and at her request was attended by the plaintiff, as her physician, from day to day, for a period of twenty-one days, which services were rendered without the procurement, knowledge or consent of the defendant. These circumstances are widely different from those in Everett v. Sherfey. Here there was no disagreement that resulted in the daughter leaving home; no want or waiver of parental authority; no dissatisfied and roving disposition; no statement by the father that he had no control over his daughter; and no publication by the father notifying persons not to credit her on his account. The circumstances disclosed in this case are such as are of frequent occurrence in this country. Parents, either from necessity or from a desire to teach their children to be industrious and self-supporting, emancipate them from service, for a definite or indefinite time, without any intention of thereby releasing their right to exercise care, custody and control over the child. The obligation of parents to support their minor children does not arise alone out of the duty of the child to serve. If so, those who are unable to render service because of infancy, sickness or accident—who most of all others need support—would not be entitled to it.

Blackstone, in his Commentaries (vol. 1, p. 446), says: "The duty of parents to provide for the maintenance of their children is a principle of natural law,—an obligation, says Puffendorf, laid on them, not only by Nature herself, but by their own proper act in bringing them into the world; for they would be in the highest manner injurious to their issue if they only gave their children life that they might afterwards see them perish. By begetting them, therefore, they have entered into a voluntary obligation to endeavor, as far as in them lies, that the life which they have bestowed shall be supported and preserved. And thus the children will have the perfect right of receiving maintenance from their parents." This obligation to support is not grounded on the duty of the child to serve, but rather upon the inability of the child to care for itself. It is not only a duty to the child, but to the public. The duties extend only to the furnishing of necessities. What are necessities must be determined by the facts in each case. The law has fixed the age of majority; and it is until that age is attained that the law presumes the child incapable of taking care of itself, and has conferred upon the parent the right to care, custody, control and services, with the duty to support.

3. There being no direct evidence as to the purposes of the defendant with respect to his daughter, we are to say with what intention he consented to his daughter's going and remaining away from his home as she did. That he intended she should control her own earnings, at least until such time as he should declare otherwise, is evident; but that it was ever his intention that if, by sickness or accident, she should be rendered unable to support herself, he would not be responsible to those who might minister to her actual necessities, we do not believe. Such an inference from these facts would be a discredit to any father. In our view, there was, at most, but a partial emancipation,—an emancipation from service for an indefinite time. The father had a right at any time to require the daughter to return to his home and service; and she had a right at any time to return to his service, and to claim his care, custody, control and support. There was no such an emancipation as exempted the father from liability for actual necessities furnished to his daughter. In view of the legal as well as the moral duty of appellant to furnish necessary support to his daughter during minority, and especially when unable, from infancy, disease or accident, to earn her own necessary support, we think he may well be understood as promising payment to any third person for actual necessities furnished to her. As already stated, what are necessities must be determined from the facts of each case. What would be necessary support to a child in sickness would not be necessary in health. The services sued for were evidently, necessary for the support and well-being of the defendant's daughter. As we have seen, he had not relieved himself from the duty to furnish her such support, and, from his obligation to do so, may be presumed to have promised payment to anyone who did furnish it in his absence.

Our conclusion is that the judgment of the District Court should be affirmed.

Beck, J., dissenting:

1. I cannot assent to the doctrines and conclusions announced in the majority opinion in this case. The facts are presented in the certificate of the judge upon which the case is brought here on appeal. We cannot look elsewhere for the facts. They are, briefly stated, these: The daughter was seventeen years old, and, with the father's consent, was at service thirty miles away from his home, and had been for three years, all the time controlling her own wages, and supplying her own wants, and receiving nothing for support or necessities from her father. The father had no knowledge that services were rendered to the daughter by plaintiff, or that his daughter was sick. It is not shown that the daughter was a pauper, or without means to pay the plaintiff. No presumption to that effect will be entertained.

2. These facts show that the daughter was emancipated by the father. Emancipation may be shown by circumstances from which may be inferred the consent of the father that the child may control his own time, earnings and actions. Slight circumstances tending to show such consent are sufficient, in the absence of contradictory evidence. Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 267; Everett v. Sherfey, 1 Iowa, 356.

3. Emancipation relieves the child of subjection to the parent, and bestows upon him the capacity of managing his own affairs as if he were of age (Everett v. Sherfey, supra; Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 268); and it also relieves the parent of all legal obligation to support the child. Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 268.

4. A parent is bound, neither at common law, nor by any statute of the State, to support his children who are of age. Monroe Co. v. Teller, 51 Iowa, 670; Blachley v. Laba, 63 Iowa, 22.

As I have shown, an emancipated child stands as to his obligation to his parent and the points exempt to or from obligation for his support, just as a child who is of age.

5. It may be that the parent would be under obligation to support a pauper child who is of full age, or that a promise would be implied on the part of the father to render such support. But that point is not in this case, as it is not shown or claimed that the child for whose support the father was sued is a pauper, or not possessed of ample means to pay plaintiff for the services rendered by him.

6. Doctrines as to the liability of the father for the support of his minor child, and his liability therefor upon a promise, express or implied, and upon other points of the law, are found in the majority opinion, to which I dissent. As tending to support my views, I cite the following decisions of this court: Dawson v. Dawson, 12 Iowa, 512; Johnson v. Barnes, 69 Iowa, 641. See, to the same effect, Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 236.

In my opinion, the judgment of the district court ought to be reversed.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

J. W. RUSSELL et al., Appts.,

v.

R. H. TATE et al.

(....Ark.....)

1. A town council has no power to appropriate funds of the town to aid in building a county court-house therein.

NOTE.—Towns and villages may be restrained from making illegal appropriations.

In this country, the right of property holders or taxable inhabitants to resort to equity to restrain municipal corporations and their officers from transcending their lawful powers or violating their legal duties in any mode which will injuriously affect the taxpayers, such as making an unauthorized appropriation of the corporate funds, has been affirmed or recognized in numerous cases in many of the States. 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 829.

7 L. R. A.

2. Where an illegal appropriation has been made by a town council and warrants drawn thereon, some of which have been paid, equity has jurisdiction of a suit to cancel the unpaid warrants, to compel repayment of the money paid and to annul the appropriation, and the recalling and cancellation of the unpaid warrants after suit is brought will not oust the jurisdiction; in such case the court may grant affirmative, as well as injunctive, relief.

A citizen and taxpayer of an incorporated city is entitled to an injunction to restrain an illegal appropriation of the money of the city. Withington v. Harvard, 8 Cush. 66; New London v. Brainard, 22 Conn. 553; Harney v. Indianapolis, C. & D. R. Co. 32 Ind. 244; Scofield v. Eighth School Dist. 27 Conn. 499, 504; Webster v. Harwinton, 32 Conn. 131; Territt v. Sharon, 34 Conn. 106.

If an appropriation of money be made for two objects, one lawful and the other not, and it cannot be distinguished and separated, the whole will be

3. Taxpayers may maintain suits against town officers to prevent or remedy misapplication of town funds.

4. Although members of a town council are not liable for the exercise of their discretion in voting upon measures before them, yet where they vote an appropriation for their own benefit, which is paid, the transaction is a conversion of trust funds for which each of them, as well as the mayor who orders, and the treasurer who makes the payment, will be liable; and the subsequent re-election of the same parties to office will not affect their liability.

(February 15, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pope County in Chancery in favor of plaintiffs in an action to annul an alleged illegal appropriation of public money, and to compel a return into the public treasury of whatever had been paid under such appropriation. Affirmed.

This action was brought by taxpayers of the Town of Russellville against the mayor, aldermen and treasurer of said town.

The aldermen, among others, had, in consideration that the people would change the county seat of Polk County from Dover to Russellville, executed an approved bond for the use of the county to build a court-house at Russellville and donate the house and ground to the county. During the course of construction of the court-house appellants, in their capacity as town council of said town, on February 3, 1888, passed a resolution appropriating $1,000 to assist in the completion of the court-house. Two warrants were drawn against this appropriation, one for $675 and the other for $325, the former being immediately paid.

On February 17 appellees filed a bill against appellants in chancery, alleging that they were citizens and taxpayers of said town and praying for a temporary injunction restraining the collection and payment of the $325 warrant, and that finally it be perpetually enjoined, that the appropriation to the court-house be quashed, and for the restitution to the town treasury of the $675 already paid.

On the 27th of March the appellants, in their official capacity as town council, called in and destroyed the $325 warrant.

At the town elect on held April 3 the appellants were all re-elected.

Appellants then filed a motion to dismiss so much of the complaint as related to the $325 warrant, on the ground that the injunctive relief had been extinguished by its destruction, which motion was overruled. They then moved to strike from the complaint all that part which related to the $675, which motion was also overruled. They then filed an answer in which they alleged, inter alia, that the destruction of the warrant was virtually the rescinding of the resolution of February 3, especially to the extent of the $325 warrant, that the act diverting the $675 from the public treasury was within the legislative discretion of the council and that defendants were not liable for their action in regard to that matter; that after the appropriation had been made and the money paid, the matter had been submitted to the qualified electors of the town, and the action of the board approved by a large majority, and appellants all re-elected to office, and that this estopped appellees from bringing suit.

The answer concluded with a demurrer upon the following, among other, grounds: want of proper parties plaintiff. The court had no jurisdiction of the subject in so far as it related to the $675.

The court overruled the demurrer and after hearing entered a decree in favor of plaintiffs for the recovery of the $675, enjoining defendants from attempting to renew the warrant for $325, and from making any provision for the payment of the money mentioned in the resolution of February 3, 1888. From that decree defendants took this appeal.

Messrs. Wilson & Granger and G. W. Shinn, for appellants:

held void; otherwise the court will enjoin or relieve against the expenditure which is unlawful. Roberts v. New York, 5 Abb. Pr. 41; Howes v. Racine, 21 Wis. 514.

One or more taxpayers, without showing any other injury than that which they will suffer in common with other property holders of the municipality, may file a bill to restrain the allowance and payment of an illegal claim, or the collection of the tax for unauthorized objects, such as, for example, to pay a fraudulent or collusive judgment. Barr v. Deniston, 19 N. H. 170, 180; Merrill v. Plainfield, 45 N. H. 123; Douglass v. Placerville, 18 Cal. 643; Drake v. Phillips, 40 Ill. 383.

But, on the other hand, it has been decided in New York that resident citizens or taxpayers of a municipal corporation cannot, as such, merely, either on their own behalf or on behalf of themselves and all others having a like interest, maintain a suit to restrain or avoid corporate acts alleged to be illegal. This doctrine, left open in Ketchum v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 356, and Guilford v. Chenango Co. 13 N. Y. 143, was first definitely established in Doolittle v. Broome Co. 18 N. Y. 153, disapproving, on this point, Adrian v. New York, 1 Barb. 19; Brower v. New York, 8 Barb. 264; Christopher v. New York, 13 Barb. 567; Milbau v. Sharp, 15 Barb. 193, 244, and De Baun v. New York, 16 Barb. 382.

7 L. R. A.

Remedy against illegal acts of town authorities.

Assessments for local improvements by municipal corporations generally make a lien upon the lands declared to be benefited thereby; each separate land owner had some kind of legal remedy, either by action for damages against the officer enforcing the unlawful collection, or by writ of certiorari to review the assessment itself. But such remedy is inadequate when compared with the comprehensive and complete relief furnished by the single decree in equity. Ireland v. Rochester, 51 Barb. 415, 456; Scofield v. Lansing, 17 Mich. 437; Lafayette v. Fowler, 34 Ind. 140; Kennedy v. Troy, 14 Hun, 308, 312; Clark v. Dunkirk, 12 Hun, 181, 187; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 276.

Injunction as a remedy.

An injunction will not be granted, in general, to restrain persons from acting as public officers. The legal remedy is, in general, adequate to test the right to a public office. Campbell v. Taggart, 10 Phila. 442; Jones v. Granville, 77 N. C. 290; Sneed v. Bullock, 77 N. C. 232; Stone v. Wetmore, 42 Ga. 601; Sanders v. Metcalf, 1 Tenn. Ch. 412; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 376.

Injunction will always be granted, if necessary, to protect, aid or enforce any equitable estate, interest or primary right, or to secure and render

The claim to have the $675 refunded to the treasury of the town was a cause of action of a purely legal character, for which there was a full and adequate remedy at law, and therefore a court of chancery had no jurisdiction.

2 Story, Eq. Jur. 156.

A mandatory injunction will not be granted where the thing complained of is accomplished, and there is a remedy at law, although connected with the cause for injunction.

Rogers Locomotive & Mach. Works v. Eris R. Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 379; Baxter v. Chicago Board of Trade, 68 Ill. 146.

Nor will equity, because it has jurisdiction of one cause of action, retain the case to decide one purely legal.

Oakville Co. v. Double-Pointed Tack Co. 7 Cent. Rep. 720, 105 N. Y. 658; Chapman v. Lee, 11 West. Rep. 650, 45 Ohio St. 356; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 178; Lippincott v. Barton, 7 Cent. Rep. 920, 42 N. J. Eq. 272; Dugan v. Cureton, 1 Ark. 42.

So far as the $675 was involved, the right of action was in the town, not in private citizens.

2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 729, note 1; 3 Dillon, Mun. Corp. §§ 730 and note 1, 730a, 730b and note 1, 732; Nixon v. School Dist. No. 92, 32 Kan. 510.

An illegal act which will increase taxation cannot be questioned by a private citizen or taxpayer, unless it is specially injurious to him.

Dillon, Mun. Corp. §§ 735 and note 1, 736; Bailey v. Culver, 84 Mo. 531; Ketchum v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 371, 372; Jones v. Little Rock, 25 Ark. 301.

If appellees had no right to sue, they did not state a cause of action in their favor.

Wilson v. Galey, 1 West. Rep. 498, 103 Ind. 257; Sinker v. Floyd, 2 West. Rep. 218, 104 Ind. 291; Tipton Co. v. Kimberlin, 6 West. Rep. 885, 108 Ind. 449.

Mr. J. G. Wallace, for appellees:

Appellants as the town council, had no power to appropriate and use the revenues and moneys of the town to build a court-house for the county.

efficient any purely equitable remedy. So it will lie against corporations and their directors and officers, to restrain acts which are illegal, ultra vires or in violation of their fiduciary duties. Lord Auckland v. Westminster Local Board of Works, L. R. 7 Ch. 597; Mills v. Northern R. of B. A. Co. L. R. 5 Ch. 621; Pudsey Coal Gas Co. v. Bradford, L. R. 15 Eq. 167; Pickering v. Stephenson, L. R. 14 Eq. 322; Cannon v. Trask, L. R. 20 Eq. 609; Dowling v. Pontypool, C. & N. R. Co. L. R. 18 Eq. 714; Featherstone v. Cooke, L. R. 16 Eq. 208; Mair v. Himalaya Tea Co. L. R. 1 Eq. 411; Carlisle v. Southeastern R. Co. 1 Macn. & G. 689.

On the ground that the remedy in equity is more direct, speedy and effectual than by certiorari, equity will entertain jurisdiction of a bill on behalf of taxpayers to enjoin misapplication of the moneys of the corporation. Colton v. Hanchett, 13 Ill. 615; Mount Carbon Coal & R. Co. v. Blanchard, 54 Ill. 240; Wade v. Richmond, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 583; Harney v. Indianapolis, C. & D. R. Co. 82 Ind. 244. See also Sherman v. Carr, 8 R. I. 431; 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 831.

The same doctrine has been expressly sanctioned by the Court of Appeals in Maryland, in a case in which it was held that residents and taxpayers of a city might file a bill in equity to restrain the corporation and its officers from taking steps to carry out a city ordinance creating a debt in violation of 7 L. R. A.

Tuck v. Waldron, 81 Ark. 462; Buell v. State, 45 Ark. 337; Ottawa v. Carey, 108 U. S. 110 (27 L. ed. 669), and authorities there cited; Citizens Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Topeka, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 655 (22 L. ed. 455); Ark. Const. art. 12, § 6; Halbut v. Forrest City, 34 Ark. 246; Jacksonport v. Watson, 33 Ark. 704.

When a court of chancery acquires jurisdiction for one, it does for all, purposes.

Conger v. Cotton, 37 Ark. 287; Bentley v. Dilford, 6 Ark. 85.

Jurisdiction always depends on the state of things existing at the time the action is brought.

Rates v. Martin, 34 Ark. 410; Sale v. McLean, 29 Ark. 612; Price v. State Bank, 14 Ark. 50.

The remedy for the recovery of the $675, standing alone, is purely of equitable jurisdiction.

Ark. Const. art. 16, § 18; Mansf. Dig. §§ 929, 9731; Taylor v. Pine Bluff, 34 Ark. 607; Dodge v. Cooley, 59 U. S. 18 How. 331 (15 L. ed. 401); Bisph. Eq. § 49, p. 68; 1 Story, Eq. §§ 60, 534.

It does not matter that the money has been paid. Courts of chancery will decree restitution of it.

2 Story, Eq. § 1252; Dillon, Mun. Corp. §§ 729, 730; Frost v. Belmont, 6 Allen, 153.

Any person owning taxable property in the town may bring his bill in chancery.

Mansf. Dig. § 929; Jacksonport v. Watson, 33 Ark. 704; Peabody v. Flint, 6 Allen, 52; Cooley, Torts, 518; Story, Eq. § 1252 (a); Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 730, and notes; Frost v. Belmont, 6 Allen, 152; Crampton v. Zabriskie, 101 U. S. 601 (25 L. ed. 1070).

Sandels, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

An analysis of the case shows six questions for decision:

1. Has equity jurisdiction as to the matters stated in the bill?
2. Are residents and taxpayers proper parties plaintiff?
3. May affirmative, as well as injunctive, relief be had in such a proceeding?

the Constitution. If the right to maintain such a bill as this be denied, citizens or property holders would be without adequate remedy to prevent the injury which might result to them from the unauthorized or illegal acts of the municipal government or its officers and agents. Baltimore v. Gill, 31 Md. 375, 396; New London v. Brainard, 22 Conn. 532; Merrill v. Plainfield, 45 N. H. 126, and disapproving Roosevelt v. Draper, 23 N. Y. 318; and Doolittle v. Broome Co. 18 N. Y. 155. See also Frederick v. Groshon, 30 Md. 436; Baltimore v. Porter, 18 Md. 284; Coulson v. Portland, Deady, 481.

Injunction will lie to restrain the imposition or enforcement of illegal taxes and other public burdens, at the suit of taxpayers. Wagner v. Meely, 69 Mo. 150; Curtenius v. Hoyt, 37 Mich. 583; Cattell v. Lowry, 45 Iowa, 478; Albany & B. Min. Co. v. Auditor Gen. 37 Mich. 391; Sinclair v. Winona Co. 23 Minn. 404; South Platte Land Co. v. Buffalo Co. 7 Neb. 258; Burlington & M. R. Co. v. York Co. 7 Neb. 487; George v. Dean, 47 Tex. 73; Douglas v. Harrisville, 9 W. Va. 162; Marsh v. Clark Co. 42 Wis. 602; Schettler v. Fort Howard, 43 Wis. 48; Hagaman v. Cloud Co. 19 Kan. 394; Worthen v. Badgett, 32 Ark. 406; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. Dunn, 51 Ala. 128; Wells v. Dayton, 11 Nev. 161; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Lincoln Co. 3 Dill. 200; Brown v. Concord, 56 N. H. 375; Hockingham T. C. Sav. Bank v. Portsmouth, 52 N. H. 17; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 377.

4. Was the appropriation of the $1,000 valid or void?

5. Are aldermen, as such, liable to an action for votes given upon measures before them?

6. What liability, if any, did the mayor ordering, the treasurer paying and the council receiving, the payment, incur by reason of this transaction?

The so-called appropriation was a nullity. Jacksonport v. Watson, 83 Ark. 704; Sykes v. Columbus, 55 Miss 115; Const. art. 12, § 5; Misnot v. West Roxbury, 112 Mass. 1.

The officers of the city are trustees in the management and application of the funds of the people of the city. 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 915.

The application of municipal funds to illegal purposes by them is a breach of trust. 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 919 and notes.

Equity has jurisdiction to prevent the misapplication or waste of trust property. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 1252 and note.

The fact that after the suit was brought the city council recalled and canceled the unpaid warrant did not oust the jurisdiction of the court. That was but a part of the purely equitable relief demanded. It was desired to prevent its re-issue and cancel the appropriation. Besides, under our chancery system, had the cancellation of the warrant been the only original ground of equity jurisdiction, it was not lost. Price v. State Bank, 14 Ark. 50.

Suits by taxpayers against towns and their officers to prevent or remedy misapplication of town funds are not only allowed by statute, but it is the prevailing doctrine in America that taxpayers may maintain them, in the absence of statute. Their relations to the municipality are analogous to those of stockholders to a private corporation. Manst. Dig. § 929; Jacksonport v. Watson, supra; Crampton v. Zabriskie, 101 U. S. 601 [25 L. ed. 1070]; 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 914, 915; Blaisie v. Staples, 18 Grant, Ch.

(Canada) 67, cited in note on p. 902, Dillon, Mun. Corp.

There is no foundation in the authorities for the claim that the power of chancery is only injunctive. It would be a reproach to justice if it were true. In the present case, the appropriation was made, the warrant drawn, and the money paid by the treasurer, before an attorney could have comprehended the situation and have written the caption of a complaint.

Chancery has ample power to prevent further wrong and require reparation for that which has been done. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 1252 and notes; Frost v. Belmont, 6 Allen, 152; Citizens Loan Assn. v. Lyon, 29 N. J. Eq. 110; Atty-Gen. v. Boston, 123 Mass. 400; Atty-Gen. v. Dublin, 1 Bligh, N. R. 312; Atty-Gen. v. Poole, 4 Myl. & Cr. 17; People v. Fields, 58 N. Y. 491; 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 909-912.

As against the liability of these defendants, it is contended that, a city council being in some sort a legislative body, its members are not liable for the exercise of their discretion in voting upon measures before them. This is true. Jones v. Loosing, 55 Miss. 109; Freeport v. Marks, 59 Pa. 253.

But here, after exercising their discretion in voting $1,000 of the money of the town to pay an obligation which they and a few others had bound themselves to discharge, they or their building committee took the money. It was a conversion of trust funds, for which each of them, as also the mayor who ordered, and the treasurer who made, the payment, are liable. Frost v. Belmont, 6 Allen, 152; Citizens Loan Assn. v. Lyon and Atty-Gen. v. Poole, supra; Atty-Gen. v. Wilson, 1 Craig & Ph. 1; Blaisie v. Staples, 18 Grant, Ch. (Canada) 67.

The vote of confidence given appellants at the next ensuing city election does not affect their liability to repay the money which they took from the city treasury.

Affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF KANSAS

v.

F. W. FULKER, Appt.

(....Kan.....)

*Intoxicating Liquors transported from

*Head note by JOHNSTON, J.

NOTE.—Statutes relating to imported liquors, valid.

A state Act imposing a tax of fifty cents per gallon on all spirituous liquors brought into a State is constitutional, where the same tax is imposed on liquors manufactured in the State, although the mode of collection is different. Hinson v. Lott, 75 U. S. 3 Wall. 148 (19 L. ed. 387).

The state statute which makes it a criminal offense to solicit or take orders for spirituous liquors in the State, to be delivered at a place without the State, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that if so delivered the same will be transported into the State, and sold in violation of law, applies to orders for liquors taken by salicamen traveling for business houses in other States. Such another State to a point in Kansas are subject to the laws of Kansas relating to the sale and disposition of such property, to the same extent and in like manner as are other intoxicating liquors already rightfully existing in the State, and cannot be sold at the place of destination, in the original packages or other form, except as the laws of the State prescribe. The police power of the State, so exercised, does not infringe on a statute is not void as a state regulation of interstate commerce. Lang v. Lynch, 4 L. R. A. 331, 38 Fed. Rep. 439.

Stat. 1808, chap. 415, § 27, permitting an importer to sell in the original package liquors imported by him, legalizes such sale, although he knows that the purchaser intends to resell the liquor in violation of law. Richards v. Woodward, 113 Mass. 285.

Liquor purchased outside a prohibited district, by one who advances his own money therefor as the agent of the buyer, and not of the seller, the purchaser making no profit on the sale, is not a sale within the district, within Ala. Sess. Acts 1851-52, p. 202. Dubois v. State, 87 Ala. 191.

Orders taken for the sale and delivery of liquors in violation of the law of the State are part of the the power delegated to Congress to regulate commerce between the States

(January 11, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Marshall County overruling his motion for new trial in an action in which judgment had been entered sentencing him to fine and imprisonment after a verdict by a jury convicting him of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors. Affirmed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. L. Williams, D. C. Lockwood and Cal. T. Mann, for appellant:

Intoxicating liquors are an article of commerce.

Separate opinion of Chief Justice Taney in the License Cases, 46 U. S. 5 How. 577 (12 L. ed. 289); Bowman Case, 125 U. S. 501 (31 L. ed. 713); Justice Field's separate opinion in Bowman Case, 125 U. S. 493 (31 L. ed. 709); Justice Catron's separate opinion in License Cases, 46 U. S. 5 How. 600 (12 L. ed. 299); Lot v. Hinson, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 150 (19 L. ed. 338).

The neglect or refusal of Congress to legislate and to prescribe rules governing commerce between the several States is virtually an expression on the part of Congress that commerce in the commodities upon which it is silent shall be free.

Le Loup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640 (32 L. ed. 811); Mobile Co. v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 697 (26 L. ed. 239); Robbins v. Shelby Tanning Dist., 120 U. S. 493 (30 L. ed. 695).

The police power of a State is one of the reserved powers; the commercial power of the national government is one by express grant from the several States; and where a reserved power comes in conflict with an express grant the reserved power must give way and the express grant stand.

Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 468 (24 L. ed. 529); Bowman Case, 125 U. S. 465 (31 L. ed. 700).

The word "commerce," as used in the Constitution, means, not transportation simply, but the right to transport,—carries with it by necessary implication the right to sell the article or articles imported in their original form, or unbroken packages.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 7 (6 L. ed. 24); Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 447 (6 L. ed. 688); Le Loup v. Port of Mobile, supra.

Messrs. L. B. Kellogg, Atty. Gen., and W. A. Calderhead for the State.

contract of sale and as such render the entire transaction void, and no recovery thereon can be had. Lang v. Lynch, supra.

Where the order was made in New Hampshire, but the sale completed in New York, by selecting the liquors, separating them from a larger mass, marking, directing and delivering them there, it was held to be a sale in New York; and if legal there, an action for the price could be maintained in New Hampshire. Boothby v. Plaisted, 51 N. H. 436; Schlesinger v. Stratton, 9 B. L. 578; Erwin v. Stafford, 45 Vt. 890.

A sale of liquor is complete upon delivery to the carrier, and the fact that the order for it was taken in a country where the sale was prohibited by law, and that payment for it was received there, does not make the salesman taking the order and re-

Johnston, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

F. W. Fulker was prosecuted in the District Court of Marshall County upon an indictment charging him with unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors at the Town of Oketo, in Marshall County. The jury returned a verdict finding him guilty on five counts of the indictment, and on his motion to set aside the verdict the conviction was sustained as to the first two counts, and set aside as to the other three. The judgment of the court was that he should pay a fine of $100, and be imprisoned in the jail of Marshall County for thirty days on the first count, and a like sentence for the conviction under the second count was pronounced. The defendant appeals, and alleges that the court erred in overruling his motion for a new trial.

The testimony offered on the trial showed that the defendant sold to numerous persons what were called "Prize Packages," being boxes about twelve inches square, in each of which there was a jug of whiskey. These boxes were shipped from Nebraska, and were sold in Kansas by the defendant in the same form and condition in which they were shipped. The defendant was in charge of the railroad depot and express office at Oketo, and the boxes were shipped by express from Blue Springs, Neb. Part of them, at least, were consigned by "M. L. R." to "M. L. Rawling," but who "M. L. R." was is not very clearly shown. Some of those who applied to purchase liquor from the defendant presented orders which purported to come from Rawling and from a man called "Ax," but the testimony indicates that the defendant sold to all who applied, regardless of orders, and that many sales were made when no such orders were presented.

At the close of the testimony the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that if packages containing intoxicating liquors were sold by the defendant in the original packages as delivered for shipment in Nebraska, and as received by him in Kansas, such sales were not in violation of the Constitution and laws of Kansas relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors. The request was refused, and in charging the jury the court said: "I further instruct you that if you believe from the evidence beyond reasonable doubt the defendant knowingly sold intoxicating liquors at the place described in the complaint, and within two years prior to the 22d day of December, 1888, it would be no defense against such sales for ceiving the payment guilty of selling it there. Pearson v. State (Miss.) 4 L. R. A. 435.

Sales of intoxicating liquors by delivering them to a carrier to be sent C. O. D. at a place where the seller was licensed, to fill orders received by mail from the purchasers at a place where the seller was not licensed, do not violate the Pennsylvania Statute against sales without license. Com. v. Fleming (Pa.) 5 L. R. A. 470.

An order for the sale of intoxicating liquors, taken within a district where such sales are prohibited, on which delivery of the liquors is made to the carrier in pursuance of the order, at a place outside of such district, is not a sale within that district, where there is nothing to show an express intent to make the carrier the agent of the seller. Herron v. State, 51 Ark. 123.

the defendant to show by evidence that such intoxicating liquor so sold by him had been imported from another State over some route ordinarily used for the transportation of merchandise, in inclosed boxes, or packages, and that such intoxicating liquors had been so sold by the defendant in the original boxes or packages in which they had been placed for shipment in another State, without breaking said boxes or packages." The refusal of the first-mentioned instruction, and the giving of the second, presents the only question discussed upon the appeal.

It is urged that intoxicating liquors transported from another State to Kansas may be sold by the importer, or person to whom they are shipped, in the original packages, free from state control; and that, so far as our Constitution and laws would restrict or prohibit such sale, they violate the provision of the Federal Constitution which declares "that Congress shall regulate commerce among the several States." Counsel for appellant argue with great ability that in interpreting the commercial clause of the Constitution intoxicating liquors must be regarded as articles of commerce which may be imported from another State, and sold at the end of the transit in this State, the same as other commodities, and that the restriction of our laws upon the sale of liquors upon reaching Kansas is a direct burden on interstate commerce, and a usurpation by the State of a power exclusively vested in Congress. We cannot assent to this proposition. That the power to regulate interstate commerce belongs exclusively to Congress, and that the laws of a State which would encroach upon that power or directly interfere with such commerce cannot stand, all concede. Nothing in the Constitution or statutes of Kansas evinces any purpose on the part of the people of the State to trench upon this power, or antagonize the freest commercial intercourse with other States. It is not necessary to review at length the statutory provisions relating to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors within the State. It is enough to say that they do not purport to restrict in any manner the transportation of liquors into or through the State. Such property may be carried over the State without burden or restraint, the same as any other commodity, and there is like freedom in bringing it in. When liquors are brought from another State, they are subject to no other or different regulation than like property produced in Kansas. Our law is enforced with perfect equality, without any discrimination between citizens of this and other States, or between liquor brought in and that already here.

The validity of our Statute has been repeatedly sustained by this court, and all question of the right of the State to enact such legislation has been set at rest by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S. 201 [28 L. ed. 629], and Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623 [31 L. ed. 205]. In the latter case it was held, after a most elaborate and learned treatment of the questions involved, that our laws were not repugnant to the Federal Constitution, and it was said that "it is difficult to perceive any ground for the judiciary to declare that the prohibition by Kansas of the manufacture or sale, within her limits, of intoxicating liquors for general use there as a beverage, is not fairly adapted to the end of protecting the community against the evils which confessedly result from the excessive use of ardent spirits."

It is argued that the unrestricted sale of liquors in the form in which they are shipped from another State is an essential element of traffic, and that, as the law of Kansas forbids such a sale, it constitutes a direct burden on interstate commerce. It must be remembered that our law does not absolutely forbid the use or sale of intoxicating liquors. They may not only be freely introduced and stored, but they may be sold for medical, scientific and mechanical purposes. A person may purchase and bring liquor into the State for his own use, without violating the Statute; and one so lawfully obtaining possession of intoxicating liquor may use it as he sees fit, by drinking it himself or giving it to another, provided it is done in good faith, and not as a shift or device to evade the provisions of the Prohibitory Act. State v. Standish, 37 Kan. 648.

So it appears that the law does not absolutely prohibit the importer from using or selling liquors, but it only requires that the sales shall be made for beneficial and proper purposes, and by duly authorized persons. It does not operate directly on commerce, or upon the introduction of liquors, but only provides that they shall be subject to a reasonable police regulation when brought within the territorial limits of the State. The fact that such regulations may to some extent diminish the traffic or incidentally affect interstate commerce does not render them invalid. "In conferring upon Congress the regulation of commerce, it was never intended to cut the States off from legislating on all subjects relating to the health, life and safety of their citizens, though the legislation might indirectly affect the commerce of the country. Legislation, in a great variety of ways, may affect commerce and persons engaged in it without constituting a regulation of it, within the meaning of the Constitution." Sherlock v. Aling, 93 U. S. 99 [23 L. ed. 819]; Willson v. Black Bird Creek Marsh Co. 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 245 [7 L. ed. 412]; Gieman v. Philadelphia, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 718 [18 L. ed. 96]; Cooley v. Philadelphia Board of Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 299 [13 L. ed. 996]; Osborne v. Mobile, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 479 [21 L. ed. 470]; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 118 [24 L. ed. 77]; Hall v. DeCuir, 95 U. S. 485 [24 L. ed. 547]; Pound v. Turck, 95 U. S. 459 [24 L. ed. 525]; Wheeling, P. & O. Transp. Co. v. Wheeling, 99 U. S. 273 [25 L. ed. 412]; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 107 U. S. 365 [27 L. ed. 419]; Morgan's Steamship Co. v. Louisiana Board of Health, 118 U. S. 455 [30 L. ed. 237].

The regulation and control of the liquor traffic is purely an exercise of the police power of the State, and between it and the commercial power conferred on the general government there is no antagonism. The commercial power is delegated to Congress, and cannot be limited by the States, but the police power is reserved to and remains alone with the State. These powers are to be exercised by the different departments of government, for the public good, and both are to be construed relatively, and considered with reference to each other. The power to provide for the preservation of the morals, the health, the safety and lives of the people was never surrendered by the States, and it is a power which can be most advantageously exercised by local regulation. It is not denied that the unrestrained use of intoxicating liquor destroys the health, contaminates public morals, and produces disorder and crime. The Supreme Court of the United States sufficiently shows the necessity of police regulation of the traffic in the Mugler Case, where it is said that it could not "shut out of view the fact, within the knowledge of all, that the public health, the public morals and the public safety may be endangered by the general use of intoxicating drinks; nor the fact, established by statistics accessible to everyone, that the idleness, disorder, pauperism and crime existing in the country are, in some degree, at least, traceable to this evil." By reason of this necessity, many local regulations, such as inspection, quarantine and pilot laws, which directly affect commerce, have been upheld.

In Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 1 [6 L. ed. 23], Chief Justice Marshall said that "inspection laws, quarantine laws, health laws of every description" are component parts of that mass of legislation "not surrendered to the general government," which "can be most advantageously exercised by the States themselves;" that such laws "are considered as flowing from the acknowledged power of a State to provide for the health of its citizens."

In a case where the same court was considering the relative operations and limits of the commercial and police powers, it was said: "While we unhesitatingly admit that a State may pass sanitary laws, and laws for the protection of life, liberty, health or property within its borders; while it may prevent persons and animals suffering under contagious or infectious diseases, or convicts, etc., from entering the State; while, for the purpose of self protection, it may establish quarantine and reasonable inspection laws,—it may not interfere with transportation into or through the State beyond what is absolutely necessary for its self protection;" and that "the police power of a State cannot obstruct foreign commerce or interstate commerce beyond the necessity for its exercise." Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465 [24 L. ed. 527].

This authority, in effect, concedes that although the State cannot, under the mere guise of exercising police power, limit or obstruct the federal power, yet it may go as far as it may be necessary to protect the lives, health and morals of its people without intruding upon the domain of federal authority. As the restriction of the liquor traffic is an acknowledged necessity, and as the State alone can effectually lessen or prevent the evils resulting from its use and sale, it would seem clear that laws enacted in good faith for that purpose by a State cannot be regarded as an infringement upon the delegated power "to regulate commerce." Although intoxicating liquors must be regarded as property, the quality or kind of property affects the question of whether it may be sold at the end of the transportation in the original form, or whether it shall be brought under state regulation as soon as it comes within the limits of the State. It is not to be placed in the same category with grain, flour, dry goods and the like, which do not contain the elements of danger that liquor does. Powder, dynamite, nitro-glycerine and arsenic are property and the subjects of commerce, but all agree that a reasonable regulation of their introduction, use and sale by a State, whether they are in original packages or not, is a proper exercise of the police power.

In Gilman v. Philadelphia, 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 780 [18 L. ed. 101], this subject was under consideration, and it was held that while a state law requiring an importer to take out a license before he could sell a bale of imported goods was void, yet that "a State, in exercise of its police power, may forbid spirituous liquor imported from abroad or from another State to be sold by retail, or to be sold at all, without a license, and it may visit the violation of the prohibition with such punishment as it may deem proper."

If the point contended for, that liquor may be shipped from another State to any point in Kansas, and there sold in the original packages, should be upheld, it would virtually destroy, not only the Prohibitory Laws of Kansas and of some other States, but also the License and Local Option Laws of all the remaining States in the Union. The learned attorney-general, in speaking of the result to which this theory would lead, in his argument says that "it would seriously impair the efficiency of, if not practically destroy, our Prohibitory Law. In the one case 'original packages,' large and small, might become the ordinary merchandise of every corner grocery in the State; in the other case, every person who desired to engage in the saloon business could become at once an importer of 'original packages,' from the size of a pint flask to that of the jugs of whiskey imported from Nebraska in this case, and thus be able to ply his business without let or hindrance from our Prohibitory Law."

In The License Cases, 46 U. S. 5 How. 608 [12 L. ed. 286], where the New Hampshire case was under consideration, Justice Catron remarked: "To hold that the State License Law was void, as respects spirits coming in from other States as articles of commerce, would open the door to an almost entire evasion, as the spirits might be introduced in the smallest divisible quantities that the retail trade would require; the consequence of which would be that the dealers in New Hampshire would sell only spirits produced in other States, and that the products of New Hampshire would find an unrestrained market in the neighboring States having similar license laws to those of New Hampshire."

Every State in the Union has enacted laws to protect society from the admitted evils of the liquor traffic. Some have low license, some have high license, some have local option, and others have taken the advanced position of Kansas to prohibit its manufacture and sale, except for certain purposes generally regarded as beneficial. In many, if not all, of the license States, there are prohibitory features in the regulations imposed. Some of them are that liquor cannot be sold to minors or drunkards, nor sold on Sundays, election days, or at night, nor sold at a place adjoining or near to churches and school-houses. Then again, the tribunals granting the license are generally invested with the discretion and authority to deny a license to any applicant if they do not regard him as a suitable person to engage in the traffic. So it is seen that all these regulations are more or less prohibitory in their character, and all are to be governed by the same principle, when considered in connection with the commercial power of Congress. The federal power, within its proper limits, must be regarded as paramount and controlling; but in delegating this power it was never intended that the people should be crippled in the police power of self protection, which was never surrendered, and which the States only can exercise. The federal power is always to be construed as a measure for the public good, and carries with it the implied exception that the right of self protection remains with the States,—a right which may always be exercised, although it may to some extent affect the exclusive commercial power of the general government. The Supreme Court of the United States has never held, nor do we think that it ever will hold, that the commercial power supplants and strikes down the police power of the States, as it would if the view contended for should prevail.

It should also be stated that the regulations imposed by Kansas do not conflict with any Act of Congress upon the subject. As the power exercised by the State in this instance operated on interstate traffic, and as it is a local regulation to protect the health, morals and safety of the people, is it not valid in any view, in the absence of congressional legislation upon the subject? It is said that, as to all subjects of a national character, and which require uniformity of regulation, the silence of Congress is a declaration of its purpose that commerce in that commodity shall be free; but as to subjects which are local in their nature, and can be best provided for by local regulation, the inaction of Congress does not preclude the exercise of power by the State, but her laws enacted in good faith would stand until they were displaced by federal legislation. Mobile Co. v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 697 [26 L. ed. 288, 239].

In Cooley v. Philadelphia Board of Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 299 [18 L. ed. 996], it was held that, while Pilot Laws were in their nature regulations of commerce, they were valid exercises of power lodged in the States, in the absence of legislation on the subject by Congress. The court said that "the power to regulate commerce embraces a vast field, containing not only many, but exceedingly various, subjects, quite unlike in their nature; some imperatively demanding a single uniform rule, operating equally on the commerce of the United States in every port, and some, like the subject now in question, as imperatively demanding that diversity which alone can meet the local necessities of navigation." And, in speaking of the Pilot Law, it was decided it was local, and not national, and that it was a subject likely to be best provided for by such systems or plans of regulation as the legislative discretion of the several States should deem applicable. In the case of State Freight Tax, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 279 [21 L. ed. 162], it was said: "Cases that have sustained state laws alleged to be regulations of commerce among the States have been such as related to bridges or dams across streams wholly within a State, police or health laws, or subjects of a kindred nature, not strictly commercial regulations. The subjects were such as in Gilman v. Philadelphia, it was said 'can be best regulated by rules and provisions suggested by the varying circumstances of different localities, and limited in their operation to such localities, respectively.'"

Now, we have seen that the police laws, for the control of the liquor traffic, enacted with a view to guard the health, morals and safety of the people, differ widely in the several States, each State deciding for itself the policy to be pursued, and providing what it is deemed will best promote the public welfare; and, as above indicated, it is a subject that "can be best regulated by rules and provisions suggested by the varying circumstances of different localities."

In Morgan's Steamship Co. v. Louisiana Board of Health, 118 U. S. 455 [30 L. ed. 287], it is decided that a system of quarantine laws, established by the Statutes of Louisiana, was a rightful exercise of the police power; and, although some of the rules of the system amounted to regulations of commerce, they applied to that class which States may establish until Congress acts in the matter, by covering the same ground or forbidding state legislation. Justice Miller, who pronounced the judgment, in speaking of the fact that Congress had enacted no such legislation, remarked that "no doubt they believed that the power to do this belonged to the States, or, if it ever occurred to any of its members that Congress might do something in that way, they probably believed that what ought to be done could be better and more wisely done by the authorities of the States, who were familiar with the matter." Is this remark not properly applicable to state legislation concerning the liquor traffic? May it not properly be said that the omission of Congress to provide regulations concerning the traffic was because they "believed that the power to do this belonged to the States," and could be done by them better and more wisely, because they were familiar with the matter? This view is supported to some extent by the following cases: Wilson v. Black Bird Creek Marsh Co. 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 245 [7 L. ed. 412]; Gibbons v. Ogden, 2 U. S. 9 Wheat. 1 [6 L. ed. 23]; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 713 [18 L. ed. 96]; Peik v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 94 U. S. 178 [24 L. ed. 98]; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 135 [24 L. ed. 87]; Escanaba & L. M. Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 678 [27 L. ed. 442]; Parkersburg & O. R. Transp. Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 701 [27 L. ed. 588]; Curdicell v. American River Bridge Co. 113 U. S. 205 [23 L. ed. 959]; Hamilton v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 119 U. S. 280 [30 L. ed. 393]; Hue v. Glover, 119 U. S. 546 [30 L. ed. 489]; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465 [31 L. ed. 508].

One of the latest cases which treats upon the subject is Borman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 482 [31 L. ed. 706], where the doctrine previously announced, that the non-action of Congress respecting foreign commerce is to be taken as a declaration that the importation of articles into the State shall be unrestricted, is recognized. It is there said: "The power conferred upon Congress to regulate commerce among the States is, indeed, contained in the same clause of the Constitution which confers upon it power to regulate commerce with foreign nations," but in that connection it is also stated that "the same necessity, perhaps, does not exist equally in reference to commerce among the States." It seems to be held that a different inference is to be drawn from the non-action of Congress in respect to foreign commerce and its non-action in regard to interstate commerce. "Laws which concern the exterior relations of the United States with other nations and governments are general in their nature, and should proceed exclusively from the legislative authority of the nation. . . . and yet in respect to commerce among the States it may be, for the reason already assigned, that the same inference is not always to be drawn from the absence of congressional legislation as might be in the case of commerce with foreign nations. The question, therefore, may be still considered in each case as it arises, whether the fact that Congress has failed in the particular instance to provide by law a regulation of commerce among the States is conclusive of its intention that the subject shall be free from all positive regulation; or that, until it positively interferes, such commerce may be left to be freely dealt with by the respective States."

This case is certainly not an authority that a reasonable regulation of a State, enacted to promote the peace, morals and health of its people, and which somewhat restricts interstate commerce, should be held void. It would seem that the question, so far as interstate commerce is concerned, is regarded by the court as an open one, to be determined from the circumstances of each case as it arises. Is not a law such as that in question, and for the reason mentioned, within the police power of the State, to be exercised until Congress should provide to the contrary? We need not enter into an analysis of the numerous cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States upon this subject, nor upon an extended discussion of the principles involved. There is a decision of that court which is directly in point upon the question before us, and must be held as decisive of the case.

In Peires v. New Hampshire, 46 U. S. 5 How. 504 [12 L. ed. 256], the defendant was indicted and convicted for unlawfully selling a barrel of gin, which he purchased in Boston, transported to Dover, N. H., and there sold the same in the identical form in which it was carried to that State from Massachusetts. It was urged there, as here, that, as the liquor was transported into New Hampshire from another State, it might be sold in the "original package" or barrel, or the form in which it was transported; but the decision of the court was adverse to this claim, and it was expressly held that liquors so imported from another State were subject to local police regulation, and could not be sold in the original form, except as the law of the State provided. The reasons given by the members of the court were somewhat at variance, but the case distinctly settled the question that the local regulation did not infringe upon the commercial power of the federal government, and that when liquors were brought into the State they were subject at once to its laws regulating their sale, use and disposition. The case, although much criticized, has never been overruled, and is of itself sufficient to control the decision of the present case.

Much reliance is placed upon what is said by the court in the case of Boorman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., supra, and it must be conceded that it furnishes considerable ground for the argument made in behalf of the appellant in this case. The question presented there, however, was entirely different from the one before us. The State of Iowa attempted, by an Act of its Legislature, to exert power over persons and property beyond the limits of that State. It sought to prohibit common carriers from bringing liquors from a point outside of the State to a point within the State, unless they had been provided with written evidence of the right of the consignee to sell the same when it reached the State. It is therefore seen that it was a regulation directly affecting interstate commerce, and an effort to give the same effect beyond the territorial limits of the State. It cannot be regarded as an authority upon a question relating to an exercise of the police power of the State over persons and property within its own limits. The writer of the opinion is careful to distinguish it from The License Cases, and to prevent any misconception upon that point he states in the concluding part of the opinion that "it is not necessary now to express any opinion upon the point, because that question does not arise in the present case."

In the case of Mobile Co. v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691 [26 L. ed. 238], as well as some other cases, the doctrine of The License Cases was referred to approvingly. The precise point we are considering was before the Supreme Court of Iowa in three recent cases, in each of which The License Cases were followed, holding that intoxicating liquors are subject to the police power of the State, and that the regulation of their sale in original packages or otherwise, when they arrive in the State, does not violate the provision vesting the commercial power in the general government. Collins v. Hill, 77 Iowa, 181, 8 L. R. A. 110; Grouse v. Howat, 77 Iowa, 187; Letsey v. Hardin, 48 N. W. Rep. 188.

Our conclusion is that the district court did not err in instructing the jury, and hence its judgment will be affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

George SCHONFIELD et al., by Guardian
Ad Litem, Piffs. in Err.,

v.
Tilman P. TURNER.

(....Tex....)

1. A purchaser of a mutual benefit certificate from the person insured thereby, who takes an assignment thereof and is subsequently substituted as beneficiary therein, may, in case of the death of the insured, collect the money due thereon and retain the amount of his advances, including such assessments, etc., as he necessarily paid to keep the insurance in force, with lawful interest; but he will hold the residue as trustee for, and will be required to pay it over to, the heirs of the insured if no other person is particularly designated to receive it, where the laws of the society direct payment to the heirs, in the absence of any particular designation of a beneficiary.

2. The divorced wife of a member of a mutual benefit society is not entitled to share in the fund payable by the society to his heirs at his death.

(December 8, 1889.)

ERROR to the District Court of Rusk County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover the amount due upon a mutual benefit certificate at the death of the member insured, to which the deceased member's heirs were made parties defendant. Reversed.

The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rufus Price and F. B. Sexton for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Booty & Young, J. H. Turner and Martin Casey, for defendant in error:

When the person whose life is insured voluntarily, without the request or solicitation of the person to whom the policy is made payable, procures an insurance on his life, and then has the loss made payable even to one having no insurable interest in his life, the policy is valid.

See authorities cited to note in Currier v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 57 Vt. 406, 52 Am.

Rep. 140; May, Ins. § 112; Murphy v. Red, 64 Miss. 617.

Every person has an insurable interest in his own life; and where any person procures a policy on his own life, and appoints another as his beneficiary, that beneficiary need not allege in his pleading an interest in the life of the insured.

May, Ins. § 106, p. 110; Elkhart Mut. Aid B. & R. Assn. v. Houghton, 108 Ind. 286, 53 Am. Rep. 516, and authorities cited; Langdon v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 14 Fed. Rep. 272; Bloomington Mut. B. Assn. v. Blue, 120 Ill. 121.

The insurance of one's life by a party for the benefit of one not a relative is not void on the grounds of public policy, as tending to encourage the commission of crime. But if it were, no one but the insurer can raise the question; that cannot be urged by the heirs of the person insured.

Johnson v. Van Epps, 110 Ill. 562.

A sale and assignment of a policy of life insurance to one who has no interest in the life insured, made, not as a contrivance to circumvent the law, but as an honest and bona fide transaction, is valid.

See Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Allen, 138 Mass. 24, 52 Am. Rep. 245, 252 and cases there cited; Bursinger v. Bank of Watertown, 67 Wis. 75, 58 Am. Rep. 849, and authorities cited.

When the person whose life is insured is himself the actor in the matter, the amount of temptation held out to others to take his life may be left to his discretion.

Equitable L. Assur. Society v. Paterson, 41 Ga. 388, 5 Am. Rep. 535; Bloomington Mut. Ben. Assn. v. Blue and Bursinger v. Bank of Watertown, supra; Murphy v. Red, 64 Miss. 614; Lamont v. Hotel Men's Mut. Ben. Assn. 30 Fed. Rep. 817; Lamont v. Grand Lodge Iowa L. of H. 31 Fed. Rep. 177.

Henry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The order of Knights of Honor is an incorporated body. One purpose of its existence is

NOTE.—Mutual benefit certificate; transfer of.

There are some essential differences usually existing between the contracts evidenced by benefit certificates and the ordinary contract of life insurance. The certificate constitutes the contract and the holder thereof has power to change the beneficiary. Presbyterian Assur. Fund v. Allen, 4 West. Rep. 712, 106 Ind. 598; Elkhart Mut. Aid, Benev. & R. Assn. v. Houghton, 1 West. Rep. 284, 103 Ind. 286, 53 Am. Rep. 514; Bauer v. Samson Lodge, K. of P. 103 Ind. 282.

An assignment may be good between the parties, although the assent of the company is required by the terms of the contract and has not been obtained. Marcus v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 68 N. Y. 625; Lee v. Murrell, 9 Ky. L. Rep. (Ky. Superior Ct.) 104.

Where a member of a mutual benefit society obtains the insurance himself and pays the premiums, the fact that his assignee of the certificate of membership has no insurable interest in his life will not prevent such assignee from collecting the benefit. Milner v. Bowman, 5 L. R. A. 96, 119 Ind. 448.

The fact that a member of a mutual benefit society who assigned the membership certificate was insolvent at the time of his death does not invalidate the assignment where it is not shown that he was insolvent at the time he made the assignment. Ibid.

A sale, for a valuable consideration, of mutual benefit certificates insuring a member's life, has been held void, not only by force of the society's regulations, where they prohibit such sales, but also as against public policy. Stoelker v. Thornton (Ala.) 6 L. R. A. 140.

Mutual assessment societies. See Burdon v. Mass. Safety Fund Assn. 1 L. R. A. 145, 6 New Eng. Rep. 840, 147 Mass. 380.

Remedy for refusal to levy assessment. Jackson v. Northwestern Mut. Relief Assn. 2 L. R. A. 783, 73 Wis. 507.

Benefit societies, what are. See Rockhold v. Canton Mas. Mut. Benev. Assn. (Ill.) 2 L. R. A. 420; property rights: Merrill Lodge, I. O. G. T. v. Ellsworth, 2 L. R. A. 841, 73 Cal. 166; dissolution: Chicago Mut. L. Indemnity Assn. v. Hunt, 2 L. R. A. 549, 127 Ill. 257; power to make by-laws: Supreme Lodge, K. of P. v. Knight, 3 L. R. A. 409, 117 Ind. 499; enlarged powers conferred by statute: Marsh v. Supreme Council, A. L. of H. 4 L. R. A. 382, 149 Mass. 512.

to furnish insurance upon the lives of the members of its subordinate lodges. In the year 1880 one David Schonfield became a member of the order. Among the objects of the corporation, its charter states one in the following language: "To promote benevolence and charity by establishing a widows' and orphans' benefit fund, from which, on satisfactory evidence of the death of a member of the corporation who has complied with its lawful requirements, a sum, not exceeding five thousand dollars, shall be paid to his family, or as he may direct."

The constitution of the corporation at the same date, among others, contained the following provisions: "Each applicant shall direct in his application to whom he desires his death benefit paid. The beneficiary may be changed as the member may thereafter direct, in accordance with the laws of this order, and such changes shall be entered in the benefit certificate. A member may at any time, while in good standing, surrender his certificate, which, together with a fee of fifty cents, shall be forwarded by the reporter of his lodge, under seal, to the supreme reporter, who shall thereupon cancel the old certificate, and issue a new one in lieu thereof to such member, payable as he shall have directed; said direction and surrender to be made on the back of the benefit certificate surrendered, signed by the member, and attested by the reporter, under seal of the lodge. In the event of the death of one or more of the beneficiaries designated by the member before the decease of such member, if he shall make no further disposition thereof, upon his death such benefit shall be paid in full to the surviving beneficiary or beneficiaries, each sharing pro rata as provided in the benefit certificate. In the event of the death of all the beneficiaries designated by the member before the decease of such member, if he shall make no other disposition thereof, the benefit shall be paid to the heirs of the deceased member, and, if no person or persons shall be entitled to receive such benefit by the laws of this order, it shall revert to the widows' and orphans' benefit fund."

When Schonfield first became a member of a lodge, he received a "benefit certificate," issued under the above-quoted charter and constitutional regulation, binding the supreme lodge of the corporation to pay out of the widows' and orphans' benefit fund to one Friedlander the sum of $2,000, in accordance with and under the laws governing the order, upon satisfactory evidence of the death of said member and the surrender of the certificate; provided that the certificate had not been surrendered by said member, or canceled at his request, and another certificate issued in accordance with the laws of the order. After paying his dues for several years, Schonfield's health failed him, and he seems to have become very poor, having neither the money necessary for his personal maintenance or to pay his dues to the lodge. In this condition of affairs the appellee, T. P. Turner, furnished him $50, and took from him a transfer of his benefit certificate. The transfer was made by Schonfield, by filling up and signing a blank transfer on the back of the benefit certificate. Subsequently, on the 28th day of June, 1884, the Supreme Lodge, Knights of Honor, upon Schonfield's surrendering the first certificate, issued to him, in lieu thereof, a second one, for the same amount, payable to T. P. Turner, and similar in all respects to the first one. The laws of the order when the two certificates were issued, as well as the terms and conditions of the certificates themselves, were substantially the same, and so remained until the 1st day of July, 1884, when an amendment of the constitution of the order went into effect, whereby a clause of the constitution formerly reading that the insurance money be paid "to his [the member's] family, or as he may direct," was so changed as to read that it should be paid "to such member of his family, or person dependent on him, as he may direct, and may designate by name." After Turner purchased the certificate, he paid the required assessments and dues until Schonfield died, the whole amount paid out by him, including the $50, having been, according to his own testimony, "$75 or $80." It seems that it was not considered by any of the parties necessary to consult Friedlander about the transfer, or the surrender of the first certificate, and that in fact he did not participate in either act.

David Schonfield, when he joined the order, had a wife and five minor children. He did not live with or provide for them, and it seems that none of the parties to the aforesaid transaction had any knowledge that he had a family, or that he had ever had a wife. He was divorced from his wife. He died on the 20th day of September, 1884. The corporation collected the money from its members; but, before it was paid to Turner, as the holder of the benefit certificate, the children of Schonfield, and their mother, asserted a claim to it, upon which the corporation declined to pay it to either party. Turner sued the corporation to recover the money. The corporation answered, admitting that it held the money, and asking that the five children of David Schonfield, who were all minors, and whose names were alleged in the answer to be, Emma, Bertie, George, Tibbie and Fred Schonfield, and their mother, Laura Schonfield Schuterlee, be made parties defendant. The defendant brought into court the amount of money in controversy, to be held by the clerk, and paid over to the party adjudged to be entitled to it. The record does not show that process was issued or served as prayed for by defendant, but Laura Schonfield Schuterlee, Emma Schonfield, Bertie Schonfield, Fred Schonfield and Tibbie Schonfield appeared by attorney and answered, alleging that they had been cited to answer. Afterwards an order was entered appointing a guardian ad litem for Emma Schonfield, Bertie Schonfield, George Schonfield, Fred Schonfield and Tibbie Schonfield. The record does not show that the minor George Schonfield was ever cited, or that any answer for him was ever filed. There was a suggestion of the marriage of Laura Schonfield Schuterlee, but her husband was never made a party, and never appeared or pleaded. A judgment was rendered, on the verdict of a jury, in favor of plaintiff. The minors, Emma Schonfield, Bertie Schonfield, George Schonfield, Fred Schonfield and Tibbie Schonfield, by their guardian ad litem, prosecute this writ of error to reverse the judgment.

Turner was not related by blood or otherwise to David Schonfield. He was not his creditor, and consequently had no insurable interest in his life. It is contrary to public policy to allow anyone not owning such insurable interest to become the owner, by assignment or otherwise, of insurance upon the life of a human being. A creditor of the assured may lawfully become the owner of such insurance to an extent requisite to protect him from ultimate loss of his demand; and a purchaser or assignee of it will be recognized as having an interest in it sufficient to repay him the purchase or other money invested in it by him, including advancements, in the nature of dues, assessments and premiums, to preserve and keep the insurance in force, with lawful interest thereon. What amount a creditor, as such, may procure insurance for, and the rules regulating his collection of it, depend upon contingencies not necessary to discuss in this case. What the policy of the law forbids to be done must be treated by courts, when administering the law, as never having been done. The undisputed evidence is that Turner's first claim of ownership of the insurance was through an assignment to him of the Friedlander benefit certificate. The case, in this respect, comes directly within the decision of this court in the case of Price v. Knights of Honor, 68 Tex. 361, in which it is held that such a transfer is prohibited by law. The fact that subsequently Schönfeld surrendered the transferred certificate to the lodge, and procured another one, payable directly to Turner, does not change the principle, or affect the result. The public policy that forbids such transactions is entirely independent of the consent or control of the insurer or the insured.

We think it clear that the laws of the order at the dates of the transactions in question recognized David Schönfeld as the only beneficial owner of the insurance, and that the person named in the certificate, whether it was Friedlander or Turner, was only an appointee to collect and receive the money, in the event that Schönfeld died without otherwise disposing of it. The rule and the practice that permitted the member, and him alone, to dispose of the insurance at his own pleasure, without regard to any right or claim of any person to whom it had been issued or transferred, is utterly inconsistent with the idea of a beneficial interest in any person other than the member himself. That mode of dealing with it is consistent only with the proposition that the party in whose name it was, whether originally or by transfer, held it merely as a trustee, for the use and benefit of the member. Upon the death of the member the beneficial interest vested in his heirs. When the person designated to receive the insurance is held by the law incapable of taking it for his own use, on grounds of public policy, it will be entirely consistent with the manifest purposes of the order to make the same disposition of the money that would have been made if he had been dead. As we have seen, the laws of the order direct it to be paid, in that contingency, to the heirs of the member; not to the heirs of the holder or transferee of the benefit certificate. Such holder of the certificate may, no doubt, collect the money for the use of the heirs, and enforce such proper claims of his own against the fund as the law recognizes.

After allowing to appellee the $50 originally paid, and amount subsequently paid by him for dues and assessments, with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent per annum, the remainder of the money belongs to the heirs of David Schönfeld, as they existed at the date of his death. If his wife had then been divorced, she was not one or them, and is not in any capacity entitled to a share of the money. On another trial the exception to the pleading of plaintiff charging that she was divorced, instead of being sustained, ought to be overruled.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

STANDARD OIL CO., App't.

v.

James M. LANE et al., Respts.

(.....Wis.....)

A lien for the price of lubricating oil furnished for use on machinery in a mill is not given by a statute giving a lien for any materials furnished for the protection of any building or any machinery which becomes a part of the freehold.

(January 23, 1890.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Bayfield County denying its claim to a lien upon certain premises for the price of lubricating oil furnished for use upon machinery situated thereon. Affirmed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Messrs. Lamoreux & Gleason, for appellant;

7 L. R. A.

Statutes giving mechanics' liens are remedial, and must be liberally construed.

White Lake Lumber Co. v. Russell, 22 Neb. 126; Montandon v. Deas, 14 Ala. 33; Brown v. Pendergast, 7 Allen, 427.

The court should not narrow the meaning of the term "protection." Even if the expression is special, but the reason general, the expression will be deemed general.

Brown v. Pendergast, supra.

Courts universally give a broad and liberal construction to the language of lien statutes.

Hazard Powder Co. v. Byrnes, 12 Abb. Pr. 469; Dixon v. LaFarge, 1 E. D. Smith, 722; Keystone Min. Co. v. Gallagher, 5 Colo. 23.

Messrs. Miles & Shea, for respondents:

In determining the question whether a lien attaches, the Massachusetts court construes a lien statute strictly because it is in derogation of the common law.

Trask v. Searle, 121 Mass. 229.

In this respect Illinois is in harmony with Massachusetts.

Stephens v. Holmes, 64 Ill. 836; Canisius v. Merrill, 65 Ill. 67, 2 Jones, Liens, § 1554.

The materialman's lien always goes on the theory that the material has become a fixture, part and parcel of the realty, or that it was purchased with that intention and understanding.

Spruhen v. Stout, 52 Wis. 517; Dimmick v. Cook, 7 Cent. Rep. 191, 115 Pa. 573; Pond Mach. Tool Co. v. Robinson, 88 Minn. 273.

Cole, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We think the decision of the court below, holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to a lien for its debt, was correct and must be affirmed. Its claim was for lubricating oil sold, to be used, and actually used, on the machinery in the mill situated on the premises described in the complaint. There is no dispute about the facts of the case. The only question is, Does the Statute give a lien for the claim for oil furnished for such purpose? It is contended on the part of the plaintiff that it does, because, it is said, the oil was necessary to protect the machinery against the effects of friction while it was in motion, and to prevent it from wearing out. The solution of the question involved depends entirely upon the construction of the Statute giving mechanics' liens. The Statute provides, in effect, that every person who, as principal contractor, architect, etc., performs any work or furnishes any materials in or about the erection, construction, protection or removal of any dwelling-house or other building, or any machinery erected or constructed so as to be or become a part of a freehold upon which it is to be situated, shall have a lien for such labor and materials. § 8314, as amended. See 2 Sanb. & B. Ann. Stat. 1841.

Lubricating oil sold to be used, and actually used, in operating the mill machinery, may protect such machinery against the effects of friction, and thus preserve it from injury. But is it the intent of the Statute to give a lien for everything used on machinery which may protect it, and preserve it or keep it from wearing out? The Statute seems to go on the principle that materials used and labor performed on machinery which enhance its value, and become a part of such machinery, should be entitled to a lien. This appears to be the object of the Statute. It is clear that it is not everything used in operating machinery, and which tends to preserve it, that is embraced within the meaning of the Statute. Many things may serve to preserve machinery, and make it operate more efficiently and easily, which do not protect it in the sense of the Statute. Illustrations of this view were given on the argument, and others might be suggested. It will be noticed that the word "protection" is used in connection with "erection, construction and repairs," as well as "removal." And while the word "protect" often means to cover, shield or defend from injury, harm or danger of any kind, the word imports in the Statute something used or furnished for the machinery which not only preserves it from injury, but becomes a part of the machinery itself. The statutes of the different States giving mechanics' liens are so dissimilar that we derive but little aid from the decisions under them. The question is new in this State, and we are not prepared to say that lubricating oils used upon the machinery of a mill, though they may preserve and keep it from wearing out, are "material," within the meaning of the Statute. While this court has been disposed to give the Statute a liberal construction, so as to include all claims coming fairly within its provisions, yet it seems to us that the contention of the plaintiff can only be sustained by a forced and unnatural interpretation of the language used by the Legislature.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

7 L. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Re Change of Grade of WASHINGTON STREET.*J. Addison CAMPBELL'S APPEAL.*Re Opening of RUAN STREET.

(....Pa.....)

1. The classification of cities for the purpose of facilitating the convenient exercise of corporate powers necessary for the proper regulation of municipal affairs is not prohibited by the Constitution; and as the several cities have different needs growing out of the differences in their size and situation, it may be upheld as a necessary means for enabling the Legislature to make provisions adapted to secure to each class of cities the corporate powers and the number, character, powers and duties of officers best adapted to its needs, without an infraction of the constitutional prohibition against local legislation.

2. The legislation for the several classes into which cities are divided, which is authorized by the power of classification, must relate to the exercise of the corporate powers possessed by cities of the particular class to which the legislation relates or to the number, character, powers or duties of the officers employed in their management; all other legislation is unauthorized.

3. Local or special laws relating to proceedings in road cases are prohibited by the Constitution and cannot be upheld under the power to classify cities for purposes of legislation; hence, sections 8-17 of the Act of May 6, 1887, which attempt to provide a peculiar code of procedure in road cases for the City of Philadelphia unlike that in the rest of the State, are unconstitutional and void.

4. Sections 1 and 2 of that Act, although in form local, since they in fact repeal provisions of the Road Law peculiar to Philadelphia and make such law conformable to that in force in the rest of the State, may be upheld.

(Clark and McCollum, JJ., dissent from the last proposition.)

(Parson, Ch. J., and Mitchell, J., dissent from the judgment.)

(February 17, 1890.)

CERTIORARI to the Court of Quarter Sessions for Philadelphia County to review a judgment quashing proceedings to ascertain and award the damages caused to abutting property owners by the change of grade of Washington Street, in the 21st Ward of the City of Philadelphia. Affirmed.

In 1878 an ordinance of councils of the City of Philadelphia changed the grade of Washington Street. On March 29, 1887, an ordinance directed the paving of a portion of this Street. The work was done in the latter part of the year 1887, and in laying the pavement the contractor filled up the Street to the grade line established in 1878, to the injury of certain property owners. They thereupon filed a petition under the Act of May 6, 1887 (Pub. Laws 1887) in the court of quarter sessions to recover damages for the injuries thus occasioned. In pur-

NORM.—Statute, classification of cities by, constitutional.

Under the Constitution it is intended that the Legislature should by general laws provide for the incorporation of cities, towns and villages, or for change or amendment of their charters; and it was not designed to repeal or change charters in force at the adoption of the Constitution. Guild v. Chicago, 82 Ill. 472.

So, under the Territorial Organic Law, the Legislature has power to establish municipal corporations. Deits v. Central City, 1 Colo. 323.

The Pennsylvania Statute, designed to establish a uniform and general system of government for all the cities of the Commonwealth, does not apply to cities then organized under existing charters until they have accepted its provisions or suffered a repeal of their charters. Re Henry Street, 123 Pa. 344.

The Legislature may classify cities according to their population. Kilgore v. Magee, 85 Pa. 401; Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 338.

But designating counties as a class according to a minimum population which makes it certain that but one county can avail of the benefits of the law is an evasion of the constitutional provision. Dewine v. Cook Co. 84 Ill. 590.

It may delegate authority incident to municipal governments to cities, but only by general law; and ordinances adopted in different municipalities may be variant in their terms as public policy may require. Covington v. East St. Louis, 78 Ill. 548.

Under the constitutional provision against local and special legislation, the classification of cities with a view of legislating for each class separately is unconstitutional unless necessity therefor exists. Ayars' App. 2 L. R. A. 577, 122 Pa. 266.

7 L. R. A.

A statute dividing cities into classes cannot go into effect until the terms of all the members of a council in office at the time of its approval have expired. Ibid.

The Missouri Constitution, providing for four classes only of cities, does not prevent the application of general laws to cities having special charters. Rutherford v. Hamilton, 97 Mo. 543.

Population may be made the basis of classification in statutes relating to municipal bodies and their police powers, but such a classification cannot be made the means of evading the constitutional interdict of local or special laws, where the classification is plainly illusory. State v. Hoagland, 51 N. J. L. 62.

The office of the Classification Act, dividing cities into classes on the basis of population, is to provide a classification as a rule of construction for the convenience of municipal legislation. Ibid.

In order to observe the uniformity required by Nev. Const., art. 4, § 25, classification of counties must be based upon reasonable and actual differences: the legislation must be appropriate to the classification, and embrace all within the class. State v. Boyd, 19 Nev. 43.

The requirement that the system of county government shall be uniform is not considered to import universality in the operation of the law. Such construction would defeat much useful legislation. Ibid.

A statute giving towns containing one or more unincorporated villages of 1,000 inhabitants each certain enlarged powers does not violate the constitutional provision that "the Legislature shall establish but one system of town and county government." Land, Log & Lumber Co. v. Brown, 8 L. R. A. 472, 78 Wis. 294.

18

Streets in Cities of the First Class and Regulating Proceedings Therein," and it provides a system applicable only to the City of Philadelphia. The objection is now made that this Act is local in its operation, while it relates to a subject upon which local legislation is forbidden by the Constitution. On the other hand, it is insisted that it relates to all cities of the first class, and to a subject upon which local legislation is authorized by the classification of the cities of the Commonwealth under the Act of 1874.

In examining the question thus presented for decision we will consider, in the first place, the object of the classification of cities and the basis on which classification rests; second, the legislation which classification authorizes for the several classes into which cities are divided; third, some of the subjects upon which legislation is not authorized by our system of classification; fourth, the proper application of our conclusions to the cases before us.

The cities in this State are divided into classes by the Act of May 23, 1874. The object of the classification is stated in the body of the Act in these words: "For the exercise of certain corporate powers, and having respect to the number, character, powers and duties of certain officers thereof, the cities now in existence or hereafter to be created in this Commonwealth are divided into three classes."

The first class embraced cities containing a population of 800,000 and upwards. The second class included all cities whose population exceeded 100,000 and did not exceed 300,000. The third class was made up of all cities having less than 100,000 inhabitants. The object of classification being thus clearly stated in the body of the Act which ordains it, we are not left to conjecture. The Legislature has declared its object in providing a system of classification to be to facilitate the convenient exercise of "certain corporate powers" necessary for the proper regulation of municipal affairs.

The necessity for making such provision grows out of the differences in size and situation of the several cities, and the resulting differences in their needs as to the "number, character, powers and duties" of the officers required for the proper and convenient government of each class. The basis of classification is the population for whose well-being the city is to provide.

Whether the classification of cities for any purpose was constitutional was a question that came to this court first in Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 338; and it was upheld as necessary for the proper and convenient government of the cities of the State. This necessity was forcibly stated in the opinion of the court delivered by the present chief justice. Speaking of the system of laws relating to the City of Philadelphia he said: "We have but to glance at this legislation to see that the most of it is wholly unsuited to small inland cities, and that to inflict it upon them would be little short of a calamity. Must the City of Scranton, over 100 miles from tide water, with a stream hardly large enough to float a bateau, be subjected to quarantine regulations and have its lazaretto? Must the legislation for a great manufacturing and commercial city, with a population approaching 1,000,000 be, regulated by the necessities of an inland city of 10,000 inhabitants?"

The force of the argument in support of classification in Wheeler v. Philadelphia, and it is the only line of argument by which it can be sustained, lies in the evident necessity for the possession and exercise of other and, in some respects, different, "corporate powers" by the city on the sea board from those required by the inland city; by the city with a population of 1,000,000, from those required by the city of 10,000. These great differences in population render it necessary that there should be corresponding differences in the "number, character, powers and duties" of the officers by whom the municipal governments are to be conducted and the municipal necessities provided for; and classification was sustained as a necessary means for enabling the Legislature to make provisions adapted to secure to each class of cities the "corporate powers" and the "number, character, powers and duties" of the officers best adapted to its needs, without an infraction of the Constitution.

With this glance at the object and basis of classification, let us proceed to inquire what kind of legislation is authorized by it? I reply, negatively, that it does not authorize legislation on subjects not relating to municipal affairs. For this reason we held that an Act of Assembly relating to mechanics' liens in cities of a given class was a local law and forbidden by the Constitution. Davis v. Clark, 106 Pa. 377.

Liens may be divisible into classes by reference to their own peculiar characteristics, but not by reference to the size of the city or town in which the building subject to the lien may happen to stand.

An attempt was made to classify counties by reference to the number and geographical situation of the cities they contained, but this court refused to sustain it. Scowden's App. 96 Pa. 422; Com. v. Patton, 88 Pa. 255.

An Act relating to street railways in cities of the third class came under consideration in the recent case of Weinman v. Wilkesburg & E. L. P. R. Co. 118 Pa. 192, 11 Cent. Rep. 54, and the Act was held to be local and therefore unconstitutional, not relating to the municipal affairs of the cities of the third class, but to certain corporations that happened to be located within them.

This case was followed by Ayers' App. 122 Pa. 266, 2 L. R. A. 577, in which the general doctrine was clearly stated by Justice Sterrett in harmony with the line of cases just cited. But answering affirmatively, I will adopt the words of the Act of 1874 and say that classification authorizes such legislation as relates to the exercise of the "corporate powers" possessed by cities of the particular class to which the legislation relates, and to the "number, character, powers and duties" of the officers employed in the management of municipal affairs.

These are the purposes contemplated by the Legislature; they are the only purposes for which classification seems desirable; they are the only purposes for which it has been upheld by this court. In order that a given Act of Assembly relating to a class of cities may escape the charge of being a local law it is necessary, as was said in Weinman v. Wilkesburg & E. L. P. R. Co., supra, that it should "be applicable to all the members of the class to which it relates and be directed to the existence and regulation of municipal powers and to matters of local government." A law that will bear the application of this test is within the purposes for which classification was designed and therefore constitutional. A law that will not bear its application is local and offends against the Constitution.

Among the many subjects of legislation which classification presents we may call attention to such as the establishment, maintenance and control of an adequate police force for the public protection; the preservation of the public health; protection against fire; the provision of an adequate water supply; the paving, grading, curbing and lighting of the public streets; the regulation of markets and market houses; of docks and wharves; the erection and care of public buildings, and other municipal improvements. These are mentioned, not because they include all the subjects for the exercise of municipal powers, but as a suggestion of some of the more obvious ones, and as an illustration of the character of the subjects upon which legislation for the classified cities may be necessary. These classes are thus seen to embrace, not mere geographical subdivisions of the territory of the State, but organized municipalities which are divided with reference to their own peculiar characteristics and needs; and the legislation to which they are entitled by virtue of such division is simply that which relates to the peculiarities and needs which induced the division. In this way each class may be provided with legislation appropriate to it, without imposing the same provisions on other classes to which they would be unsuitable and burdensome.

We come now to inquire what legislation remains forbidden to cities notwithstanding classification. I reply that all legislation not relating to the exercise of corporate powers or to corporate officers and their powers and duties is unauthorized by classification.

In art. 3, § 7, the Constitution declares that the Legislature shall not pass any local or special law "regulating the practice or jurisdiction of, or changing the rules of evidence in any judicial proceeding or inquiry before courts, aldermen, justices of the peace, sheriffs, commissioners, arbitrators, auditors, masters in chancery or other tribunals." The same section forbids the passage of any local or special law fixing the rate of interest, exempting property from taxation, changing the laws of descent, affecting the estates of minors, and many other purposes, among which is, "authorizing the laying out, opening, altering or maintaining roads, highways, streets or alleys." It is very clear that the purpose of the constitutional provision is to require that laws relating to the several subjects enumerated in section 7 shall be general, affecting the whole State, so that the rule upon all these subjects shall be uniform throughout every part of the territory in which the Constitution itself is operative.

For example, there cannot be one rate of interest in cities of the first class, another in those of the second or third, and still another for the rest of the State, but the rate when fixed by law must apply to all parts and divisions of the State alike. The same thing is true of the Law of Descents, and so on through the entire list of subjects upon which local and special legislation is forbidden. If classification can relieve against the constitutional prohibition as to one of these subjects, it can relieve as to all. If it can justify a change in the practice in the courts of law or the proceedings to assess damages for an entry by virtue of the right of eminent domain, it can by the same reasoning justify a change in the Law of Descents, or the settlement of estates, or the rate of interest, and sweep away the entire section with all its safeguards. But a statute is not above the Constitution. The Classification Act is subject to the limits which art. 3, § 7, prescribes, and it cannot transcend a single one of them. For that reason the courts of law in Philadelphia have the same jurisdiction and powers, and proceed in the same manner, as the courts in the other counties of the Commonwealth. The system of practice, so far as it rests on statutory provisions, must be the same. The same proceedings are had on writs, the same method for securing the benefit of the exemption of property from levy and sale, the same writ of habeas corpus for one who is restrained of his liberty, the same procedure for one whose land is entered and appropriated to public or to corporate uses. These are the civil rights of the citizens of Pennsylvania as such, and they are not affected by the size of the town in which he lives or the value of his land, any more than by the color of his skin.

They are the safeguards provided by the Constitution for the protection of the weak as well as the strong, the dweller in the country as well as the resident in "cities of the first class," and no system of classification of cities or other divisions of the State can disturb them.

It now remains for us to apply the conclusions which we have reached to the Act of 1887, and to the cases under consideration. That Act contains seventeen sections. The first and second of these provides for the assessment of damages for the opening of streets plotted or projected by the city. The remaining sections provide a peculiar and somewhat cumbersome Code of Procedure in road cases for the City of Philadelphia unlike that in use in the rest of the State. They add a lawyer to the board of viewers, who is also appointed by the court; they clothe him with the powers of a master in chancery; empower him to admit and exclude evidence without regard to the wishes of the viewers, and seal a bill of exceptions to his rulings that is to be returned with the report for the examination of the court. The viewers are thus stripped of all power over the course of their inquiry, and have nothing left them except to fix the damages from such evidence as the master permits them to hear. It is obvious that these sections do not relate to the exercise of any corporate power of cities of the first class or to the ("number, character, powers and duties") of the municipal officers, or to any subject under the control of the city government. On the contrary, they relate to the practice and procedure in common-law courts of the County of Philadelphia over which the city has no control, and to the adjustment of the compensation due the property holder for an invasion of his close under the right of eminent domain,—a subject as exclusively within the jurisdiction of these courts as an indictment for a crime or an action of trespass quare clauum fregit. The only connection the city has or can have with such a proceeding is as a party to the litigation because liable to pay the damages assessed. The city appears, like any other suitor, to ask or object to the appointment of viewers, or to the confirmation of their report, and it is bound, like any other suitor, by the judgment rendered.

It was suggested on the argument that real estate is more valuable in the city than in the country, and that for this reason a different mode for assessing damages done by the opening of a highway ought to prevail. But the constitutional convention evidently did not think so. It made no provision for classifying litigation by reference to the sums in controversy or the location of the property involved, and this is the first time I have ever heard the suggestion made that such a classification was desirable. Courts of justice weigh legal rights in the scales of reason, not in those of commerce, and protect the citizen whose scanty possessions are in the country with the same jealous care as the holder of corner lots in a great city. The established forms of procedure in courts of law are the same for all suitors. The value of the subject of litigation, the wealth of the litigants, their personal character, their race or previous condition, are circumstances of which the law takes no notice. The courts represent the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; wherever they sit their process goes out in the name, and their judgments are enforced by the power, of the Commonwealth, and their proceedings are no more affected by the classification of cities than are those of the legislative or executive departments of the state government.

It is also suggested that the constitutionality of the Act of 1887 is a legislative and not a judicial question, and that it should be left only to the judgment of the Legislature. This suggestion is as destitute of foundation as that we have just considered. The Legislature must exercise its powers within the lines laid down by the Constitution. What it shall do within these lines is a question that addresses itself to the wisdom and discretion of its members. Whether it shall disregard them and do that which the Constitution forbids is a question which, when such legislation is attempted, belongs to the courts. When they decline, if they ever do, to compel obedience to the Constitution, all check upon legislative power will be gone, and the door to all sorts of local and special laws which the Constitution proposes to close will be open as wide as in the worst days of omnibus legislation. What the law shall be upon a subject over which the Legislature has power is a legislative question. Whether the rate of interest shall be 4 per cent or 6 or 10, is a legislative question; for the Legislature has ample power over the whole subject. But whether there shall be one rate in Philadelphia, another in cities of the second class, still another in cities of the third class, and one different from all these for the rest of the State, is a judicial question, because the Constitution declares that laws on this subject shall be general and uniform; local laws providing different rates for different parts of the State would be a violation of the Constitution, and the duty of the courts to declare them absolutely void would be plain and imperative. So the manner in which taxes shall be levied and collected, and at what rate, are legislative questions. Whether the law be wise or unwise, easy or severe in its operation, the courts cannot interfere so long as it is general and uniform; but a tax of 10 cents on a dollar of the last adjusted valuation of the valuable real estate in cities of the first class, and of ten mills on the valuation of property in the rest of the State would violate the Constitution. Whether the law imposing such unjust and unequal taxes shall be executed is a judicial question.

7 L. R. A.

Whether the proceedings in road cases shall be wholly changed or not is for the Legislature to determine.

It may give us an entirely new system of procedure in such cases if it so decides. But when it attempts to change the practice in one city or class of cities alone, it is attempting local legislation of a mischievous kind which the Constitution forbids, and the question whether such a law shall be enforced is as purely a judicial question as it is easy to conceive.

Applying the conclusions we have reached to the Act of 1887, we hold that all the sections except the first and second are in violation of the Constitution and must fall. What is the situation of the two remaining sections? In answering this question let us see just how the law stood in the City of Philadelphia on the subject to which they relate when they were passed. The Act of 1874 made it the duty of road viewers in all cases where they located a road, public or private, to assess the damages to be sustained by property holders, if any, unless claims for such damages were released, and make return of such assessment with their report. This was a general law and was intended, probably, to cover all cases where damages might be sustained by reason of laying out and opening of public highways. In Philadelphia streets are projected by the city officers in advance of the immediate wants of the neighborhood and plotted on the city plans. These are called plotted streets. When it is desirable to open such a street, viewers are appointed by the court of quarter sessions to go upon the ground, investigate and report upon the necessity for such opening. When their report is confirmed and the opening determined upon, another view is appointed to assess damages done by, and benefits derived from, the opening of the new street. Did the Act of 1874 impose the duties of both sets of viewers upon that appointed to determine the necessity for opening the street? This question came first into this court in the Case of Jackson Street, 83 Pa. 328, and it was held that the Act of 1874 was inapplicable to the case of plotted streets, and that damages must be assessed under the local laws applicable before that Act was passed. This case was followed some years later by Magnolia Ave., 117 Pa. 56, 9 Cent. Rep. 611. The consequence of this ruling was to leave plotted streets remaining under the local system, while other streets were brought under the General Law.

The Acts of 1858, 1864 and 1866 were local, relating only to the City of Philadelphia. Under their operation the viewers who decided to open the road had nothing to do with the question of damages; and the viewers who adjusted the damages had nothing to say upon the necessity for opening the street. This inconvenience had been removed by the General Law of 1874 as to all the streets except the plotted ones.

What remained to be done was to repeal the local system and extend the provisions of the General Law relating to the duty of the viewers appointed to lay out streets, to those appointed to open streets laid out and plotted by the city. This is effectually done by the first and second sections. It is true that the form of the Act of 1887 is not that of a general law, not does it in terms profess to repeal the local system and extend the General Law in its place, but in substance and effect it provides for just the change needed. The fact is of more importance than the form, and the fact is that the Act of 1887 wipes out the old system by which the necessity for opening a street went to one view and the damages to another, and puts in its place the provisions of the General Law committing the assessment of damages to the viewers whose report in favor of opening made the assessment necessary. In this way both subjects come to the attention of the same viewers at the same time; and upon their report both subjects come to the attention of the court at the same time. These sections do not simply tend to uniformity, but they accomplish it. Their effect is to bring under one system, and that the system provided for the whole State, by general law, all cases of assessments of damages and benefits upon the laying out of new, or the opening of plotted, streets. It is true these sections relate only to cities of the first class, but so did the local laws which they supply. The remedy is as broad as the evil to be corrected. A law which repeals a local law must of necessity affect only the locality in which the local law prevailed, but it is not therefore a local law within the meaning of the Constitution. It does not set up, but it destroys, a local system and thereby extends the general law over the territory previously withdrawn from its operation. So with the Act of 1887 so far as the first and second sections are concerned. They take away the previously existing system for the assessment of damages for the opening of plotted streets which was local and rested on local laws, and put the system provided by general law in its place. For this reason we think they do not offend against the Constitution. These conclusions lead us to affirm Washington Street and to reverse the proceedings in Ruan Street.

Let judgment be entered accordingly.

Clark, J., and McCollum, J., concur in the judgment, but dissent from so much of the opinion as sustains the constitutionality of sections 1 and 2 of the Act of May 8, 1887.

Paxon, Ch. J., dissenting:

The difficulty we have had in deciding this and other cases involving the constitutionality of legislation affecting classified cities ought to admonish us that we are at sea without any recognized, intelligent rule to guide us. We have been struggling towards "uniformity," and making that a test of the constitutionality of this class of legislation, whereas the very object of classification is to allow a different rule in the classified cities from that prevailing in the rest of the State. I need not at this late day discuss the reasons which induced this court in Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 238, to adopt the principle of classification. It is sufficient to say that without it there might have been a dead lock in machinery of the government. Our present difficulty, and in my opinion it is a serious one, I think may be fairly attributed to our departure from the principles there laid down. The doctrine upon which that case rests is that legislation for classified cities is not local, and if it applies to classes, and not to persons or things of a class, it is not special. There is no other ground upon which classification can be sustained. An Act passed for all cities of a class is a general law and not local, for the reason that its operation is not confined to any one city. And if it applies to all persons or things of a class it is not a special law. As was said in Wheeler v. Philadelphia: "This construction does not open the door to special legislation. It permits legislation for classes, but not for persons or things of a class. As an illustration, it could not be held to authorize the Legislature to open a particular street in a city of either class named in the Act referred to."

It was this kind of special legislation which was the cause, in a great measure, of the adoption of this feature of the Constitution. It had often happened that when the courts or the councils of a city had refused to open a particular street, interested parties would procure the passage of an Act of Assembly ordering such opening. This was the evil which was prohibited by the Constitution, and it can no more exist now under classification than it can without it.

If, then, legislation for classified cities is neither local nor special, it does not come within the prohibition of art. 8, § 7, of the Constitution. It follows logically from this, as I view it, that it is for the Legislature to say what legislation is needed for a classified city, and that it is not a judicial question at all. This is a plain rule, easily understood, which leaves the Legislature free to enact such laws as the wants of classified cities require. Concede that it must be limited to matters affecting their government. What can be more vital to the good government and welfare of a city, and to the material interests of its inhabitants, than the control of its streets? Why may not a classified city have the power to direct the opening of streets and the assessment of the damages therefor? Must the damages for the widening of Chestnut Street, which may amount to millions of dollars, be assessed precisely in the same manner as for the opening of a road in the Hemlock Forests of Pocono Mountains? Why should we have an iron-clad, inflexible rule which cannot be enforced without injury to the one section or the other, when neither section demands it, or would be benefited by it? In my opinion all that relates to the local affairs of the municipality, the control of the streets, its gas and water supply, its markets and many other matters which might be mentioned, are proper subjects of municipal control and may be safely left to such municipalities. As to all such matters those communities can best govern themselves, and I do not think the Constitution prohibits, or was intended to prohibit, legislation conferring upon them such powers. If one class of cities desire certain regulations regarding its streets, or any other matter affecting the welfare of its inhabitants, why should it not have them when no other community is objecting or is injured thereby. And why should such regulations, if conferred upon one class of cities which desires them, be forced upon another class, or upon rural districts which do not desire them, and to whose wants they are utterly unsuited? The answer, and the only answer, to this, is, "We must have uniformity." This is all very well so far as the Constitution enjoins uniformity, but in my opinion neither that instrument nor the common good and welfare of the people require this principle to be carried to the extent claimed for it in the affairs of municipalities. It would be as reasonable to declare that all men should wear coats of the same size whether they fit them or not.

I am unable to see that the opinion of the majority of the court furnishes any fixed rule by which such legislation can be measured in the future. This particular case is decided, but if it furnishes a rule by which a lawyer can safely advise his clients in reference to future legislation, unless upon precisely similar facts, I fail to see it. If the legislation in regard to streets in the cities must be uniform with the rule in all other parts of the State, upon what subjects and to what extent may legislation be applied to classified cities? Until this question is answered specifically, I contend we have no rule at all. We have nothing but theories, and the most astute lawyer cannot safely pronounce an Act relating to classified cities constitutional, until after such Act has been passed upon by this court. In other words, the General Assembly may legislate for classified cities subject to the veto of this court. In my opinion it would be better to leave this whole subject to the wisdom of the Legislature, where, under the constitutional division of the powers of the government, it properly belongs.

For the reasons thus briefly indicated I dissent from this judgment.

Mitchell, J., concurs in this dissent.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. OF BALTIMORE CITY,
Appt.,

George A. SMITH,
and NINE OTHER CASES.

(.....Md.....)

The construction of a telegraph and telephone line on a railroad company's right of way imposes an additional servitude or burden on the land for which the owners are entitled to compensation unless it is constructed by the railroad company in good faith for its own use and benefit in the operation of the road and to facilitate its business, or is reasonably necessary for that purpose.

(Stone, J., dissents.)

(December 17, 1889.)

APPEALS from orders of the Circuit Court for Baltimore County. Affirmed.
The case is stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—Telegraph line along right of way of railroad.

A line of telegraph on a railroad right of way is an additional burden (see Atlantic & P. Teleg. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 6 Biss. 158; Lewis, Em. Dom. 191), unless constructed for the use of the railroad company in the operation of its road and dispatch of its business. W. U. Teleg. Co. v. Rich, 19 Kan. 517.

It is a proper use of its right of way where a railroad erects a telegraph line thereon or suffers the "line to be erected by a telegraph company for the joint use of both companies." W. U. Teleg. Co. v. Rich, 19 Kan. 517; Pierce v. Drew, 136 Mass. 75; New Orleans, M. & T. R. Co. v. Southern & A. Teleg. Co., 53 Ala. 211; W. U. Teleg. Co. v. Am. U. Teleg. Co., 65 Ga. 160; Baltimore & O. Teleg. Co. v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & Steamship Co., 37 La. Ann. 833; Lewis, Em. Dom. 355.

A railroad company can make a contract with a
7 L. R. A.

Mr. Robert R. Boarman for appellant.
Messrs. David G. McIntosh and W. Gill Smith, for appellee:

The averments of the bill are sufficient to authorize granting an order of injunction.

Western Maryland R. Co. v. Owings, 15 Md. 204; Frederick v. Groshon, 80 Md. 486.

A line of telegraph or telephone upon a railroad right of way is an additional burden.

Lewis, Em. Dom. § 1888; Mills, Em. Dom. § 55; Atlantic & P. Teleg. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 6 Biss. 158.

The utmost extent to which any exception to this rule is carried is where the telegraph line is constructed for the use of the railroad company, in the operation of its road, and the dispatch of its business.

W. U. Teleg. Co. v. Rich, 19 Kan. 517.

A right of way is an interest in land, which cannot be created, except in the mode and manner prescribed by the Statute.

Hays v. Richardson, 1 Gill & J. 366; Baltimore & H. R. Co. v. Algire, 63 Md. 819.

Assuming the Railroad Company had a right telegraph company, permitting it to establish a line of wire on its right of way, but cannot make an exclusive contract. In so doing it seeks to add an unlimited franchise to one which is itself limited. W. U. Teleg. Co. v. Am. U. Teleg. Co., supra; Mills, Em. Dom. 407.

The use by a telegraph company of the right of way of a railroad, for the purposes of erection and maintenance of a telegraph line, is an encroachment on the exclusive rights of the railroad. Atlantic & P. Teleg. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., supra; Southwestern R. Co. v. Southern & A. Teleg. Co., 46 Ga. 43.

And a special authority to a telegraph company to build upon, over or under any public road, street or highway is to be construed strictly and does not authorize construction over a railroad. New York City & N. R. Co. v. Central U. Teleg. Co., 21 Hun, 361; Lewis, Em. Dom. 355.

of way which it could assign, the grant is void as against public policy.

W. U. Teleg. Co. v. Am. U. Teleg. Co. 65 Ga. 160.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These ten cases were argued together, and as they present substantially the same questions, they will be disposed of in one opinion. They are all bills filed by separate land owners in Baltimore County seeking to enjoin the "American Telephone & Telegraph Company of Baltimore City," a corporation incorporated under the General Corporation Law of this State, from erecting telegraph poles, and constructing a telegraph or telephone line of wires on and over the lands of the several complainants. Eight of the appeals are from orders granting preliminary injunctions upon the several bills. It is well settled that in deciding an appeal from such an order this court can look only to the case made by the bill, though the defendant is required to file an answer before he can appeal, and the answer must appear in the record. Blackburn v. Craufurd, 22 Md. 447.

The question then is, Does each of these eight several bills make out a case for the granting of such an injunction?

The bills all aver and charge in substance that the defendant Company has recently deposited large and heavy poles upon the lands of the complainants along the line of the Maryland Central Railroad, and is engaged in setting up said poles, or is about to do so, without their permission or consent; that the erection of these poles and the stringing of wires thereon is injurious to their property and is an appropriation of private property for public use without compensation or tender thereof to the complainants, and that they are entitled to have the defendant restrained and enjoined from erecting said poles and stringing wires thereon on and over their lands until it has acquired the right to do so by condemnation of the lands for such use, or otherwise.

We have no doubt as to the sufficiency of these averments or of the jurisdiction of a court of equity to grant an injunction in such cases. A corporation created for the purpose of transmitting messages by telegram or telephone is, with respect to its right to construct its lines over private property, just as much subject to the provisions of art. 8, § 40, of the Constitution as is a railroad or any corporation clothed with the power of taking private property for public use. Lewis, Em. Dom. § 172; Mills, Em. Dom. § 21.

This clause of the Constitution is too plain to admit of any doubt, and the averment that the defendant is proceeding or threatens to proceed to construct its line of poles and wires on and over the complainants' land without their leave or license, and without paying or tendering to them compensation for the use of their lands for this purpose, is of itself enough. The court could not properly refuse an injunction in the face of such averment. The nature of the damage complained of, whether irreparable or not, has nothing to do with the question when thus presented. Western Maryland R. Co. v. Owings, 15 Md. 199.

We shall therefore affirm the orders appealed from in these eight cases without considering the question whether the appeals or any of them should be dismissed because of the fact that the answers of the defendant are not under its corporate seal.

In the other two cases [those of Smith and McIntosh], the appeals are from pro forma orders refusing to dissolve the injunctions upon bills, answers and proof. In these cases the defendant corporation in its answers avers that it is proceeding to construct its line of poles and wires along and on the right of way of the Maryland Central Railway Company, under a contract with that company made on the 29th of April, 1889, for the use and benefit of the railway company in operating and running its cars; that the railway company has the right to place telegraph poles and wires, and telephone wires and poles, over and upon its right of way for the use and operation of its railroad, and as many as may be necessary for operating its road, and for the safety of the public who travel over the same, for the purpose of facilitating the business of the road, and increasing its passenger travel and freight tonnage; and that the railway company could do this itself or employ some other company to do it for it, and the complainants have therefore no right to interfere.

These answers disclose what is obviously the real controversy in all these cases. On the one side the land owners from whom the railroad company obtained the right of way for the construction of its railroad insist that the construction of this telegraph and telephone line will impose an additional servitude or burden on their lands for which they are entitled to compensation, and that the line cannot be constructed until the corporation or corporations undertaking its construction have first complied with the requirement of the Constitution in regard to taking private property for public use. On the other hand the Telegraph & Telephone Company contends that it is constructing this line upon the right of way of the railroad company under a contract with that company for its use and to facilitate the operation of its road, and to increase its business, and in this contention it is aided by the railroad company. The right to construct this line has also been placed in argument, upon other grounds which will be noticed hereafter.

Before considering the facts we must ascertain the law applicable to such cases, and this is not altogether free from difficulty. Not many instances have occurred in which land owners have asserted such claims, and the cases in which the precise question before us has been raised are comparatively few. In the most recent text book on Eminent Domain it is said: "A line of telegraph on a railroad right of way is an additional burden unless constructed for the use of the railroad company in the operation of its road and dispatch of its business." Lewis, Em. Dom. § 141.

In Mills, on Eminent Domain, § 59, the author approvingly quotes part of the opinion of the court in W. U. Teleg. Co. v. Rich, 19 Kan. 517. That case is also referred to by Lewis, has been strongly pressed upon our attention, and therefore requires a careful examination. It was a suit by a land owner against the Western Union Telegraph Company to recover damages for cutting down trees on his land. The trees were on or close to the right of way of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad, and were cut down to make room for the telegraph poles and to prevent interference with the telegraph wires. The defendant sought to prove that the telegraph line was built jointly by it and the railroad company under an arrangement for its joint use by the two companies, and introduced a witness to prove that the line of telegraph was built jointly by the two companies for the use of the railroad company in the moving of its trains and the transaction of its business, that it was part of and necessary to its business, and was built on and over the right of way of the railroad company. The lower court rejected this testimony, and this ruling was held to be erroneous. This was the sole question decided and in deciding it the court said: "A telegraph line, if not indispensable to a railroad, tends so much to facilitate its business, and to the speedy and safe running of its trains, that the railroad company has a right to build it, to use its right of way therefor, and to remove all obstructions thereon to its fullest and most uninterrupted and beneficial use. Although it may have but an easement in the land, and that easement limited to its use for railroad purposes, yet a telegraph is so convenient, if not indispensable, that it may cut down every tree and bush on the right of way if necessary for the most constant and efficient use of a telegraph line built by it over and upon such right of way, just as it may dig away a hill or fill up a ravine for the sake of a water tank or a station-house. By so doing it gives the adjacent land owner no claim for damages. Such use is contemplated in the original condemnation, and the damages resulting therefrom are part of the damages included in the assessment thereof. In short, the railroad company may use its right of way not merely for its track, but for any other building or erection which reasonably tends to facilitate its business of transporting freight and passengers, and by such use in no manner transcends the purposes and extent of the easement, or exposes itself to any claim for additional damage to the original land owner. So that if the railroad company had built this line by itself and independent of the defendant and in doing so had only cut down trees upon its right of way, it is clear that the plaintiff would have no cause of action therefor. Does the fact that it took a partner in the construction and use of the telegraph expose it, or such partner, to any liability to the land owner for the full value of the trees cut down upon its right of way? We think not. If the railroad company could build by itself without liability, it did not assume liability by building with another. Whatever it could do and would have done for its own use and benefit, and was so done, was, so far as the land owner is concerned, damnum absque injuria, no matter who bore the expense; or perhaps, more correctly, it was damages already paid for. We do not question that every additional burden cast upon the land outside of the purpose and scope of the original easement, no matter in whose behalf, gives the land owner new claim for compensation. But such compensation is limited to the extent of the additional burden. Of course if the trees were not upon the right of way, it is immaterial whether the defendant built the line alone, or jointly with the railroad company, for, in the latter case, either would be responsible for the entire damages. We cannot, of course, pass upon this question of fact, for we cannot tell what the testimony, if admitted, would have disclosed. It is enough that the testimony offered ought to have been admitted, and then the jury instructed that if the facts were as defendant sought to prove them to be, the defendant was liable for only the damages caused by the additional burden, if any, its use of the telegraph cast upon the land."

7 L. R. A.

We have thus quoted this opinion at length, because it is a very clear statement of the law which we are willing to accept. It recognizes the right of the land owner to compensation for every additional burden cast upon the land outside the scope of the original easement, and that whether a given structure creates an additional servitude is a question of fact, depending on the circumstances of each case to be determined by the tribunal having jurisdiction to try the same, and before which it is tried. We cannot adopt the view taken by counsel for the appellant that this question must in all cases be determined by the judgment and opinions of the railroad officials or employees. In a case where the question was whether a certain building was a necessary building within the terms of a railroad charter, that question was determined by this court itself upon proof as to the character of the building, its location and the purposes for which it was constructed and used. Hamilton v. Annapolis & E. R. Co. 1 Md. 560.

We entertain no doubt whatever as to the right of a railroad company to construct on and over its right of way a telegraph or telephone line, for its use in the operation of its road and dispatch of its business; and it may do this by itself, or may employ another company to do it, or may do it conjointly with another company. If, then, this line is in process of construction, or is about to be constructed over the right of way of this railway company in good faith for the use and benefit of the latter in the operation of its road and to facilitate its business, or is reasonably necessary for that purpose, the land owners have no ground of complaint because such use of their land is within the scope of the original easement for which they have already received compensation. But, on the other hand, if this is not the motive for its construction, and the main object in constructing it is to establish an extensive line of telegraph and telephone communication through this and other States for general commercial purposes, for the use and benefit of the defendant, and such a line is not reasonably necessary for the purposes of the railroad, then it will be a new easement and put a new and additional burden upon the land for which the owners are entitled to compensation. This question will be decided when we come to consider the facts; but we must first notice the other grounds upon which the right to construct this line is sought to be placed.

By an Act of Congress, approved July 14, 1866, it is provided among other things "that any telegraph company now organized, or which may hereafter be organized under the laws of any State in the Union, shall have the right to construct, maintain and operate lines of telegraph over and along any of the military or post-roads of the United States, which have been or may hereafter be declared such by Act of Congress," provided such lines "shall not be so constructed as to interfere with the ordinary travel" on such roads, and provided also "that before any telegraph company shall exercise any of the powers or privileges conferred by this Act such company shall file its written acceptance with the postmaster general of the restrictions and obligations required by this Act." Congress afterwards, in 1872, declared all the railroads in the country which are now or may hereafter be in operation to be "post-roads." There is nothing in these records to show that the defendant has filed its acceptance of the Act of 1866, but as this can readily be done it is proper we should give our views of the construction and effect of these Statutes. We cannot suppose it was the intention of Congress by these enactments (even if it had the power to do so), to put the right of way of every railroad in the country at the mercy of the telegraph companies, and allow the latter to use them for the construction of their lines without making compensation to anyone therefor. Such a construction was wholly repudiated by Judge Drummond in the case of Atlantic & P. Teleg. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 6 Biss. 153, and by Judge Harlan in Western Union Teleg. Co. v. American Union Teleg. Co. 9 Biss. 72. In the latter case it is expressly said that under this Act the telegraph companies must obtain the consent of the owners of the right of way or condemn the same for telegraph purposes and make compensation therefor. We have not been able to discover that the views of these judges on this point have ever been overruled by the supreme court in any of its numerous decisions on this Statute. On the contrary, in Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. Western Union Teleg. Co., 96 U. S. 1 [24 L. ed. 708], that court said: "This Act gives no foreign corporation the right to enter upon private property without the consent of the owner, and erect the necessary structures for its business; but it does provide that whenever the consent of the owner is obtained, no state legislation shall prevent the occupation of post-roads for telegraph purposes by such corporations as are willing to avail themselves of its privileges;" and again: "No question arises as to the authority of Congress to provide for the appropriation of private property to the uses of the telegraph companies, for no such an attempt has been made. The use of public property alone is granted. If private property is required, it must, so far as the present legislation is concerned, be obtained by private arrangement with its owner. No compulsory proceedings are authorized. State sovereignty under the Constitution is not interfered with. Only national privileges are granted."

In all the cases in the supreme court where telegraph companies have constructed their lines on the right of way of railroad companies in the States, they appear to have done so by consent or under agreement with such companies, and in none of them has the question as to the right of the land owner to compensation for the additional burden thereof cast upon his land arisen. We have always understood that the right of way of a railroad chartered by and running through a State is the private property of the railroad corporation, and that the land through which it runs, subject to the easement of the railroad, is the private property of the respective land owners, and we cannot understand how Congress, by declaring such road to be a "post-road," can deprive either the railroad corporation or the land owners of these property rights, or how it can confiscate them for the benefit of telegraph companies; nor do we think it was the intention of Congress by these enactments to do any such thing. Whatever may be their effect in other respects, we think it clear they are not susceptible of the construction, and have not the effect sought to be given them by counsel for the appellant. In our judgment they do not give a telegraph company, when it proceeds to construct its lines over a railroad right of way, immunity from the restriction by which the Constitutions of all the States, as well as of the United States, have carefully protected the owners of private property when taken by the exercise of the power of eminent domain. In our opinion, therefore, these Acts give no aid to the defendant in regard to the question now before us; and much less does the subsequent Act, approved June 23, 1879, which is also relied on. This latter Act is the Appropriation Bill for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and in a paragraph making an appropriation for the cost of telegrams and for other purposes a clause is interjected which declares that "telegrams are authorized to be transmitted by railroad companies which may have telegraph lines and which shall have filed their written acceptance" of the Act of 1866, "for the government and for the general public at rates to be fixed by the government." It is obvious this clause has no bearing on the question now under consideration.

Again, it is contended that the defendant is empowered to construct this line by the statute law of this State, and cannot be restrained from doing so by injunction; but for any damage done to private property thereby the owners must seek redress by an action at law. For this position reference is made to the sections of the Code relating to telegraph companies, Code, art. 23, §§ 222-226.

All that need be said in regard to these sections is that, if they contain any provision authorizing the construction of telegraph lines on and over private property in the first instance, and then requiring the property owners to seek compensation afterwards by an action at law for damages, it is in conflict with the constitutional provision referred to, which requires the just compensation agreed upon or awarded by a jury to be first paid "or tendered," that is before the property is taken. This provision of the Constitution is of course controlling, and that it applies to the case of property taken for the construction of telegraph lines, there can, we think, be no reasonable doubt, for we regard it as now well settled that use of property for this purpose is a "public use." "A telegraph or telephone line," says Lewis, "designed for the service of the public and subject to regulation by the Legislature, is a public use for which property may be taken." Lewis, Em. Dom. § 172.

The term "public use" says Mills, "is flexible and cannot be confined to the public use known at the time of the framing of the Constitution. All improvements that may be made, if useful to the public, may be encouraged by the exercise of eminent domain. Any use of anything which will satisfy a reasonable demand for facilities for transmission of intelligence or of commodities would be a public use." Mills, Em. Dom. § 21.

The good sense of this proposition commends it to our approval and we adopt it. Casting an additional burden for such a purpose, on land already subject to an easement, is just as much taking it for public use as was the taking of it for the original easement; and as we have shown, courts of equity have in this State jurisdiction to prevent by injunction the prosecution of the work until the compensation is paid or tendered. The injunction does not, of course, prohibit the construction of the work but only suspends it till this provision of the Constitution has been complied with.

We must now examine the facts disclosed by the records in these two cases, for the purpose of deciding the question above stated.

"The Maryland Central Railway Company" is a recent successor to all the property, rights and franchises of "the Baltimore & Delta Railroad Company, a corporation formed under the Act of 1878, chap. 195, by the consolidation of three other companies, the eldest of which was incorporated by the Act of 1868, chap. 814. It has also acquired the property and franchises of "The Maryland Central Railroad Company," which was incorporated by the Act of 1867, chap. 121. Its road is a single-track narrow-gauge railroad running through Baltimore and Harford Counties from Baltimore City to the Village of Delta, in Pennsylvania, close to the Maryland line, a distance of forty-five miles, which was not completed and open for traffic throughout its entire length until the 21st of January, 1884. Three grants of right of way through complainants' lands were made in 1878 and 1879, and embrace strips of varying width, one being sixty-six, one forty and the other thirty feet. All the grants express that the land is to be used "for railroad purposes only," and the company could have acquired it for no other purpose by condemnation.

At the time the road was completed it had a line of telegraph poles with one wire thereon, which had been constructed by Augustus G. Davis under a contract with the company dated the 8th of August, 1883. By this contract Davis agreed to construct and maintain, at his own cost, a first-class telegraph line "along the right of way from Baltimore to Delta," the poles to be thirty-five feet in height, and to have thereon "for the exclusive use of the company, one number-nine galvanized wire," and "to furnish one set of telegraph instruments at every railroad station on the line," as the company may direct, and where it may have a station agent or operator and a station house. The company, on its part, agreed, among other things, to permit its operators to transact commercial telegraphic business on this line, "until such time as the business demands or necessities" of the company "may require the exclusive use of said wire," at which time Davis agreed "to furnish another, or other wire or wires for such business." He was also to receive the entire receipts from "commercial business for five years, and to have the right to place on the poles, at his own cost, as many wires for telephone, telegraph or other purposes, as he may require," provided he did not overburden the poles, "or render them unsafe for the wire or wires" of the company. It was also agreed that at stations where the company has no operators and Davis had "an operator or telephones," the company shall have "free use of the same, or either of the same, for railroad purposes or business." It was also agreed that the wire or wires designated as above for the use of the company should connect not only with its North Avenue station in Baltimore, but with such city offices as Davis may establish, he to deliver, free of charge, in the city, all messages relating to railroad business." The contract was to continue for ten years, with the privilege to the company of continuing it for another ten years, or of discontinuing it at its election; but if discontinued at any time, the company was bound to purchase the line of poles, wires and instruments used for its railroad business at a valuation to be fixed by arbitrators. Finally it was agreed that the company should have the privilege, "at its own expense, of placing an additional wire upon said poles for its own exclusive railroad business." With this line thus built by Davis, and with the single wire thereon, the railway company has managed the running of its trains, and conducted all the telegraphic communication necessary for its business since the road was completed to the present time. That line still exists, is still in operation performing all the necessary work of the company, and has, with all its appurtenances and instruments, been assigned and transferred to the railway company by the contract recently made with the defendant. There was and is no mechanical difficulty whatever in putting on these poles as many wires as the company may ever need for its business purposes, and its financial inability to do so, or to employ telegraph operators at all its stations, has nothing to do with the question we are to decide.

This was the state of things when the defendant Company intervened. It took out its Maryland charter on the 19th of March, 1889, and on the 19th of April following made the contract with the railway company. By this the Davis contract is annulled, and the railway company grants to the defendant the right, at its own cost, "to erect, maintain and operate a telegraph and telephone line upon, over and along the line of railway of said railway company between the City of Baltimore and the Village of Delta, and along, upon and over one side solely and only of the right of way." By the other clauses of this contract there is, so far as we can discover, after a careful examination of them, not a single substantial privilege granted to the railway company which it did not have under the Davis contract.

Shortly after the execution of this contract the defendant commenced placing on and erecting along this right of way, for the purpose of constructing its line, pine and cedar poles brought from Canada, which are long, heavy and large, varying in diameter from thirteen to nineteen inches. These poles whenever put up have arms ten feet in length for the support of wires, and are notched for a number of other similar arms. It is obvious that a structure of this character, and thus equipped, is not being put up in order to subserve or promote the business purposes of this railroad, and in no sense of the term can it be regarded as necessary, or reasonably necessary, therefor.

The bills charge that the corporate body called "The American Telegraph & Telephone Company" is organized for the purpose of establishing lines of communication at long distances by telegraph and telephone, and proposes to do business between the City of New York and cities south of it. This charge is not denied by the answers, and that such is the design of those engaged in the prosecution of this enterprise, and that the line over the right of way of this railroad is to be but a link in the chain of such communication, we have no doubt. This is shown by the character of the structure proposed to be built, by the testimony showing who are the corporators in the Maryland charter, and who own its stock, as well as by the terms of the contract itself made with the railway company, and still more conclusively by the fact, testified to by one of the witnesses, that the line has left the railroad at Forrest Hill before reaching its Delta terminus, and is being constructed towards another town in Pennsylvania. We think it clear that no intelligent person can read these records without coming to the same conclusion. Whether it be true or not that a railroad can be better managed as to the running of its trains by the telephone than the telegraph, the Davis contract provided for the use of telephones, and gave the railway company the free use of them whenever they were used by Davis. Again, assuming that this telegraph and telephone line would be a convenience to the railway company and save it some expense, still convenience and saving of expense do not meet the requirements of the law, as we have stated it, on the question before us.

We have thus considered the facts and circumstances of these cases, and find and decide that the construction of this new and additional line will impose a new servitude on the land of these complainants, and shall therefore affirm the orders appealed from.

Several other questions are presented by the briefs of counsel and have been to some extent argued by counsel, but the views we have expressed render it unnecessary to notice them at length. It is proper, however, to say that if any of the poles of this line, as erected, infringe upon the lands of the complainants outside of the railroad right of way, or if any of them have been guyed or stayed by wires fastened to trees standing on such land out of such right of way, these facts of themselves would entitle the complainants to an injunction.

Orders affirmed and causes remanded.

Stone, J., dissents.

Petition for reargument denied.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Phillip S. TAGGART et al.

v.

NEWPORT STREET R. CO.

(....R. I.....)

1. A provision in the charter of a street railway company requiring publication of notice to abutters upon streets in which it proposes to lay its tracks a certain time before their location does not require the insertion in the notice of a designation of the motive power intended to be used; especially where another section of the charter requires the use of such motive power as the city council shall direct.

2. A location of the tracks of a street railway company under authority of a city ordinance permitting the use of horse power only is not affected by the amendment of the ordinance so as to permit the use of electricity and the acceptance by the company of such amendment.

3. A charter permitting a street railway company to use horse or other power does not mean other animal power, but will permit the use of electricity as a motive power.

4. Where authority is given to a street railway company by one section of its charter to use electricity as a motive power, and such authority is broad enough to permit its use by means of any system of application which is approved as suitable, and the only successful way of using such power is to place poles upon the sidewalks, the placing of poles there will not be held to be prohibited by a subsequent section of the charter providing that the company shall not incur any portion of the streets not occupied by its tracks, especially where such provision is copied from the charters of companies authorized to use horse power only.

7 L. R. A.

5. The use of electricity by a street railway company as a motive power will not render its use of the street an imposition of an additional servitude thereon which will require the making of additional compensation therefor to the owner of the fee, where it does not appear that the occupation of the street is any more exclusive than though the road was operated by horse power.

6. The court will not take judicial notice that electricity, as used by a street railway company for the propulsion of its cars, is dangerous.

(January 18, 1890.)

BILL in equity to enjoin the erection and maintenance by defendant of poles and wires upon the public streets of the City of Newport for the purpose of propelling its cars by electricity. Dismissed.

Defendant was incorporated April 24, 1885, with the corporate name of the Newport Horse Railroad Company.

Its charter contained the following provisions:

"Sec. 2. Notice to abutters on streets or highways in which it may be proposed to lay the tracks of said corporation shall be given by the publication in one or more newspapers published in said City of Newport, fourteen days at least before the location of any such tracks, and also by posting in three public places in said city and towns aforesaid notice of said proposed location fourteen days at least before the same shall be made."

"Sec. 5. Said tracks or road shall be operated and used by said corporation with steam, horse or other power, as the councils of said city or towns may from time to time direct, and said corporation shall have power, from time to time and at all times, to fix such rates of fare as they may deem expedient, not exceeding ten (10) cents for each passenger between any two points on said road."

"Sec. 7. Said corporation shall put all streets and highways, and every portion thereof over or through which they shall lay any rails, in condition satisfactory to the highway authorities of said city and towns, and they shall keep and maintain in repair such portions of the streets and highways as shall be occupied by their tracks, and shall be liable for any loss or injury that any person shall sustain by reason of carelessness, neglect or misconduct of any of its agents and servants in the management, construction or use of said tracks or streets; and in case any damage shall be recovered against said city or either of said towns by reason of any such misconduct, defect or want of repairs, said corporation shall be liable to pay to said city or town any sums thus recovered against them, together with all costs and reasonable expenditures incurred by them in the defense of any such suit or suits in which recovery may be had, and said corporation shall not incur any portion of the street or highways not occupied by said tracks."

"Sec. 8. Whenever any estate abutting on a street or highway upon or over which the rails of said corporation shall be laid shall be injured thereby, the said corporation shall be liable to pay the owner or owners thereof, the damages thereby occasioned to said estate."

The corporate name of the company was changed to "Newport Street Railway Company" by Act of May 31, 1889.

The following notice was given under section 2 of the Act of April 24, 1885.

NOTICE.

HEARING ON LOCATION OF NEWPORT HORSE RAILROAD.

The Newport Horse Railroad Company, having presented its petition to the city council of the City of Newport praying for permission to construct, maintain and use a railway or railways with convenient single or double tracks and turnouts for cars and carriages, to be used for the transportation of passengers only, upon and over the streets above named, and crossing Thames Street and Bellevue Avenue, notice is hereby given that there will be a hearing upon said petition before the joint standing committee on streets and highways at the council chamber in the City Hall on Wednesday, September 5, 1888, at 8 o'clock P. M., at which time you may be present and be heard in relation thereto.

By order of Committee on Streets and Highways, Edward Newton, Chairman.

Newport R. I., August 25, 1888.

7 L. R. A.

On January 24, 1889, the city council of Newport passed an ordinance by which the Acts relative to the incorporation of the defendant were permitted to take effect within the limits of the city, and permission was granted to it to locate tracks, to be used with horse power and passenger cars only in certain named streets, and regulations as to the use of the streets, etc., were established.

On March 5, 1889, the above ordinance was amended so as to permit the company to use an electric system of motive power on its cars.

Section 2 of said ordinance was as follows:

"Sec. 2. Said Railroad Company is hereby authorized to erect and maintain, under the direction of the joint standing committee on streets and highways, a double line of poles, one line on each side of the street, in all of the streets and highways above named (except as hereinafter provided) for the support of its over-head wires used in connection with its electric system of motive power," etc.

When defendant proceeded to erect poles pursuant to the above ordinance this bill was filed by certain owners of property on streets upon which the poles were about to be erected, to enjoin it from so doing.

Messrs. Jabien L. Daires, Arnold Green and Patrick J. Galvin for complainants.

Messrs. Francis B. Peckham and Darius Baker for respondent.

Durfee, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This bill is brought by the complainants as abutters on certain streets in the City of Newport, along and over which the tracks or rails of the defendant Company's street railway have been laid. The object is to have the Company enjoined from erecting or maintaining certain poles and wires in the streets in front of their estates. Said poles were erected to support said wire over said tracks for the conduction of electricity, which is used as a motor for the passenger cars traversing said tracks. The poles are placed along the margins of the sidewalks of said streets about 120 feet apart, and are placed so by permission of the city council of the City of Newport, given by ordinance.

The case was submitted on bill and answer, no replication having been filed. The bill alleges several grounds of relief. We will consider them severally as alleged.

The first ground is that the Company did not give notice, as required by section 2 of the Act of Incorporation. Said section provides for notice to abutters to be given by publication and posting at least fourteen days before the location of tracks proposed to be laid. The bill alleges that the purpose for which the notice was required was to apprise the abutters "of the nature and extent of the proposed use of the streets and highways," and to afford them an opportunity to appear before the city and town councils having power over the matter and be heard in relation thereto. The bill admits that a notice was given in August and September, 1888, but avers that it was defective in that it did not set forth that any other than horse power was intended to be used. The answer states that said notice did not refer to the matter of power, and maintains that any reference to it therein was unnecessary, since section 2 prescribes notice only before action in regard to the location of the tracks. This is so. It is section 5 that relates to the power. That section provides that "said tracks or road shall be operated and used by said corporation with steam, horse or other power, as the councils of said city and towns may from time to time direct." No notice is required before such direction.

The ordinance in regard to location was passed January 24, 1889. It permitted the use of horse power only. The ordinance permitting the use of electricity was passed March 5, 1889. It seems to us that the latter ordinance was clearly authorized by section 5 in the words above quoted. The previous location of the tracks was not affected thereby.

The second ground alleged is that the right to use electricity is not given. The language in regard to the power to be used is that above quoted, namely, that the road shall be operated "with steam, horse or other power as the councils of said city and towns may from time to time direct." The complainants contend that the word "steam" must be struck out because it has been decided that steam cannot be used without compensation to the owners of the fee for the new servitude imposed, and no compensation is provided for, and because, "steam" being struck out, "other power" must be construed to mean other power similar to horse power, i. e., other animal power. We do not find the argument convincing. Allowing that "steam" must be struck out for the reason given, it does not follow in our opinion that "other power" must be construed to mean other animal power. Horse power is the only animal power which has ever been used for the traction of street railway cars in our northern cities, and it is the only animal power which could have occurred to the General Assembly as fit to be used. The suggestion that "other power" may mean mules cannot be entertained. The Act of Incorporation was passed in the winter of 1885, when the idea that electricity might be brought into use as a motor was already familiar, and nothing seems more probable than that the words "other power" were inserted with a view to its possible employment. We do not think the second ground valid.

The third ground is that the erection of the poles on the sidewalks is in effect prohibited by the Act of Incorporation. The seventh section, which relates to the repairs of the street where the tracks are, and to damages for negligence on the part of the Company, concludes as follows, to wit: "And said corporation shall not incur any portion of the streets or highways not occupied by said tracks." The poles are certainly in a portion of the streets not occupied by the tracks; but do they incur that portion, in the meaning of the word as it is used? To incur, according to Webster, is "to impede the motion or action of, as with a burden; to weigh down; to obstruct, embarrass or perplex." To incur, as used in said section 7, doubtless means to obstruct or hinder travel by putting things in the way of it. The poles are very slightly in the way of travel, being placed as hitching posts, lamp-posts, electric-light poles, telegraph and telephone poles are placed, near the front margins of the sidewalks. We are not inclined to say, however, that they do not incur because they are placed as they are, but only that it does not follow that they incur because they are so placed. Take, for instance, a lamp-post or an electric light pole. It is slightly in the way, and, if it served no useful purpose in regard to the street, might justly be deemed to incur it. But it supports a lamp, or an electric light, which illuminates the street at night and so improves the street for its proper uses. It is not, therefore, an incumbrance in any proper sense of the word. The real question is, as it seems to us, whether the words "And said corporation shall not incur any portion of the streets or highways occupied by said tracks," were intended to restrain the city council of the City of Newport from authorizing the use of electricity for a motor in the manner in which it is used by the Company.

We have already decided that the council has power by section 5 to authorize the use of electricity, so that the question relates only to the manner of using, and is, whether the council has power to authorize the use in said manner. It seems to us that the provision that the tracks or road shall be operated by "steam, horse or other power, as the councils of said city and towns may from time to time direct," is broad enough to empower said councils not only to authorize the use of electricity as a motor but also to authorize its use by means of any system of application which it approves as suitable; and it further seems to us that the concluding words of section 7 have their full meaning when applied to the Company acting of itself, without extending them to city and town councils acting under section 5 or to the Company acting under said section as authorized by such councils. It appears that said concluding words were copied from charters of street railway companies which were only authorized to use horse power, and in which of course they could have had no such application as is here contended for. It also appears from the allegations of the answer that the mode of using electricity which has been adopted is the only mode in which it can be successfully used by the Company for the operation of the road. These are things which confirm our view. Our conclusion is that the power conferred by section 5 is not qualified by the concluding words of section 7, and that the poles complained of, having been erected under section 5 as part of the apparatus for supplying the railway with its motive power, are to be regarded, not as incumbering the streets, but as ministering to their uses and as increasing the facilities for travel which they afford to the public.

The fourth ground alleged is that if the Act of Incorporation authorizes the use of electricity for the operation of said street railway and the erection of the poles as ancillary thereto, it is unconstitutional and void because it authorizes the imposition of an additional servitude upon the streets without providing for any additional compensation to the owners of the fee of said street. We think it is settled by the greater weight of decision that a railroad constructed in a street or highway and operated by steam in the usual manner imposes a new servitude and entitles the owner of the fee to an additional compensation, but that a street railway operated by horse power, as such street railways are ordinarily operated, does not impose any new servitude and does not entitle the owner of the fee to any additional compensation. Mills, Em. Dom. § 205 and cases cited; Angell, Highways, § 91 d, note 1 and cases cited; Newell v. Minneapolis, L. & M. R. Co. 35 Minn. 112; also 25 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 481, and cases cited in the note.

The distinction is often stated as a distinction between steam and horse railroads, but the distinction properly rests, not on any difference in motive power, but in the different effects produced by them respectively on the highways or streets which they occupy. A steam railroad is held to impose a new servitude, not because it is operated by steam, but because it is so operated as to be incompatible with the use of the street in the other usual modes, or, in other words, so as practically to exclude the usual modes of use. Pierce, Railroads, 284. A steam railroad on a street so operated as to be consistent with the use of the street in the usual modes has been held not to impose a new servitude. Newell v. Minneapolis, L. & M. R. Co. supra; Fulton v. Short Route Railway Transfer Co. 85 Ky. 640.

It is not the motor, but the kind of occupation, whether practically exclusive or not, which is the criterion. Briggs v. Lewiston & A. Horse R. Co. 79 Me. 368, 4 New Eng. Rep. 546.

A steam railroad, as ordinarily operated, it has been said, comes into serious conflict with the usual modes of travel, and is a perpetual embarrassment to them, in greater or less degree according as the business of the railroad is greater or less or as the running of the trains is more or less frequent; whereas the ordinary street railway, instead of adding a new servitude to the street, operates in furtherance of its original uses, and, instead of being an embarrassment, relieves the pressure of local business and local travel. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 62. See also Atty-Gen. v. Metropolitan R. Co. 125 Mass. 515; Citizens Coach Co. v. Camden Horse R. Co. 33 N. J. Eq. 267; Elliot v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. 32 Conn. 579; Hobart v. Milwaukee City R. Co. 27 Wis. 194.

The only considerable privilege which the horse-car has over other vehicles is that, being confined to its tracks, it cannot turn aside for other vehicles, while they are forced to turn aside for it; but this is an incidental matter, insufficient to make the horse railroad a new servitude. Shea v. Potrero & B. V. R. Co. 44 Cal. 414.

The street railway here complained of is operated neither by steam nor horse power, but by electricity. It does not appear, however, that it occupies the streets or highways any more exclusively than if it were operated by horse power. The answer avers that "electricity, besides being as safe and as easily managed as horse power for the propulsion of street cars, is more quiet, more cleanly and more conven-ent than horses, both for residents on the streets used by said cars and for the public generally, and also causes much less wear and injury to the streets and highways than is occasioned by street cars of which horses are the motive power." These averments, the case being heard on bill and answer, must be taken as true. We see no reason to doubt their truth. It is urged that electricity is a very dangerous force, and that the court will take judicial notice of its dangerousness. The court will take judicial notice that electricity developed to some high degree of intensity is exceedingly dangerous, and even fatally so, to men or animals when it is brought in contact with them, but the court has no judicial knowledge that, as used by the defendant Company, it is dangerous. The answer denies that it is dangerous to either life or property. It is also urged that the cars, moving apparently without the application of external force, alarm and frighten horses. This, so far as it is alleged in the bill, is denied in the answer. We see no reason to suppose that this form of danger is so great that, on account of it, the railway should be regarded as an additional servitude. The answer alleges that a great many street railways, operated by electricity, in the same manner as the railway of the defendant is operated, are in use in various towns and cities in different States, and that many others are in process of construction.

Reference has been made to cases which hold that telegraph or telephone poles and wires erected on streets or highways constitute an additional servitude, entitling the owners of the fee to additional compensation, and from these cases it is urged that the railway here complained of is an additional servitude by reason of the poles and wires which communicate its motive powers. There are cases which hold as stated, and there are cases which hold otherwise. But assuming that telegraph and telephone poles and wires do create a new servitude, we do not think it follows that the poles and wires erected and used for the service of said street railway likewise create a new servitude. Telegraph and telephone poles and wires are not used to facilitate the use of the streets where they are erected for travel and transportation, or, if so, very indirectly so; whereas the poles and wires here in question are directly ancillary to the uses of the streets as such, in that they communicate the power by which the street cars are propelled.

It has been held, for reasons which we consider irrefragable, that a telegraph erected by a railroad company within its location for the purposes of its railroad, to increase the safety and efficiency thereof, does not constitute an additional servitude, but is only a legitimate development of the easement originally organized. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Rich, 19 Kan. 517.

Our conclusion is that the complainants are not entitled to the relief prayed for on the ground alleged, and that the bill be dismissed, with costs.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Louis S. FISKE et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK of Butte, Montana.

(.....Pa.....)

A letter from one expecting a consignment of goods for sale on commission to a bank, stating that the writer will honor the con-signor's drafts with bill of lading attached, must be read in the light of a usage of trade known to both parties for the consignor to draw for an amount not exceeding three fourths of the value of the consigned goods, and will render the writer liable only for such amount.

(March 17, 1890.)

ERROR to the Court of Common Pleas,
No. 4, of Philadelphia County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover the amount of certain drafts which plaintiff had cashed in reliance upon an alleged promise by defendants to honor them. Reversed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.
*Messrs. Frank P. Prichard and John
G. Johnson* for plaintiffs in error.

*Messrs. J. Levering Jones, Hampton
L. Carson and Alfred I. Phillips*, for defendant in error:

A promise to accept a draft to be drawn in the future, describing it with reasonable certainty, is equivalent to an actual acceptance.

Coolidge v. Payson, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 66 (4
L. ed. 185); Steman v. Harrison, 42 Pa. 49;
Spaulding v. Andrews, 48 Pa. 411.

The payer of a draft is not bound to see that an acceptor receives a consignment intended to cover the draft, although he knew that the acceptance was given on the sole faith and credit of the shipment.

Craig v. Sibbett, 15 Pa. 238; *Bockoren v.
Bank*, 11 W. N. O. 570.

The words "with bill of lading attached," added to the acceptance, are intended to mark the transaction or serve some purpose between the drawer and acceptor, but do not concern the payee.

Tassey v. Church, 4 Watts & S. 346; Merchants Bank v. Griswold, 72 N. Y. 472; Cuffman v. Campbell, 87 Ill. 99; United States v Bank of Metropolis, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 396 (10 L. ed. 781).

McCollum, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants were engaged in the business of receiving and selling wool on commission, in the City of Philadelphia, and James R. Reid was a shipper of wool, doing business at Butte, Montana. On the 23d of May, 1887, the defendants wrote to the plaintiff as follows:
"We expect to have some business with Mr.
Jas. R. Reid when the wool season opens, in which case we will honor his drafts with bill lading attached."

On the 12th of August, 1887, the plaintiff cashed Reid's draft on the defendants for $4,007.80 with bill of lading attached for 22,285 lbs. of wool shipped by Reid to defendants at Philadelphia, and on the next day a like draft for $2,752.97 with a like bill of lading attached for 14,951 lbs. of wool. The defendants refused to honor these drafts, or to receive the wool described in the bills of lading attached, on the ground that Reid in drawing drafts for these amounts had exceeded his authority. The drafts with the bills of lading attached were returned to the plaintiff, and at

NOTE.—Bill of exchange or draft; acceptance.

The acceptance of a bill of exchange is the drawee's agreement to pay it when it falls due.
Gallagher v. Nichols, 60 N. Y. 438; Ray v. Faulkner, 73 Ill. 469; Byles, Bills, 187; Chitty, Bills and Notes, 513; Bouvier, L. Dict.

It is a promise to pay it according to its terms.
Bonnell v. Mawha, 37 N. J. L. 200.

A promise to accept may be enforced as a valid contract. Mason v. Dousay, 35 Ill. 424; *Bissell v.
Lewis*, 4 Mich. 460; Bank of Rutland v. Woodruff, 34
Vt. 80.

An agreement for an acceptance is equivalent to an acceptance if it describes the bill particularly, and if the bill be taken on the faith of it. *Coolidge
v. Payson*, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 66 (4 L. ed. 185); *Payson
v. Coolidge*, 2 Gall. 233; Russell v. Wiggins, 2 Story, 213; Wildes v. Savage, 1 Story, 22; Read v. Marsh, 5
B. Mon. 8; Crowell v. Van Bibber, 18 La. Ann. 637;
Banorjee v. Hovey, 5 Mass. 11; Murdock v. Milla, 11
Met. 6; Goodrich v. De Forest, 15 Johns. 6; *Burns v.
Rowland*, 40 Barb. 368; Bayard v. Lathy, 2 McLean, 462; Steman v. Harrison, 42 Pa. 49; *Ulster Co. Bank
v. McFarlan*, 5 Hill, 432; Ontario Bank v. Worthington, 12 Wend. 598; Bank of Michigan v. Ely, 17
Wend. 508; Cassel v. Dows, 1 Blatchf. 335; *Storer v.
Logan*, 9 Mass. 565; Jones v. Council Bluffs Branch Bank, 34 Ill. 313.

A letter promising payment of a bill amounts to an acceptance (Wynne v. Raikes, 5 East, 514; or a telegram. Whilden v. Merchants & P. Nat. Bank,
7 L. R. A.

64 Ala. 1; First Nat. Bank v. Clark, 61 Md. 401; *Central
Sav. Bank v. Richards*, 109 Mass. 413; *Coffman
v. Campbell*, 87 Ill. 98.

An agreement on the part of a stranger to the bill to pay it at maturity if the drawee does not is an acceptance for honor or an acceptance supra protest. 1 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 5; *Jackson v.
Hudson*, 2 Camp. 447; Byles, Bills, 190. See also Markham v. Hazen, 49 Ga. 570; Walton v. Williams, 44 Ala. 847; May v. Kelly, 27 Ala. 497; *Jenkins v.
Hutchinson*, 13 Q. B. 744; Davis v. Clarke, 6 Q. B. 16;
Lewin v. Brunetti, Lutw. 371 (Fol. 896); *Brunetti v.
Lewin*, Carth. 129.

Letters of credit.

A letter requesting one person to make advances to a third person on the credit of the writer is a letter of credit. *Mechanics Bank v. New York & N.
H. R. Co.* 4 Duer, 480, 13 N. Y. 599; *Birkhead v.
Brown*, 5 Hull, 634; Story, Bills, § 459; 2 *Daniel, Neg.
Inst.* 800.

The liability of one who accepts or agrees to accept a bill is governed by the law of the place of acceptance. Boyce v. Edwards, 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 111 (7
L. ed. 799); Souder v. Union Nat. Bank, 61 U. S.
408 (23 L. ed. 245). Compare Lonsdale v. Lafayette Bank, 18 Ohio, 126. See note to Hopps v. Savage (Md.) 1 L. R. A. 648.

Agreement to accept promise by telegram. Lindley v. First Nat. Bank, 3 L. R. A. 709, 76 Iowa, 622.

Reid's instance the bills of lading were forwarded to Justice Bateman & Co., wool merchants in Philadelphia, who had them indorsed by the consignees, delivered them to the carrier, received the wool described in them and sold it in the market for its full value. The proceeds of this sale were received by the plaintiff and were $1,430.82 less than the amount called for by the drafts. This action was brought to recover the difference.

The rights of the parties depend on the proper construction of the defendants' letter. The plaintiff contends that it constituted an undertaking, on their part, to honor all drafts which Reid might draw upon them, with bill of lading attached, without regard to the value of the consignment.

It is averred in the affidavit of defense that the plaintiff knew that the business referred to in this letter was the shipping of wool for sale on commission; that it was a usage of the trade for the shipper when he consigned the wool to his factor, to draw on the latter for any amount not exceeding three fourths of the value or selling price of the wool at the time of its arrival at the place of its destination, and for the factor to make advances on the wool by paying these drafts. It is further averred that "it was understood by the plaintiff that the drafts to be honored by the defendants were to be honored on the security of the wool, bills of lading for which were attached to the drafts, and were not to exceed in amount the customary advances on such wool."

A usage, if known to the parties to a transaction to which it relates, is obligatory, and, unless excluded by the terms of the contract, enters into and is regarded as a part of it, as much as though it had been written therein. Stultz v. Dickey, 5 Binn. 287; Hureh v. North, 40 Pa. 241.

It is admissible to add incidents to a contract which are not inconsistent with its terms, and to ascertain the intention of the parties in reference to matters about which the contract is silent. Clarke's Browne, Usages and Customs, p. 167.

The usage described in the affidavit is not unreasonable or in conflict with positive law. It does not contradict the terms of the instrument on which the plaintiff relies, but it explains them and gives effect to the intention of the parties. The letter of the defendants must be read in the light of the usage known to the parties and applicable to the transaction between them. When so read it is fatal to the plaintiff's claim for the overdraft.

We think the affidavit presents a good defense to the action.

Judgment reversed, and procedendo awarded.
Clark, J., absent.

Patrick McCULLOUGH, Committee, etc., of Thomas J. McAneny, a Lunatic, Appt.,

EXPRESSMENS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION of Pennsylvania.

(..... Pa. ....)

The insanity of a member of a benefit society brings him within the provisions of its rule that 7 L. R. A.

every member who, through sickness or other disability, is unable to follow his usual business or some other occupation whereby he may earn a livelihood for himself and family, shall be entitled to certain benefits.

(March 10, 1890.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 3, of Philadelphia County in favor of defendant upon a point of law reserved after verdict for plaintiff in an action to recover sick benefits alleged to have accrued by reason of membership in a mutual benefit association. Reversed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Messrs. John F. Develin and W. Horace Hepburn, for appellant:

Insanity has always been regarded as a disease and comes strictly within the meaning of the term "sickness;" when, therefore, by the laws of a society, benefits are promised on account of sickness, a member who has become insane is entitled to sick benefits.

Burton v. Eyden, L. R. 8 Q. B. 295; Kelly v. Ancient Order of Hibernians, 9 Daly, 292; Niblack, Mut. Ben. Societies, § 173; Pellazzino v. St. Joseph's Society, 16 Cin. L. Bul. 27.

Mr. Thomas R. Elcock, for appellee:

A member of an incorporated beneficial society does not stand in the relation of a creditor to the society.

St. Patrick's Beneficial Society v. McVey, 92 Pa. 510.

If the benefits are not a debt, the committee of his estate cannot have an action for their recovery.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The jury have found for the plaintiff, and we must therefore assume that all the necessary facts were duly proved. This disposes of a considerable part of the argument for the appellee, and leaves open to us only the question of law involved in the point reserved, whether insanity is sickness or disability within the meaning of the contract.

The operative words are contained in the following passages from the constitution and by laws of the Association:

Const., art. 9: "Every member . . . who through sickness or other disability is unable to follow his usual business or some other occupation whereby he may earn a livelihood for himself and family shall be entitled to such sums (as weekly benefits) as the by-laws shall specify;" and

By-Laws, art. 13, § 1: "Any member who after twelve months' membership, through sickness or disability is unable to follow his usual or some other business or occupation whatsoever, . . . shall receive," etc.

We cannot regard the meaning of this language as at all doubtful. That insanity is a sickness in some senses of the word is beyond question, and such legal authorities as appear to have considered the question hold that it is sickness within the meaning of such charters and articles of association as the defendants.

Thus, in Burton v. Eyden, L. R. 8 Q. B. 295, an action against a "friendly society," the English designation of associations like the present appellee, the words of the by-law were, "during any sickness or accident that may befall him." Blackburn, J., said: "I am of opinion that lunacy is sickness within the meaning of the rules of this society. . . . Insanity depends on the state of mind and body of the person. . . . It certainly seems to me that lunacy is a sickness affecting the health of the body in such a way as to prevent a man's ability of earning his livelihood. If it were not the intention to include it, the rules of the society should be framed so as expressly to exclude it," and Quain, J., said further: "I am also of opinion that insanity is sickness within the society's rules. . . ." The words entitling the member to relief are, "during any sickness or accident," except certain excluded cases, insanity not being one.

In Kelly v. Ancient Order of Hibernians, 9 Daly, 293, Van Brunt, J., says: "Insanity has always been considered a disease, and comes strictly within the meaning of the term 'sickness.'"

And in Pellazzino v. St. Joseph's Society, 16 Cin. L. Bul. 27, it is assumed by Harmon, J., apparently without question by either party, that insanity entitles a member of such a society to sick benefits.

But even if the extent of the word "sickness" were doubtful, the present case is relieved of all difficulty by the additional phrase "other disability." The purpose of the Association is defined by article 2 of the Constitution as the accumulation of a fund to enable the members "to assist each other in cases of accident, sickness or other distress, and their families in case of death." The common class of those who are expected to need the benefits is defined in article 9, as already said, as those who, through sickness or other disability, are unable to follow their usual or some other business whereby they may earn a livelihood for themselves and their families. To this class is added another in article 10, to wit: the families of members who die, and members themselves whose wives die. The latter are clearly examples of that pecuniary distress which is enumerated in the Constitution among the ills which it is the object to relieve. But the main idea throughout is the assistance of those who are incapacitated for earning their living, and the condition that the incapacity shall be from "sickness or other disability" is as comprehensive as language could well make it. If insanity is not sickness, it is certainly disability and clearly within the prescribed condition for aid. Certain excepted cases are specified, but not only is insanity not one of them, but all of those which are thus specified, such as want of membership for twelve months, arrearages to the association, or sickness originating from intemperance, vicious or immoral conduct, either fail in some necessary requirement, or bear some taint of fault which takes them out of the category of the innocent unfortunate for whom the relief is intended. If any of these exceptional facts were charged against the plaintiff, the verdict of the jury has settled them in his favor, and there is no reason shown why he should not have the relief to which, under the rules of the Association, his disability entitles him.

Judgment reversed, and new judgment for plaintiff on the verdict.

Clark, J., absent.

7 L. R. A.

Oliver ROOP and Wife, Appts.,

REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT CO.

(...Pa....)

A married woman is not empowered to bind herself by a judgment note, by the provisions of the Married Person's Property Act of June 3, 1887 (Pub. Laws, 532); at least if it is not given in the management, or for the benefit of her separate estate, or in the prosecution of any business in which she is engaged or for necessities.

(February 24, 1890.)

A PPEAL by defendants from an order of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 3, of Philadelphia County discharging a rule to open a judgment entered against them on a judgment note, and to let them into a defense. Reversed as to the female defendant.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Mr. Thomas Diehl, for appellants:

The bond of a married woman is void.

Dorrance v. Scott, 3 Whart. 309; Sellers v. Heinbaugh, 9 Cent. Rep. 768, 117 Pa. 224.

Those cases which permit married women to bind their separate property are exceptions to a general rule of sound policy, and ought to be strictly confined within the limits prescribed.

Schlosser's App. 58 Pa. 495.

"The Married Person's Property Act" of June 3, 1887, should be construed in accordance with the doctrine announced in the above case.

Endlich, Married Women, § 101; Mahon v. Gormley, 24 Pa. 82; Huyler v. Atwood, 26 N. J. Eq. 504; New England Nat. Bank v. Smith, 48 Conn. 327.

The record reveals no contract within the power of a married woman to make, and the judgment entered in the court below is irregular and void.

Ringwalt v. Brindle, 59 Pa. 51; Com. v. Hoffman, 74 Pa. 111; Post v. Wallace, 110 Pa. 125.

The record and pleadings must disclose a cause of action against a married woman within the provisions of the Act, and, if not, the defect is fatal, and the judgment entered will be reversed.

Park v. Kleber, 87 Pa. 254; Dearie v. Martin, 78 Pa. 58; Hecker v. Hoak, 88 Pa. 242; Hoff v. Koerber, 103 Pa. 398; Gould v. McFall, 1 Cent. Rep. 853, 111 Pa. 67; Fenn v. Early, 4 Cent. Rep. 288, 118 Pa. 268; Needham v. Woolens, 14 W. N. C. 526; Baker v. Singer Mfg. Co. 122 Pa. 370.

Mr. John J. Ridgway, for appellees:

Whenever the consideration goes into the married woman's actual or constructive possession the contract is a contract for the benefit of her estate.

Williams v. King, 43 Conn. 561-572; Battin v. Dillaye, 87 N. Y. 85; Tierner v. Turnquist, 85 N. Y. 521; Endlich, Married Women, § 131.

NOTE.—Married women; disability to contract. See note to Speler v. Opfer (Mich.) 2 L. R. A. 845.

The power given to her by statute does not extend to a joint contract with her husband. Ibid.

Executory contracts of, Cook v. Walling (Ind.) 3 L. R. A. 769.

Paxson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an appeal from the order of the court below refusing to open a judgment entered by the Real Estate Investment Co. v. Oliver Roop and Fanny C. Roop, appellants, in the sum of $680. The said Fanny was the wife of the said Oliver Roop, but this does not appear on the face of the note upon which the judgment was entered. The petition which was filed in the court below is not printed in the paper book, hence we have no certain knowledge of the specific grounds upon which the judgment was asked to be opened, and we might well dismiss the case for this reason alone. We learn from the docket entries, however, that the application was on behalf of both defendants, and from the agreements of counsel, (a) that the note was usurious; and (b) that the defendant, Fanny C. Roop, was a married woman, and as such, had no power to bind herself by a judgment note.

As to the first proposition, the depositions show that only $700 was loaned to the defendants; but as the plaintiff concedes this, and also alleges that it was a loan with the judgment note as collateral, and that no more than the $500 with interest is claimed, there would seem no good reason why the court below should open the judgment and order an issue to try a fact which is not disputed.

The second ground of relief is more serious. On behalf of Fanny C. Roop, it was contended "that, as the record of the judgment reveals no contract within the power of a married woman to make, it is irregular as to Fanny Roop and cannot stand." The judgment is entirely regular upon its face, as the record does not show that Fanny C. Roop is a married woman. The depositions do show it, however, and the fact is not denied.

The plaintiff contends that under the Act of June 8, 1837 (Pub. Laws, 832), known as the "Married Person's Property Act," a married woman has the power generally of confessing judgments, and refers us to the third section of said Act as confirming it. Said section is as follows: "A married woman may make, execute and deliver leases of her property, real and personal, and assignments, transfers and sales of her separate personal property, and notes, bills, drafts, bonds or obligations of any kind, and appoint attorneys to act for her, and it shall not be necessary for her husband to be made a party thereto or joined therein."

This language is certainly very broad, and is a part of the legislation, commencing in 1848, the object of which evidently is to emancipate married women from the restraints of the common law to a certain extent, and to enable them to act as a feme sole in respect of their property. It is not necessary for us to express an opinion of the wisdom of this legislation. We have followed the Legislature cautiously, and have, as was our duty, given effect to these Acts to the extent of their plainly expressed meaning; but it is so radical in its character, and so wide a departure from the common law, that we have been careful not to extend the force of any of these Acts by judicial construction.

The Act of 1887 certainly does go very far in enlarging the powers of married women. The first section gives them the power of a feme sole as to the acquisition, ownership, possession, control, use or disposition of property of any kind in any trade or business in which they may engage, or for necessities, and for the use, enjoyment and improvement of their separate estate, and to "make contracts of any kind, and to give obligations binding herself therefor." The only restriction upon the powers thus conferred is found in the proviso at the end of the section. It is as follows: "Provided, however, that a married woman shall have no power to mortgage or convey her real estate, unless her husband join in such mortgage or conveyance."
7 L. R. A.

The second section declares that a married woman may bind herself by contracts relating to any trade or business in which she may engage, or for necessities, and for the use and enjoyment of her separate estate, and may sue and be sued, etc., in all respects as if she were a feme sole; "provided, however, that nothing in this or the preceding section shall enable a married woman to become indorser, guarantor or security for another."

Then follows the third section, which I have already quoted. It was contended that this section gives her the general power to contract, which would of course include the power to confess a judgment. If, however, it was intended to confer this broad power, and place a married woman on the same plane with a feme sole it could have been done in a few lines, declaring that hereafter a feme covert should have the same power to contract debts as a feme sole. For such a purpose it was unnecessary to frame an Act with seven sections. We do not think it was intended to confer a power to contract generally. Of what use would be the restriction, contained in the first section, that she shall have no power to mortgage or convey her real estate without her husband joining in such mortgage or conveyance, if she may bind her real estate by confessing a judgment for general purposes? The third section must be read in connection with the other sections and the Act considered as a whole. Viewed in this light, it unfetters a married woman, subject to the restrictions before mentioned, for three purposes, viz., (1) where she engages in trade or business; (2) in the management of her separate estate; and (3) for necessities. For any of these purposes she may bind herself and her estate or business by her contract, and I have no doubt may lawfully confess a judgment. But beyond this we do not think the Act confers any power. It is entirely proper that the law should clothe her with sufficient power to properly manage her separate estate. And when it authorizes her to embark in business it is right that she should be held to her contracts, which can only be done by authorizing her to make such contracts. So in regard to necessities. If she may purchase them she should be authorized to bind herself and her estate for them in the usual manner and by the usual forms by which contracts are made by persons sui juris. But we are not disposed to say that for every purpose she may make contracts and bind her estate generally, as may a feme sole. The Legislature must say so in language too clear to be misunderstood before we will subject the estates of married women to such a peril as this.

It was conceded that this judgment was given by a married woman. It was not pretended that it was done in the management of, or for the benefit of, her separate estate; or in the prosecution of any business in which she was engaged, or for necessities. On the contrary, if not given as surety for her husband, it was given upon his importunity, and to aid him in his business, one of the very perils from which the law ought to protect a married woman.

The judgment, having been confirmed without authority, is void as to Fanny C. Roop.

The order of the court below is reversed as to Fanny C. Roop, and the judgment against her is stricken from the record.

Levi S. UPDEGROVE, Appt.,

v.

PENNSYLVANIA SCHUYLKILL
VALLEY R. CO.

(....Pa....)

A release to a railroad company of a right of way across certain land, with a further release of the company from all claims for damages by reason of the taking and using of the land for said railroad, or by reason of the construction and maintenance of the said railroad on and over said land, will bar the owner of the land from subsequently recovering damages for the overflowing of his land by water by reason of the construction of a ditch and culvert by the railroad company in the particular manner for drainage purposes long after the original construction of the road.

(February 24, 1890.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas of Chester County entered upon a verdict directed for defendant in proceedings arising upon an appeal by plaintiff from the report of a jury of view refusing to assess damages against defendant for the alleged taking and occupying of certain of plaintiff's land. Affirmed.

Plaintiff was and still is the owner of a farm in Chester County, Pa. In 1882 the defendant Company constructed its line of railroad across his farm so cutting the same as to leave about fifteen acres of land between the railroad and the Schuylkill Canal. The natural slope of the land was toward the canal. In 1888, nearly six years after the original construction of the railroad, the Company dug a ditch on the upper side of its road-bed by which the natural drainage of the water was diverted from the places where it had formerly been into other and different places. The ditch was commenced at the point nearly a half mile distant from a point upon the land which the Company had obtained from plaintiff at which a culvert was constructed under the railroad and from which a ditch was run through plaintiff's land to the canal. By reason of this ditch large quantities of water were made to run over plaintiff's land which would not otherwise have done so, and at certain seasons of the year the quantity became so great that it overspread the banks of the ditch and deposited earth and stone upon plaintiff's land and left the same boggy, wet and unfit for cultivation a large part of the year. Plaintiff presented his petition to the Court of Common Pleas of Chester County for a jury of view to assess the damages which he claimed by reason of this alleged appropriation of his land and the essential damages to his farm which resulted from this action of the Railroad Company. Viewers were appointed who reported adversely to his claim and he then appealed to the Court of Common Pleas. Defendant admitted the injury, but claimed that no action would lie for the recovery of damages therefor by reason of a release which it had received from plaintiff at the time that it purchased from him its right of way. The court charged the jury in substance that this release would bar a recovery in that action and directed them to return a verdict for defendant. Plaintiff thereupon took this appeal.

The material portions of the release appear in the opinion.

Messrs. J. Howard Jacobs, William M. Hayes and R. Jones Monaghan, for appellant:

If the release in this case had been an absolute deed of the land to the Railroad Company, to be used by it for the construction of a railroad, it is entirely clear that the action of the Railroad Company in diverting the surface water which accumulated on the appellant's farm from its ordinary course, where, by the natural declivity of the land, it was accustomed to flow, through artificial ditches constructed for that purpose, would render it liable to respond in damages for their injury to the appellant's lands.

Ang. Watercourses, § 108 J; Kauffman v. Griesemer, 26 Pa. 407; Miller v. Laubach, 47 Pa. 154; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 4 Cent. Rep. 475, 113 Pa. 146; Huddleston v. West Bellevue, 1 Cent. Rep. 861, 111 Pa. 110.

With much greater force must this be true in the case in hand where their only right is that of a right of way for the construction and maintenance of a railroad.

Pennsylvania S. V. R. Co. v. Walsh, 124 Pa. 544; Pennsylvania S. V. R. Co. v. Ziemer, Id. 671.

No such contract as the one in question is ever understood or could lawfully be made to release one of the contracting parties from its acts of negligence or its wrongful injuries to the rights or property of the other. An express release to a carrier does not include acts of negligence.

3 Wood, Railway Law, § 425; Am. Exp. Co. v. Sands, 55 Pa. 140; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Butler, 57 Pa. 837; Grogan v. Adams Exp. Co. 5 Cent. Rep. 298, 114 Pa. 528; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Raiordon, 12 Cent. Rep. 177, 119 Pa. 581.

There have been an injury and destruction, as well as a taking of the appellant's land, by this action of the Railroad Company, which renders it a trespasser subject to ouster, but appellant may waive the trespass and proceed under the Statute.

McClinton v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 66 Pa. 409; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Burson, 61 Pa. 369.

Mr. John J. Pinkerton, for appellee:

The direction of a verdict for defendant was proper.

North & West Branch R. Co. v. Swank, 105 Pa. 555; Hoffeditz v. Southern Pa. R. & Min. Co. 4 Pa. Sup. Ct. Dig. 598.

Plaintiff could not dictate to the Railroad Company how the road should be constructed.

New York & E. R. Co. v. Young, 83 Pa. 182.

With its discretion, exercised within the limits of its Act of Incorporation, no court has any control or right to interfere.

Parke's App. 64 Pa. 140; Struthers v. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. 87 Pa. 282; Cleveland & P. R. Co. v. Speer, 56 Pa. 834.

Per Curiam:

It was decided in North & West Branch R. Co. v. Swank, 105 Pa. 555, that "an agreement between a land owner and a railroad company to sell the latter a right of way across the premises of the former covers all damages, of whatever sort, suffered by the land owner, all for which he is legally entitled to compensation." The same principle was recognized in the later case of Hoffeditz v. Southern Pennsylvania R. & Min. Co. 4 Pa. Sup. Ct. Dig. 598, not yet reported.

In the latter case the plaintiff had, for the consideration of $1,000, released the company from all suits, claims, demands and damages whatever, for, upon or by reason of their entry upon and taking and occupying the land on which the railroad was built, and the location and construction of said railroad and works connected therewith. The plaintiff brought suit to recover damages for the flooding of his land. His allegation was that the culvert built by the company to carry off the water was too small for that purpose in times of freshets, and that the construction of the road caused a larger body of water to accumulate at that particular spot than had been the case before such construction. Upon the trial of that case the court below reserved the question whether the release was a bar to a recovery by the plaintiff, and subsequently entered judgment thereon for the defendant, which was affirmed by this court. It was said in the opinion: "We are unable to see any ground upon which the plaintiff could rest a claim for damages." The cases cited rule the one in hand. The defendant Company obtained from the plaintiff a release for the right of way of eighty feet in width across said farm. The agreement further released the said Company from all claims for damages by reason of the taking and using of the land for said railroad, or by reason of the construction and maintenance of the said railroad on and over said tract of land. The plaintiff contended that about six acres of his land was repeatedly overflowed and rendered unfit for cultivation, by reason of the construction of a ditch and culvert by the Railroad Company, which he alleged threw water upon his land which would not have otherwise flowed there. The learned judge below instructed the jury that "these ditches and culvert, and this discharge of water is the result, the necessary result, of the construction of that road." We see no error in this. It is in direct line with the rulings of this court in the cases above cited. A release of the right of way to a railroad company would be a vain thing if the company is to be subsequently subjected to litigation for every injury or damage resulting to the property by reason of the construction of the road. All these matters are supposed to be in the contemplation of the parties when the company pays its money for the right of way and obtains a release therefor.

Judgment affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

ADAMS EXPRESS CO., Appt.,

v.

John B. HARRIS et al.

(...Ind....)

1. An intermediate carrier can derive no benefit from a contract between the first carrier and the shipper, limiting the carrier's liability, where such contract neither provides that its stipulations shall inure to the benefit of any other than the first carrier nor designates any other carrier along the line as an intermediate carrier.

2. Where the title of the cause gives the full names of the plaintiffs, they need not be repeated in alleging that plaintiffs are partners.

NOTE.—Common carriers; liability for loss of goods.

A common carrier has two distinct liabilities, one for losses by accident or mistake where his liability is that of insurer; the other for losses by default or negligence, where his liability is that of an ordinary bailee. New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 383 (21 L. ed. 635); Dorr v. New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. 11 N. Y. 485, 4 Sandf. 186.

Liability may be restricted by contract.

It is a well-established rule of law that a carrier may restrict his common-law liability as insurer. Fibel v. Livingstone, 64 Barb. 179; Christenson v. Am. Exp. Co. 15 Minn. 270; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Henderson, 51 Pa. 315; Farnham v. Camden & A. R. Co. 55 Pa. 53; Davidson v. Graham, 2 Ohio St. 131; Graham v. Davis, 4 Ohio St. 362; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Adams, 42 Ill. 474.

7 L. R. A.

The right of the carrier to limit its responsibility has been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States since its decision in the case of New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants Bank, 47 U. S. 6 How. 344 (12 L. ed. 465); but to be valid the limitation must in all cases be reasonable (The Colon, 9 Benedict, 354; Rintoul v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 17 Fed. Rep. 905; May v. The Powhatan, 5 Fed. Rep. 375), and to be reasonable it must not stipulate for exemptions from liability for the consequences of its negligence, or that of its servants or agents. Inman v. South Carolina R. Co. 129 U. S. 123 (32 L. ed. 612); Merchants D. Transp. Co. v. Bloch, 88 Tenn. 397; Coward v. East Tenn. V. & G. R. Co. 16 Lea, 225; Dillard v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 2 Lea, 288; Southern Exp. Co. v. Caldwell, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 284 (22 L. ed. 556). See note to Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Payne (Va.) 6 L. R. A. 849.

It is not just and reasonable in the eyes of the

3. A complaint against "Adams Express Company" need not specifically allege that it is a corporation. That fact is imported by its name.
4. A common carrier waives his right to detain goods for the freight if he puts his refusal to deliver them to the owner upon the ground that they are not in his possession at the place where a demand is duly made.
5. Where a corporation invests an agent with general authority to adjust claims against it, the declarations of that agent, made while endeavoring to secure an adjustment of the claim, are competent evidence against his principal.
6. A limitation of liability in the bill of lading will not control where the damage is an effect of the carrier's negligence, and where it does not appear that the limitation was in consideration of a lower rate of freight.

(May 9, 1889.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Morgan County in favor of plaintiffs in an action to recover damages for injuries to plaintiffs' property while in defendant's possession for purposes of transportation, alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Jordan & Matthews, for appellant:

The stipulations and conditions in the bill of lading inure to the benefit of the intermediate carrier the same as to the initial carrier.

U. S. Exp. Co. v. Harris, 51 Ind. 127; Maghes v. Camden & A. R. Transp. Co. 45 N.Y. 514, and cases cited; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 210.

The declarations of an agent cannot bind his principal unless they are part of the res gestæ.

Pittsburgh, O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Theobald, 51 Ind. 249, and cases cited; La Rose v. Logansport Nat. Bank, 102 Ind. 346; Williamson v. Cambridge R. Co. 3 New Eng. Rep. 750, 144 Mass. 143.

Messrs. Adams & Newby for appellees.

Elliott, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The material facts pleaded by the appellees as their cause of action are these: On and prior to the 17th day of January, 1885, they were partners engaged in business as nurserymen; on that day a lot of fruit trees was delivered to the United States Express Company at Champaign, Illinois; the trees were owned by the plaintiffs and were directed to them at Mooresville, Indiana. The United States Express Company undertook to carry the trees to Indianapolis, and there deliver them to some other carrier, to be transported to their destination. A written contract was made between the United States Express Company and the plaintiffs, which contained, among other things, these provisions: that the person or corporation to whom the trees shall be delivered for transportation from the end of that company's line to their destination shall not be deemed the agent of the company, but shall be deemed the agent of the plaintiffs; that the company shall not be liable for injury to the goods unless it "be proved to have occurred from the fraud or gross negligence of the company or its servants; nor shall any demand be made upon the company for more than $50, at which sum said property is hereby valued." There is no provision in the contract for the benefit of any carrier except the United States Express Company, nor is any other carrier named.

The trees were delivered to the defendant in good condition at Indianapolis, and it carried them to Mooresville. After they had reached there, the plaintiffs went to the office of the defendant, prepared to pay the charges and receive the trees, and although they were then in the possession of the defendant's agent, he denied that they had been received. On a subsequent day the plaintiffs went again to the defendant's office, received the trees and paid the freight on them. The trees were so injured through the negligence of the defendant as to be utterly valueless. The plaintiffs had sold the trees to divers persons, and had agreed to deliver them on the 19th day of October, 1885. The refusal of the defendant to deliver the trees when first demanded caused the plaintiffs to lose the profits of the sales made by them, for the reason that the delay prevented them from delivering the trees to the purchasers in accordance with their contract.

The contention of the appellant is that the contract between the United States Express Company and the plaintiffs bound both them and the appellant; that the latter, when it accepted the goods for transportation, became bound to comply with the provisions of the contract and secured a right to all its stipulations in favor of the first carrier, and that the law for a common carrier to stipulate for exemption from responsibility for the negligence of himself or his servants; nor can it arbitrarily, or without the consent of the shipper, place a value upon articles received for carriage and in this manner limit the amount of recovery against it in case of loss. Rosenfeld v. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. 1 West. Rep. 151, 103 Ind. 121. See note to Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Ivey (Tex.) 1 L. R. A. 500; North America Ins. Co. v. Easton (Tex.) 3 L. R. A. 425.

Limit to liability.

The same reasons do not exist against contracts limiting the amount of recovery as exist against contracts for total exemption from liability; hence the rule as expressed in Southern Exp. Co. v. Moon, 39 Miss. 822; The City of Norwich, 4 Benedict, 271; United States Exp. Co. v. Backman, 28 Ohio St. 144; Black v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 55 Wis. 319; Chicago, 7 L. R. A.

St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Abels, 60 Miss. 1017; Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. Simpson, 30 Kan. 645.

The agreement limiting the carrier's liability may be either written or printed. Feige v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 62 Mich. 1.

A shipper who signs a contract limiting the carrier's liability cannot evade its effect on the ground that he did not know its contents, where he had opportunity to read it or hear it read. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Weakly, 50 Ark. 397; Hutchinson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 37 Minn. 524; Myers v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 6 West. Rep. 635, 90 Mo. 98.

Where a contract signed by the shipper is fairly made, agreeing on a valuation of the property shipped, with the rate of freight based on the condition that the carrier assumes liability only to the extent of the agreed valuation, even in case of loss or damage by the negligence of the carrier, the contract continued in force for the benefit of all the parties until the goods were delivered at their destination.

The opposing contention is, that the contract between the United States Express Company and the plaintiffs did not inure to the benefit of the appellant, and that, when it accepted the goods for transportation, it received them under the law and became bound by the ordinary rules which prevail in cases where there is no special contract.

If the appellant had been designated in the contract with the first carrier as one of the intermediate carriers, or if the contract had provided that its stipulations should inure to the benefit of all the carriers, then the contention of the appellant would find strong support from the authorities. U. S. Exp. Co. v. Harris, 51 Ind. 127; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Weakly, 50 Ark. 397; Halliday v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 74 Mo. 159, 41 Am. Rep. 809; Evansville & C. R. Co. v. Androscoquin Mills, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 594 [22 L. ed. 724]; Maghee v. Camden & A. R. Transp. Co. 45 N. Y. 514; Manhattan Oil Co. v. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. 54 N. Y. 197.

But the contract does not provide that its stipulations shall inure to the benefit of any other carrier than the one with whom it was made, nor does it designate any other carrier along the line. Its provisions apply only to the carrier with whom the contract was directly made, and they leave it to that carrier to select the carrier from the termination of its line to the end of the route. The authorities are substantially agreed that in such a case the intermediate carrier cannot successfully claim the benefit of the provisions of the original contract. Martin v. Am. Exp. Co. 19 Wis. 336; Bancroft v. Merchants Despatch Transp. Co. 47 Iowa, 262, 29 Am. Rep. 482; Merchants Despatch Transp. Co. v. Bolles, 80 Ill. 473; Camden & A. R. Co. v. Fornuthe, 61 Pa. 81; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Wheeler, 49 N. Y. 616.

The rule declared by the decisions we have referred to is the only one that can be defended on principle; for, where the contract designates only one carrier, there is no privity between the owners and the designated carriers; but, where the contract is a through one, by designated carriers there is a privity of contract, for it is justly inferable that the contract was intended for the benefit of all who perform services under it. So, too, where the contract declares that it is for the benefit of intermediate carriers it may be enforced, since it is a contract for the benefit of a third person, and, as it is beneficial to him, it is natural to presume that its terms were assented to and formed the contract under which the goods were transported. Where, however, the contract is solely for the benefit of the original parties it is not possible to apply this rule to it.

Where, as here, the names of the plaintiffs are given in full in the title of the cause, it is unnecessary to repeat them in alleging that the plaintiffs were partners. It is sufficient to allege that the plaintiffs were partners, without again giving their names.

The name of the defendant imports that it is contract will be upheld; the valuation and limitation of liability in the bill of lading, being just and reasonable, is binding on the shipper. Newburger v. Howard & Co's Express, 6 Phila. 174; Squire v. New York Cent. R. Co. 98 Mass. 239; Hopkins v. Westcott, 6 Blatchf. 64; Belger v. Dinsmore, 61 N. Y. 166; Oppenheimer v. U. S. Exp. Co. 69 Ill. 62; Magnin v. Dinsmore, 56 N. Y. 163, 62 N. Y. 36, 70 N. Y. 410; Earnest v. Southern Exp. Co. 1 Woods, 573; Elkins v. Empire Transp. Co. 81* Pa. 315; South and North Ala. R. Co. v. Henlein, 52 Ala. 606, 56 Ala. 368; Muser v. Holland, 17 Blatchf. 412; Harvey v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 74 Mo. 538; Graves v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 137 Mass. 33, approved in H. rt. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 333 (28 L. ed. 719; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sherrod, 84 Ala. 178; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Weakly, 50 Ark. 397.

A bill of lading is the written contract of the parties, and by its terms their rights and liabilities must be measured (Fry v. Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. 1 West. Rep. 290, 103 Ind. 265), and one accepting it without examining its contents will be bound thereby. Snow v. Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. 7 West. Rep. 264, 109 Ind. 422.

The effect of acceptance by the shipper of a bill of lading is regulated by the Civil Code of Dakota. See Hartwell v. Northern Pac. Exp. Co. 8 L. R. A. 343, 5 Dak. 463.

The rule that a shipper must examine a bill of lading, or if he does not he is bound by its terms, does not apply where, before delivery of the bill, the goods have been shipped so far that he could not have reclaimed them had he objected to the bill; nor does it apply where the parties have acted upon a previous parol agreement. Guillaume v. General Transatlantic Co. 1 Cent. Rep. 723, 100 N. Y. 491; Snow v. Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. 7 West. Rep. 264, 109 Ind. 422; Hamilton v. Western N. C. R. Co. 96 N. C. 388.

If for the purpose of getting reduced rates the 7 L. R. A.

shipper should put a value on the articles, he cannot recover beyond that value. Rosenfeld v. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. 1 West. Rep. 150, 103 Ind. 121.

A stipulation, in a bill of lading, that the carrier's responsibility as a common carrier shall terminate when the goods are transported and safely stored in the depot of the carrier, is not opposed to public policy, and operates to limit the liability thereafter to that of a warehouseman. Western R. Co. v. Little, 86 Ala. 150.

In case of connecting carriers.

The rights of a connecting carrier receiving goods from another carrier are not affected by any limitations put upon the latter's authority by the shipper, of which the connecting carrier has no notice. Price v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 12 Colo. 402.

When several carriers unite to complete a line of transportation, and receive goods for one freight, they are each liable for damages during transportation, subject to reclamation against the party by whose act the damage occurred. Richardson v. The Charles P. Chouteau, 87 Fed. Rep. 532.

A carrier receiving freight from another carrier under an agreement between the latter and the shipper is entitled to the benefit of any valid limitation of the first carrier's liability, just as it is liable for any failure to perform its part of the contract. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Weakly, 50 Ark. 397.

A railroad company whose line is one of several connecting roads, in the absence of a special contract or of an association or copartnership by which each connecting line is liable for the contracts of the others, is not responsible for damages for negligence occurring beyond its terminus. In such case its liability is confined to that of a forwarding agent. Knott v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 96 N. C. 73.

a corporation, and it was therefore not necessary to specifically aver that it was a corporation. Adams Exp. Co. v. Hilt, 48 Ind. 157; Indianapolis Sun Co. v. Horrell, 53 Ind. 527; Sayers v. Crawfordsville First Nat. Bank, 89 Ind. 280.

The defendant's denial of the possession of the goods at Mooresville excused the plaintiffs from making a tender of the carrier's charges. A common carrier waives his right to detain goods for the freight if he puts his refusal to deliver them to the owner upon the ground that they are not in his possession at the place where a demand is duly made. Vinton v. Baldwin, 95 Ind. 433, and cases cited; Mathis v. Thomas, 101 Ind. 119; Platter v. Elkhart County, 103 Ind. 360, 1 West. Rep. 235; House v. Alexander, 105 Ind. 109, 8 West. Rep. 316.

Where a corporation invests an agent with general authority to adjust claims against it, the declarations of that agent, made while endeavoring to secure an adjustment of the claim, are competent evidence against his principal. This general rule has often been applied in insurance cases, and must necessarily apply in such cases as this, for, otherwise, the corporation would be entirely without a representative.

In deciding, as we have, that the provisions of the contract with the United States Express Company cannot be taken advantage of by the appellant, we have disposed of the point that the damages are limited to $50; but if we were wrong in this, still, the limitation will not control, since there is evidence of negligence and no evidence that a lower rate of freight was given on account of the limitation placed upon the value of the property. Rosenfeld v. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. 108 Ind. 121, 1 West. Rep. 150; Bartlett v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 94 Ind. 281; United States Exp. Co. v. Backman, 28 Ohio St. 144.

As there was evidence of negligence, and no evidence that there was any special consideration inducing the owners to place a less value on their property than its actual worth, the limitation, even conceding it to be available to the appellant as a part of the contract, is nullified.

The instructions of the court are quite as favorable to the appellant as the law warrants, and the evidence fully supports the verdict.

Judgment affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied September 25, 1889.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY of the United States, Appl.,

v.

Robert R. HAZLEWOOD.

(....Tex.....)

1. A warranty by an applicant for a life insurance that his answers to the society's medical examiner are true, does not make him responsible for the truth of such answers as reported to the company; and if by being inordinately written down by such examiner without the applicant's knowledge they are untrue as reported to the company, the policy will not be avoided thereby.

2. The signature of an applicant for life insurance, written at the beginning of the paper containing his medical examination, is for purposes of identification rather

NOTE.—Life policy; construction of.

A policy of insurance is a single entire contract and continues during the life of the insured subject to discontinuance by nonpayment of the premiums. Fearn v. Ward, 80 Ala. 555.

The provisions of a policy are construed and applied like other contracts, and may render it void ab initio, by its terms and failure of warranty. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Pyle, 2 West. Rep. 380, 44 Ohio St. 19.

Questions and answers will be reasonably construed although the policy is conditioned on the truth of the answers. Home Mut. L. Assn. v. Gillespie, 1 Cent. Rep. 134, 110 Pa. 84.

Mistakes in policies may be disregarded or corrected. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Pyle, supra.

Application for insurance on life.

Where the application was signed before being filled out, the fact that the answers were incorrectly written in by the agent may be established by parol evidence; otherwise if the applicant had signed afterwards. Brown v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 8 West. Rep. 775, 45 Mich. 306.

Where an agent of a life insurance company assumed the whole preparation of an application, and asked or told the applicant to sign it, without her reading it or hearing it read, the company cannot defend on the ground of false statements in the application. Temmink v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 72 Mich. —, 40 N. W. Rep. 466.

7 L. R. A.

Where a physician, acting as agent for the company, in examining an applicant for life insurance, assumes to write out the answers to the questions upon his own knowledge of the facts, rather than from the answers given by the applicant, the answers as given by him are conclusive on the company. Pudritzky v. Supreme Lodge K. of H. 76 Mich. 428.

A copy of an application attached to an insurance policy, which does not have the name of the applicant appended thereto, is not a copy of such application within the Statute of Wisconsin, requiring a copy to be attached to the policy in order to permit the insurance company to prove the falsity of any statement therein. Dunbar v. Phenix Ins. Co. 72 Wis. 492.

Whether the signature to an application for insurance, which was by mark only, is genuine or not is immaterial, where the policy has been accepted, the premiums paid for several years, and received and retained by the company, with no offer to return them. Home Mut. L. Assn. v. Biel (Pa.), 17 Atl. Rep. 38.

Where an insurance contract is ambiguous, the doubt should be resolved against the company. See note to Kratzenstein v. Western Assur. Co. (N. Y.) 5 L. R. A. 799.

Company responsible for acts of its agents.

The insurance company, and not the insured, is responsible for the falsity of answers inserted in the than for the purpose of binding him for the truth of the contents of the paper.

3. Where payment of a policy of life insurance is contested because of the falsity of certain answers made by the applicant to questions propounded to him, and which he warranted to be true, the charge to the jury upon the question of falsity must be confined to such questions and answers as were put in issue by the pleadings and evidence, and not extended to all the answers made by the applicant.

4. While an applicant for life insurance is not bound to exercise supervision over the writing down of his answers by the medical examiner, yet, if he knows that his answers have been incorrectly written down, it becomes his duty to see that proper corrections are made, and if he fails to do so he will be estopped from disputing them as written even although recovery upon the policy is thereby defeated.

5. Where a life insurance company contests payment of a policy upon the ground that it was taken out by the beneficiary as a wagering policy, and proves that the beneficiary loaned the insured the money with which he paid the premium, testimony of the agent of the corporation is admissible as to negotiations preceding the application, tending to show that both the beneficiary and the insured were urged by the agent to apply for the insurance; that the premium was paid by insured; and that he thought of taking the policy for the benefit of the minor children of the beneficiary, but did not do so because the beneficiaries could not then be so easily changed in case such change became desirable.

6. Where the applicant stated that no application by him for insurance was ever rejected, and it is shown that his application for membership in a mutual benefit society was rejected, plaintiff may show that the company's agent informed the insured that such societies were not regarded as life insurance companies and need not be considered as such by him.

7. The designation of a person as beneficiary in a life insurance policy, who has no insurable interest in the life of the person taking out the policy, does not render it void; but such person may be treated as an assignee, appointee or trustee to receive the proceeds for whoever may be lawfully entitled to enjoy them.

8. One has an insurable interest in the life of his brother.

9. There is no special reason for limiting the amount for which a policy may be taken out when the insurance is obtained by a person on his own life and made payable originally or by assignment to another having no, or only a limited, insurable interest in his life.

(December 6, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Delta County in favor of plaintiff in an action upon a policy of life insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Maxey, Lightfoot & Denton and Hodges & Lane, for appellant:

Where a policy of life insurance was taken out for speculation—at the instance of the beneficiary, who furnished the money to pay the premium—upon the life of a brother, twenty-eight years of age, the beneficiary being a man in no way dependent upon the assured, even though there might have been a small indebtedness greatly disproportionate to the policy, such policy cannot be sustained, but is a wagering contract and void, as against public policy.

Price v. Knights of Honor, 68 Tex. 866, and authorities there cited; Levy v. Taylor, 66 Tex. 652; Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 782 (26 L. ed. 927); Cammack v. Lewis, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 643 (21 L. ed. 214); Lewis v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 39 Conn. 100; Singleton v. St. Louis Mut. Ins. Co. 66 Mo. 63, 27 Am. Rep. 321; Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Hogan, 80 Ill. 85, 22 Am. Rep. 180; Keystone Mut. Ben. Asso. v. Norris, 7 Cent. Rep. 204, 115 Pa. 446; Bacon, Ben. Societies, § 250, pp. 368, 370, 595, 596, § 249; Bliss, Ins. pp. 27, 40, 42, 43; Stevens v. Warren, 101 Mass. 564.

Where both the application and the policy application by an authorized agent of the company, where the insured had given true answers. O'Brien v. Home Ben. Society, 27 N. Y. S. R. 328.

Where the law of a State provides that a person who solicits or procures an application for insurance shall be held to be the agent of the insurance company, and such agent fills up the application, his act in doing so is the act of the company. Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Chamberlain, 132 U. S. 304 (33 L. ed. 341).

If the applicant for insurance fully states the facts to the agent, and the agent writes the answers to the questions contrary to the facts stated by the applicant, the insurance company is estopped from making a defense in an action on the policy, by reason of the falsity of such answers. Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Chamberlain, 132 U. S. 304 (33 L. ed. 341).

Where the agent writes in the application that the applicant has no other insurance, although the applicant told him that he had certificates of membership in co-operative companies, which the agent said were not considered insurance by him, the company is bound by the agent's interpretation, and estopped from asserting the contrary. Ibid.

The act of an agent authorized to solicit and take applications for insurance, in inserting false answers to interrogatories, without the knowledge or fault of the applicant, is binding upon the company. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Stark, 120 Ind. 444.

7 L. R. A.

An insurance company cannot repudiate the fraud of its agent in inserting untrue answers in the application, and thus escape the obligations of its contract, merely because the assured accepted in good faith the act of the agent, without examination. Kister v. Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. 5 L. R. A. 644, 128 Pa. 553.

Insurable interest in life.

To create an insurable interest in the life of another, there must be a reasonable ground, founded in the relations of the parties,—either pecuniary, or of blood, or affinity,—to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of his life. United Brethren Mut. Aid Society v. McDonald, 1 L. R. A. 238, 122 Pa. 324.

A stepson has no insurable interest in the life of his stepfather. Ibid.

In the absence of any insurable interest of the beneficiary, the law will presume that a policy was taken out for the purpose of a wager or speculation. Ibid.

A son-in-law has no insurable interest in the life of his mother-in-law, who has no visible means of support and whom he keeps and maintains. Stambaugh v. Blake (Pa.) 22 W. N. C. 407.

A wife and children have an insurable interest in the life of the husband and father. Washington Cent. Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195 (32 L. ed. 370). The foundation of the doctrine is that no one refer to each other, and warrant that all the statements made in the application as well as those made by the assured to the medical examiner are true, and stipulate that if any of such statements are in any respect untrue the policy shall be void, any misstatement by the assured in such application or examination, whereby the insurer is misled as to his true condition, will avoid the policy.

Galveston Ins. Co. v. Long, 51 Tex. 91; Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. France, 91 U. S. 510 (23 L. ed. 401); Jeffries v. Economical Mut. L. Ins. Co. 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 47 (22 L. ed. 833); New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519 (29 L. ed. 934); Vose v. Eagle Life & H. Ins. Co. 6 Cush. 42; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. McLague, 8 Cent. Rep. 611, 49 N. J. L. 587, 60 Am. Rep. 665; Bliss, Life Ins. pp. 46, 48, §§ 24, 36, §§ 37, 38, 50, p. 72; § 54, p. 79; § 53, p. 85; § 59, 60, 64, 77, p. 109; § 82, p. 122; Bacon, Ben. Societies, § 233, p. 328; § 427, p. 637; May, Ins. § 298, p. 326; §§ 186, 187, p. 195; Powers v. Northeastern Mut. L. Assn. 50 Vt. 630.

Where the contract between the parties for assurance is one of warranty, and the facts in evidence show, or tend to show, that the affirmative warranty of the assured, upon which the policy is based, is untrue, the court should so charge the jury as to leave them to find the truth or falsity of such warranted facts; and it is error to allow them to consider outside contemporaneous conversations, or other matters concerning the materiality of the questions, which were not carried into the written contract.

Texas Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Davidge, 51 Tex. 244; Galveston Ins. Co. v. Long, 51 Tex. 89; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, supra; Thompson v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 252 (28 L. ed. 765); Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mowry, 96 U. S. 544 (24 L. ed. 674); Bacon, Ben. Societies, § 155, note 1, and authorities cited; McCoy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 133 Mass. 85; Miles v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 3 Gray, 580; Draper v. Charter Oak F. Ins. Co. 2 Allen, 569; Kibbe v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. 11 Gray, 163.

shall have a benefit of any kind in a life policy, who is not presumed to be interested in the preservation of the life insured. Gilbert v. Moose, 104 Pa. 78.

A party having no insurable interest in the life of another cannot receive an assignment of a policy of insurance upon the life of the latter, on an agreement merely to pay the premiums or assessments. Such an assignment will not vitiate the policy, but will leave the insurance money payable, on the death of the assured, to the party originally designated in the certificate. Price v. Supreme Lodge K. of H. 68 Tex. 361.

Insurable interest in life of another. See note to Rittler v. Smith (Md.) 2 L. R. A. 844.

That a company is estopped by the fraud of its agent, see note to Kister v. Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 5 L. R. A. 646.

Wager policies.

It is the absence of this insurable interest which gives to the policy the character of a wager contract; there can arise in such case no question of motive or good faith. Downey v. Hoffer, 110 Pa. 109.

The rule, applicable alike to life and fire insurance, rests in public policy for the protection of human life and property. Stoner v. Line, 16 W. N. C. 187; Keystone Mut. Ben. Assn. v. Norris, 7 Cent. Rep. 204, 115 Pa. 446.

7 L. R. A.

Where all the stipulations of a contract of assurance are set out in writing and by its terms the statements therein are warranted to be true, they cannot be varied upon a material point by contemporaneous verbal statements and conversations between the assured and the soliciting agent of the company.

Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mowry, New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, McCoy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. Miles v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. and Draper v. Charter Oak F. Ins. Co. supra; Bliss, Life Ins. § 82, pp. 122, 123.

Messrs. J. A. Templeton, E. B. Perkins and E. H. Bennett, for appellee:

Henry Clay Hazlewood had an insurable interest in his own life, and if he himself in good faith applied for and obtained the policy sued on, and paid to defendant all premiums due thereon, and if he in good faith had the same made payable to appellee, said policy would not be a speculative or wagering policy, but a valid and binding obligation on defendant.

Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457 (24 L. ed. 251); Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. France, 94 U. S. 561 (24 L. ed. 287); Langdon v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 14 Fed. Rep. 272, and authorities there cited; Bacon, Ben. Societies, §§ 248, 249, 397; Bliss, Life Ins. § 26; Leomis v. Eagle Life & H. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 399; Elkhart Mut. Aid B. & R. Assn. v. Houghton, 1 West. Rep. 284, 103 Ind. 286, and authorities therein cited; Campbell v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. 98 Mass. 381; Provident L. Ins. & Inv. Co. v. Baum, 29 Ind. 236; Morrell v. Trenton Mut. L. & F. Ins. Co. 10 Cush. 282, 57 Am. Dec. 92 et seq.

Henry Clay Hazlewood had an insurable interest in his own life, and could effect such insurance, and appoint anyone to receive the money in case of his death during the existence of such policy.

Langdon v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. Elkhart Mut. Aid B. & R. Assn. v. Houghton and Provident L. Ins. & Inv. Co. v. Baum, supra.

One brother has an insurable interest in the life of another where there is superadded to that relationship that of debtor and creditor;

An insurance contract is void, unless the insured has an interest in the subject matter of the policy. Adams v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 1 Rawle, 106; Gilbert v. Moose, 104 Pa. 80; Stoner v. Line, and Keystone Mut. Ben. Assn. v. Norris, supra; Downey v. Hoffer, 110 Pa. 109, 16 W. N. C. 184; Seigrist v. Schmaltz, 5 Cent. Rep. 230, 113 Pa. 326; Grant v. Kline, 7 Cent. Rep. 623, 115 Pa. 618; Cooper v. Shaeffer (Pa.) 9 Cent. Rep. 601; Cammack v. Lewis, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 643 (21 L. ed. 244); Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775 (26 L. ed. 924); Stevens v. Warren, 101 Mass. 564; Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Hazzard, 41 Ind. 116, 13 Am. Rep. 313; Mo. Valley L. Ins. Co. v. Sturges, 18 Kan. 38, 26 Am. Rep. 761; Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. Sefton, 53 Ind. 380; Singleton v. St. Louis Mut. Ins. Co. 66 Mo. 63, 27 Am. Rep. 321; Moore v. Small, 19 Pa. 468; DeFrance v. DeFrance, 34 Pa. 380.

When the life of a debtor who owes but $100 is insured by his creditor for $3,000, the transaction is within the prohibition against wagering policies. In such a case the court should declare, as a matter of law, that no more can be recovered by a creditor than is sufficient to reimburse him his debt, the premium he has paid and interest. Cooper v. Shaeffer (Pa.) 9 Cent. Rep. 601.

An assignment does not help a wagering policy. Stambaugh v. Blake (Pa.) 22 W. N. C. 407.

and in such a case the extent of the recovery will not be limited to the amount of the indebtedness due, and the beneficiary may recover the amount of the entire policy.

Goodwin v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 78 N. Y. 480, 18 Alb. L. J. 217; Grant v. Kline, 7 Cent. Rep. 626, 115 Pa. 618.

The clearest and most unequivocal language is necessary to create a warranty, and all statements and expressions of a doubtful character will be construed as representations merely.

Goddard v. East Texas F. Ins. Co. 67 Tex. 69; Moulor v. Am. L. Ins. Co. 111 U. S. 335 (28 L. ed. 447); First Nat. Bank v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 95 U. S. 673 (24 L. ed. 563); Phœnix L. Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183 (30 L. ed. 644); Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. v. Johnston, 80 Ala. 487, and authorities cited; Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 8 West. Rep. 88, 119 Ill. 474; Clapp v. Massachusetts Ben. Asso. 6 New Eng. Rep. 103, 146 Mass. 519; Dilleber v. Home L. Ins. Co. 69 N. Y. 256 et seq.; Stout v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. 12 Fed. Rep. 534; May, Ins. 160-165, 174-178; Bliss, Life Ins. § 404; Bacon, Ben. Societies, § 468.

No statement in the application made by the assured, and which he at that time honestly and in good faith believed to be true, would vitiate the policy, even though it should ultimately appear that such statement was not in all respects literally true.

Moulor v. Am. L. Ins. Co. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. v. Johnston, Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Rogers, and Clapp v. Massachusetts Ben. Asso. supra; Southern L. Ins. Co. v. Booker, 9 Helsk. 606, 24 Am. Rep. 344, 354; May, Ins. §§ 169, 170; Bacon, Ben. Societies, § 214.

Henry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon the application of Henry C. Hazlewood, appellant, in August, 1887, issued its policy upon his life, payable to Robert R. Hazlewood, if living, if not, then to his brother, Henry C. Hazlewood, for the sum of $15,000, payable at the death of the said Henry C. H. C. Hazlewood was a younger brother of R. R. Hazlewood. He died in March, 1888, aged then about twenty-eight years. Appellee, beginning with the year 1881, and between that time and the date of the application for the insurance, had advanced to the said Henry C. various sums of money, amounting to about $1,200, for which the said Henry acknowledged an indebtedness. On the back of the application for the insurance, and just above the signatures of both of said Hazlewoods, is a printed agreement in the following words: "It is hereby agreed that all the foregoing statements and answers, as well as those made, or to be made, to the Society's medical examiner, are warranted to be true, and are offered to the Society as a consideration of the contract." In the body of, and on the back of, the application, and above said signatures, there are a number of questions and answers relating to the risk. Attached to the application is another paper, styled "Medical Examiner's Report," at the beginning of which appears the signature of Henry Clay Hazlewood, and at the end of it the name of the medical examiner. Between the two signatures there appear a great number and variety of questions and answers, relating to the history of the said Henry, and of his ancestors and collateral kindred, and to his physique, system, general health record, habits and environment. The answers are usually "Yes" or "No," and, from the space allowed for them in the form used, it is evident that they are required to be monosyllabic. Some of the answers are evidently made by the medical examiner, and some by the subject of the examination. There is nothing but the nature of the answers to distinguish those of the medical examiner from those of the subject of the examination; and it is not easy to distinguish, in some instances, by which one the answer was really made. While many of the questions answered by the witness relate to facts necessarily within his knowledge, and to which he evidently ought to have been able to give categorical and truthful answers, there are others seemingly required to be and in fact answered by him, about which he could not, in the nature of things, have had exact and positive knowledge, and about which it is not probable that he could have expressed himself satisfactorily by simply answering "Yes" or "No." All answers were written down by the medical examiner.

The policy sets out on its face that it is issued "in consideration of the application, and of each statement made therein." Among the provisions of the policy is one reading: "If any statement made in the application for this policy be in any respect untrue, this policy shall be void." The application set out on its face: "I certify that I am temperate in my habits, and am, to the best of my knowledge and belief, in sound physical condition, and a satisfactory subject for life assurance." This was signed by the insured, and indorsed by the beneficiary. Under the general health record, the question was asked in the written and printed medical examination which was sent forward to the company in New York: "(13) Any history of serious illness, injury or infirmity, etc.?" to which the insured answered, "No." "(16b) When, and for what, has medical advice been sought within the last three years?" to which the insured answered "Nothing." The medical examiner of defendant testified that he asked both of the above questions, and the assured answered them as recorded, and made no other statements under those heads. He says: "I wrote the answers. Mr. H. C. Hazlewood was sitting at my left elbow. I asked him each question, and wrote the answer as he gave it. First, had him sign at the top. Asked him questions 1 to 18, inclusive, and then wrote the answers. After the examination, he asked me what sort of a risk he was. I told him he could see for himself, and gave him the report; and he read it over himself. I asked him each question separately, and wrote his answers. He told me he had not sought medical advice in three years. That question is considered material. All are so regarded, as all go to make up the report. . . . Henry Clay Hazlewood gave no history of mental disorder or derangement. Applicant ought to have informed me of any mental derangement. Absent-mindedness, or hallucinations of fear, and the like,—general belief that someone was after applicant, to kill him, or imagining something to exist that did not,—would be a serious question."

In the written examination the question was asked: "(6) Any history of mental derangement?" to which the applicant answered, "No." In the medical examination is the printed question to the applicant: "(8a) Ever spat blood, or any history of chronic hoarseness or cough, or of asthma, or shortness of breath?" To which the insured answered, "No."

The controverted questions as to breaches of warranty raised by the pleadings, referred to in the evidence and discussed in the brief of appellant's counsel, are thus stated in the brief: "The applicant covenants in writing, and warrants, that to the best of his knowledge and belief he is in sound physical condition. He warrants that he has not sought medical advice for anything within the last three years. He warrants that there has been no mental derangement. He warrants that there is no application pending for other insurance. He warrants that there has been no severe illness, coughs or other ailments," etc.

It is contended that the court erred in refusing to give the following charge at the request of defendant:

"If the jury believe from the evidence that Henry Clay Hazlewood, in the application for the policy of assurance, warranted that all the statements in such application, and all the statements and answers made to the Society's medical examiner, were true, and that such application was made a part of the policy, and it was therein provided that if any statement in such application was in any respect untrue, the said policy should be void, then I charge you that all three of such instruments, taken together, constitute the contract between the parties, and a warranty on the part of the assured that all the statements and answers to the medical examiner were true; and, if you further believe from the evidence that the said Henry Clay Hazlewood, in his medical examination, in answer to the printed questions propounded by the Society, had his answers to said questions put down in writing by the medical examiner opposite said questions, after said Hazlewood had signed said medical examination, and that after said answers were put down he read over and examined the same, and assented thereto, and the same was sent forward with the application, as the basis of the policy, and the same was issued by defendant upon the reliance of the truth of such answers, then, if you find from the evidence that said written answers in said medical examination were in any respect untrue, you will find for the defendant;" and also: "In refusing to grant the defendant's motion for a new trial in this, that it was clearly proved that the contract was embraced in the application, the answers of the assured to the medical examiner, and the policy, taken together, and they constitute a warranty that the statements therein made were true, when the facts fully show that they were not true, that at the time of the application the assured was not in sound physical condition, but was in bad health, and misled defendant and its officers by his statements regarding his condition."

7 L. R. A.

The doctrine contended for by appellant, that a warranty must be strictly complied with, is fully maintained by the authorities quoted in his brief.

Mr. Bliss, in his work on Insurance, says: "By introducing them, they stipulate, in effect, that they are so material that if not strictly complied with the whole contract is rendered void. A misstatement in a warranty is therefore fatal to the contract, although arising from the most innocent mistake, or from false information afforded by others, or from mere inadvertence, and as much so as if made with the most willfully fraudulent intent." Section 36.

In the case of Jeffries v. Economical Mut. L. Ins. Co. 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 53 [23 L. ed. 835], the court says: "The proposition at the foundation of this point is this: that the statements and declarations made in the policy shall be true. This stipulation is not expressed to be made as to important or material statements only, or to those supposed to be material, but as to all statements. The statements need not come up to the degree of warranties. They need not be representations, even, if this term conveys an idea of an affirmation having any technical character. 'Statements and declarations' is the expression; what the applicant states, and what the applicant declares. Nothing can be more simple. If he makes any statement in the application, it must be true. If he makes any declaration in the application, it must be true. A faithful performance of this agreement is made an express condition to the existence of a liability on the part of the company." Again, on page 56 [836]: "Many cases may be found which hold that where false answers are made to inquiries which do not relate to the risk the policy is not necessarily avoided, unless they influenced the mind of the company, and that whether they are material is for the determination of the jury. But we know of no respectable authority which so holds, where it is expressly covenanted, as a condition of liability, that the statements and declarations made in the application are true, and when the truth of such statements forms the basis of the contract."

In the case of Etna L. Ins. Co. v. France, 91 U. S. 512 [23 L. ed. 402], the court adopts the reasoning in the above case, and adds: "It is only necessary to reiterate that all the statements contained in the proposal must be true; that the materiality of such statements is removed from the consideration of the court or jury by the agreement of the parties that such statements are absolutely true, and, if untrue in any respect, the policy shall be void."

In the case of New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519 [20 L. ed. 934], referred to in the brief of appellant, the insured made certain statements and representations respecting himself, his life and his past and present health, to which he appended a declaration warranting their truthfulness, and agreeing that they should be the basis of any contract between him and the company, and that if they, or any of them, were in any respect untrue the policy which might be issued thereon should be void; and further agreeing that, inasmuch as only the officers of the home office had authority to determine whether or not a policy should issue on any application, and as

Paxson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an appeal from the order of the court below refusing to open a judgment entered by the Real Estate Investment Co. v. Oliver Roop and Fanny C. Roop, appellants, in the sum of $880. The said Fanny was the wife of the said Oliver Roop, but this does not appear on the face of the note upon which the judgment was entered. The petition which was filed in the court below is not printed in the paper book, hence we have no certain knowledge of the specific grounds upon which the judgment was asked to be opened, and we might well dismiss the case for this reason alone. We learn from the docket entries, however, that the application was on behalf of both defendants, and from the agreements of counsel, (a) that the note was usurious; and (b) that the defendant, Fanny C. Roop, was a married woman, and as such, had no power to bind herself by a judgment note.

As to the first proposition, the depositions show that only $300 was loaned to the defendants; but as the plaintiff concedes this, and also alleges that it was a loan with the judgment note as collateral, and that no more than the $500 with interest is claimed, there would seem no good reason why the court below should open the judgment and order an issue to try a fact which is not disputed.

The second ground of relief is more serious. On behalf of Fanny C. Roop, it was contended "that, as the record of the judgment reveals no contract within the power of a married woman to make, it is irregular as to Fanny Roop and cannot stand." The judgment is entirely regular upon its face, as the record does not show that Fanny C. Roop is a married woman. The depositions do show it, however, and the fact is not denied.

The plaintiff contends that under the Act of June 8, 1837 (Pub. Laws, 882), known as the "Married Person's Property Act," a married woman has the power generally of confessing judgments, and refers us to the third section of said Act as confirming it. Said section is as follows: "A married woman may make, execute and deliver leases of her property, real and personal, and assignments, transfers and sales of her separate personal property, and notes, bills, drafts, bonds or obligations of any kind, and appoint attorneys to act for her, and it shall not be necessary for her husband to be made a party thereto or joined therein."

This language is certainly very broad, and is a part of the legislation, commencing in 1848, the object of which evidently is to emancipate married women from the restraints of the common law to a certain extent, and to enable them to act as a feme sole in respect of their property. It is not necessary for us to express an opinion of the wisdom of this legislation. We have followed the Legislature cautiously, and have, as was our duty, given effect to these Acts to the extent of their plainly expressed meaning; but it is so radical in its character, and so wide a departure from the common law, that we have been careful not to extend the force of any of these Acts by judicial construction.

The Act of 1837 certainly does go very far in 7 L. R. A.

enlarging the powers of married women. The first section gives them the power of a feme sole as to the acquisition, ownership, possession, control, use or disposition of property of any kind in any trade or business in which they may engage, or for necessities, and for the use, enjoyment and improvement of their separate estate, and to "make contracts of any kind, and to give obligations binding herself therefor." The only restriction upon the powers thus conferred is found in the proviso at the end of the section. It is as follows: "Provided, however, that a married woman shall have no power to mortgage or convey her real estate, unless her husband join in such mortgage or conveyance."

The second section declares that a married woman may bind herself by contracts relating to any trade or business in which she may engage, or for necessities, and for the use and enjoyment of her separate estate, and may sue and be sued, etc., in all respects as if she were a feme sole; "provided, however, that nothing in this or the preceding section shall enable a married woman to become indorser, guarantor or security for another."

Then follows the third section, which I have already quoted. It was contended that this section gives her the general power to contract, which would of course include the power to confess a judgment. If, however, it was intended to confer this broad power, and place a married woman on the same plane with a feme sole it could have been done in a few lines, declaring that hereafter a feme covert should have the same power to contract debts as a feme sole. For such a purpose it was unnecessary to frame an Act with seven sections. We do not think it was intended to confer a power to contract generally. Of what use would be the restriction, contained in the first section, that she shall have no power to mortgage or convey her real estate without her husband joining in such mortgage or conveyance, if she may bind her real estate by confessing a judgment for general purposes? The third section must be read in connection with the other sections and the Act considered as a whole. Viewed in this light, it unfetters a married woman, subject to the restrictions before mentioned, for three purposes, viz., (1) where she engages in trade or business; (2) in the management of her separate estate; and (3) for necessities. For any of these purposes she may bind herself and her estate or business by her contract, and I have no doubt may lawfully confess a judgment. But beyond this we do not think the Act confers any power. It is entirely proper that the law should clothe her with sufficient power to properly manage her separate estate. And when it authorizes her to embark in business it is right that she should be held to her contracts, which can only be done by authorizing her to make such contracts. So in regard to necessities. If she may purchase them she should be authorized to bind herself and her estate for them in the usual manner and by the usual forms by which contracts are made by persons sui juris. But we are not disposed to say that for every purpose she may make contracts and bind her estate generally, as may a feme sole. The Legislature must say so in language too clear to be misunderstood before we will subject the estates of married women to such a peril as this.

It was conceded that this judgment was given by a married woman. It was not pretended that it was done in the management of, or for the benefit of, her separate estate; or in the prosecution of any business in which she was engaged, or for necessities. On the contrary, if not given as surety for her husband, it was given upon his importunity, and to aid him in his business, one of the very perils from which the law ought to protect a married woman.

The judgment, having been confirmed without authority, is void as to Fanny C. Roop.

The order of the court below is reversed as to Fanny C. Roop, and the judgment against her is stricken from the record.

Levi S. UPDEGROVE, Appt.,

v.

PENNSYLVANIA SCHUYLKILL
VALLEY R. CO.

(....Pa.....)

A release to a railroad company of a right of way across certain land, with a further release of the company from all claims for damages by reason of the taking and using of the land for said railroad, or by reason of the construction and maintenance of the said railroad on and over said land, will bar the owner of the land from subsequently recovering damages for the overflowing of his land by water by reason of the construction of a ditch and culvert by the railroad company in the particular manner for drainage purposes long after the original construction of the road.

(February 24, 1890.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas of Chester County entered upon a verdict directed for defendant in proceedings arising upon an appeal by plaintiff from the report of a jury of view refusing to assess damages against defendant for the alleged taking and occupying of certain of plaintiff's land. Affirmed.

Plaintiff was and still is the owner of a farm in Chester County, Pa. In 1882 the defendant Company constructed its line of railroad across his farm so cutting the same as to leave about fifteen acres of land between the railroad and the Schuylkill Canal. The natural slope of the land was toward the canal. In 1888, nearly six years after the original construction of the railroad, the Company dug a ditch on the upper side of its road-bed by which the natural drainage of the water was diverted from the places where it had formerly been into other and different places. The ditch was commenced at the point nearly a half mile distant from a point upon the land which the Company had obtained from plaintiff at which a culvert was constructed under the railroad and from which a ditch was run through plaintiff's land to the canal. By reason of this ditch large quantities of water were made to run over plaintiff's land which would not otherwise have done so, and at certain seasons of the year the quantity became so great that it overspread the banks of the ditch and deposited earth and stone upon plaintiff's land and left the same boggy, wet and unfit for cultivation a large part of the year. Plaintiff presented his petition to the Court of Common Pleas of Chester County for a jury of view to assess the damages which he claimed by reason of this alleged appropriation of his land and the essential damages to his farm which resulted from this action of the Railroad Company. Viewers were appointed who reported adversely to his claim and he then appealed to the Court of Common Pleas. Defendant admitted the injury, but claimed that no action would lie for the recovery of damages therefor by reason of a release which it had received from plaintiff at the time that it purchased from him its right of way. The court charged the jury in substance that this release would bar a recovery in that action and directed them to return a verdict for defendant. Plaintiff thereupon took this appeal.

The material portions of the release appear in the opinion.

Messrs. J. Howard Jacobs, William M. Hayes and R. Jones Monaghan, for appellant:

If the release in this case had been an absolute deed of the land to the Railroad Company, to be used by it for the construction of a railroad, it is entirely clear that the action of the Railroad Company in diverting the surface water which accumulated on the appellant's farm from its ordinary course, where, by the natural declivity of the land, it was accustomed to flow, through artificial ditches constructed for that purpose, would render it liable to respond in damages for their injury to the appellant's lands.

Ang. Watercourses, § 108 J; Kauffman v. Griesemer, 26 Pa. 407; Miller v. Laubach, 47 Pa. 154; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 4 Cent. Rep. 475, 113 Pa. 146; Huddleston v. West Bellevue, 1 Cent. Rep. 861, 111 Pa. 110.

With much greater force must this be true in the case in hand where their only right is that of a right of way for the construction and maintenance of a railroad.

Pennsylvania S. V. R. Co. v. Walsh, 124 Pa. 544; Pennsylvania S. V. R. Co. v. Ziemer, Id. 671.

No such contract as the one in question is ever understood or could lawfully be made to release one of the contracting parties from its acts of negligence or its wrongful injuries to the rights or property of the other. An express release to a carrier does not include acts of negligence.

3 Wood, Railway Law, § 425; Am. Exp. Co. v. Sands, 55 Pa. 140; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Butler, 57 Pa. 837; Grogan v. Adams Exp. Co. 5 Cent. Rep. 298, 114 Pa. 528; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Raiordon, 12 Cent. Rep. 177, 119 Pa. 581.

There have been an injury and destruction, as well as a taking of the appellant's land, by this action of the Railroad Company, which renders it a trespasser subject to ouster, but appellant may waive the trespass and proceed under the Statute.

McClinton v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & O. R. Co. 66 Pa. 409; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Burson, 61 Pa. 369.

Mr. John J. Pinkerton, for appellee:

The direction of a verdict for defendant was proper.

North & West Branch R. Co. v. Swank, 105 Pa. 555; Hoffeditz v. Southern Pa. R. & Min. Co. 4 Pa. Sup. Ct. Dig. 598.

Plaintiff could not dictate to the Railroad Company how the road should be constructed.

New York & E. R. Co. v. Young, 83 Pa. 182.

With its discretion, exercised within the limits of its Act of Incorporation, no court has any control or right to interfere.

Parke's App. 64 Pa. 140; Struthers v. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. 87 Pa. 282; Cleveland & P. R. Co. v. Speer, 56 Pa. 334.

Per Curiam:

It was decided in North & West Branch R. Co. v. Swank, 105 Pa. 555, that "an agreement between a land owner and a railroad company to sell the latter a right of way across the premises of the former covers all damages, of whatever sort, suffered by the land owner, all for which he is legally entitled to compensation." The same principle was recognized in the later case of Hoffeditz v. Southern Pennsylvania R. & Min. Co. 4 Pa. Sup. Ct. Dig. 598, not yet reported.

In the latter case the plaintiff had, for the consideration of $1,000, released the company from all suits, claims, demands and damages whatever, for, upon or by reason of their entry upon and taking and occupying the land on which the railroad was built, and the location and construction of said railroad and works connected therewith. The plaintiff brought suit to recover damages for the flooding of his land. His allegation was that the culvert built by the company to carry off the water was too small for that purpose in times of freshets, and that the construction of the road caused a larger body of water to accumulate at that particular spot than had been the case before such construction. Upon the trial of that case the court below reserved the question whether the release was a bar to a recovery by the plaintiff, and subsequently entered judgment thereon for the defendant, which was affirmed by this court. It was said in the opinion: "We are unable to see any ground upon which the plaintiff could rest a claim for damages." The cases cited rule the one in hand. The defendant Company obtained from the plaintiff a release for the right of way of eighty feet in width across said farm. The agreement further released the said Company from all claims for damages by reason of the taking and using of the land for said railroad, or by reason of the construction and maintenance of the said railroad on and over said tract of land. The plaintiff contended that about six acres of his land was repeatedly overflowed and rendered unfit for cultivation, by reason of the construction of a ditch and culvert by the Railroad Company, which he alleged threw water upon his land which would not have otherwise flowed there. The learned judge below instructed the jury that "these ditches and culvert, and this discharge of water is the result, the necessary result, of the construction of that road." We see no error in this. It is in direct line with the rulings of this court in the cases above cited. A release of the right of way to a railroad company would be a vain thing if the company is to be subsequently subjected to litigation for every injury or damage resulting to the property by reason of the construction of the road. All these matters are supposed to be in the contemplation of the parties when the company pays its money for the right of way and obtains a release therefor.

Judgment affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

ADAMS EXPRESS CO., Appt.,

v.

John B. HARRIS et al.

(....Ind....)

1. An intermediate carrier can derive no benefit from a contract between the first carrier and the shipper, limiting the carrier's liability, where such contract neither provides that its stipulations shall inure to the benefit of any other than the first carrier nor designates any other carrier along the line as an intermediate carrier.

2. Where the title of the cause gives the full names of the plaintiffs, they need not be repeated in alleging that plaintiffs are partners.

NOTE.—Common carriers; liability for loss of goods.

A common carrier has two distinct liabilities, one for losses by accident or mistake where his liability is that of insurer; the other for losses by default or negligence, where his liability is that of an ordinary bailee. New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 363 (21 L. ed. 635); Dorr v. New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. 11 N. Y. 485, 4 Sandf. 176.

Liability may be restricted by contract.

It is a well-established rule of law that a carrier may restrict his common-law liability as insurer. Fibel v. Livingstone, 64 Barb. 179; Christenson v. Am. Exp. Co. 15 Minn. 270; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Henderson, 51 Pa. 315; Farnham v. Camden & A. R. Co. 55 Pa. 53; Davidson v. Graham, 2 Ohio St. 131; Graham v. Davis, 4 Ohio St. 362; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Adams, 42 Ill. 474.

7 L. R. A.

The right of the carrier to limit its responsibility has been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States since its decision in the case of New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants Bank, 47 U. S. 6 How. 344 (12 L. ed. 465); but to be valid the limitation must in all cases be reasonable (The Colon, 9 Benedict, 354; Rintoul v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 17 Fed. Rep. 906; May v. The Powhatan, 5 Fed. Rep. 375), and to be reasonable it must not stipulate for exemptions from liability for the consequences of its negligence, or that of its servants or agents. Inman v. South Carolina R. Co. 129 U. S. 123 (32 L. ed. 612); Merchants D. Transp. Co. v. Bloch, 86 Tenn. 397; Coward v. East Tenn. V. & G. R. Co. 16 Lea, 225; Dillard v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 2 Lea, 238; Southern Exp. Co. v. Caldwell, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 284 (22 L. ed. 556). See note to Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Payne (Va.) 6 L. R. A. 849.

It is not just and reasonable in the eyes of the

3. A complaint against "Adams Express Company" need not specifically allege that it is a corporation. That fact is imported by its name.

4. A common carrier waives his right to detain goods for the freight if he puts his refusal to deliver them to the owner upon the ground that they are not in his possession at the place where a demand is duly made.

5. Where a corporation invests an agent with general authority to adjust claims against it, the declarations of that agent, made while endeavoring to secure an adjustment of the claim, are competent evidence against his principal.

6. A limitation of liability in the bill of lading will not control where the damage is an effect of the carrier's negligence, and where it does not appear that the limitation was in consideration of a lower rate of freight.

(May 9, 1889.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Morgan County in favor of plaintiffs in an action to recover damages for injuries to plaintiffs' property while in defendant's possession for purposes of transportation, alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Jordan & Matthews, for appellant:

The stipulations and conditions in the bill of lading inure to the benefit of the intermediate carrier the same as to the initial carrier.

U. S. Exp. Co. v. Harris, 51 Ind. 127; Maghee v. Camden & A. R. Transp. Co. 45 N. Y. 514, and cases cited; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 210.

The declarations of an agent cannot bind his principal unless they are part of the res gesta.

Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Theobald, 51 Ind. 249, and cases cited; La Rose v. Loganport Nat. Bank, 102 Ind. 346; Williamson v. Cambridge R. Co. 3 New Eng. Rep. 750, 144 Mass. 148.

Messrs. Adams & Newby for appellees.

Elliott, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The material facts pleaded by the appellees as their cause of action are these: On and prior to the 17th day of January, 1885, they were partners engaged in business as nurserymen; on that day a lot of fruit trees was delivered to the United States Express Company at Champaign, Illinois; the trees were owned by the plaintiffs and were directed to them at Mooresville, Indiana. The United States Express Company undertook to carry the trees to Indianapolis, and there deliver them to some other carrier, to be transported to their destination. A written contract was made between the United States Express Company and the plaintiffs, which contained, among other things, these provisions: that the person or corporation to whom the trees shall be delivered for transportation from the end of that company's line to their destination shall not be deemed the agent of the company, but shall be deemed the agent of the plaintiffs; that the company shall not be liable for injury to the goods unless it "be proved to have occurred from the fraud or gross negligence of the company or its servants; nor shall any demand be made upon the company for more than $50, at which sum said property is hereby valued." There is no provision in the contract for the benefit of any carrier except the United States Express Company, nor is any other carrier named.

The trees were delivered to the defendant in good condition at Indianapolis, and it carried them to Mooresville. After they had reached there, the plaintiffs went to the office of the defendant, prepared to pay the charges and receive the trees, and although they were then in the possession of the defendant's agent, he denied that they had been received. On a subsequent day the plaintiffs went again to the defendant's office, received the trees and paid the freight on them. The trees were so injured through the negligence of the defendant as to be utterly valueless. The plaintiffs had sold the trees to divers persons, and had agreed to deliver them on the 19th day of October, 1885. The refusal of the defendant to deliver the trees when first demanded caused the plaintiffs to lose the profits of the sales made by them, for the reason that the delay prevented them from delivering the trees to the purchasers in accordance with their contract.

The contention of the appellant is that the contract between the United States Express Company and the plaintiffs bound both them and the appellant; that the latter, when it accepted the goods for transportation, became bound to comply with the provisions of the contract and secured a right to all its stipulations in favor of the first carrier, and that the law for a common carrier to stipulate for exemption from responsibility for the negligence of himself or his servants; nor can it arbitrarily, or without the consent of the shipper, place a value upon articles received for carriage and in this manner limit the amount of recovery against it in case of loss. Rosenfeld v. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. 1 West. Rep. 151, 103 Ind. 121. See note to Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Ivey (Tex.) 1 L. R. A. 500; North America Ins. Co. v. Easton (Tex.) 3 L. R. A. 425.

Limit to Liability.

The same reasons do not exist against contracts limiting the amount of recovery as exist against contracts for total exemption from liability; hence the rule as expressed in Southern Exp. Co. v. Moon, 39 Miss. 822; The City of Norwich, 4 Benedict, 271; United States Exp. Co. v. Backman, 28 Ohio St. 144; Black v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 55 Wis. 319; Chicago, 7 L. R. A.

St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Abels, 60 Miss. 1017; Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. Simpson, 30 Kan. 645.

The agreement limiting the carrier's liability may be either written or printed. Feige v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 62 Mich. 1.

A shipper who signs a contract limiting the carrier's liability cannot evade its effect on the ground that he did not know its contents, where he had opportunity to read it or hear it read. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Weekly, 50 Ark. 397; Hutchinson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 37 Minn. 524; Myers v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 6 West. Rep. 685, 90 Mo. 98.

Where a contract signed by the shipper is fairly made, agreeing on a valuation of the property shipped, with the rate of freight based on the condition that the carrier assumes liability only to the extent of the agreed valuation, even in case of loss or damage by the negligence of the carrier, the contract continued in force for the benefit of all the parties until the goods were delivered at their destination.

The opposing contention is, that the contract between the United States Express Company and the plaintiffs did not inure to the benefit of the appellant, and that, when it accepted the goods for transportation, it received them under the law and became bound by the ordinary rules which prevail in cases where there is no special contract.

If the appellant had been designated in the contract with the first carrier as one of the intermediate carriers, or if the contract had provided that its stipulations should inure to the benefit of all the carriers, then the contention of the appellant would find strong support from the authorities. U. S. Exp. Co. v. Harris, 51 Ind. 127; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Weakly, 50 Ark. 397; Halliday v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 74 Mo. 159, 41 Am. Rep. 309; Evansville & C. R. Co. v. Androscooggin Mills, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 594 [22 L. ed. 724]; Maghee v. Camden & A. R. Transp. Co. 45 N. Y. 514; Manhattan Oil Co. v. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. 54 N. Y. 197.

But the contract does not provide that its stipulations shall inure to the benefit of any other carrier than the one with whom it was made, nor does it designate any other carrier along the line. Its provisions apply only to the carrier with whom the contract was directly made, and they leave it to that carrier to select the carrier from the termination of its line to the end of the route. The authorities are substantially agreed that in such a case the intermediate carrier cannot successfully claim the benefit of the provisions of the original contract. Martin v. Am. Exp. Co. 19 Wis. 836; Bancroft v. Merchants Despatch Transp. Co. 47 Iowa, 262, 29 Am. Rep. 482; Merchants Despatch Transp. Co. v. Bolles, 80 Ill. 478; Camden & A. R. Co. v. Forsythe, 61 Pa. 81; Etna Ins. Co. v. Wheeler, 49 N. Y. 616.

The rule declared by the decisions we have referred to is the only one that can be defended on principle; for, where the contract designates only one carrier, there is no privity between the owners and the designated carriers; but, where the contract is a through one, by designated carriers there is a privity of contract, for it is justly inferable that the contract was intended for the benefit of all who perform services under it. So, too, where the contract declares that it is for the benefit of intermediate carriers it may be enforced, since it is a contract for the benefit of a third person, and, as it is beneficial to him, it is natural to presume that its terms were assented to and formed the contract under which the goods were transported. Where, however, the contract is solely for the benefit of the original parties it is not possible to apply this rule to it.

Where, as here, the names of the plaintiffs are given in full in the title of the cause, it is unnecessary to repeat them in alleging that the plaintiffs were partners. It is sufficient to allege that the plaintiffs were partners, without again giving their names.

The name of the defendant imports that it is contract will be upheld; the valuation and limitation of liability in the bill of lading, being just and reasonable, is binding on the shipper. Newburger v. Howard & Co's Express, 6 Phila. 174; Squire v. New York Cent. R. Co. 98 Mass. 239; Hopkins v. Westcott, 6 Blatchf. 64; Belger v. Dinamore, 51 N. Y. 166; Oppenheimer v. U. S. Exp. Co. 69 Ill. 62; Magnin v. Dinamore, 56 N. Y. 163, 62 N. Y. 36, 70 N. Y. 410; Earnest v. Southern Exp. Co. 1 Woods, 573; Elkins v. Empire Transp. Co. 81* Pa. 815; South and North Ala. R. Co. v. Henlein, 52 Ala. 606, 56 Ala. 368; Muser v. Holland, 17 Blatchf. 412; Harvey v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 74 Mo. 538; Graves v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 137 Mass. 33, approved in H. rt v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 333 (28 L. ed. 719); Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sherrod, 84 Ala. 178; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Weakly, 50 Ark. 397.

A bill of lading is the written contract of the parties, and by its terms their rights and liabilities must be measured (Fry v. Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. 1 West. Rep. 230, 103 Ind. 265), and one accepting it without examining its contents will be bound thereby. Snow v. Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. 7 West. Rep. 264, 109 Ind. 422.

The effect of acceptance by the shipper of a bill of lading is regulated by the Civil Code of Dakota. See Hartwell v. Northern Pac. Exp. Co. 8 L. R. A. 342, 5 Dak. 463.

The rule that a shipper must examine a bill of lading, or if he does not he is bound by its terms, does not apply where, before delivery of the bill, the goods have been shipped so far that he could not have reclaimed them had he objected to the bill; nor does it apply where the parties have acted upon a previous parcel agreement. Guillaume v. General Transatlantic Co. 1 Cent. Rep. 723, 100 N. Y. 491; Snow v. Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. 7 West. Rep. 264, 109 Ind. 422; Hamilton v. Western N. C. R. Co. 96 N. C. 386.

If for the purpose of getting reduced rates the 7 L. R. A.

shipper should put a value on the articles, he cannot recover beyond that value. Rosenfeld v. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. 1 West. Rep. 150, 103 Ind. 121.

A stipulation, in a bill of lading, that the carrier's responsibility as a common carrier shall terminate when the goods are transported and safely stored in the depot of the carrier, is not opposed to public policy, and operates to limit the liability thereafter to that of a warehouseman. Western R. Co. v. Little, 86 Ala. 150.

In case of connecting carriers.

The rights of a connecting carrier receiving goods from another carrier are not affected by any limitations put upon the latter's authority by the shipper, of which the connecting carrier has no notice. Price v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 12 Colo. 402.

When several carriers unite to complete a line of transportation, and receive goods for one freight, they are each liable for damages during transportation, subject to reclamation against the party by whose act the damage occurred. Richardson v. The Charles P. Chouteau, 37 Fed. Rep. 532.

A carrier receiving freight from another carrier under an agreement between the latter and the shipper is entitled to the benefit of any valid limitation of the first carrier's liability, just as it is liable for any failure to perform its part of the contract. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Weakly, 50 Ark. 397.

A railroad company whose line is one of several connecting roads, in the absence of a special contract or of an association or copartnership by which each connecting line is liable for the contracts of the others, is not responsible for damages for negligence occurring beyond its terminus. In such case its liability is confined to that of a forwarding agent. Knott v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 96 N. C. 73.

a corporation, and it was therefore not necessary to specifically aver that it was a corporation. Adams Exp. Co. v. Hill, 48 Ind. 157; Indianapolis Sun Co. v. Horrell, 53 Ind. 527; Sayers v. Orafordsville First Nat. Bank, 89 Ind. 280.

The defendant's denial of the possession of the goods at Mooresville excused the plaintiffs from making a tender of the carrier's charges. A common carrier waives his right to detain goods for the freight if he puts his refusal to deliver them to the owner upon the ground that they are not in his possession at the place where a demand is duly made. Vinton v. Baldwin, 95 Ind. 433, and cases cited; Mathis v. Thomas, 101 Ind. 119; Platter v. Elkhart County, 103 Ind. 360, 1 West. Rep. 236; House v. Alexander, 105 Ind. 109, 8 West. Rep. 316.

Where a corporation invests an agent with general authority to adjust claims against it, the declarations of that agent, made while endeavoring to secure an adjustment of the claim, are competent evidence against his principal. This general rule has often been applied in insurance cases, and must necessarily apply in such cases as this, for, otherwise, the corporation would be entirely without a representative.

In deciding, as we have, that the provisions of the contract with the United States Express Company cannot be taken advantage of by the appellant, we have disposed of the point that the damages are limited to $50; but if we were wrong in this, still, the limitation will not control, since there is evidence of negligence and no evidence that a lower rate of freight was given on account of the limitation placed upon the value of the property. Rosenfeld v. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. 108 Ind. 121, 1 West. Rep. 150; Bartlett v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 94 Ind. 281; United States Exp. Co. v. Backman, 28 Ohio St. 144.

As there was evidence of negligence, and no evidence that there was any special consideration inducing the owners to place a less value on their property than its actual worth, the limitation, even conceding it to be available to the appellant as a part of the contract, is nullified.

The instructions of the court are quite as favorable to the appellant as the law warrants, and the evidence fully supports the verdict.

Judgment affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied September 25, 1889.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY of the United States, Appl.,

v.

Robert R. HAZLEWOOD.

(...Tex....)

1. A warranty by an applicant for a life insurance that his answers to the society's medical examiner are true, does not make him responsible for the truth of such answers as reported to the company; and if by being incorrectly written down by such examiner without the applicant's knowledge they are untrue as reported to the company, the policy will not be avoided thereby.

2. The signature of an applicant for life insurance, written at the beginning of the paper containing his medical examination, is for purposes of identification rather

NOTE.—Life policy; construction of.

A policy of insurance is a single entire contract and continues during the life of the insured subject to discontinuance by nonpayment of the premiums. Fearn v. Ward, 80 Ala. 555.

The provisions of a policy are construed and applied like other contracts, and may render it void ab initio, by its terms and failure of warranty. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Pyle, 2 West. Rep. 380, 44 Ohio St. 19.

Questions and answers will be reasonably construed although the policy is conditioned on the truth of the answers. Home Mut. L. Asso. v. Gillespie, 1 Cent. Rep. 134, 110 Pa. 84.

Mistakes in policies may be disregarded or corrected. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Pyle, supra.

Application for insurance on life.

Where the application was signed before being filled out, the fact that the answers were incorrectly written in by the agent may be established by parol evidence; otherwise if the applicant had signed afterwards. Brown v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 8 West. Rep. 775, 45 Mich. 303.

Where an agent of a life insurance company assumed the whole preparation of an application, and asked or told the applicant to sign it, without her reading it or hearing it read, the company cannot defend on the ground of false statements in the application. Tummink v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 72 Mich. —, 40 N. W. Rep. 469.

7 L. R. A.

Where a physician, acting as agent for the company, in examining an applicant for life insurance, assumes to write out the answers to the questions upon his own knowledge of the facts, rather than from the answers given by the applicant, the answers as given by him are conclusive on the company. Pudritzky v. Supreme Lodge K. of H. 76 Mich. 423.

A copy of an application attached to an insurance policy, which does not have the name of the applicant appended thereto, is not a copy of such application within the Statute of Wisconsin, requiring a copy to be attached to the policy in order to permit the insurance company to prove the falsity of any statement therein. Dunbar v. Phenix Ins. Co. 72 Wis. 492.

Whether the signature to an application for insurance, which was by mark only, is genuine or not is immaterial, where the policy has been accepted, the premiums paid for several years, and received and retained by the company, with no offer to return them. Home Mut. L. Asso. v. Riel (Pa.) 17 Atl. Rep. 36.

Where an insurance contract is ambiguous, the doubt should be resolved against the company. See note to Kratzenstein v. Western Assur. Co. (N. Y.) 5 L. R. A. 799.

Company responsible for acts of its agents.

The insurance company, and not the insured, is responsible for the falsity of answers inserted in the tiff's use, and not the reservation to the owner of the use of his land. Every use by the owner was abandoned, except such as might be made in a mode entirely consistent with the full and undisturbed enjoyment by the grantee of the easement. The idea of a joint use of the land by both parties, in the sense that a use by the grantee should at any time give way to a use by the grantor, is contrary to the plain meaning and intent of the grant. It cannot be supposed that the grantor, when conveying a right of way over an impassable tract of land, intended to restrict his grantee from changing its surface so as to make it passable and available for the purpose of a road, or that, after the road had been so constructed, he had the right to enter upon the land and impair its usefulness, or impose upon the grantee the duty of keeping such impaired road in repair for the benefit of the grantor. The full extent of the rights of the grantor in the soil of the road was to enter thereon, and do such acts only as should not injure or impair the enjoyment of the easement by the grantee, and when he went beyond such use he transcended the rights pertaining to his character as the owner of the soil. The general character of these rights is familiar to all owners of land, because they are common to all whose lands abut upon public roads, and they are varied only by the character of the easements enjoyed, and the terms of the grants under which they are possessed. Unless, therefore, something can be found in the terms of the grant which modifies the easement created, that must be held to be the measure of the rights of the parties. No inference can be drawn from the present grant that it was intended that the grantor should enjoy the unrestricted use of the road, with the privilege of so wearing and using it as to subject the grantee to the labor and expense of keeping it in repair. It is apparent from the character of the property affected, and the use to be made thereof, that the plaintiff expected to construct a carriage road for access to and communication with his residence as a gentleman's country seat. It could not have been contemplated by the parties that such a road was to be used for farming purposes, to draw heavy loads over, and cut it up by the use of the various appliances needed for such purposes. The land over which the road was laid out had never before been so used, and the owner of the soil had theretofore obtained access to his land from the public road by entering upon and traveling over it in other places. The land itself was of small compass, and little value, as it was hilly, rocky, sterile and unadapted to agricultural uses; and it could not, under the circumstances, have been intended that the road was to be built and used to any considerable extent for farming purposes by either the grantor or grantee. The building of fences on both sides of the road showed an intention to preserve it from indiscriminate use, and, while the construction of a bar-way on either side of the road manifested a design that the defendant might thereby have access to his land and cross the road, it was not intended, we think, to give him liberty to so use the road as to impair or destroy its usefulness or character as a carriage road for private use. The right of way granted was to be forty feet wide, and the grantee had a right thereunder, not only to a free passage over the traveled part, but also to a free passage over such portion of the land, inclosed as a way, as he thought proper or necessary to use. Herrick v. Stover, 5 Wend. 580; Drake v. Rogers, 8 Hill, 604; Wood, Nuis. § 260.

7 L. R. A.

The deposit of stone or other obstructions on such inclosed space, in such a way as to interrupt the enjoyment of the easement, constituted an obstruction which was inconsistent with the rights possessed by the grantee, and could be properly prevented by injunction. The use of such land for agricultural purposes, the raising of crops or the deposit of materials thereon, except perhaps for temporary purposes,—was clearly inconsistent with the rights conveyed by the grant. It is difficult, if not impossible, to lay down a clear and definite line of use which shall enable the parties always to determine what may be considered a proper and reasonable use, as distinguished from an unreasonable and improper one; and such questions must, of necessity, be usually left to the determination of a jury or the trial court, as questions of fact. Baheman v. Talbot, 81 N. Y. 866; Huson v. Young, 4 Lana. 64; Prentice v. Geiger, 74 N. Y. 342.

It is not supposed that it was the intention of the court below to wholly preclude the defendant from the use of the roadway by passing over or across it in such manner as should not materially obstruct passage or injure the road-bed; but it was only intended to prevent an unreasonable use thereof which should sensibly impair its condition, or render its use offensive and impracticable to the plaintiff and others having lawful occasion to pass over it. We think the findings of the trial court are conclusive upon us as to the improper use of the road by the defendant, and that an injunction was properly awarded against him. Some of the members of this court are, however, apprehensive that the order made by the court below is not sufficiently explicit, and may be subject to misunderstanding and misconstruction. We have therefore thought best to change its form so as to express more clearly the rights and duties of the respective parties. The words "willfully or unreasonably" should be inserted after the word "interfering," in the sixth line of the order, in the place of the words "in any way," and also after the word "as," in the ninth line of said order.

With these modifications, the judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur (Andrews, J., in result), except Finch, J., dissenting.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS (2d Div.).

Grace E. KURSHEEDT et al., Respts.,
v.
UNION DIME SAVINGS INSTITUTION,
Appt.

(.....N. Y.....)

The inchoate dower right of the wife of defendant in a suit to foreclose a mortgage given by his grantor, where neither she nor the grantor is served or appears as defendant, the grantor being simply named in the summons, is not cut off by the judgment of foreclosure under Code Proc., § 182, barring parties who claim under unrecorded deeds from a defendant in foreclosure, although the conveyance was not recorded, or known to the plaintiff. Her right is not derived from her husband, but from the grantor.

(January 21, 1890.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of the New York Special Term in favor of plaintiffs in an action to recover back the purchase money paid for certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. William H. Arnoux, for appellant: Mrs. Sandford is a subsequent incumbrancer, and is barred by the proceedings subsequent to the filing of the lis pendens.

Old Code, § 182; Ostrom v. McCann, 21 How. Pr. 431; Fuller v. Scribner, 76 N. Y. 190, 16 Hun, 180.

It is objected that Clark was never served, but that makes no difference. A foreclosure is in its nature a proceeding in rem (Cleveland v. Boerum, 24 N. Y. 622); and hence, when it is begun as to one it is begun as to all, including Clark.

The title of the defendant to the premises in question was free from any and all defects, and was a good, valid and marketable title.

Moser v. Cochrane, 9 Cent. Rep. 427, 107 N. Y. 85; Schermerhorn v. Niblo, 2 Bosw 161; M. R. Church Home v. Thompson, 10 Cent. Rep. 508, 108 N. Y. 618.

Mr. M. A. Kursheedt, for respondents:

Mrs. Sandford was not made a party to the action, and, as she holds an inchoate right of dower, can now redeem from the mortgage.

Wheeler v. Morris, 2 Bosw. 524; Mills v. Van Voorhies, 20 N. Y. 412.

This right is a real and existing interest, and as much entitled to protection as the vested right of a widow, and neither can be impaired by any judicial proceeding to which the wife or widow is not made a party. A wife as much as a widow is an absolutely necessary party to an action in order to produce such a title as a purchaser will be compelled to accept.

Wiltse, Mortg. Foreclosure, 100, § 44; Mer- chants Bank v. Thomson, 55 N. Y. 7; Mills v. Van Voorhies, supra; Bell v. New York, 10 Paige, 49; Denton v. Nanny, 8 Barb. 618; Wheeler v. Morris, supra; Hitchcock v. Harrington, 6 Johns. 290; Collins v. Torry, 7 Johns. 278.

In Kittle v. Van Dyck, 1 Sandf. Ch. 76-78, the vice-chancellor, citing Hobart v. Abbot, 2 P. Wms. 648, and Norrish v. Marshall, 5 Madd. 475, held that a wife, who had not joined in a purchase money mortgage, takes her dower in the premises subject to the mortgage, and is an interested and consequently a necessary party to the foreclosure suit. See also Taggart v. Rogers, 49 Hun, 265; Walton v. Meeks, 41 Hun, 311.

Previous to the amendment of the Code of Procedure in 1858, it had been settled in this State, by numerous decisions, that a subsequent purchaser was not bound by a lis pendens, until the action was properly commenced against his grantor, by the service of process, either personally or by publication.

Hayden v. Bucklin, 9 Paige, 513; Butler v. Tomlinson, 38 Barb. 641.

Since then no case can be found where a notice of lis pendens has been held to affect a purchaser from a party named as a defendant in the summons, but never served with process.

See Fuller v. Scribner, 76 N. Y. 190; Lamont v. Cheshire, 65 N. Y. 80.

The entry of a judgment against a defendant not served with process, and who has not appeared, is a void act, so far as he is concerned.

Powell v. Finch, 5 Duer, 666.

A void judgment is, in legal effect, no judgment, and all claims flowing out of it are void. Freeman, Judgments, § 117.

Bradley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The purpose of this action was to recover back the purchase money paid by the plaintiffs to the defendant upon a contract, whereby the latter agreed to sell and convey to them certain land situated in the City of New York; and the alleged ground of the claim is that the defendant was unable to convey to the plaintiffs such title as they were entitled to under the contract. They recovered. The title which the defendant claims to have come through that taken by one Rowe from Catharine A. Ferris, who had the title on the 1st day of December, 1870, when she made a conveyance to Rowe. That conveyance also covered land which the defendant by contract undertook to sell and convey to one Todd, who also brought an action against this defendant to recover back purchase money. The proposition, urged on the part of the plaintiffs in this action, that the title taken by the defendant was defective on the alleged ground that the deed from Ferris to Rowe was not

NOTE.—Dower; inchoate right.

The right of dower, unlike an estate given by statute to the widow, confers no seisin until it is assigned to her, although actually in possession by acquiescence of the heirs and devisees. McMahon v. Gray (Mass.) 5 L. R. A. 748.

The inchoate right of the wife is as much entitled to protection as the vested rights of the widow. See note to Mandel v. McClave (Ohio) 5 L. R. A. 519.

It is not defeated by a tax sale where the lien for taxes attaches after the dower right becomes fixed. Shell v. Duncan (S. C.) 5 L. R. A. 321. See also note to Everson v. McMullen (N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 118.

It is not defeated by a tax sale where the lien for taxes attaches after the dower right becomes fixed. Shell v. Duncan (S. C.) 5 L. R. A. 321. See also note to Everson v. McMullen (N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 118.

sealed, has, at the present term of this court, been determined in Todd v. Union Dime Sav. Inst., 23 N. Y. S. R. 697, upon the same evidence as that presented by the record here, adversely to the plaintiffs, and therefore will have no further consideration on this review.

There is, however, a further question in the present case, which requires consideration. In May, 1874, one Clark, claiming to be the owner of the premises, made to one Clapp a mortgage upon them to secure the payment of $22,000 according to the condition of a bond made by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, which bond and mortgage were duly assigned by Clapp to the defendant, and afterwards, and in July, 1874, the defendant brought an action to foreclose the mortgage, and filed with the proper clerk the summons and complaint, with a notice of the pendency of the action. The mortgagor, Clark, and one Thomas L. Sandford, were named as defendants in the foreclosure action. The summons was in no manner served upon Clark, nor did he appear in the action. Sandford appeared and defended, and, among other matters, alleged a conveyance of the premises by Clark to him. The fact was that he had a deed to that effect in his possession at the time of the commencement of that action. It was not then recorded, nor was the defendant then advised that such a deed had been made. But at the time of the commencement of that action Sandford had a wife, Delia A. Sandford, who was not made a party defendant therein. The question arises whether, in view of the fact that Clark was not served, the omission to make Mrs. Sandford a party defendant in the foreclosure action rendered the judgment in that action ineffectual to bar her inchoate right of dower. Such would have been the effect if Clark had been served with the summons or had appeared in the action. Old Code, § 132; Fuller v. Scribner, 76 N. Y. 190.

This is on the permitted assumption (without considering the effect if otherwise) that the Savings Institution was in no manner charged with notice of the conveyance to Sandford at the time of the commencement of that action.

Assuming that Clark had conveyed his interest in the property, he was not a necessary party to the action of foreclosure; but, if the action had been brought and prosecuted upon that assumption, it was necessary to make those deriving any title or interest in it from his conveyance parties defendant. Prior to the Code the failure to record a conveyance made subsequently to a mortgage, and prior to the commencement of an action for its foreclosure or filing his pendens, did not obviate the necessity of making such subsequent grantee a party defendant to bar his right of redemption. Those not made parties, and thus affected by the judgment, were purchasers and incumbrancers who became such pendente lite. Haines v. Beach, 3 Johns. Ch. 459; Hayden v. Bucklin, 9 Paige, 512; Butler v. Tomlinson, 38 Barb. 641.

The provisions of the Code so modified the rule as to make the action and its result effectual, as against subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers whose conveyances are not recorded at the time of filing the notice of pendency of the action. This may not be the rule when a plaintiff in such an action has actual notice of the unrecorded incumbrance at the time of its commencement. Lamont v. Cheshire, 65 N. Y. 80.

There is no occasion here to consider that question. It was contemplated by the provisions referred to of the Code that those whose conveyances or incumbrances appear by the record should be made parties in order to charge with the result of the action those holding under them not made parties, whose interests do not so appear of record at the time of filing such notice; that is to say, that the latter should be barred by charging the former as defendants in the action. The fact, therefore, that Clark had conveyed the property, did not, for that purpose, obviate the necessity of serving him with the summons, and charging him by the decree, and thus through him by that means to bind any person, not made a party, who had by his unrecorded conveyance taken any right relating to the title to the premises. It may be assumed that the notice was duly filed, representing Clark as a party defendant; but that, of itself, was ineffectual to bar Mrs. Sandford's right of redemption, if she took any such right through or by means of the conveyance. Such result was dependent upon effectuating the proceedings in the action against him as a party defendant. Without accomplishing such a result, he was, in practical effect, no more a party than he would have been if his name, as such, had not appeared in the summons. The grantee, Sandford, in the conveyance made by Clark, was served, and so far as he was concerned the failure to serve Clark had no importance, and its only consequence has relation to Mrs. Sandford, and the effect of the foreclosure action, the decree, and its execution, if executed, upon her alleged inchoate right of dower in the premises. Assuming, as we may for the purposes of this review, that such right existed when the foreclosure action was commenced, it was the subject of her protection by means of defense or any other adequate remedy until lawfully barred. Mills v. Van Voorhies, 20 N. Y. 412; Simar v. Canaday, 53 N. Y. 298; Denton v. Nanny, 8 Barb. 618.

The right of dower is not derived from the husband. It is a right at common law, and arises by reason of the marriage and by operation of law. It is a right which attaches on the land when the seisin and the marriage relation are concurrent, and such is the effect of the Statute. 1 Rev. Stat. p. 740, § 1. When it was essential, under an early statute of this State, to determine the relation of the wife to the grant made of land to her husband, it was held that the wife's inchoate right of dower vested at the moment of the grant to the husband; and that she took such right constructively, as purchaser from the grantor. Sutliff v. Forgey, 1 Cow. 89; Forgey v. Sutliff, 5 Cow. 718; Priest v. Cummings, 20 Wend. 350; Connolly v. Smith, 21 Wend. 61; Lawrence v. Miller, 2 N. Y. 251.

And, inasmuch as Mrs. Sandford did not derive her inchoate right of dower from her husband, the fact that he was a party defendant to the foreclosure action did not operate to bar or defeat her right of redemption. In view of the apparent situation arising from the failure to bar this alleged right of Mrs. Sandford, the title which the defendant was able to convey to the plaintiffs was not free from reasonable doubt, and was not the marketable title which, in the contemplation of the parties, was to be conveyed in performance of the contract.

The judgment should be affirmed.
All concur, except Potter and Haight, JJ., not sitting.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Benjamin F. KOONS, Admr., Appl.

v.

Joshua H. MELLETT et al.

(....Ind.....)

1. Notice of appeal to co-parties need not be given under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 635, where no judgment is rendered against them and they have no interest in the appeal.
2. An appeal in a suit by the creditor of a legatee against him and the administrator to reach money in the latter's hands is not subject to the provisions of Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 2454, 2455, respecting appeals in proceedings for settlement of decedent's estates.
3. The general lien of a judgment creditor of a legatee upon lands charged with the legacy or upon the proceeds of a sale thereof is subject to any equities that may exist in favor of the estate against the legatee.
4. The indebtedness of a legatee to the estate, including that arising from payment by the administrator of obligations of the intestate as surety for the legatee, may be set off against his claim to the legacy.

(Berkshire and Olds, JJ., dissent.)

(December 19, 1893.)

APPEAL from a judgment of the Wayne Circuit Court in favor of the appellees in an action to compel application by the appellant as administrator of money in his hands to satisfaction of a judgment in plaintiffs' favor against a legatee. Reversed.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Kibbey & Kibbey for appellant.
Messrs. Burchenal & Rupe for appellees.

Coffey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Daniel Ulrich died testate in Wayne County, Indiana, on the 1st day of March, 1884, the owner in fee of real estate in that county of the value of $15,000, leaving eight children then living as his heirs-at-law. The will of the said Daniel Ulrich contains the following clause:

NOTE.—Appeal by less than all interested.

The word "co-parties," as used in section 635 of the Revised Statutes, means parties to the judgment appealed from, not co-plaintiffs or co-defendants to the action. Hogan v. Robinson, 94 Ind. 140; Easter v. Severin, 78 Ind. 540; Hadley v. Hill, 73 Ind. 448; Hammon v. Sexton, 60 Ind. 37.

All parties to and affected by the judgment must be made parties to the appeal, else the appeal may be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Hunderlock v. Dundee, M. & T. Inv. Co. 88 Ind. 189.

The rule of the section is somewhat technical. A party waives the benefit of it where no motion is made to dismiss until after submission or call by agreement, and there has been joinder in error. Martin v. Orr, 96 Ind. 492; Hendricks v. Frank, 86 Ind. 273; Easter v. Acklemire, 81 Ind. 164; Easter v. Severin, 78 Ind. 542; Field v. Burton, 71 Ind. 380; State v. Hattabough, 66 Ind. 223; People's Sav. Bank v. Finney, 63 Ind. 460.

Submission by agreement waives all defects as to parties to the appeal. Lebanon First Nat. Bank v. Essex, 84 Ind. 144.

Where a part of several co-parties appeal, this section requires only that a co-party to the judgment appealed from shall join or be notified. Logan v. Logan, 77 Ind. 560.

Parties to an action need not be notified of an appeal unless they are parties to the judgment, from which the appeal is taken. Kennedy v. Divine, 77 Ind. 492.

Two defendants appealed, served notice upon their co-defendants and filed proof of such notice with the clerk of the supreme court. Defendants not appearing and declining to join are regarded as having joined in the appeal. Roy v. Rowe, 90 Ind. 55.

After notice of appeal served on co-defendants, one party to the judgment may assign error in his own name alone, and, after joinder in error, and cause submitted on a written agreement, the errors are well enough signed in the name of appellant. Cain v. Gods, 94 Ind. 555.

7 L. R. A.

Where no question is made on appeal as to a defect of parties, the court will not, sponte sua, dismiss. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Yount, 98 Ind. 456. See Hunderlock v. Dundee, M. & T. Inv. Co. 88 Ind. 189.

On appeal by A from a judgment refusing to quash an execution against A and B, on motion of A, B is not a necessary party. McAllister v. State, 81 Ind. 257.

In an action against A, B and C, in a judgment against A and in favor of B and C, B and C are not necessary or proper parties to A's appeal. Berg-hoff v. McDonald, 87 Ind. 551.

When time is given to file appeal bond, which is filed within the time prescribed, and transcript filed less than sixty days after the filing of the appeal bond, notice is unnecessary, and parties who were plaintiffs below may be joined in the appeal, by naming them in the assignment of errors. Conaway v. Ascherman, 94 Ind. 188.

Distribution of estate where legatee is debtor to the estate.

When a legatee is a debtor to the estate, he is entitled to only the excess, if any, of the legacy over the debt. Armour v. Kendall, 15 R. I. 193; Re Bogart, 28 Hun, 466, 468; Wilkes v. Greenhill, 29 Beav. 376, 382; Smith v. Smith, 8 Giff. 293.

The mere gift of a legacy is not a manifestation of the testator's intent to remit a debt due from the legatee. An executor is justified in refusing payment to a legatee indebted to testator in a sum greater than the legacy, and applying the same in part satisfaction of the debt. Smith v. Murray, 1 Dem. 86; Clarke v. Bogardus, 12 Wend. 67; Ranking v. Barnard, 5 Madd. 32; Wright v. Austin, 56 Barb. 17; Close v. Van Husen, 19 Barb. 509; Rickets v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Cas. 100; Coates v. Coates, 83 Beav. 249.

The executor may retain so much of the legacy as is sufficient to satisfy a debt due to the testator. Courtenay v. Williams, 3 Hare, 539; 1 Roper, Leg. 608.

An administrator with the will annexed may re-

"Secondly: It is my will that all of my property, both real and personal, shall be sold and the funds accruing therefrom shall be distributed as follows, to wit: David, my son, five hundred dollars for his work after he was twenty-one years of age; and Samuel, my son, three hundred dollars for a like service, and Daniel Heaston, one hundred dollars as a gift out of natural love and affection; and the balance to be equally divided amongst all my children," etc.

On the 28d day of May, 1884, the appellee, Joshua H. Mellett, recovered a judgment in the Henry County Circuit Court against the appellee, David C. Ulrich, legatee under said will, for the sum of $1,174.82 and costs, and on the 14th day of July, 1884, said Mellett filed a transcript of said judgment in the clerk's office of the Wayne Circuit Court, and caused the same to be duly recorded and docketed for the purpose of acquiring a lien on the interest of the said David C. Ulrich in the lands of which the said Daniel Ulrich died seized, the said David being a resident of Wayne County, and being insolvent, except for his interest in the estate of the said Daniel, deceased, an execution on said judgment having been returned wholly unsatisfied.

After the filing of said transcript in the clerk's office of the Wayne Circuit Court, the appellant, Benjamin F. Koons, was duly appointed administrator of the estate of the said

Daniel Ulrich with the will annexed, and on the 1st day of March, 1885, sold the real estate, of which the said Daniel died seized, to Benjamin B. Beeson for the sum of $15,482.89, which sale was duly approved by the Wayne Circuit Court.

This action was brought by the appellee, Mellett, for the purpose of compelling the appellant, Koons, as administrator, to apply the money in his hands belonging to the said David C. Ulrich to the satisfaction of his judgment, the complaint averring the facts above set forth.

At the death of the said Daniel Ulrich he was surety for the said David C. Ulrich upon promissory notes aggregating a large sum, which said administrator has since been compelled to pay. This, with other debts due from David to his father, exceeded his legacy. The administrator sought to set off against the interest of the said David C. Ulrich in said estate the amount he had thus been compelled to pay, together with the debts due from him to the estate, but the circuit court refused to allow such set-off, and he excepted.

The assignment of errors calls in question the correctness of this ruling.

The record contains a special finding of the facts in the cause, together with the court's conclusions of law thereon, from which it appears that the court held that the appellee, Mellett, by filing a transcript of the judgment of tain a pecuniary legacy in part payment of the debt due to the testator by the legatee. Blackier v. Boott, 114 Mass. 24; Green v. Nelson, 12 Met. 507.

A legatee having become bankrupt since the death of testator, his assignees are not entitled to any part of the personal estate bequeathed to the legatee. Richards v. Richards, 9 Price, 219.

The representatives of the widow after her death have no lawful claims against the estate except to the excess, if any there be, of the value of her entire interest therein above the amount of her indebtedness. Young v. Purdy, 4 Dem. 461; Springer's App. 29 Pa. 208; Allen v. Smitherman, 6 Ired. Eq. 341.

Debts due to estate to be first collected.

The executors had no right either to pay themselves, or any other legatees, any portion of the income upon their legacies until they had first collected the amount of their respective debts to the estate. Leggett v. Leggett, 24 Hun. 335; Adair v. Brimmer, 74 N. Y. 558; Campbell v. Graham, 1 Russ. & M. 453.

The right of an executor or administrator to retain the whole, or a part, of the legacy or distributive share, in discharge or satisfaction of a debt due from a legatee or distributee to the estate, is not only consistent with the soundest principles of equity, but is perfectly well settled. Rogers v. Murdock, 45 Hun. 82.

The administrator of the estate had the right to apply so much of the distributive share of the estate coming to the defendant as would pay and discharge the note against the estate. Wright v. Austin, 56 Barb. 17.

The executors have a right to set off the debt due against a claim by the legatee for payment of the legacy. Re Bogart, 28 Hun. 468; Stagg v. Beekman, 2 Edw. Ch. 89; Smith v. Kearney, 2 Barb. Ch. 533.

If the executor's answer denies the validity and legality of the claim, and alleges facts which support the denial, the surrogate cannot grant a legacy. 7 L. R. A.

tee's petition for payment. Charlick's Estate, 11 Abb. N. C. 57.

It is against conscience that the legatee should receive anything out of the fund without deducting therefrom the amount of that fund which is already in her hands as a debtor to the estate. Merritt v. Jenkins, 17 Fla. 598.

Lien of judgment confined to interest of debtor.

A court of equity will confine the lien of a judgment to the actual interest of the judgment debtor in the property. White v. Carpenter, 2 Paige, 217; Keirsted v. Avery, 4 Paige, 9; Thomas v. Kennedy, 24 Iowa, 397; Monticello Hydraulic Co. v. Loughry, 72 Ind. 562.

The interest which the judgment lien affects is the actual interest which the debtor has in the property, and a court of equity will always permit the real owner to show, there being no intervening fraud, that the apparent ownership of another is or was not real; and when the judgment debtor has none other than the legal title the lien of the judgment does not attack. Hays v. Reger, 3 West. Rep. 308, 102 Ind. 527; Wheeler v. Wheedon, 9 How. Pr. 303; Thomas v. Kennedy, 24 Iowa, 397; Brown v. Pierce, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 205 (19 L. ed. 134).

The lien constitutes no property or right in the land itself, as it is merely a general lien securing a preference over subsequently-acquired interests in the property. Baker v. Morton, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 158 (20 L. ed. 235); Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 443 (7 L. ed. 213); Massingill v. Downs, 48 U. S. 7 How. 797 (12 L. ed. 906); Buchan v. Sumner, 2 Barb. Ch. 185; Ellis v. Tousley, 1 Paige, 230.

Such a lien is subject to all equities existing in favor of third persons at the time of the recovery of the judgment. Armstrong v. Fearnaw, 67 Ind. 429; Wharton v. Wilson, 60 Ind. 591; Huffman v. Copeland, 86 Ind. 224; Jones v. Rhoads, 74 Ind. 510; Boyd v. Anderson, 102 Ind. 217; Heck v. Fink, 85 Ind. 6; Sharpe v. Davis, 76 Ind. 17; Troost v. Davis, 81 Ind. 87; Glidewell v. Spaugh, 23 Ind. 319; Way v. Lyon, 8 Blackf. 76; Heberd v. Wines, 3 West. Rep. 715, 106 Ind. 242.

the Henry Circuit Court in the clerk's office of the Wayne Circuit Court acquired a lien on the interest of the said David C. Ulrich in the estate of the testator, which lien, upon a sale of the land, was transferred to the funds derived from such sale against which the set-off could not be allowed.

The contention of the appellant, Koons, as we understand it, is: (1) that by the terms of the will of the said Daniel Ulrich the said David had no interest in the land, but simply an interest in the proceeds of the sale of such land, which was personal property, and that by reason thereof the appellee acquired no lien by the filing of his transcript; and (2) admitting that the appellee did acquire a lien by filing a transcript of the judgment of the Henry Circuit Court in the clerk's office of Wayne County, that such lien was subject to the equities in favor of the estate, and that he was entitled to no more than the balance after the payment of the indebtedness of David to the estate.

Before passing upon or considering the questions involving the merits of the controversy between the parties, it becomes necessary to inquire whether the case is in a condition to authorize this court to enter upon such consideration.

The appellee has filed in this court a motion to dismiss the appeal, for the alleged reasons: (1) that the appellant has failed to comply with the provision of § 635, Rev. Stat. 1881, upon the subject of appeals; (2) for the reason that the case falls within the provisions of §§ 2454 and 2455 of Rev. Stat. 1881, and it is claimed that, as the transcript in the cause was not filed in this court within the time limited by these sections, the appeal should be dismissed.

Section 635, supra, provides that "a part of several co-parties may appeal, but in such case they must serve notice of the appeal upon all the other co-parties and file proof thereof with the clerk of the supreme court."

It has been held by this court that where a part only of several co-parties appeal from a joint judgment without notice of such appeal to their co-parties, the appeal will be dismissed. Herzog v. Chambers, 61 Ind. 333; People's Sav. Bank v. Finney, 63 Ind. 460; Cranmore v. Bodine, 65 Ind. 25; Hunter v. Chrisman, 70 Ind. 439; Couch v. Thomas, 71 Ind. 286.

But this rule is confined to parties against whom judgment has been rendered, and it is not necessary to serve notice upon parties to the record and against whom the court has failed to render any judgment in the cause, and who have no interest in the result of the appeal. Wilson v. Stewart, 63 Ind. 294; Logan v. Logan, 77 Ind. 558; Easter v. Seterin, 78 Ind. 540; Hogan v. Robinson, 94 Ind. 138.

The decree rendered in this case is against appellant and David C. Ulrich alone. There is no finding, judgment or decree of any kind against any of the other parties to the suit. Notice of this appeal was served by appellant upon David C. Ulrich and he declined to join in the appeal. Notice was issued for the other parties to the suit and service acknowledged by Kibby & Kibby, attorneys; but as they are not necessary parties to this appeal, we deem it unnecessary to inquire whether such attorneys had authority to bind them by such acknowledgment of service or not, as such notice is not necessary to the validity of this appeal.

Section 2454, supra, provides that "any person considering himself aggrieved by any decision of a circuit court, or judge thereof in vacation, growing out of any matter connected with a decedent's estate, may prosecute an appeal to the supreme court, upon filing with the clerk of such circuit court a bond—... with sufficient sureties—... conditioned for the diligent prosecution of such appeal," etc.

Section 2455 provides that such appeal bond shall be filed within ten days after the decision complained of is made, etc.

Any person who is aggrieved, desiring such appeal, may take the same in his own name, without joining with any other person. The transcript shall be filed in the supreme court within ten days after filing the bond.

These statutes have been so often construed by this court that there is now no room for doubt as to their meaning. The rule to be deduced from the decisions upon the subject is that in all proceedings under the law providing for the settlement of a decedent's estate, where the exercise of the probate jurisdiction of the court is invoked, the appeal is governed by §§ 2454 and 2455, Rev. Stat. 1881; but in all actions authorized by the Code, and not involving the exercise of the probate jurisdiction of the court, the appeal is governed by the Code, and these sections have no application. Browning v. McCracken, 97 Ind. 279; Bennett v. Bennett, 102 Ind. 86; Miller v. Carmichael, 98 Ind. 236; Yearley v. Sharp, 96 Ind. 469; Seward v. Clark, 67 Ind. 289; Rusk v. Gray, 74 Ind. 231; Willson v. Bunford, 74 Ind. 424; Hillenberg v. Bennett, 88 Ind. 540; Heller v. Clark, 103 Ind. 591, 1 West. Rep. 881.

This is a proceeding by a creditor of a legatee against such legatee and the administrator with the will annexed, to reach money in the hands of such administrator for the payment of a debt, not due from the estate represented, but due from such legatee. It cannot be successfully maintained that it is in any sense a proceeding authorized by the Act providing for the settlement of a decedent's estate, and hence the law regulating appeals from such proceedings has no application.

The motion to dismiss the appeal should be overruled.

The transcript of the judgment rendered in the Henry County Circuit Court, when filed in the office of the clerk of the Wayne Circuit Court, constituted a lien upon the interest of David C. Ulrich in the lands of which his father died seised. Upon a sale of the land by the appellant, such lien followed the proceeds of such sale into his land and bound it to the same extent it bound the land. Campbell v. Martin, 87 Ind. 577; Bell v. Green, 90 Ind. 75; Ballenger v. Drook, 101 Ind. 172; Simonds v. Harris, 92 Ind. 505; Wilson v. Rudd, 19 Ind. 101.

Such lien, however, was a general lien, and was subject to all the equities existing in favor of the estate represented by the appellant, and conferred on the appellee, Mellett, no greater rights as against said estate than those possessed by David C. Ulrich. The general lien of a judgment creditor upon the land of his debtor is subject to all equities which existed against such land in favor of third persons at the time of the recovery of the judgment. Wright v. Jones, 105 Ind. 17, 2 West. Rep. 850; Koltz v. Wert, 103 Ind. 404, 1 West. Rep. 852; Hayes v. Reger, 102 Ind. 524, 3 West. Rep. 308; Herbert v. Wines, 105 Ind. 287, 2 West. Rep. 754.

The title to the land owned by the testator at the time of his death vested in the persons named in his will, subject to be divested by sale of the land as provided for in the will. The question then arises as to what rights the appellant had as regarded the set-off claimed by him as against David C. Ulrich, for it is certain that whatever rights he had against David C. Ulrich, he has also as against the appellee, Mellett. Mellett has the right, by reason of his lien, to pursue the funds derived from the sale of the land into the hands of the administrator, and, to the extent of his judgment, compel the payment of such fund to him to the same extent and upon the same conditions and no other, that David C. Ulrich might compel payment to him if the judgment did not exist. In other words, the appellee, Mellett, in respect to the amount due him from David C. Ulrich, is a substituted creditor, with all the right, and no more than that possessed by the legatee for whom he has become substituted. The question arises, therefore, as to whether appellant was entitled to the set-off claimed as against David C. Ulrich.

In Manifold's Estate, 5 Watts & S. 340, the father, being surety for the son, died intestate, leaving real estate which was sold by his administrator to pay debts. Upon the question of the distribution of the balance after the payment of the debt, it was held that a judgment creditor of the son was not entitled to any part of the fund by reason of his lien on the land, the liability of the intestate for his son being greater than the son's distributive share. The court said: "But the appellant can be in no better condition than his debtor, for a creditor, although he pursues his debtor to judgment, cannot, as against other distributees, better his condition. He succeeds to the rights of the debtor and nothing more. It matters not that the debt was paid since the death of the intestate, as it was a contingent liability of his, and upon the payment of the debt by the administrator an equity arises which relates back to the time of the death of the intestate, and this equity cannot be disturbed by any act of the distributees, nor can it be displaced by a subsequent judgment obtained by his creditors."

In the case of Springer's App. 29 Pa. 208, it was held that if one of the heirs of the estate is indebted to it, he may be treated, in its distribution, as having an advancement to the amount of his debt.

In the case of Strong v. Bass, 85 Pa. 383, it was held that the executor was entitled to set off a debt due from the legatee to the estate represented by him against a legacy given by the will of the deceased when it was sought by a creditor to reach the legacy by an attachment proceeding. The court in that case said: "If, therefore, the executor had the right to set-off against the legatee, he retains it against the substituted creditor. If, for any reason, the legatee could not enforce payment of the legacy without first performing some other duty to the estate, his attacking creditor can reach the legacy only on the same conditions." See also Nickerson v. Chase, 122 Mass. 296; Asken v. Douglass (N. J.) 2 Cent. Rep. 210; Snyder v. Warbasse, 11 N. J. Eq. 463; Smith v. Smith, 13 N. J. Eq. 164; Brooks v. Brooks, 12 S. C. 422; Smith v. Kearney, 2 Barb. Ch. 533.

In the American Law of Administration by Woerner, vol. 2, § 560, the learned author says: "The indebtedness of a legatee or distributee constitutes assets of the estate which it is the executor's or administrator's duty to collect for the benefit of creditors, legatees and distributees. Hence such indebtedness may be deducted from any legacy or distributive share of the debtor. . . . The right of set-off exists whether the legatee or distributee was indebted to the deceased before his death or contracted a liability to the estate, or even to the administrator personally, thereafter. So it is held that a son is not entitled to recover his distributive share of his father's estate where the father was surety for him in an amount greater than the value of such share, although the executor did not pay the surety debt until after the action was brought by the son."

This was a suit in the court below, as we understand it, by which the appellee, Mellett, sought to reach the funds in the hands of the appellant by virtue of the judgment-lien held by him on the interest of David C. Ulrich in the lands owned by the testator at the time of his death. At the time appellee, Mellett, acquired his judgment lien on the land, he was bound to know that such land would, by the terms of the will, be converted into money. As we have seen, he took his lien subject to all the equities existing in favor of the estate, and he now stands in no better condition as to the legacy bequeathed to David C. Ulrich than the legatee himself would occupy were he seeking to recover the legacy.

This case is governed by a different rule, and is to be distinguished from the cases where a party has acquired a specific lien for value without notice of the existence of equities at the time such lien is acquired. In our opinion, the appellant had the right to set off against the legacy bequeathed to David C. Ulrich any indebtedness of the said David to the estate represented by him. This right, we think, includes any sum due the estate on account of surety debts existing at the death of the testator, without regard to the time when such debts were paid. Having reached this conclusion it follows that the court below erred in its conclusions of law upon the facts set forth in the special finding. It is disclosed by the special finding of facts that David C. Ulrich is insolvent, and that he is indebted to the estate represented by the appellant in a sum greatly in excess of his distributive share of the estate. This indebtedness should be set off against the amount due him under the will of the testator.

Judgment reversed, with directions to the Circuit Court to restate its conclusions of law in accordance with this opinion and to render judgment accordingly.

Berkshire, J., dissents from the limitation as to the right of a specific lien holder for value, as expressed in this opinion.

Olds, J., also dissents, except as to the matter of practice.

Petition for rehearing overruled April 2, 1890.

James FISCUS, Admr., Appt.,

v.

William A. MOORE.

(....Ind....)

1. A debt due to the estate from an heir may be deducted from his distributive share of the proceeds of real estate which has been sold in process of administration.
3. One who takes a mortgage on real estate from an heir pending settlement of the estate, and with knowledge of the heir's indebtedness to the estate, can acquire no greater interest than that of the heir himself; and where the real property is sold for assets under the Indiana statutes, his claim to the proceeds is subject to a deduction or set-off of the heir's indebtedness.

(Olds and Berkshire, JJ., dissent.)

(January 29, 1890.)

A PPEAL from a judgment of the Decatur Circuit Court ordering an administrator to pay a mortgage given by an heir out of the proceeds of real estate. Reversed.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Mr. John S. Scobey for appellant.

Mr. William A. Moore for appellee.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

William Fiscus, late of Decatur County, died intestate in February, 1885, leaving a widow and seven children, to whom his real estate descended, as tenants in common. After the death of the intestate, Marion Fiscus, one of the heirs, who was indebted to the estate in a large amount, executed a mortgage on his undivided interest in certain real estate which he inherited from his father, to secure an individual debt due from him to William A. Moore, the latter having at the time full and complete notice of the debt due from the mortgagor to his father's estate. Subsequently the administrator, by due proceedings for that purpose, obtained an order of the probate court, and sold all the real estate for the purpose of making assets for the payment of debts owing by the intestate.

After paying the debts, there remained $2,500 of the proceeds of the sale of real estate in the administrator's hands for distribution, but the distributive share of Marion Fiscus was much less than the amount of his debt due the estate. Moore, as mortgagee, applied to the court for an order upon the administrator, requiring him to pay the amount of the mortgage debt out of the proceeds of the sale of the land upon which he had taken a mortgage from Marion Fiscus. The order was made accordingly.

The question for decision is whether a debt due from an heir can be retained out of his distributive share of the surplus proceeds of real estate, which has been regularly sold in order to make assets to pay debts, as against one who took a mortgage on the undivided interest of the heir in the land sold, the mortgage having been taken pending the settlement of the estate, with knowledge of the indebtedness of the heir.

That the indebtedness of an heir or distributee constitutes part of the assets of the estate, which it is the duty of the administrator to collect for the benefit of the creditors and other distributees, and that such indebtedness may be deducted from the distributive share of the debtor, are well-settled propositions. The right of the administrator to deduct the indebtedness due from a distributee is usually denominated a right of set-off; but, as Lord Cottenham remarked in Cherry v. Boulibee, 4 Mylne & Cr. 442: "The term 'set-off' is very inaccurately used in cases of this kind. In its proper use it is applicable only to mutual demands, debts and credits. The right of an executor of a creditor to retain a sufficient part of a legacy given by the creditor to the debtor to pay a debt due from him to the creditor's estate is rather a right to pay out of a fund in hand than a right of set-off. Such a right of payment, therefore, can only arise where there is a right to receive the debt so to be paid, and the legacy or fund so to be applied in payment of the debt must be payable by the person entitled to receive the debt." LaFoy v. LaFoy, 43 N. J. Eq. 206, 9 Cent. Rep. 34.

The ground upon which an administrator is entitled to retain so much of the distributive share of a distributee as will satisfy a debt due from the latter to the estate is, that the heir or distributee makes a demand upon the administrator in respect to assets in his hands as administrator, and the just and equitable answer in such a case is that the person making the demand has already in his hands assets belonging to the estate in excess of the amount of the distributive share which he is demanding. Jeffs v. Wood, 2 P. Wms. 128; Courtenay v. Williams, 3 Hare, 539-552; Ramsour v. Thompson, 65 N. C. 628; Woerner, Law of Administration, § 564.

Thus in Waterman on Set-Off, § 210, it is said: "The right of the executor or administrator to retain in such cases depends upon the principle that the legatee or distributee is not entitled to his legacy or distributive share while he retains in his own hands a part of the fund out of which that and other legacies or distributive shares ought to be paid."

And in Ranking v. Barnard, 5 Madd. 32, the court said, in substance, that it was clear that the executor had the right to satisfy the legacy by applying the funds in his hands, and that this right existed against an assignee of the legatee as well as against the legatee himself.

It is contended, however, that the right to retain the amount of a debt due from a distributee to the estate out of his distributive share only obtains in case the fund to be distributed arises out of the personal estate, and that it does not apply when real estate has been sold and the fund for distribution is derived from that source. We can perceive no reason for such a distinction. Of course where the administrator of an estate holds a claim, as such, against one of the heirs or distributees, he is entitled to avail himself of all the rights and remedies ordinarily available to any other person under like circumstances, no greater and no less. If the administrator is driven to pursue the ordinary remedy to collect a debt due the estate from an heir, he stands like any other creditor and is put to a race of diligence with others; but if, in the proper course of administration, funds which constitute assets of the estate come into his hands by operation of law, which he holds as administrator, in the distribution of which an heir or legatee asserts a right to participate, it is always a sufficient answer that the claimant has already in his hands more than his share of the assets of the estate.

NOTE.—See Koons v. Mellett, ante, 221, and note, 7 L. R. A.

A proceeding by an administrator to acquire priority in respect to real estate which has descended to the heir, so as to charge upon it a debt due the estate, is one thing, while a proceeding by an heir or his grantee to compel the administrator to pay money which he holds in the capacity of administrator is quite another, in case the heir has already received all he is entitled to out of the estate. The distinction is clearly drawn in LaFoy v. LaFoy, supra. In that case a bill was filed for partition of real estate among certain devisees. An attempt was made to charge the share of one of the devisees with the amount of a debt due from him to the estate of the testator. In an opinion holding that this could not be done the court says: "The devisee of lands occupies no such relation to the executor as that which exists between legatee and executor. No act is necessary, on the part of the executor, to put the devisee in full enjoyment of the estate devised. The opportunity, therefore, could not arise for the executor to retain the debt of the devisee to the testator out of any demand which the devisee might seek to enforce against the executor." It was very properly held that, inasmuch as the executor could only acquire a lien upon the land devised by becoming an actor and instituting proceedings appropriate to that end, the debt could not be so charged in a partition proceeding.

Campbell v. Martin, 87 Ind. 577, is distinguished from the present case upon the same principle.

In Smith v. Kearney, 2 Barb. Ch. 533, it was held that the fund which the executor sought to retain did not come to his hands in the character of executor, but merely as an accident, and that the right of set-off did not obtain for that reason. There is nothing in that case opposed to our conclusion in the present case. Any reasoning which fails to appreciate the distinction between an attempt to enforce a lien or charge upon the real estate which has descended to an heir by an independent proceeding, and an attempt by an heir who is indebted to the estate, or by his assignee or mortgagee, to compel the payment to him of a distributive share which has come into the hands of the administrator by operation of law, must necessarily lead to a conclusion that is wide of the mark.

As has been seen, the present is a case where real estate has been sold in the regular process of administration, for the purpose of making assets with which to pay claims against the estate. Now, if the heir or his assignee, or a purchaser from him, were here claiming a distributive share of the personal assets of an estate, and at the same time retaining by an indebtedness a much larger part of the assets than the amount of his claim, there could be no question of the administrator's right to withhold the distributive share and apply it on the debt due the estate. Can it make any difference that the assets arose from the sale of real estate, especially in a case where it appears that the assignee or mortgagee knew of the indebtedness when he acquired his lien upon or interest in the land?

In the recent case of Koons v. Mellett, ante, 231, present term, it was held, after full and careful consideration, that one who had obtained a judgment against a devisee of real estate, which was afterwards sold, in pursuance of the terms of the will, acquired no better right to participate in the proceeds than the devisee himself had, and that the administrator with the will annexed had the same right to set off a debt due from the devisee to the estate as if the latter himself were claiming to participate in the fund. Manifold's Estate, 5 Watts & S. 340; Springer's App. 29 Pa. 208; Strong v. Bass, 35 Pa. 333; Nickerson v. Chase, 122 Mass. 296; Askeo v. Douglass (N. J.) 2 Cent. Rep. 210; Snyder v. Warbasse, 11 N. J. Eq. 463; Smith v. Smith, 13 N. J. Eq. 164.

The principle which ruled the case cited is decisive of our judgment in the present case.

While it is quite true, as is contended, that upon the death of the ancestor the title to real estate descends to and vests in the heir, the fact must be kept in mind that, unlike the rule at common law, the heir, according to the terms and policy of the statutes in this State, does not take an absolute title. Pending the settlement of the estate of his ancestor, the descent is subject to be intercepted and the title divested whenever the personal representative makes it appear that the sale of the land is necessary to make assets for the payment of the ancestor's debts. The Statute not only gives the administrator the right, but makes it his duty, when the personal property is not sufficient, to convert the real estate into assets for the payment of debts. Where this right is asserted and the lands are sold and conveyed, the title to the land which descended to the heir is completely divested; and although the heir may have sold and conveyed the land, the conveyance made by an administrator under the order of the court is not in any wise affected or impaired by the previous incumbrance or conveyance by the heir. This conclusion logically results from the fact that under the statutes of our State the real and personal property of an intestate descends to the same persons and in the same proportions, and both are equally chargeable with the payment of his debts, with the exception that the personal estate must be exhausted first. Nelson v. Murfee, 69 Ala. 598.

At the common law the title to real estate vested absolutely in the heir upon the death of the ancestor, and was not subject to be made assets for the payment of debts. Under the Statute in force here, it is as completely subject to the debts of the intestate as is the personal estate; and even though the administrator waste the personal estate, a purchaser of the real estate from an heir is not protected. Nettleton v. Dixon, 2 Ind. 446.

It is not in the power of a third person to impair or embarrass the personal representative in the settlement of an estate by dealing with the heirs upon the supposition that their interest is of a certain or fixed character, nor can the other heirs be deprived of some portion of their estate by the intervention or intermeddling of a stranger, so as to destroy the equality of descent and distribution. The right of heirs to participate equally in the estate of their ancestor is superior to that of a lienholder with notice. Folta v. Wert, 103 Ind. 404-411, 1 West. Rep. 852; McCandless App. 98 Pa. 489.

It frequently happens that the assets of an estate consist largely of debts due from the heirs to the ancestor. If it were possible for an heir, immediately upon the death of his ancestor, to convey or incumber his interest in the real estate, so that, after paying the debts of the ancestor, his grantee or mortgagee might participate in the surplus equally with other heirs who had received, or who owed the ancestor nothing, the most manifest injustice and inequality would result. The law always presumes that an ancestor meant that his heirs should share equally in his estate. Ruch v. Biery, 110 Ind. 444-449, 9 West. Rep. 215.

As was pertinently said, in effect, in Weakley v. Conradt, 56 Ind. 480, a purchaser acquires precisely the right and interest which the heir has from whom he takes a conveyance, nothing more nor less. Dunall v. Speed, 1 Md. Ch. 229; Baker v. Griffitt, 88 Ind. 411.

Until the estate is finally settled, he is bound to know that the sale of real estate may become necessary in order to make assets for the payment of debts, and he is bound to know that when the land is converted into money, by operation of law it becomes money, assets in the hands of the administrator, and that it is subject to all the incidents of other assets, regardless of the source from which they arise. For certain purposes of administration and distribution, money thus acquired may be treated as having the qualities, and as the representative of the real estate, but it is nevertheless money which has come into the hands of the administrator by operation of law in the course of administering the estate. Any procedure which the heir or his grantee or assignee may institute to get it out of the administrator's hands brings into operation and makes available to the latter any right of set-off, or to retain it as against any legitimate debt owing by the heir to the estate, through whom he claims as assignee. Johnson v. Hoyle, 3 Head, 58.

The claim of the assignee is not a claim to an interest in the land, but it is a claim to an interest in the assets of the estate; whatever interest he has is an interest in the estate, and he takes that interest precisely as his assignor held it.

The doctrine of Ball v. Green, 90 Ind. 75, is opposed in some respects to the conclusions reached in Koons v. Mellett, ante, 231, and in the foregoing opinion, and to that extent must be deemed modified.

The judgment is reversed, with costs, with directions to the court below to proceed in consonance with this opinion.

Olds, J., dissenting:

I cannot concur in the majority opinion of the court in this case.

William Fiscus died intestate, owning real estate situate in the Counties of Decatur and 7 L. R. A.

Ripley. Marion Fiscus, son of William, was indebted to his father at the time of his death in the sum of $1,610.17. The administrator of the father's estate brought suit and recovered a judgment against the son in the Decatur Circuit Court. Before the filing of a transcript in the clerk's office of Ripley County and obtaining a lien on the real estate in that county, Marion Fiscus, the son, executed to the appellee, Moore, a mortgage on the real estate which descended to the son in Ripley County, to secure a valid debt to Moore for $75, and the mortgage lien attached to such real estate and became a prior lien to the judgment lien in favor of the estate. After the execution of the mortgage the administrator filed a transcript of the judgment in the clerk's office in Ripley County and obtained a lien upon the land. After the liens had attached the administrator sold all of the real estate under an order of court for the sale of the real estate of the decedent for the payment of debts. After the payment of the debts, there remained a surplus in the hands of the administrator for distribution between the heirs, and of such surplus Marion, the son, was entitled to $357.

The contest in this case is as to whether Moore shall have so much of said sum applied to the liquidation of his debt as will satisfy it, or whether the administrator, as against Moore, has the right to apply all of said distributive share in satisfaction of the judgment in favor of said estate. It is held by the majority of the court that the administrator has the right to offset the judgment held against the son to the amount due him derived from the sale of the real estate on which Moore held a mortgage, or, in other words, to apply the surplus in his hands derived from such sale to the payment of the judgment. This I deny, and assert that such holding is contrary to the weight of authority. It is a recognized doctrine that so far as the distributive share due to the heir is derived from personal property, it may be set off or applied in payment, or, rather, retained by the administrator in payment of a debt due from the heir; but an entirely different rule applies as to the surplus which may come into the hands of the administrator by reason of the sale of real estate for the payment of debts; and well there should be a different rule applied. The personal property is assets in the hands of the administrator. It is made his duty by law to convert the personal property into money and to collect the debts due the estate, as well those due from heirs as those due from other persons. The administrator is the lawful custodian of the personal property, and he may maintain an action for its recovery. The heir has no claim to the personal property. No lien could attach to it and the heir could in no way legally incumber any interest in it. All the interest the heir has in a claim to the personal property is to his distributive share in the surplus remaining after the payment of the debts of the ancestor and the costs of administration. But it is different in regard to the real estate. As to that the title vests in the heir at the date of the death of the ancestor, subject to be divested only upon one contingency, viz., for the payment of the debts of the ancestor; and the administrator is entitled to an order to sell only so much of the real estate of the decedent as may be necessary to pay the debts and liabilities of the estate. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2946.

The law does not contemplate any distribution of the proceeds of real estate, and it is only in case the real estate cannot be separated so as to sell only a sufficient amount to pay the debts and leave the portion belonging to the heirs unsold, making it a necessity that the whole must be sold, that any funds arising from the sale of real estate in excess of the amount necessary to pay the debts comes into the hands of the administrator. If there is sufficient personal property to pay the debts and costs of administration, then the administrator cannot sell the real estate, and the only way he can collect a debt against the heir is by the same process by which he collects debts due from other persons, and his only remedy against the land in that event is by judgment, execution and sale, and the lien would attach at the date of the rendition of the judgment, as would the lien of any other creditor, and the land would be applied to the payment of the liens in the order in which they attached.

It is so well settled that I need not cite authorities to support the propositions, that the title vests in the heir at the date of the death of the ancestor; and that the lien of a judgment against the heir attaches to such interest which descends to the heir, and that the same is true when an interest is devised instead of passing by inheritance; and that the land so taken by descent or devise is subject to sale on execution; also that, in case of a sale of such real estate for the payment of the debts of the ancestor or testator, any surplus remaining is subject to the lien, and the judgment or mortgage creditor can recover it as against the heir or devisee. That is to say, in equity the converted estate retains its original character.

Let these propositions be controverted, I cite a few of the decisions of this court in support of the propositions I have stated. Milligan v. Poole, 35 Ind. 64; Spray v. Rodman, 43 Ind. 225; Wilson v. Rudd, 19 Ind. 101; Gimbel v. Stotte, 59 Ind. 446; Ballengier v. Drock, 101 Ind. 172; Simonds v. Harris, 92 Ind. 505.

If the debt due the ancestor was on account of an advancement to the heir, or if the heir was simply entitled to a legacy to be paid to him by the executor, then equity might interpose and compel an application of the legacy to the payment of the debt; but where the debt due from the heir is an ordinary debt, the administrator or executor has no more right or claim or lien upon the land which descends to the heir or is devised to the devisee than has any other creditor of the heir or devisee. If the ancestor or testator desired the real estate to be charged with the payment of the debt, a testator can charge the land devised with the payment of the debt and make it a prior lien to that of any of the other creditors of the devisee. If the testator has not done so, or the real estate descends to the heir, then the real estate is subject alike to the payment of the debt of the ancestor and the other creditors of the heir.

In the case of La Foy v. La Foy, 43 N. J. Eq. 206, 9 Cent. Rep. 84, it is held that the debt of a devisee to the testator is not a charge on lands devised to him by the testator, in the absence of language in the will making such debt a charge. The court in that case, after stating the doctrine which permits the executor to withhold the payment of a legacy until the satisfaction of the debt due the testator, says: "The devisee of lands occupies no such relation to the executor as that which exists between legatee and executor. No act is necessary, upon the part of the executor, to put the devisee in full enjoyment of the estate devised. The opportunity, therefore, could not arise for the executor to retain the debt of the devisee to the testator out of any demand which the devisee might seek to enforce against the executor. If such a charge attaches against the land devised it would be necessary for the executor to establish it by proceedings in which he is the actor. After diligent search I have been unable to find a case in which an attempt has been made to charge a devisee of lands with a debt due from the devisee to the testator, in the absence of language in the will manifesting the purpose of the testator to do so." The court, in conclusion, says: "In the absence of language in the testator's will to that effect, there is no authority for charging the devisee's debt upon land devised to him."

If any right exists to have the proceeds of the land which descends to the heir or is devised to the devisee, applied to the payment of a debt due the ancestor or testator in preference to other creditors, then the administrator has the right to have the estate charged with it and a lien declared paramount to any other lien in favor of other creditors, whether the land be sold for the payment of debts of the ancestor or testator or not. The right to set off a legacy or a distributive share of the assets arising from personal estate against the debt due from the heir or legatee is denominated the doctrine of equitable retainer.

In the case of Smith v. Kearney, 2 Barb. Ch. 533, the court holds that the principle of equitable retainer does not apply to a fund arising from the sale of real estate which descended to the debtor as one of the heirs-at-law of the testator, and which real estate has been converted into personalty by accident or because the valid portions of the will could not be carried into effect in any other way than by a sale of the land, and that the proceeds of real estate thus converted into personalty are still to be considered as real estate and as in no way connected with the funds which come to the hands of the executor for the purposes of the will.

And I contend that the same is true in case of an administration. The administrator has no business with any portion of the real estate which descends to the heir. It comes to him by reason of the fact that he cannot sell but a sufficient amount to pay debts, and is compelled, in order to execute his trust, to sell more, and when thus sold, the portion or the surplus above what is required to pay the debts retains its character as real estate, and if applied by order of the court to pay debts, it must be applied to the payment of the same in the order which it would be if it were real estate, the prior incumbrances being first ordered satisfied. It must necessarily retain its character as real estate. It is not distributed in like manner as personal assets. The administrator cannot mix the two and distribute them. If he did, the widow would take one third, but she has no interest in such surplus. It goes back to the person in whom the title was vested before the sale.

In the case of Sartor v. Beatty, 25 S. C. 298, it was held that the doctrine of equitable retainer did not apply to the interest of the distributee in the real estate of an intestate or to the proceeds of the sale thereof.

In Procter v. Newhall, 17 Mass. 81, in considering this same question, the court says: "The other objection would be fatal to the title of the tenant if it were true that Joseph Hulthorn had but a defeasible estate, as has been suggested; for the tenant has no greater or better estate than Joseph Hulthorn had at the time of the attachment. But we are of the opinion that his estate was no more subject to the debt formerly due to the intestate than it was to any other debt. In the division of real estate among heirs no deduction can be made from the share of any one of them on account of any debt due from him to the estate. This can only be done in cases of advancement."

In the case of Mann v. Mann, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 245, it was held that the son's indebtedness to the father's estate is not a lien on the son's share of his father's realty, and that such share in the realty is subject to a race of diligence between the personal representatives of the father and other creditors of the son.

In the American Law of Administration, by Woerner, vol. 2, § 564, in speaking of the equitable doctrine of retainer, it is said: "If the lands have been sold and there is a residue of the proceeds for distribution, it has been held both that the administrator may retain to the extent of the debt due by the distributee, and, on the other hand, that, since in equity the converted estate retains its original character, the equitable doctrine of retainer does not extend to the proceeds of real estate."

In support of the doctrine that it may be retained the author cites but one case, and that is Nelson v. Murfee, 69 Ala. 598, in which it was held that, as against the heir the executor could retain the amount, but in that case the court says: "Whether, when the heir is insolvent and owes the estate of the ancestor, as in this case, the administrator has any prior right to demand payment out of lands descended, or whether it becomes a mere race of diligence between him and other creditors of the heir, is a question not raised by this record"; and by a diligent search for authorities this is the only case that I have been able to find where the question has been considered, that any court has even intimated that the doctrine applies in such a case as we have under consideration. See Hancock v. Hubbard, 19 Pick. 187; Towles v. Towles, 1 Head, 601.

In Pennsylvania it was held that the indebtedness was an advancement and could be retained. Springer's App. 29 Pa. 203.

In Strong v. Bass, 35 Pa. 333, it was held, as we have hereinbefore stated, that the doctrine applied in case of legacies, and I do not question that the doctrine does apply in case of legacies or advancement, and the authorities cited in support of the decision of the case in Koons v. Mellett, this term, ante, 231, go no farther than to hold that the doctrine applies in cases of distributive shares of personal property, legacies and where the debt is an advancement.

7 L. R. A.

In exact accord with the unanimous holding of the courts of other States, this court has twice decided this question adversely to the majority opinion and in accordance with what I believe to be the settled law.

In the case of Campbell v. Martin, 87 Ind. 577, Campbell, the appellant, recovered a judgment against Alexander C. Martin in the Washington Circuit Court on January 14, 1876. On June 1, 1876, Mason L. Martin, father of Alexander C. Martin, died testate, owning land in said Washington County which he devised to his said son, Alexander C. James A. Martin was appointed administrator of the father's estate with the will annexed. Alexander C. was indebted to the father, and at the August Term, 1878, of the Washington Circuit Court the administrator recovered a judgment on said indebtedness to the estate. At the April Term, 1879, the court ordered the administrator to retain and hold the real estate so devised to Alexander, giving him credit for its appraised value on the judgment against him in favor of the administrator. The proceedings in the court below were undoubtedly irregular, but this court in deciding the case expresses its views in regard to these judgment liens, and says: "There is some reason for the application of this doctrine to the payment of legacies by the executor, and especially so when the indebtedness of the legatee to the estate might be regarded as a total or partial ademption of the legacy. But we know of no reason whatever for the extension of this doctrine and making it applicable to devisees of real estate. As a general rule, legacies are payable by the executor out of the testator's personal estate which may come to his hands to be administered; but, ordinarily, the executor has absolutely nothing to do with the real estate devised by his testator unless it may be needed for the payment of the testator's debts. Otherwise the devise of the real estate will take effect at once upon the death of the testator, without any intervening act of the executor. Upon the facts stated in the complaint in the case at bar, we are of opinion that the lien of the appellant's judgment upon the real estate devised to Alexander C. Martin was not and could not be divested nor postponed to the lien of the junior judgment against him in favor of the administrator."

The case of Ball v. Green, 90 Ind. 75, is a case involving exactly the same principle as the one under consideration, and it was held by a unanimous court that the mortgage was entitled to the surplus. In that case the court well says: "No authority is cited to support this position, and we know of none, nor do we believe it can be maintained on principle. The administrator had authority to sell this land to pay the decedent's debts, but no power to sell in order to collect a claim from the owner. After the payment of the decedent's debts, the residue of the money, if any, will belong to Jesse Adams, and its retention by the administrator will not make the estate the debtor of Adams, nor will it make the administrator such debtor except at the option of Adams. In addition to this, the appellee has a lien upon the money that is superior to any claim of the administrator, if, indeed, he has any, and which was not impaired or affected by the accidental.

circumstances that he had the custody of the money and that Adams was indebted to him and to the estate. As against the appellee, in our opinion, he could not retain the money for the purpose of collecting from Adams claims due the estate. As to these he occupied no better position than any other creditor, and as the appellee had acquired a specific lien his claim must prevail."

These two decisions have long since settled the doctrine in this State in accordance with the weight of authority, and they ought, in my opinion, to be adhered to.

Berkshire, J., concurs with Olds, J.

STATE OF INDIANA, ex rel. Joseph H. CLARK et al., Appts.,
v.

Clarkson HAWORTH, Trustee of Monroe School Township.

(....Ind.....)

1. The regulation of the public schools is a state matter exclusively within the dominion of the Legislature; hence an Act prescribing the text books to be used therein and regulating the method of procuring them does not impinge in the slightest degree upon the right of local self government.
2. The legislative power over schools is not exhausted by exercise, and the fact that the Legislature has always intrusted the management of school affairs to local organizations will not preclude it from at any time changing the system so as to remove them from local control.
3. As incident to its constitutional power to make the public-school system uniform, the Legislature may provide that the books shall be obtained through the medium of a contract awarded to the best or lowest bidder.
4. The Legislature may impose upon all officers whose tenure is legislative such duties respecting school affairs as it deems proper.
5. An Act providing for the procurement of books for the public schools, which attains the result for which it was passed,—that of benefiting the public,—cannot be declared invalid because it requires public officers to perform duties which confer an incidental benefit upon individual book dealers.
6. An Act providing for the procurement of books for the public schools is not within the constitutional provisions against monopolies because it designates certain books as a standard and requires books furnished to be equal in merit to those named and the books adopted uniform, and permits the selection of copyrighted works, and requires the exclusive contract for furnishing them to be awarded to the lowest bidder where there is no exclusion of persons from bidding but competition is open to all who are prepared to supply books of the required standard.

7. The Legislature may give one person the exclusive privilege for a certain period of time of furnishing books for the public schools of the State and compel the officers whose duty is to procure such books to obtain them exclusively from such person, as well as require patrons of the schools to use the books prescribed.
8. The Act of March 2, 1889, providing for the procurement of books for the public schools, is constitutional in all its essential features.
9. The duty imposed upon school trustees by section 7 of the Act of March 2, 1889, "to immediately procure and take charge of the books" provided under the terms of that Act for use in the public schools, and "to furnish them on demand to the school patrons" at the price fixed therefor, is imperative and may be enforced by mandamus.

(Berkshire, J., dissents.)

(March 13, 1890.)

A PPEAL by relators from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Howard County in favor of respondent in a proceeding by mandamus to compel him to procure certain books for use in the public school as required by the Act of March 2, 1889. Reversed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Louis T. Michener, Atty-Gen., Morris & Barrett and Duncan & Smith for appellants.

Mr. Addison C. Harris, with Messrs. James O'Brien and C. C. Shirley, for appellee:

All grants of privileges are to be liberally construed in favor of the public, and, as against the grantees of the monopoly, franchise or charter, to be strictly interpreted.

Sedgwick, Stat. and Const. L. pp. 328, 339; Cooley, Const. Lim. 8d ed. p. 393.

The sole trade of any mechanical artifice, or any other monopoly, is not only a damage and prejudice to those who exercise the same trade, but also to all subjects; for the end of all these monopolies is for the private gain of the patentees.

Darcy v. Allein, 11 Coke, 84 (b). See Ottizens Gas & M. Co. v. Elwood, 14 West. Rep. 92, 114 Ind. 532.

The Act of March 2, 1889, not only seeks to grant exclusive privileges to a favored few for the manufacture and sale of the books, but also seeks to abridge the right of the people to buy and use whatever books they may elect to use. The right to buy and sell and use whatever property we may elect to use is a natural right in each individual which the Legislature has no power to abridge, in any individual, so

NOTE.—School law; adoption of text books.

Under the Indiana laws relating to the adoption of school books by county boards, changes of such books may be made at any time by the unanimous consent of the board. Iverson v. Indianapolis School Comrs. 39 Fed. Rep. 735.

The requirement of Ind. Rev. Stat., § 4436, that no text book adopted by the county board shall be changed within six years from the date of adoption, has no application to cities. Ibid.

7 J. R. A.

A board cannot, by adopting books for a given time, preclude itself from adopting other books within that time. Ibid.

Section 4444, authorizing a township trustee to purchase suitable apparatus and appliances for schools, does not authorize the purchase of text books to be used by the individual pupils. Honey Creek School Twp. v. Barnes, 119 Ind. 313.

long as he does not, by its exercise, interfere with the rights of others.

Arrowsmith v. Burlington, 4 McLean, 497; Evansville v. State, 4 L. R. A. 98, 118 Ind. 426.

A law that attempts to take away any privilege essential to the inherent right of local self government is void.

See State v. Denny, 4 L. R. A. 79, 118 Ind. 382; State v. Denny, 4 L. R. A. 65, 118 Ind. 449; Evansville v. State, supra; People v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 50; People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44; People v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228.

Section 9 of the School-Book Act gives the contractors privileges not conferred on any other publisher or dealer in the "Indiana Educational Series" or other books to use the trustees, at public expense, to sell its books and appropriate their bonds for its security. This deprives book makers and book sellers of "liberty" and "property," within the Fourteenth Amendment.

See Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377; Butchers Union S. H. & L. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746 (28 L. ed. 535); Santa Clara Co. v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 118 U. S. 394 (30 L. ed. 118); Pennbina Consol. S. Min. & Milling Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181 (31 L. ed. 650); Pom. Const. Law, § 256 E.

That clause does undoubtedly prohibit discriminating and partial legislation by any State, in favor of particular persons, or against others in like condition.

Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 28 (32 L. ed. 586).

The discriminations which are open to objection are those where persons are engaged in the same business, are subjected to different restrictions or are held entitled to different privileges under the same conditions.

Soon Hing v. Crowley, 118 U. S. 709 (28 L. ed. 1145), quoted in Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, supra.

It is undoubtedly the right of any citizen of the United States to follow any lawful calling, business or profession he may choose, subject only to such restrictions as are imposed upon all persons, of like age, sex and conditions.

Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 121 (32 L. ed. 625).

Elliott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The questions presented and argued in this case do not require us to do more than outline the pleadings, for the questions are general ones, involving the validity and the construction of a statute. It is sufficient, to bring the question clearly enough before the mind for investigation and consideration, to say that the relator petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the appellee, as school trustee of Monroe Township, in the County of Howard, to certify to the county superintendent of schools the number of text books required by the children of the township for use in the public schools, and to procure and furnish such books as the law requires, and that the return of the appellee to the alternative writ is so framed as to present the question of the constitutionality of the Act of March 2, 1889, and also the question as to the duties of the school trustee under that Act. Elliott's Supp. § 1289; Acts 1889, p.—.

7 L. R. A.

The Act assailed does not impinge in the slightest degree upon the right of local self-government. The right of local self-government is an inherent, and not a derivative, one. Individualized, it is the right which a man possesses in virtue of his character as a freeman. It is not bestowed by Legislatures, nor derived from statutes. But the courts which have carried to its utmost extent the doctrine of local self-government have never so much as intimated that it exists as to a matter over which the Constitution has given the law-making power supreme control; nor have they gone beyond the line which separates matters of purely local concern from those of state control. Essentially and intrinsically, the schools in which are educated and trained the children who are to become the rulers of the Commonwealth are matters of state, and not of local, jurisdiction. In such matters the State is a unit and the Legislature the source of power. The authority over schools and school affairs is not necessarily a distributive one to be exercised by local instrumentalities, but, on the contrary, it is a central power residing in the Legislature of the State. It is for the law-making power to determine whether the authority shall be exercised by a state board of education, or distributed to county, township or city organizations throughout the State. With that determination the judiciary can no more rightfully interfere than can the Legislature with a decree or judgment pronounced by a judicial tribunal. The decision is as conclusive and inviolable in the one case as in the other, and an interference with the legislative judgment would be a breach of the Constitution which no principle would justify nor any precedent excuse.

But we need not rest our conclusion that the control of school and school affairs is vested in the law-making power of the State upon the proposition that schools are intrinsically matters of state concern, and not of a local nature—although it may there be securely rested; for our Constitution, in language that cannot be mistaken, declares that it is a matter of the State and not of the locality. The language of the Constitution is this: "Knowledge and learning, generally diffused throughout the community, being essential to the preservation of a free government, it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to encourage by all suitable means moral, intellectual, scientific and agricultural improvement, and to provide by law for a general and uniform system of common schools, wherein tuition shall be without charge and equally open to all." Art. 8, § 1.

The Constitution enjoins a duty and confers a power. The duty and the power are coextensive, but the effect they are designed to accomplish is unified, because the duty is to "provide a uniform system of common schools," and the power is granted to enable the General Assembly to effectively perform the duty. Both by the Constitution and by the intrinsic nature of the duty and the power, the authority is exclusively legislative, and the matter over which it is to be exercised solely of state concern.

That this conclusion is sound is so clear that authorities are not required to fortify or support it; but authorities are not wanting, for the current of judicial decision is unbroken. State v. Springfield School Directors, 74 Mo. 21; State v. Columbus Board of Education, 85 Ohio St. 369; Baltimore School Comrs. v. State Board of Education, 26 Md. 505; Robinson v. Howard, 84 N. C. 151; Stuart v. Kalamazoo School Dist., 30 Mich. 69; Ford v. Kindt School Dist., 1 L. R. A. 607, 121 Pa. 543; People v. Quincy Board of Education, 101 Ill. 308; Richards v. Raymond, 92 Ill. 612, 84 Am. Rep. 151; Powell v. Board of Education, 97 Ill. 375; Briggs v. Johnson Co., 4 Dill. 148; Rawson v. Spencer, 113 Mass. 40; Com. v. Hartman, 17 Pa. 118.

Judge Cooley has examined the question with care, and discussed it with ability, and he declares that the Legislature has plenary power over the subject of the public schools. He says, in the course of his discussion: "To what extent the Legislature shall provide for the education of the people at the cost of the State or of its municipalities is a question which, except as regulated by the Constitution, addresses itself to the legislative judgment exclusively." Again, he says: "The governing school boards derive all their authority from the Statute, and can exercise no powers except those expressly granted and those which result by necessary implication from the grant." Const. Lim. 5th ed. 225, note 1.

No case has been cited by counsel, and none has been discovered by us, although we have searched the reports with care, which denies the doctrine that the regulation of the public schools is a state matter, exclusively within the dominion of the Legislature.

If it be true that the power is a legislative one, then it is indisputably true that the courts cannot control the legislative discretion. This principle is elementary in constitutional law, and it needs no support from precedents or decisions, but the principle has been so well expressed by Mr. Justice Bradley that we quote his language. Replying to an argument that the mode in which the power was exercised was improper, this great judge said: "The answer is, the legislative department, being the nation itself, speaking by its representatives, has a choice of methods, and is master of its own discretion." Legal Tender Cases, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 547-561 [20 L. ed. 311, 315].

We have adopted and applied this rule, and, indeed, we could not depart from it without a disregard of principle that no decision or precedent would excuse. Hancock v. Yaden (Ind.) 6 L. R. A. 576.

As the power over schools is a legislative one, it is not exhausted by exercise. The Legislature, having tried one plan, is not precluded from trying another. It has a choice of methods and may change its plans as often as it deems necessary or expedient, and for mistakes or abuses it is answerable to the people, but not to the courts. It is clear, therefore, that even if it were true that the Legislature had uniformly intrusted the management of school affairs to local organizations, it would not authorize the conclusion that it might not change the system. To deny the power to change is to affirm that progress is impossible, and that we must move forever "in the dim foot-steps of antiquity." But the legislative power moves in a constant stream and is not exhausted by its exercise in any number of instances, however great. It is not true, however, that the authority over schools was originally regarded as a local one; on the contrary, the earlier cases asserted that the Legislature could not delegate the power to levy taxes for school purposes to local organizations, but must itself directly exercise the power, thus denying in the strongest possible form the theory of local control. This ruling was for many years regarded as the law of the State, but in the case of Robinson v. Schenk, 102 Ind. 307, it was held that the Legislature might either exercise the power itself or delegate it to local governmental instrumentalities. It has, indeed, been the uniform course since the organization of the State to regulate and control school affairs by legislation. All the public schools have been established under legislative enactments, and all rules and regulations have been made pursuant to statutory authority. Every school that has been established owes its existence to legislation, and every school officer owes his authority to the statute.

7 L. R. A.

It is impossible to conceive of the existence of a uniform system of common schools without power lodged somewhere to make it uniform, and, even in the absence of express constitutional provisions, that power must necessarily reside in the Legislature. If it does reside there, then that body must have, as an incident of the principal power, the authority to prescribe the course of study and the system of instruction that shall be pursued and adopted, as well as the books which shall be used. This general doctrine is well entrenched by authority. Horey v. State, 119 Ind. 395; Horey v. State, 119 Ind. 386; State v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98, 8 West. Rep. 125; State v. Harmon, 81 Ohio St. 250.

Having this authority, the Legislature may not only prescribe regulations for using such books, but it may also declare how the books shall be obtained and distributed. If it may do this, then it may provide that they shall be obtained through the medium of a contract awarded to the best or lowest bidder, since, if it be true, as it unquestionably is, that the power is legislative, it must also be true that the Legislature has an unrestricted discretion and an unfettered choice of methods. It cannot be possible that the courts can interfere with this legislative power and adjudge that the Legislature shall not adopt this method or that method; for, if the question is at all legislative, it is so in its whole length and breadth. Under our form of government there is no such thing as a power partly judicial and partly legislative; the one power excludes the other, for each is distinct and independent. State v. Noble, 4 L. R. A. 101, 118 Ind. 350; Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. 489.

If the Legislature exercises its right to make a choice of methods by enacting that the books for the schools shall be furnished by the person making the most acceptable bid, the courts cannot interfere, because the power exercised is a purely legislative one, and within the legislative domain courts are forbidden to enter. There is no escape from this conclusion save by a denial of legislative independence, and an assertion of the right of judicial surveillance and control.

If the power over the school system is legislative and exclusive, then the Legislature has authority to impose upon all officers whose tenure is legislative such duties respecting school affairs as it deems proper. All such officers take their offices cum onere, and must do what the Legislature commands, or else resign.

It is a mistake to suppose that the Statute under consideration imposes duties upon the school officers for the benefit of the book dealers. Not a word in it indicates such an intention. The purpose of the law makers, clearly manifested and expressed, is to secure a benefit to the public. The effect of the Statute is not to make officers perform duties for the benefit of private individuals, but to make them render services for the benefit of the public, and that benefit results to private persons is an unavoidable incident, not a designed or express provision of the Statute. At the time the Act was passed it was not known, nor could it be known, what persons would secure the contract for furnishing the books required by law; for it was provided that competition should be invited and the contract awarded to the lowest bidder. It may be true that the book dealers are incidentally benefited by the services of the officers, but if that be a sufficient reason for condemning the Act, then all statutes providing for the award of contracts by public officers, the certification of accounts or the making of reports where individuals are interested, must be condemned, since, in every instance, there is an incidental benefit to the dealer or contractor. The truth is that in no event can a public officer award a contract or certify estimates, accounts or the like, without at the same time rendering a beneficial service to the person with whom he deals on behalf of the State. If the services of the officers benefit the public and are imposed for the good of the public, the Statute is rescued from successful attack although the services of the officers may also benefit a private person. Either this is true, or else it is true that no public officer can be required to award contracts, verify accounts, audit claims or certify estimates to an individual who has a claim against the State or any of its municipalities.

The Statute is not within the constitutional provisions directed against monopolies. It designates as the standard for the guidance of the state board of education certain books; requires that the books furnished for the use of the schools shall be equal in merit to those named; requires the board to advertise for proposals to furnish the books in a newspaper published in each of the five large cities of the nation, and requires the board to award the contract to the lowest bidder. In the section directing the award of the contract it is enjoined upon the board to "ascertain under which of said proposals or propositions the school books" can be furnished to the people of the State for use in the common schools. In another section it is provided that the books shall be distributed by the township trustees, and that the books shall be sold to the pupils and patrons of the schools. It appears, therefore, that the object of the Act is to secure books for the public schools by means of open competition after full notice.

There is no exclusion of bidders, no limitation of the right to furnish school books to the people of the State to any class; on the contrary, all who are prepared to supply such books as the Statute makes the standard are invited to compete for the contract. No special privilege is granted to anyone, no right denied to anyone, for all are invited to enter the field as competitors.
7 I. R. A.

It is true that the Statute declares that the books shall conform to a designated standard, but this standard no one will deny the power of the Legislature to establish. The right to fix the standard is, indeed, a condition essential to the existence of the power; deny the condition, and it must follow that each father or guardian that controls a pupil may dictate what studies he shall pursue and what books he shall use. Such a result would be most deplorable, for it would produce such chaotic confusion that the usefulness and efficiency of the school system would be completely and forever destroyed; but the provisions of the Constitution prevent such a result, for they make it the duty of the Legislature to establish a uniform system. A standard must be fixed in order that there may be fair and open competition, since there could be no intelligent bidding if bidders were not informed what they would be required to furnish. If only a limited class own or control property that the public good demands, then that class is in the best situation to bid; but there is no reason why the public shall not have the best that their representatives can secure. The utmost that can be done is to establish a standard and invite competing bids. If school books can be bought by local boards or by a state organization, some one publisher must of necessity be favored in every instance where a uniform system is adopted. This result can by no possibility be avoided. If, for illustration, McGuffey's series of readers should be selected as the standard, then the owners of the copy-right of that series would be favored, to the exclusion of all others. It comes at last to this, either the Legislature may authorize the state board to select the books, even though the selection may give peculiar advantage to one publisher, or it can neither buy nor authorize anyone to buy books protected by copyright. Everyone knows that the best books are thus protected, and so they should be, for an author is entitled to the benefit of his work, and it would be sinning against justice to pirate his books.

If no copyrighted books can be bought, then new discoveries and new methods, however important, may be denied the children of our common schools, and this without sufficient reason, for no rule of law prohibits the purchase for public use of articles protected by letters-patent or by copyright. A familiar and forceable illustration is supplied by cases of the improvements of streets with patented pavements at the expense of the property owners.

We conclude our discussion of this phase of the subject by affirming that the Statute cannot be considered as creating a monopoly because it does require that a certain class of books shall be used, and in doing this does favor some publishers to the exclusion of others.

We accept as correct the assumption of appellant's counsel that the Statute does require the people of the State to buy the particular books designated by the proper officer in obedience to the command of the law, and that, so far as concerns the officers of the State, they must be bought from the firm to whom the state board of education awards the contract. We agree fully with appellant's counsel upon this point, for we think that everywhere throughout the Statute is manifested the intention to create a uniform system, and to make a body of rules which all school officers are bound to obey. Nor do we doubt that it was the intention of the Legislature to secure to the person who proved the best bidder in the open competition so carefully provided for, the exclusive privilege of furnishing the books selected by the state board of education, so far as the acts of school officers are involved. Whether it goes farther is not a question in this case, for the Statute operates upon and through the officers of the State. It is, indeed, not possible to so construe the Statute as to deny the exclusive right of the successful competitor, since the language employed by the Legislature clearly and unmistakably indicates the intention to exercise its power by creating a uniform system, and quite as clearly evinces a purpose to secure the practical enforcement and operation of that system by vesting in the person to whom the contract may be awarded the exclusive privilege of supplying books to all the children who enter the schools of the State, so far as the books are supplied through the school officers.

Two things are very clear: one, that the Legislature meant to provide an exclusive privilege in order to secure books at the best prices; the other, that the Legislature meant to prevent the possibility of any break in the uniformity of the system framed by the Statute.

We can find neither reason nor authority that suggests a doubt as to the power of the Legislature to require a designated series of books to be used in the schools, and to require that the books selected shall be obtained from the person to whom the contract for supplying them may be awarded. It is to be remembered that the Statute does not command that every person shall buy the books; it confines the requirement to those who receive the benefit of the public schools. These schools are owned and maintained by the State, and the State may prescribe the terms and conditions upon which pupils may enter them, except that it cannot disregard the constitutional injunction that "tuition shall be without charge and equally open to all." It may, as we have seen, prescribe the course of study that shall be pursued and the system of instruction that shall be adopted, and to perfect and complete its control it must have the power to prescribe the books that shall be used and the mode in which they shall be obtained. In prescribing the mode in which books shall be obtained the Legislature simply commands that those who enjoy the benefit of the schools which it maintains shall secure such books as it deems best, and in the mode it regards as expedient. Power thus asserted is exercised in a matter which is not of common right, but which concerns institutions founded and fostered by the State. The regulation, in its entire scope, relates exclusively to the enjoyment of the privilege afforded by a system of education created and maintained by the State for the general good, and it must follow that the State does have power to make the regulation effective by prescribing the method which shall be pursued by those who seek to enjoy the privilege it has created. Certainly, no one will deny the existence of such a right, and if it does exist it must reside in the law-making power of the State.

7 L. R. A.

The regulation of the mode of receiving books by the pupils of the common schools is not analogous to a regulation of general property rights, for books are peculiar to schools and schools are the property of the State. It is no answer to this argument to affirm that the State may not give one person the exclusive privilege of selling fuel, clothing or the like to a community, for school books are unlike such property in their chief characteristics, and the Legislature does not assume to declare that any person may not sell books to a community; it simply assumes the power of declaring that the person whom the state board of education decides is the lowest bidder shall have the exclusive privilege of supplying its schools with books. In doing this it does no more respecting schools than a private citizen does who contracts with another to furnish him goods for a designated period, nor does it do more regarding schools than it does with respect to all the public institutions whose officers are authorized to give the exclusive privilege of furnishing groceries, medicines or other articles to the person to whom a contract covering a designated period is awarded, for the State owns and maintains its schools just as much as it does its public institutions of every kind.

Either the State has power to regulate and control the schools it owns or it has not. That it does not have the power we venture to say no one will affirm; if it does have the power it must reside in the law-making department, for it is impossible for it to exist elsewhere. If the power does reside in the law-making department, then that department must exercise its discretion and adopt such measures as it deems best, and if the measures adopted lead to the exclusion of some book owners it is an incident that no ingenuity can escape nor any system avoid. The denial of the right to select the books is the denial of the right of regulation and control, and we cannot conceive it possible to deny this right. If the right of regulation and control exists, then the fact that the exercise of the right does exclude some publisher is an inseparable and unavoidable condition of the exercise of the right. Without it the right is annihilated. If a clear and manifest legislative right cannot be exercised without conferring privileges in the nature of a monopoly, then, as the authorities all agree, a monopoly may be created, for a denial of the right will not be suffered. This doctrine is discussed by Judge Cooley in his work on Torts, and by Mr. Tiedeman in his work on the Police Power, to which we refer without comment. Cooley, Torts, 277; Tiedeman, Pol. Power, 815 et seq.

But we need not enter the field traveled by those authors, for here there is no denial of a right to sell books to a community. All that is here done is to provide that the person who receives, after fair and open competition, the contract for supplying books to the school children shall enjoy an exclusive privilege for the period prescribed by the Statute.

Judge Cooley says that "it is held competent for the State to contract with a purchaser to supply all the schools of the State with text books of a uniform character and price." Const. Lim. 5th ed. 225, note 1.

In Curryer v. Merrill, 25 Minn. 1, 38 Am. Rep. 450, it was held that the State might purchase books and compel the patrons of the school to buy the books from its officers. The question was presented in Bancroft v. Thayer, 5 Sawy. 502, in substantially the same general form that it is here, and it was held that a State may provide by legislation that a designated person shall have the exclusive privilege of furnishing all the text books needed for the use of the public schools. This decision was made upon the Constitution of Oregon, which is very similar to ours, and the right to make such a contract is referred to the police power, the court saying: "To authorize and provide that by means of contract or legislative grant a particular person or persons shall have the exclusive right to do or furnish a particular thing, upon certain conditions, for the use and convenience of the public schools, has always been a common mode of exercising the police power of the State."

In the case of State v. State Board of Education, 18 Nev. 173, the power of the Legislature to require the adoption and use of the books of a designated publisher was assumed to exist by court and counsel, and this is true of the case of People v. Oakland Board of Education, 55 Cal. 331. The court held in People v. State Board of Education, 49 Cal. 684, that the decision of the state board of education as to the text books that should be used was final and must be obeyed by all of the local boards and officers. These authorities and those to which we have heretofore referred seem to us to so conclusively settle the question as to leave no room for debate.

If it be true, as the decided cases all affirm, that the State may itself contract for the books and require the patrons of the schools to buy from its officers at a designated price, it must be true that the State can contract with an individual to supply the books, for the underlying principle is precisely the same. It can make no difference whether the State buys the books and then requires the patrons of the schools to purchase from its officers, or whether it vests the exclusive privilege in an individual by contract, for the decision of the question does not depend upon the parties, but upon the character of the act or transaction. Whether the right to sell is asserted by the State itself or conferred upon an individual can make no difference, since in either case the privilege is exclusive. If the State can itself exercise such a privilege it can certainly authorize its exercise by an individual.

Our conclusion upon the constitutional questions is in harmony with the judgment of the eminent judge who heard and decided the case of State v. Blue, 23 N. E. Rep. 963, as well as that of the learned judge who decided this case; for we agree with them that the Statute is constitutional in all its essential features. Whether there are, or are not, isolated and detached clauses that may be invalid we have not inquired, for the reason that the case, as it is presented by the record and in the very able argument of counsel, requires no such investigation.

The remaining question requires a construction of the Statute. The contention of the one party is that it imposes no imperative duty upon the trustee that can be enforced by mandamus; and that of the other is, that such a duty is imperative and that mandamus is the appropriate remedy.

It is not necessary that a statute should in direct terms declare the duty of an officer in order to make it an imperative one. The duty may be deduced from the general provisions and scope of the statute, regard being had to the evil intended to be remedied and the object sought to be accomplished. A familiar illustration of this general doctrine is supplied by the cases which hold that highway officers may be compelled by mandate issued upon the petition of a citizen who has sustained a special injury, to repair a highway or remove an obstruction. The cases of Wren v. Indianapolis, 96 Ind. 206, and Greenfield v. State, 12 West. Rep. 713, 118 Ind. 597, are apposite examples, for there the duty to issue estimates and proceed with the collection of assessments for the improvement of a street was deduced from the general provisions of the Act for the Incorporation of Cities. But, without prolonging our opinion by an examination of the decided cases in detail, we adopt, as a fair expression of the conclusion to be deduced from them, this statement of a careful and accurate author, who, in speaking of the difference between a duty and a privilege, says: "It has, indeed, been said that no rule can be laid down for determining whether the command is to be considered as a mere direction or instruction, involving no invalidating consequences in its disregard, or as imperative duty, with an implied nullification for disobedience, beyond the fundamental one that it depends on the scope and object of the enactment." Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 443.

This fundamental principle runs parallel with the cardinal rule which affirms that the courts must ascertain and give effect to the intention of the Legislature. It is, indeed, substantially the same rule expressed in different words to emphasize its application. Kellogg v. Page, 44 Vt. 856; Corbett v. Bradley, 7 Nev. 106.

Our own decisions are collected and well discussed in Middleton v. Greeson, 3 West. Rep. 905, 106 Ind. 18. The question which here emerges is, Do the provisions of the Statute concerning school trustees impose a duty or confer a privilege; or, to particularize, do those provisions require all township trustees to adopt the books, and thus give practical effect to the statutory scheme as a complete and symmetrical system, or, do they put it in the power of each trustee to break the uniformity by refusing to procure the books? If it be true that township trustees may, at their pleasure, procure or refuse to procure the books for which the state board contracts, then the Statute is nullified in so far as it assumes to confer a right upon the contractor to supply the people of the State with school books. Grant the right of each of the school trustees to determine for himself whether he will or will not procure the books, and it may result that the contract will operate in very few only of the townships of the State, and this, as we shall presently show, was a result the Legislature intended to prevent.

It is, as we have suggested, always proper to ascertain the object intended to be accomplished, and for this purpose it is proper to look to the history of the times, to the cause which induced the enactment of the Statute, and to consider, also, the evil intended to be remedied. Again and again has this doctrine been asserted by this court, and in asserting it the court did no more than enforce a rule much older than the State. Krug v. Davis, 87 Ind. 590, and cases cited; Bell v. Davis, 75 Ind. 315; Clare v. State, 68 Ind. 17; State v. Canton, 43 Mo. 48; People v. Lacombe, 99 N. Y. 43.

One who would give a just interpretation to the language of a statute must always give due consideration to the history of the enactment. Speaking of the duty of one who undertakes to interpret a statute, the author quoted says: "He must refer to the history of the times to ascertain the reasons for and the meaning of the provisions of a statute, and to the general state of opinion, public, judicial and legislative, at the time of the enactment." Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 29.

Illustrations of this well-known rule are supplied by the cases of Aldridge v. Williams, 44 U. S. 3 How. 9 [11 L. ed. 469]; United States v. Union Pac. R. Co. 91 U. S. 72 [23 L. ed. 224]; District of Columbia v. Washington Market Co. 108 U. S. 243 [27 L. ed. 714]; State v. Nicholls, 30 La. Ann. 980; Keyport & M. P. S. Co. v. Farmers Transp. Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 18; Delaplane v. Orenshaw, 15 Gratt. 457.

The information imparted by the inaugural address of the Governor of the State, by the debates in the General Assembly, and by the reports of the legislative committees makes clear the object sought to be accomplished, and reveals the evil it was the legislative purpose to remedy.

It is manifest that to so construe the Statute as to enable township trustees to refuse to make reports, to prepare certificates or to procure books would defeat the leading purpose of the Legislature.

No one who attends to the history of the times can doubt that it was the legislative intention to require all school officers to procure the books for the pupils from the person to whom the state board of education should award the contract. It was, too, the intention of the Legislature to equalize prices, to prevent one locality from being compelled to pay a much greater price for books than another, to put it beyond the power of the local officers to mar the uniformity of the system, to prevent favoritism and to open the field to competition. To this end the Legislature constructed a system which required competitive bidding, and, to make sure that the best prices might be obtained, provided that whoever secured the contract should have the exclusive privilege of furnishing to the school officers all the books designated and required by the state board. To permit the local school officers to treat the provisions of the Statute as the grant of a privilege would prevent the attainment of this end. To give effect to the intent of the 7 L. R. A.

Legislature and to secure the accomplishment of the principal object of the Statute, it must be held that its provisions create a legal duty which the trustees cannot put on or off at pleasure. To hold otherwise would effectually destroy the symmetry of the Statute and so cripple its machinery as to render it useless; and this we cannot do in the face of the historical facts which were laid before the General Assembly by the governor, considered in the reports of the committees of that body and debated by its members. We know, as matter of history, imparted to us by the most authentic records, and in the most public method, that, with little diversity of opinion, it was agreed that there were great evils to be remedied. The diversity of opinion was not so much as to the existence of the evil and the necessity of a remedy, as it was respecting the nature of the remedy that should be resorted to for the cure of the evil.

Before turning to the language of the Statute it is proper to refer to an ancient and well-known rule of law which is not without influence here. An English writer says: "It has, indeed, been said to have become an axiom 'that in public statutes words only directory, permissive or enabling may have a compulsory force where the thing to be done is for the public benefit, or in advancement of public justice.'" Heard's Short's Extraordinary Remedy, 255.

An American court has thus stated the rule: "The grant by the Legislature of an official power involves a corresponding public duty, and where the power is not expressly discretionary, its exercise is a peremptory public duty." The same court also said: "Public official powers must be supposed to be granted from public motives and for the public good, and their exercise is not a matter of discretion unless expressly made so." People v. New York Co. 11 Abb. Pr. 114.

The rule was thus expressed by our own court: "Where the words of the statute are permissive merely, in cases where public rights are concerned, and where the public or third persons have a claim de jure that the powers should be exercised, they will be construed as obligatory." Gray v. State, 72 Ind. 576.

Other cases declare the same doctrine. Bansem v. Mace, 18 Ind. 27; State v. Buckles, 39 Ind. 272; Indianapolis v. McAvoy, 86 Ind. 587.

That the Statute here under examination contains provisions concerning public rights and rights in which individual patrons of the schools have an interest is too clear for denial, and therefore this rule forcibly applies.

An analysis of the provisions of the Statute, submitted to the light of the principles we have stated will make clear its meaning and object.

Section 1 constitutes the state board of education commissioners for the purpose of making selections of text books for use in the common schools, and designates the standard which shall guide the board in the selection of books.

Section 2 commands the board to advertise for proposals in two daily newspapers in this State, and one in the Cities of New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis, and directs what the action of the board shall be.

Section 3 requires the board to examine all proposals for furnishing "school books to the people of the State, for use in the common schools."

Section 4 provides that if books can be furnished to "the patrons for use in the common schools of this State" from manuscript, the board shall invite proposals for manuscript, and not for books.

Section 6 provides that as soon as the board shall have entered into a contract it shall be the duty of the governor to issue his proclamation "announcing such fact to the people of the State."

Section 7 provides that when the governor shall have issued his proclamation, it "shall be the duty of each and every school corporation within this State, within thirty days thereafter, and at such other times as books may be needed for use in their respective school corporations, to certify to the school superintendent of their respective counties the number of school text-books provided for in such contract required by the children for use in their respective school corporations."

In this section it is made the duty of the school superintendent to make a requisition for such books upon the contractor, and it is further made the duty of the superintendent, upon the receipt of the books, to immediately notify all of the township trustees of the receipt of such books.

This section also declares that "it shall be the duty of such trustees to immediately procure and take charge of such books," and "that upon the receipt of such books by said school trustees they shall furnish them on demand to the school patrons or school children of their corporation at the price fixed therefor by the contract entered into between said board of commissioners and the contractor."

It is also provided in the same section that books may be purchased from the superintendent.

Section 8 makes it the duty of each trustee to make a report of the books received, the number sold and the number on hand, and section 9 provides a penalty for a breach of duty.

From this synopsis these important things are made manifest: The books are to be secured for all the schools of the State. Everywhere throughout the Statute the terms employed refer to the entire State, never to localities. Every provision indicates an intention to establish a uniform system, and not a provision indicates an intention to put it in the power of any officer to break the uniformity.

The duty is enjoined upon all of the trustees of the State; none are excepted.

The books are all to be furnished under the contract, and furnished without exception for all the schools of the State. The only method for securing the books is through the contract.

The conclusion that the law is obligatory upon every school trustee within the State is therefore irresistible.

From beginning to end there is no hint or suggestion that some of the trustees may, and some may not, obey the law and procure or decline to procure the books under the contract made by the state board. There is not the remotest suggestion from which it can be inferred that the system constructed shall be treated otherwise than as a unit. Nor is there a word from which it can be inferred that the Legislature intended that inferior school officers might exercise discretionary power and thus break and deform the uniformity and symmetry of the system.

All we know of the history of the enactment, all we can discover as to the object of the Statute, and all that we have learned of the evil sought to be remedied, combine with the words of the Statute (words clear in themselves, but clearer still in the light shed upon them by extrinsic facts which it is our duty to know, and which we do know) in support of the conclusion that the Statute creates a uniform system, requires that all books be procured under the contract, and that school trustees may not exercise discretionary powers but shall perform the duty enjoined upon them by procuring and distributing the books selected by the state board of education as the law commands.

Upon the petition of a citizen courts have enforced a duty less clear and imperative than that which rests upon the appellee, but the length of this opinion (excusable, if excusable at all, because of the magnitude and importance of the questions involved) forbids that we do more than refer to the cases. State v. Springfield School Directors, 74 Mo. 21; Baltimore School Comrs. v. State Board of Education, 26 Md. 505; Maddox v. Neal, 45 Ark. 121, 55 Am. Rep. 540.

For the error in holding that the duty imposed upon school trustees is not imperative, the judgment must be reversed.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to proceed in accordance with this opinion.

Olds, J., concurring:

I concur in the conclusion reached in the principal opinion, but not in all the statements and arguments contained in it.

I do not think the Statute in question in conflict with any express provision of, or the spirit of, the State Constitution; nor do I think it an encroachment on the rights of the citizens of the State, not delegated to the legislative department of the state government by the Constitution. In reaching this conclusion I do not concur in the broad statement of counsel for the appellant that before the law can be declared unconstitutional and void some express provision of the Constitution must be pointed out which prohibits such legislation; but I adhere to the doctrine recently enunciated by this court, that the grant of power to the legislative department is a grant only of all legislative power, and that there are some rights of the people which cannot be taken away by legislative enactment notwithstanding there is no provision in the Constitution expressly prohibiting such legislation.

The common schools of the State are in the main supported by the State, and the tuition is free. The Constitution expressly enjoins on the General Assembly the duty "to encourage by all suitable means moral, intellectual, scientific and agricultural improvement, and to provide, by law, for a general and uniform system of common schools, wherein tuition shall be without charge and equally open to all."

By the Constitution, the common schools of the State are expressly placed under the control and supervision of the General Assembly. It is made the duty of that department of the state government to provide for a uniform system. This must relate to books, as it is manifestly essential that there must be a uniformity in books to secure proper efficiency in the schools, and such uniformity can only be brought about and maintained by legislation providing for the adoption and use of certain books. Whether there should be a uniformity in the books of but a single school, or whether one system and the same class of books should extend to all schools in the township or county, or in the schools of the whole State, is a matter of policy to be considered by the General Assembly in the passage of laws to govern the common schools in this respect. This uniformity in books has always been controlled by legislation, and I think properly so, and I think also that it is committed to the General Assembly by the provisions of the Constitution.

When once admitted that it is subject to legislative control at all, as it seems to me it must be, then it is exclusively within the province of the General Assembly to determine whether there shall be a uniformity of books in a single school or the schools of a township, county or State, and the manner by which the books shall be adopted; and courts can in no way interfere.

I do not believe the General Assembly has power to create a monopoly, nor do I believe they have done so in the passage of this Statute. School books are usually copyrighted, and when adopted under the system provided for in the law under consideration, or under any other law, or in any manner so that the parent or child is required to procure the particular kind of a book or books used in the school the child attends, they of necessity have to purchase of the person or persons publishing and controlling the copyright of the particular book or books used in the school, or, if not copyrighted, of the person or persons publishing the particular books; so that if, under the old system of adopting books, which it is not contended is objectionable to the provisions of the Constitution, when books were adopted for use in a township or county, the patrons of the schools had of necessity to purchase directly or indirectly of the person or persons who controlled and published the books adopted. If the present law creates a monopoly, the old law likewise created one, differing only in extent, the present system not having so many of the features of a monopoly, as it provides for a competition before the adoption, and the old did not. The necessity of uniformity in books exists, and the Constitution expressly enjoins the duty on the General Assembly to provide for it; and to have uniformity requires that the books be purchased of the person or persons publishing and controlling the particular books used.

While the contract entered into between the state board of education and the School-Book Company does not possess the usual elements of mutuality, and may be of doubtful validity as a contract, yet I think the action of the state board of education under the law amounts to an adoption of the particular books to be used in the common schools.

It has been suggested by counsel that if this Act be valid, then the Legislature may pass laws of the same character relating to any merchantable article which citizens purchase one from the other, or even related to the clothing of school children, or some matter about which there is no necessity for uniformity. But as between the law under consideration and the laws of the character suggested there is a decided difference. If the law related to ordinary merchantable articles, purchased in the common and ordinary dealings between citizens, or to clothing of school children, or to some matter about which there was no necessity for any uniformity, then I would concede at once that such legislation was beyond the power of the General Assembly and not contemplated by the Constitution. But the question under consideration is entirely different. It is legislation concerning a matter for which there is a necessity for system and uniformity, and the duty of providing for a uniform system is expressly enjoined upon the General Assembly by the Constitution.

The services to be performed by the township trustees, who are school officers, are to be done for the public. The paramount object of the services to be rendered is to put in force the law and execute it by requiring the school officers of the township to keep the particular books where all patrons of the schools may easily obtain them, and to require that such books be used in the schools, and while the services of the trustees may incidentally benefit the persons furnishing and selling the books, yet I do not regard that this fact renders the law invalid.

As to whether the law repeals the old law and whether it is mandatory or not, it seems to me that from the wording of the whole Act there can be no question as to what was the legislative intent, and that such intent was to establish a uniformity in school books throughout the State, and that it was intended to supersede and take the place of all other laws on the same subject.

As to whether the law is a salutary one or not, and as to whether it will prove beneficial or detrimental to the common-school interest of the State, are matters about which the court has nothing to do. These questions were with the General Assembly, and determined by them in the passage of the law.

Berkshire, J., dissenting:

I cannot agree to the conclusion reached in the opinion of the court, and feel called upon, therefore, to state in as few words as possible my reasons for the position which I assume; and that the conclusions which I draw as to the provisions and requirements of the Act of March 2, 1889, may be the better understood, I herein set out most of the sections of the Act in full.

The first section provides that the state board of education shall constitute a board of commissioners for the purpose of making a selection or procuring the compilation for use in the common schools of the State of Indiana of a series of text books in certain branches named, and fixes a standard as to the matter and quality of the books.

Section 2 is as follows: "The said board of commissioners shall, immediately upon the taking effect of this Act, advertise for twenty-one consecutive days in two daily papers published in this State having the largest circulation, and in one newspaper of general circulation in the Cities of New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati,

Chicago and St. Louis, that at a time and place fixed by said notice, and not later than six months after the first publication thereof, said board will receive sealed proposals on the following:

"1. From publishers of school text books for furnishing books to the school trustees of the State of Indiana for use in common schools of this State, as provided in this Act, for a term of five years, stating specifically in such bid the price at which each book will be furnished, and accompanying such bid with specimen copies of each and all books proposed to be furnished in such bid.

"2. From authors of school text-books who have manuscripts of books not published for prices at which they will sell their manuscript, together with the copyright of such books for use in the public schools of the State of Indiana.

"3. From persons who are willing to undertake the compilation of a book or books or a series of books, as provided in section one (1) of this Act, the price at which they are willing to undertake such compilation of any or all of such books, to the acceptance and satisfaction of the said board of commissioners.

"Provided that any and all bids by publishers herein provided for must be accompanied by a bond in the penal sum of $50,000, with resident freehold security to the acceptance and satisfaction of the governor of the State, conditioned that if any contract be awarded to any bidder hereunder, such bidder will enter into a contract to perform the conditions of his bid to the acceptance and satisfaction of said board.

"And provided further, that no bid shall be considered unless the same be accompanied by the affidavit of the bidder that he is in no wise directly or indirectly connected with any other publisher or firm who is now bidding for books submitted to such board, nor has any pecuniary interest in any other publisher or firm bidding at the same time, and that he is not a party to any compact, syndicate or other scheme whereby the benefits of competition are denied to the people of the State.

"And be it further provided, that if any competent author or authors shall compile any one or more books of the first order of excellence, and shall offer the same as a free gift to the people of this State, together with the copyright of the same, and the right to manufacture and sell such books in the State of Indiana for use in the public schools, it shall be the duty of such board of commissioners to pay no money for any manuscript or copyright for such book or books on the subject treated of in the manuscript so donated; and such board shall have the right to reject any and all bids, and at their option such board shall have the right to reject any bid as to a part of such books and to accept the same as to the residue thereof."

Section 3 is as follows: "It shall be the duty of such board to meet at the time and place mentioned in such notice, and open and examine all sealed proposals received pursuant to the notice provided for in section two (2) of this Act; and it shall be the further duty of such board to make a full, complete and thorough investigation of all such bids or proposals, and to ascertain under which of said proposals or propositions the school books could be furnished to the people of the State for use in the common schools at the lowest price, taking into consideration the size and quality, as to matter, material, style of binding and mechanical execution of such books.

"Provided always, that such board shall not in any case contract with any author, publisher or publishers for the furnishing of any book, manuscript, copyright or books which shall be sold to patrons for use in the public schools of this State at a price above or in excess of the following, which prices shall include all cost and charges for transportation and delivery to the several county superintendents in this State, namely:

- "For spelling books, ten (10) cents;
- "For a First Reader, ten (10) cents;
- "For a Second Reader, fifteen (15) cents;
- "For a Third Reader, twenty-five (25) cents;
- "For a Fourth Reader, thirty (30) cents;
- "For a Fifth Reader, forty (40) cents;
- "For an Arithmetic, intermediate, thirty-five (35) cents;
- "For an Arithmetic, complete, forty-five (45) cents;
- "For a Geography, elementary, thirty (30) cents;
- "For a Geography, complete, seventy-five (75) cents;
- "For an English Grammar, elementary, twenty-five (25) cents;
- "For an English Grammar, complete, forty (40) cents;
- "For a Physiology, thirty-five (35) cents;
- "For a History of the United States, fifty (50) cents;
- "For copy books, each, five (5) cents."

Section 4 is as follows: "If, upon the examination of such proposals, it shall be the opinion of such board of commissioners that such books can be furnished cheaper to the patrons for use in the common schools by procuring and causing to be published the manuscript of any or all of such books, it shall be their duty to procure such manuscript and to advertise for sealed proposals for publishing the same in like manner as hereinbefore provided, and under the same conditions and restrictions. And such contract may be let for publication of all of such books or for any one or more of such books separately; and it shall be the further duty of such board of commissioners to provide in the contract for the publication of any such manuscript for the payment by the publisher of the compensation agreed upon between such board and the author or owner of any such transcript, for such manuscript, together with the cost or expense of copyrighting the same."

Section 5 is as follows: "It shall be a part of the terms and conditions of every contract made in pursuance of this Act that the State of Indiana shall not be liable to any contractor hereunder for any sum whatever, but that all such contractors shall receive their pay and compensation solely and exclusively from the proceeds of the sale of books, as provided for in this Act."

Section 6 is as follows: "As soon as such board shall have entered into any contract for the publishing of books for use in the public schools of this State pursuant to the provisions of this Act, it shall be the duty of the governor to issue his proclamation announcing such fact to the people of this State."

Section 7 is as follows: "When such proclamation shall have been duly issued, it shall be the duty of the school trustees of each and every school corporation in this State, within thirty days thereafter, and at such other times as books may be needed for use in the public schools of their respective corporations, to certify to the county superintendent of their respective counties the number of school text-books provided for in such contract required by the children for use in the schools of their several school corporations. Such county superintendent shall forthwith make such requisition for books as the schools in said several counties may require upon the state superintendent of public instruction, and the said state superintendent of public instruction shall immediately thereafter make a requisition for said books upon the contractor, who shall within ninety days ship the books so ordered directly to the county school superintendents of the several counties of this State. Upon the receipt of such books it shall be the duty of such county school superintendents to immediately notify all the school trustees of the school corporations as shown by the last school enumeration of their counties, of the receipt of such books.

"It shall then be the duty of such school trustees to immediately procure and take charge and custody of all the books assigned to their several corporations, receipting therefor to the said county school superintendent, and upon the receipt of such books by said school trustees, they shall furnish them on demand to the school patrons or school children of their respective corporations at the price fixed therefor by the contract entered into between said board of commissioners and said contractor; and it shall be the duty of the school officers to sell such books for cash only, and if they shall sell or dispose of any books other than for the cash price thereof, they shall be held personally liable and liable upon their official bond for the price of such book or books.

"Provided, that any patron or pupil of any school or schools other than the public schools, and also any child between the ages of six and twenty-one years of age, or the parent, guardian or teacher of such child, shall have the right to purchase and receive the books, and at the prices named, by payment of the cash price thereof to the school superintendent of any county in this State; and it is made his duty to make requisition upon the contractor for any and all books so ordered and paid for by any such person or persons.

"And provided further, that nothing in this Act shall operate to prevent the state board of education, boards of school trustees or boards of school commissioners from devising means and making arrangements for the sale, exchange or other disposition of such books as may be owned by the pupils of the schools under their charge at the time of the adoption of books under the provisions of this Act."

Section 8 reads as follows: "At the expiration of three months after the receipt of such books by the county superintendent, and every three months thereafter, it shall be the duty of each school trustee receiving and chargeable with books under the provisions of this Act to make a full and complete report to the county superintendent of the number of books sold and the amount of money received therefor, and the number of books on hand; and at the time of making such report he shall pay over to the county superintendent all moneys received by him, or with which he is chargeable from the sales of books in his hands, which report shall be duly verified by the oath of the party making it."

Section 9 is as follows: "If, at the expiration of ten days from the time required by this Act for the making of such report of any school superintendent chargeable with books under this Act, any such officer shall have failed, neglected or refused to make such report or turn over any moneys with which he is chargeable, it shall be the duty of the county school superintendents within fifteen days to enter suit upon his official bond for an accounting and recovering of any moneys due from him on account of such books with which he is chargeable, and all judgments recovered upon such bond shall include a reasonable attorney's fee for the attorney prosecuting such suit, and such judgment shall be without relief from valuation or appraisement laws, and shall be without stay of execution."

Section 10 reads as follows: "It shall be the duty of the several county superintendents of this State, within thirty days from the issuing of the proclamation by the governor as hereinbefore provided for, and every county school superintendent hereafter elected, before he enters upon the discharge of his official duties, to enter into a special bond, with at least two freehold sureties of such county, payable to the State of Indiana, conditioned that they will faithfully and honestly perform all the duties required of them by this Act, and account for and pay over all moneys that may come into their hands pursuant to the provisions of this Act, in a penal sum which shall be equal in amount to $100 for every one thousand inhabitants of their respective counties as shown by the last census immediately preceding the giving of such bond, to be approved by the board of commissioners of their respective counties; and upon the failure of any county school superintendent to give such bond, his office shall become immediately vacant, and the board of commissioners of his county shall immediately appoint some competent and suitable person to fill such vacancy for the unexpired term of his office."

Section 11 is as follows: "It shall be the duty of each county superintendent in this State, within ten days after the quarterly reports of the school trustees as hereinbefore provided for, to make a full, true, complete and detailed report to the contractor of all books sold by the several school trustees of his county, and the number of books in the hands of the trustees of each school corporation, which report shall be accompanied by all cash received by him from the school officers from sales of books by them sold, and which report shall be duly verified by him, and a duplicate thereof shall be filed in the office of the auditor of his county. Upon the failure of any county superintendent to make the report and to transmit the cash as required by this section, a right of action shall immediately accrue to the contractor against the said school superintendent and his sureties upon the bond provided for in this Act, for an accounting and for the recovery of any moneys received and not transmitted by him and for any damages which may have resulted from his neglect or failure to comply with the provisions of this Act, and any judgment upon any such bond shall include a reasonable fee for the attorney prosecuting such suit, and such judgment shall be without relief from valuation and appraisement laws, and shall be without stay of execution."

Section 12 makes it a misdemeanor for a school trustee to charge or receive more than the price fixed by the contract with the State for the books.

Section 13 makes it embezzlement in any trustee or county superintendent if he fraudulently fail to account for and pay over to the proper person or persons moneys in his hands, or to account for school books received by him and unsold, under the provisions of the said Act.

In my opinion, the whole Act is in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and in violation of § 23, art. 1, of the Constitution of the State of Indiana, and therefore void. Said last named section reads as follows:

"The General Assembly shall not grant to any citizen or class of citizens privileges or immunities which upon the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens."

In my judgment, under and by virtue of said Act, the Indiana School-Book Company is granted privileges and immunities which upon the same terms do not belong to other citizens, natural or artificial. It is true that the Act provides that the board of commissioners named therein shall advertise for sealed proposals from publishers, authors and persons willing to undertake the compilation of books to be used in our public schools, and authorizes the said board to accept the bid which seems to be the most advantageous under all the circumstances, and to enter into a contract with such bidder.

But it is expressly provided in said section 5 that under no consideration is the State to become liable to any contractor in any sum whatever. The books to be furnished, therefore, are not sold to the State, nor are they sold to the patrons of the schools by virtue of the arrangement which the State and the contractor makes. It requires another transaction, complete and perfect in itself, between the contractor and the patrons of the school to devest the ownership of the contractor in the books which he is to furnish, and to vest the ownership thereof in the patrons of the school, and just the same character of transaction as though there had been no arrangement or contract between the State and the contractor. It seems to me that the most that can be said or claimed for the contractor is that the contract or arrangement extends to him the privilege, to the exclusion of other persons, of supplying the public schools with text books. But it is made the duty of the trustees of the several school townships in the State to certify, within thirty days after the governor has issued his proclamation as required by the Act, and thereafter as books are needed for use in the schools, to the county superintendents of their respective counties, and the duty of the several county superintendents upon receiving the certificates of the trustees to make a requisition upon the superintendent of public instruction for the books required for their several counties, who makes a requisition upon the contractor, who, within thirty days, ships the books required for each county to its county superintendent. When the books are received by the county superintendent, it is made his duty to notify the trustees, and it then becomes their duty to take charge of the books going to their respective townships, first receipting therefor to the county superintendents. And after receipting for and taking into his possession the books for his township, it is made the duty of the trustee to put them on sale, and, on demand, for cash, at the price fixed upon by the State and the contractor, to furnish them to the patrons of the schools of his township, and to the patrons of other schools than public schools; and to any child over six and under twenty-one years of age, it is made the duty of the several county superintendents to make requisition for and furnish books for cash, and at the price fixed upon by the State and the contractor.

And it is made the further duty of the trustee to report to the county superintendent quarterly the state of the book trade, giving the number of books sold, the amount of money received therefor and the number of books unsold and on hand, and at the same time to pay over to the county superintendent all moneys received by him or with which he is chargeable; and if he fails to make the report or to pay over the moneys, it is made and becomes the duty of the county superintendent within fifteen days thereafter to institute suit upon the bond of the trustee so in default; and it is provided that in addition to the amount found due the judgment shall include a reasonable fee for the plaintiff's attorney, and the trustee and his sureties are deprived of the benefit of valuation and appraisement laws, and of the benefit of all laws for the stay of execution.

The several county superintendents are required to give a separate bond for the benefit of the contractor, and if any superintendent fails to give this bond his office is declared vacant.

Each county superintendent, within ten days after he receives the quarterly reports of the trustees, is required to make a full and complete report, not to his superior officer, the superintendent of public instruction, but to the contractor, of all books sold and of those still unsold in the hands of the trustees, and, along with his report, to bear the money in his hands—the proceeds of the sales made by the trustees.

To what extent the county superintendent must travel or the point to which he must go to make this report the law does not provide. It must be, therefore, to the headquarters or place of business of the contractor, wherever that may be (if he reports in person), as the rule is that whenever an inferior officer is required to report to a superior he is required to go to the headquarters or place of business of his superior. It may be that the county superintendents can make their reports to the contractor by mail or express, and thus transmit the moneys in their hands at their own risk; as to that I am not prepared to say.

If a county superintendent fails to make the report required of him, or to pay over the money in his hands, a right of action at once accrues to the contractor upon his said bond, and the judgment rendered is increased over and above the amount found due to the extent of a reasonable fee for the contractor's attorney, and is rendered without relief from valuation and appraisal laws, and without the benefit of all laws for the stay of execution. And if any county superintendent or school trustee fails to pay over the money in his hands when called upon by the proper person, or to turn over unsold books received by him, the law declares him guilty of the crime of embezzlement.

To me this seems to be one of the most remarkable laws ever enacted by any legislative body, to say the least of it. It not only creates a monopoly, but, in my judgment, as hard and offensive one as could well be created by a legislative body.

Blackstone's definition of a monopoly is as follows: "A monopoly is an institution or allowance from the sovereign power of the State, by grant, commission or otherwise, to any person or corporation for the sole buying, selling, making or using of anything whereby any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate are sought to be restrained of any liberty they had before, or hindered in their lawful trade."

This definition is accepted and adopted by Justice Field in Butchers Union, S. H. & L. Co. v. Crescent City, L. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746 [28 L. ed. 585], and is recognized everywhere as authoritative.

The exclusive privileges granted to the Indiana School-Book Company under the Legislative Act in question fall exactly within Blackstone's definition, and clearly and unmistakably within the inhibition of the State Constitution. Not only is the School-Book Company granted the exclusive right for the period of five years to supply the common schools with certain text-books, but local public officers at great expense to the people of the State, and, if needs be, to the neglect of their public duties, are made the agents of the contractor to dispose of its books, and placed under most severe penalties, criminal as well as civil, in case they fail to perform the duties which, under the law, they owe to the contractor.

Under the severe and strict requirements of this Act, any school trustee is required involuntarily to open up a branch establishment for the Indiana School-Book Company.

It is claimed by the appellant that the law is mandatory upon all the public servants of the State upon whom it imposes duties, and with this contention I agree. It is not only mandatory, but it is so to that extent that, though text-books from the same plates from which are issued the books to be furnished by the Indiana School-Book Company were placed in the hands of the trustees, they would not be authorized to put them on sale to be used in the schools, for the law and the contract entered into between the School-Book Company and the State grants to the company the privilege of furnishing the books, and this means all the books, and places the duty upon the trustees of carrying out the promises of the State; and should the trustees sell books belonging to other persons, and allow them to be used in the schools, the promises of the State would be broken.

I purposely omit the word "obligation" but use the word "promise" because, under the arrangement, I do not think the State has obligated itself. But, to pass on, the State having promised the School-Book Company that it should have the privilege of furnishing all the books, in my judgment the promise of the State is broken if the school trustees allow books purchased anywhere to be used in the schools, except through them as the agents of the School-Book Company.

The law requires the trustee to certify the number of books the schools of his township need, for which a requisition is made, and these books are placed in the hands of the trustees; and out of the books so furnished the contractor is entitled to have all the children supplied, and, if more are needed, that a further requisition be made.

It was evidently the intention of the General Assembly that the books required for the schools should be furnished by the contractor as provided for in the Act. Otherwise some provision would have been made giving to the patrons an opportunity to get books elsewhere of the same series. The law grants such privileges and immunities to the Indiana School-Book Company as were evidently, in my judgment, intended to be inhibited by the Constitution, and cannot be upheld (if that would remove the objections to it) on the ground that it falls within the police power of the State as a law to improve the sanitary condition of the public or to protect it against immorality. Indeed, this is not seriously contended.

The Act in question must stand upon § 1, art. 8, of the State Constitution, which reads as follows: "Knowledge and learning generally diffused throughout a community being essential to the preservation of free government, it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to encourage, by all suitable means, moral, intellectual, scientific and agricultural improvement, and to provide by law for a general and uniform system of common schools, wherein tuition shall be without charge and equally open to all."

But this constitutional provision must be construed with other constitutional provisions, and in the light of the Federal Constitution; and I claim when it is so construed, exclusive privileges and immunities cannot be granted by the Legislature to one citizen, or to a class of citizens, under the pretense of building up or providing for a general school system. It is wholly unnecessary to the maintenance of a general and uniform system of common schools that exclusive privileges and immunities be granted to any citizen or class of citizens, and nothing of the kind was ever contemplated by the framers of the Constitution.

But it is contended that the exclusive right to supply the common schools with text-books was sold to the lowest bidder, and as an opportunity was then offered to all persons who desired to bid and compete for the privilege, that the right which the School-Book Company claims to have acquired is free from all the elements of a monopoly. The argument is fallacious and unsound.

The modus operandi by which the General Assembly grants to a citizen or class of citizens privileges and immunities which on the same terms are not open to all citizens is wholly immaterial. It is the thing done and not the manner of doing it that taints the act or transaction. Exclusive privileges or immunities granted to one or more citizens are none the less objectionable, and none the less within the constitutional inhibition, because sold to the lowest bidder, than if granted without an opportunity for competitive bids.

I do not controvert the proposition which was suggested in argument by way of illustration, that if the State desired to purchase any number of school books to be delivered at once or in the future, or to build a state house or to let a contract for supplies for its benevolent institutions, that to let the contract to the lowest bidder and best bidder would be a very proper thing to do, although I apprehend if there was no fraud the State might go into the market and contract with whom it pleased, and its contracts would be valid and binding. In either case there would be no monopoly, but a simple case of bargain and sale as between two natural persons. But that is not this case. The State has no interest in the contracts nor in the subject matter of the contracts. After the requisition for the books upon the School-Book Company (which is a mere notice to it) by the superintendent of public instruction, the books are shipped to the county superintendents, and by them delivered to the trustees, by them sold and the money paid over to the county superintendents, and by them paid over to the School-Book Company. Neither the State nor its officers has any control over the books at any time or place, nor anything to do with the proceeds arising from sales, nor have the local officers any relations in any way with the State or its officers. If the local officers fail to do their duty, all rights of action for the failure accrue to the contractor. Until the books are sold they remain the property of the School-Book Company. If loss should occur by fire or otherwise, it would fall on the School-Book Company, unless, probably, if the trustee or county superintendent, from want of care, were to permit any of the books to be damaged or destroyed, in view of the extreme solicitude which the law has for the interests of the contractor, the loss would fall upon such officer, notwithstanding he is an involuntary agent of the School-Book Company.

But further in this connection, until the books are sold to the patrons of the school they have not been furnished to anyone. The School-Book Company has delivered them to the trustee for sale the same as the manufacturer delivers his wares to the middleman to dispose of to the customer. Under this law the trustee occupies the position of middleman between the School-Book Company and the patrons of the school. What is it, then, which the School-Book Company acquired by its so-called contract with the State? The privilege pure and simple, of supplying the common schools of the State with text-books, to the exclusion of every other person, natural or artificial. All other school-book publishers and dealers are cut off from furnishing books to be used in the schools. The patrons, as we have said, must purchase in the manner and from the dealer which under the law has been designated. The Slaughter House Cases, found in 88 U. S. 16 Wall, beginning with page 33 [21 L. ed. 894], sustained the Act of the Louisiana Legislature upon the one ground that the subject matter which the Act covered came within the police power of the State; and in these cases four out of the nine judges dissented on the ground that, in their judgment, the law was unconstitutional.

In the case of Butchers Union, S. H. & L. Co. v. Crescent City, L. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746 [28 L. ed. 585], the character of the law that had been sustained in the former cases was again before the supreme court, and it was held that the power of a State Legislature to make a contract which cannot be abrogated or modified does not extend to subjects affecting the public health and public morals, and that, although the law then in question had given exclusive rights and privileges to the Butchers' Union, Slaughter House & Livestock Landing Company for a period of twenty-five years, that the Legislature of Louisiana had power to abrogate or modify the rights and privileges thus granted.

In that case all of the judges concurred in the conclusion reached, but four out of nine adhered to their former views that the law was unconstitutional because it granted exclusive privileges.

It will hardly be conceded by the appellant or the Indiana School-Book Company that the law here in question may be repealed or modified by the Legislature so as to abrogate or modify the School-Book Company's privileges acquired under the law. Upon the other hand, the claim of the School-Book Company must be, and is, that its contract with the State is a valid and binding contract under which it has acquired valuable privileges which the Legislature cannot abrogate or modify, and that it has acquired the exclusive right to furnish the common schools with text-books for the period of five years; and if the contract extended over a period of fifty years the claim would be the same and would rest upon an equally solid foundation.

This position may well be assumed if the law in question is constitutional, and the contract or arrangement which has been entered into binding.

Authorities to support this claim or position are abundant, and among others is the case of New Orleans Gas Light Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. Co. 115 U. S. 650 [29 L. ed. 516], and the other cases in the same volume which immediately follow the case named. But those cases rest upon the ground that the party who obtains the privilege is acting in the capacity of an agent for the State, or has undertaken to perform a public duty or public service for the State, none of which has the Indiana School-Book Company undertaken or assumed. The State was not proposing, and has at no time proposed, to furnish the patrons of the common schools with text books, nor did it owe any duty in that direction; at least if it did, it has been a long neglected duty.

I do not say that the State might not, with great propriety, furnish school books to the patrons of the public schools, but what I do say is that it owes them no such duty.

The position, therefore, of the School-Book Company under its contract with the State is that of a private corporation engaged in a private business for private gain.

In Com. v. Bacon, 13 Bush, 210, 26 Am. Rep. 189, the court lays down the law upon this subject as I understand it to be. "It is the duty of the government to establish and maintain highways. Ferries are parts of highways, and the government may perform its duty in establishing and maintaining them through the agency of private individuals or corporations, and such agencies are representatives of the government and perform for it a part of its functions. And in consideration of the service thus performed for the public the government may prohibit altogether persons from keeping ferries and competing with those it has licensed. The establishment of public highways being a function of government, no person has a right to establish such a highway without the consent of the government, and hence, in prohibiting unlicensed persons from keeping a ferry, the government does not invade the right of even those who own the soil on both sides of the stream. The owner of the soil may, unless his land be regularly condemned for the purpose, prohibit any other person from using it as a landing for a ferry; this he may do because he is the owner of the soil. So the government, being charged with the duty of establishing and maintaining ferries, has the exclusive right to establish them, and may prohibit anyone it chooses from doing so, because the establishment of a ferry without the consent of the government is an invasion of its right, just as the use of the soil for a ferry landing without the consent of the owner would be an invasion of his right of property.

"The Burnham County Agricultural Society is a strictly private corporation; it owes no legal duty to the public; it may hold fairs or not as its managers may decide, and is as free from the influence or control of the government as a private individual, and cannot, therefore, enjoy any privileges which may not be enjoyed by an individual.

"The effect of the Act, then, is to restrict the right of one person to use and enjoy his property in a particular manner, that another may use his in that manner to greater profit than he could if each was left free to use his own as he pleased.

"In this country, where the right of the citizen to acquire, hold and enjoy property is guaranteed by the fundamental law, it would seem that the statement of the proposition is enough to refute it."

It was not and is not necessary for any publisher or dealer in school books to obtain a grant or license from the State to do business within the State. Any school-book publisher or dealer in school books may carry on his business in Indiana the same as may the manufacturer of furniture, cotton or woolen goods, paper or any other article or commodity. The exclusive privilege granted to the Indiana School-Book Company restricts other school-book publishers and dealers in the use and enjoyment of their property in a particular manner; that is to say, they are deprived of the privilege of dealing with the patrons of the schools and furnishing them school books for the use of their children in the schools; hence the School-Book Company is enabled to enjoy its property to a greater profit than it could expect for the monopoly which has been granted to it.

But I claim that it is plain to be understood from the opinion of the learned judge in New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. Co., supra, that, had there been at the time the grant was made such a constitutional provision as we have in our Constitution, in the Louisiana Constitution, the law creating the grant would have been held unconstitutional, and refer to what is said in the opinion, beginning on page 672 [524] of the volume; and I make the same claim for the case of Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens Gaslight Co. 115 U. S. 683 [29 L. ed. 510]. In that case the grant was upheld because the Kentucky Bill of Rights prohibited the granting of exclusive privileges except in consideration of public services, and the court held that the services to be performed in consideration of the grant were public services.

But our Constitution makes no exception. The provision is a sweeping one: "The General Assembly shall not grant to any citizen or class of citizens privileges or immunities which upon the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens." It is impossible for any other citizen, under the law in question, for five years, upon any terms, and especially upon the same terms, to furnish text-books to the patrons of the schools for use therein, even if he had for sale the same series of publications.

Suppose that any citizen or class of citizens were to offer to enter into a contract with the State upon the same terms as provided in the contract with the Indiana School-Book Company, and that his or their books be placed in the hands of the county superintendents or trustees for sale, could the State enter into any such contract or grant the same privileges under this law? Certainly not. See Citizens Gas & Min. Co. v. Elwood, 114 Ind. 832, 14 West. Rep. 92; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 709 [28 L. ed. 1147]; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 121 [32 L. ed. 625]; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26 [32 L. ed. 585].

But to return to the contract once more. I insist that if the law were unobjectionable on constitutional grounds, under its provisions no valid and binding contract could be made, and hence none has been made.

It is common law that without mutuality between the parties there can be no contract. There must be obligations on both sides or there is no enforceable contract. This is so well understood that I do not feel called upon to cite authorities.

Now, the contract in question is one to furnish school books, not to the State, but to the patrons of the schools. The contract, as we have already said, and which will not be controverted, is with the State and not with the patrons. The patrons are under no legal obligation to buy the books; they may be compelled to do so or keep their children out of the public schools; but this is a question of parental duty, and not a legal obligation.

The law expressly stipulates for the State that it assumes no legal liability. Then we inquire, Where is the legal obligation on the side of the State? In what does the mutuality of the contract consist? There is no legal obligation to the School-Book Company from anyone. But it may be said that the School-Book Company obtains the privilege of putting its books on sale to the patrons of its schools to the exclusion of any other person, and the services of the county superintendents and trustees to sell if anyone wishes to buy; but it is left, after all, discretionary with the State whether it will comply with its part of the engagement, and if it does not, it is expressly provided that it is not liable for such failure.

In the first place, under the law, the School-Book Company was required to enter into bond that if awarded the contract it would enter into a satisfactory contract; but the law does not provide that a bond shall be given for the performance of the contract. An action for its default in performing the conditions of the contract must be brought on the contract, against the School-Book Company. We inquire, Who is damaged by the default, and what the measure of damages? The State is not damaged, for it purchased no books from the company, and expressly stipulated against liability to the company. The patrons of the schools are not damaged, for the School-Book Company had no contract with them and they are under no obligations to purchase its books. And if it were possible to find one to whom the book company is bound to respond in case of its default in the performance of the contract I imagine that it would be a little troublesome to ascertain the measure of damages.

I am aware that there is a class of contracts where a valid contract may be entered into by one of the parties for the benefit of a third person, but the contract under consideration does not belong to that class. Here no obligation is entered into to perform any particular act or duty for the benefit of any third person.

But I further claim that if it is conceded that the contract is valid and enforceable, the rule cum onere does not apply to the county superintendents and trustees in performing the duties required of them by the law in question. Why do I make this assertion? For the reason that the duties which the law throws upon the county superintendents and trustees are not public duties. The law makes them merely the agents of the School-Book Company to dispose of its wares. As we have already said, the books are shipped to these officers direct from the contractor, and when sold the money is returned directly to it. The property belongs to the contractor until disposed of to the patrons of the schools. With the books and the business transaction which places them on the market and finally returns the proceeds to the owner the State nor the public have anything to do.

It is an anomaly to say that, while engaged in transacting the business of a private corporation solely for its private gain, the trustees and county superintendents are serving the people. They are the simple agents of the private corporation, and it is begging the question to assume that they are performing the duties of public officers.

This brings me to a consideration of the question of the right of the people in the several subdivisions of the State to manage the local details of their schools as they have a right to do in other local affairs.

Most certainly the public schools in which a majority of the children and youth of the State must begin and finish their education is not, of all local affairs, the one of least importance. When the territory now comprising our State was given a territorial government, and from that time down to the present, township and county subdivisions have existed. And from the year 1824 until the year 1852, the congressional townships had a corporate existence for school purposes; and from the year 1852 to the present, the civil townships of the State have been incorporated as school townships.

And during all this time the people of the school townships, whether congressional or civil townships, have controlled the local details of their common schools, and this included the books which should be used in the schools, as well as other matters, and never, until the law now under consideration, has the Legislature assumed to interfere with these local privileges.

The Act of 1877 organized a county board of education, with power to select and adopt the text-books which should be used in the schools of the county. This board was composed of the county superintendent, the trustees of the different townships, and the chairman of the board of trustees of each town and city in the county. In this board the people of every township, through their trustee, had a voice, and after the books were adopted any person or persons had a perfect right to go into the county and sell to the patrons of the schools any of the books adopted, and the patrons of the schools might purchase the books from whomsoever they could, for cash, on time or in any other manner.

In my judgment the Act in question deprives the people of the school townships of the State of an important local privilege or right, and on that ground ought not to be upheld. But as this question has so recently and thoroughly been gone over by this court, I do not desire to do more than call attention to what has been decided.

In State v. Denny, 118 Ind. 398, 4 L. R. A. 79, this court, by Coffey, J., said: "It is therefore perfectly apparent from the Constitution itself that it was framed with reference to then existing local governments of counties, towns, townships and cities. Did the people, then, in the adoption of the Constitution, surrender the right of local self-government which they at that time possessed? Judge Cooley, in the case above cited, said: 'The State may mould local institutions according to its views of policy or expediency; but local government is a matter of absolute right and the State cannot take it away.'"

It is true that § 1, art. 8, of the State Constitution, supra, made it the duty of the Legislature to create a general and uniform system of common schools, but it never was contemplated by the framers of the Constitution, and no such construction can reasonably be placed upon the said section, that the Legislature could or would assume to control the local affairs and details of the schools. The creation of a general system is one thing, and the control of such matters as pertain to that general system, and which are purely local to the people of the school townships is another and very different thing. Applying the principle as enunciated by Judge Cooley in the quotation above, the Legislature may mould the system, but the local government of the schools exists as an absolute right. The State may declare how the schools shall be governed, teachers elected and the branches to be taught therein, but the local control and management of the schools must be left with the people of the districts and townships, or their local representatives.

What would be thought of a law enacted by the Legislature appointing a state board of commissioners to take charge of the schools in all their details?

See the individual opinion in the case last above cited. State v. Denny, 118 Ind. 449, 4 L. R. A. 65, and Evansville v. State, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L. R. A. 93.

In Robinson v. Schenck, 103 Ind. 813, the court said: "It is possible, and only possible, to build up an efficient system by leaving local school matters under proper general laws to the people of the different localities. The Legislature very clearly realized the fact, and the law challenged is an expression of their judgment and that of the people, for it has stood unquestioned for more than eighteen years. We do not affirm that this long acquiescence in the law establishes its constitutionality, but we do affirm that it supplies a strong reason in support of our proposition that the only way in which a great and efficient common-school system can be successfully maintained is to intrust to the people of the localities, by general laws, the government of local school affairs. (The italics are my own.) The provision that the Legislature shall provide by law for a general and uniform system of common schools does not mean that the Legislature must, directly, and by statute, levy all taxes for each locality, nor that they shall prescribe rules for every school district in the State. Where the right of local government is conferred upon all school subdivisions upon the same terms, there is nothing special, nor is there any break in the line of uniformity. . . . It would be utterly impossible for the Legislature to do more than provide by law for a general and uniform system of common schools, for they could not prescribe the details for the government of each school district, for this would require them to determine the size of the school-houses, the character of the appliances and furniture, the quantity of fuel that should be consumed, the number that should be employed, and, indeed, to make provision for the purchase of the smallest things needed for use in the schools, down to the chalk used in the black-board exercises.

"The people never meant that the Legislature should undertake to do such an impracticable thing; all they meant was that the system should be general and uniform in the sense that its privileges and benefits should be extended upon the same terms and conditions to all the school districts of the State, and their meaning is well explained in their Constitution. When the Legislature, by a general law, left the local school government upon the same terms and conditions to all the school districts of the State of like character and conditions, they did provide by law for a general and uniform system, and have so obeyed the people."

This case clearly recognizes the right of local self-government in the control and management of the public schools, and agrees with what I have said already as to what is to be understood as a general school system under the Constitution, and is in line with the unbroken practical construction of the people of the State from the organization of the state government.

But, I inquire, if the present law can be upheld, why may not the Legislature provide by law that all school-houses which the districts may be called upon to build for the following period of five years or more should be let, through the state board of education, to the lowest and best bidder, and in the same way all chalk for blackboard exercises furnished to the patrons of the schools in the same way, and the school trustees required to superintend the building of the school-houses and the distribution of the chalk among the patrons for the benefit of the contractors? This would have the effect to make the school system more general and uniform.

In Evansville v. State, supra, I said, speaking for myself and not for the court, that practical construction was of very little consequence when what had been done was in violation of a plain constitutional provision, and I am of that opinion still.

But local control of the common schools by the people of the townships is in violation of no provision of the Constitution, but in harmony with the spirit and letter of that instrument.

From the year 1824 to the passage of the Act of 1889, the people of the districts and school townships have had unbroken control of their local school affairs, including the adoption and purchase of text books, without any claim by the Legislature that it had the power to deprive them of any of these privileges.

In the individual opinion to which we have referred it is said: "Continued and uniform exposition broken by this Act for the first time in the whole history of our State supports the views of a majority of the court upon the question of the right of the citizens of a political corporation, such as a county, township or city, to choose their own local officers. The essential and abiding principle of local self-government supports it. The rule that the people whose property is liable for municipal debts should choose those to whom they will intrust the management of their local affairs yields it support.

"The rule that the Constitution recognizes the principle that the people of a locality can govern themselves honestly and intelligently without the direct guardianship of the persons representing the State at large gives it support of no uncertain character."

With what force the foregoing language comes to the law in question, whereby the Legislature has assumed to appoint a board of commissioners, with power, not only to say to the people the particular series of text-books which their children shall carry to school, but from whom they shall purchase them, the price to be paid and the manner of payment!

The case of Hovey v. State, 119 Ind. 886, by a majority of the court was affirmed solely on the ground of practical construction in the appointment of trustees for the benevolent institutions, and yet there had been no such uniformity nor so long continued as has been the case with the people of the local school subdivisions in the local government of their schools, including the adoption and purchase of their text books.

My judgment is that the law is in violation of the Constitution, and that it is invalid for other reasons which I have stated.

For the reasons given, I dissent from the conclusion reached by a majority of the court.

Ellen WHITE, Appt.,

v.

CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS & PITTSBURGH
R. CO.

(....Ind....)

1. The building by a railroad company of a side track in a street along and upon which it has a right of way and has a single track in operation constitutes no additional burden upon property abutting upon the street for which damages may be recovered by its owner, where the statutes enabled the company to locate its tracks upon the street and to appropriate a right of way six rods wide, and it gave notice that its appropriation would be made "in as full and ample and perfect a manner as may be required" for railroad purposes, and it paid the assessed damages, which were duly accepted.

2. A judgment will not be reversed for error in a conclusion of law stated by the lower court if a proper judgment is rendered upon the facts found by it.

(February 6, 1890.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cass County in favor of defendant in an action to recover damages for the construction by defendant of a railroad track upon a public street in front of plaintiff's property. Affirmed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Messrs. Fansler & Shaffrey and Nelson & Myers for appellant.

Messrs. N. O. Ross and George E. Ross for appellee.

Olds, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee is the owner of a railroad running on and over Canal Street in the City of Logansport. Said street is sixty feet wide and the main track of said railroad as originally built and ever since maintained is located along the center of said street. Appellant is the owner of a lot abutting and fronting on the south side of said street upon which is situated a dwelling-house in which she resides, and her only means of ingress and egress to and from said lot is from said street.

After the construction of the main track of said railroad the defendant Company, without any permission of the owner of said lot, and without any proceedings to condemn the street for the use of said Company, except the original proceedings when the road was constructed, built a second track or side track along said street, along and upon the south half of said street, south of the main track, in front of the said plaintiff's lot and residence, and has for several years maintained and used the same.

The appellant brings this action for damages sustained by reason of the building and using of said extra or side track upon the south half of said street in front of her lot. She alleges the facts in her complaint and asks for damages sustained.

Issues were joined and a trial had by the court without the intervention of a jury, resulting in finding and judgment in favor of the defendant below, the appellee. Upon proper request the court found the facts specially and stated its conclusions of law. The appellant excepts to the conclusions of law as stated by the court; also moves for judgment in her favor on the facts found, which motion is overruled and the ruling assigned as error. The findings of facts and conclusions of law as stated by the court are as follows:

Findings of facts—The court having been requested by the parties to find the facts, with the conclusions of law thereon, with the view of excepting to the decision of the court upon the questions of law involved in the trial, finds the following facts, to wit:

First. The court finds that the plaintiff is the owner in fee simple of lot 4, of James A. Taylor's Addition to the City of Logansport, Cass County, Indiana; that she acquired title thereto on the 4th day of January, 1870, remotely through said Taylor, and has had possession thereof ever since, and up to the present time, and that said lot is a part of two lots, on the south side of Canal Street, and opposite lots 18 and 19, and was owned by said Taylor in fee simple during the months of June and July, 1859, and until after January, 1863.

Second. That on the 9th day of June, 1859, the Toledo, Logansport & Burlington Railroad Company filed in the office of the clerk of the Cass Circuit Court the instrument of appropriation, to wit:

To All Whom it May Concern, Take Notice:

The Toledo, Logansport & Burlington Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized in pursuance of the General Railroad Law of the State of Indiana, approved May 11, 1852, for the purpose of constructing, maintaining and operating a railroad within the State of Indiana, agreeable to its articles of association, has located the line and route of its said railroad over and across the lands and premises hereinafter mentioned and described, and that said Company intends to and does hereby, under and pursuant to the provisions of law, appropriate the rights, interests, lands and premises hereinafter described for the purpose of constructing, operating and maintaining its said railroad. Said Company not having agreed with the owners of the lands touching the damages which may be sustained by them, by reason of the construction of the same, or for the lands, interests and real estate thereby appropriated as aforesaid, to the end that appraisers may be appointed to assess said damages, if any may be by them sustained, does hereby file these articles of appropriation describing the interests and rights to be appropriated, to wit: (describing certain lands). Also in and through Canal Street in the City of Logansport, Cass County, Indiana, so far as said Company may be legally liable for damages to the owners of lots and parts of lots on either side of said street, who are as follows, to wit: James A. Taylor, as the owner of two lots on the south side of Canal Street, opposite lots 18 and 19, such appropriation to include the right of said Company to take materials for the construction and repair of said railroad at any point within fifty feet of the center of said railroad, except along said street, with the right of way over said tracts of land sufficient to enable said Company to construct and repair said road, and the right to conduct water by aqueducts, and the right to make drains and to have and to hold said rights, interests and privileges to the use of said Company so long as the same shall be required for the uses and purposes of said road, in as full and ample and perfect a manner as may be required for that purpose, —reference being had to the map and surveys of the engineers of said Company showing the line, route and location of said railroad, and to the certificate of location attached thereto, and being part thereof, filed in the office of the clerk of the Cass Circuit Court, for a more particular description of the said tracks and parcels of land so taken and rights and interests so appropriated by said Company for the purposes aforesaid.

In witness whereof, the said Company has caused these presents to be signed by their president, this 21st day of June, 1859.

D. M. Dunn, President.

A copy of the map and survey of the line and route of the location of said railroad is attached hereto as a part of said instrument of appropriation, and marked "A."

That on the 29th day of June, 1859, the foregoing instrument of appropriation was served on James A. Taylor, by the delivery to him of a copy thereof, and on the first day of July, 1859, the judge of the court of common pleas in vacation appointed three disinterested freeholders of said county appraisers, to assess the damages that said Taylor might sustain by reason of said appropriation. That afterwards, on the 4th day of July, 1859, said appraisers made their appraisal and filed it in the office of the clerk of said county, in which they gave and assessed in favor of said Taylor, as the damage he would sustain as the owner of said lots by such appropriation, the sum of $100, which sum was afterward, on the 10th day of October, 1859, paid to and accepted by him as and for his said damage.

Third. That during the years 1859 and 1860 said Toledo, Logansport & Burlington Railroad Company completed said railroad by building a single track along Canal Street, near the center of the street, so that cars could run over the same, and that it has been used and operated as a railroad ever since, and is now so used, and that the defendant is and has been since April 2, 1883, the owner of and operating the same as the remote vendee of said Toledo, Logansport & Burlington Railroad Company.

7 L. R. A.

Fourth. That the plat hereto attached, marked "B," is a correct representation of said railroad tracks of the defendant as used and operated on the 2d day of April, 1883, when it first commenced operating said road, and as it has remained ever since, through Canal Street in front of the plaintiff's property. That the lot marked "4" on the south side of Canal Street represents the plaintiff's lot, and so much of it as is marked with diagonal lines represents her dwelling thereon. That the north red line represents the original main track of said railroad, the south rail of which is twenty-nine feet north of the north line of the plaintiff's lot, and said Canal Street is sixty-six feet wide.

That the south red line represents a side track that was put in and constructed where it now is in the year 1871, by the remote grantors of the defendant, without other or further condemnation or appropriation proceedings than hereinbefore mentioned, and without the consent of the plaintiff, and she, at the time, made objections to the men engaged in the work, and it was extended from Third Street to a point nearly opposite the east line of lot number 21 as marked on said plat, the east end being designated by a small black mark or line at right angles with the red line. That in the year 1882, and before this defendant owned or had possession of said road, said south track was extended to the shops connected with said road, a distance of about one mile, and since that time has been used as a track for trains going east, and the north track for trains going west.

That the ends of the ties are fourteen feet and the south rail of the south track fifteen feet and two inches north of the north line of the plaintiff's lot, and that the distance between the center lines of the north and south tracks above mentioned is twelve feet and two inches.

Fifth. That at the time said side track was constructed in the year 1871, the Columbus, Chicago & Indiana Central Railway Company was the owner of said railroad.

That under an order and decree of foreclosure of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana said railroad, with all things thereto appertaining, was sold, and on the 21st day of February, 1883, was conveyed to William L. Scott, Charles J. Osborn and John S. Kennedy, who, on the 17th day of March of the same year, conveyed the same to the defendant; and that on the 2d day of April, 1883, the defendant took possession of said railroad and has operated it ever since, and has maintained, kept up and used said side track ever since.

Sixth. That the rails and ties of said side track are and have been ever since the 2d day of April, 1883, from six to seven inches above the grade and surface of said Canal Street in the front of plaintiff's property; and that by reason of the construction and maintenance of said side track the plaintiff has been interrupted in the use of said street, and access to her property through and across said street with any kind of wheeled vehicles has been made much more difficult and dangerous.

That ever since the construction of said railroad, or soon thereafter, telegraph poles were placed by the Western Union Telegraph Company and maintained along the outer edge of the sidewalk that passes in front of and adjoining the plaintiff's property and south of said second track on that side of the street, but none of the poles were placed in front of the plaintiff's premises on which the wires were held that were used in the operation of said railroad by the several companies operating said road ever since its completion in the year 1860.

Seventh. That the rental value of plaintiff's property, by reason of the foregoing facts, has been reduced in value since the 2d day of April, 1888, up to the 17th day of August, 1887, in the sum of $315, and she has sustained damages in the said sum of $315.

The court being sufficiently advised, does now conclude the law to be on the facts found in this cause as follows:

First. The plaintiff is not entitled to maintain an action for damages for a trespass. Her remedy, if any she has, is in an action for compensation by way of damages for the real estate occupied and used by the defendant for railroad purposes, or by having the damages assessed under the statutes relating to the assessment of damages for property taken under the right of eminent domain. She cannot maintain an action either for trespass or in ejectment or for an injunction.

Second. I find for the defendant that it is entitled to recover its costs.

The map referred to as "Exhibit A" in the findings is a map of the road as it was located for a distance beyond the city limits on either side, having a line designating the center of the right of way or road which ran along Canal Street on the outside of the platted lots of the city; two lines one on each side of the center, showing the width of said right of way, also showing the grades at various points. The map contains no statement of fact as to whether there was to be one track or a number of tracks, except that there was but the one track platted. The map marked "B" indicates the location of the lot, the railroad and shows the main track and side track and their relation and proximity to the lot owned by the appellant.

The findings of facts show that there were proceedings instituted to condemn the land to be used for the construction and building of the railroad, and that damages were assessed for the injury of the lot in question, then owned by one Taylor and afterwards purchased and now owned by the appellant. The primary and material question to be determined is as to whether the appellant has any right of action for damages accruing to her on account of the location and maintenance of the extra track or switch.

The Statute in regard to acquiring the right of way for the construction of railroads was in force as it now is at the time the railroad operated by the appellee was constructed. We quote a part of section 3903, defining the powers, rights and privileges of railroad companies. It provides: "Every such corporation shall possess the general power, and be subject to the liabilities and restrictions expressed in the special powers" following. The third specification grants the right "to purchase and by voluntary grants and donation receive and take and by its officers, engineers, surveyors and agents enter upon, and take possession of, hold and use all such lands and real estate and other property as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of its railroad, stations, depots and other accommodations necessary to accomplish the object for which the corporation is created, but not until the compensation be made therefor," etc.

The fourth specification grants the right "to lay out its road not exceeding six rods wide, and to construct the same; and for the purpose of cutting embankments and procuring stone and gravel, it may take as much more land, within the limits of its charter, in the manner provided hereinafter, as may be necessary for the proper construction and security of the road.

Fifth. To construct its road upon or across any stream or watercourse, road, highway, railroad or canal so as not to interfere with the free use of the same, which the route of its road shall intersect in such manner as to afford security for life and property; but the corporation shall restore the stream or watercourse, road or highway thus intersected to its former state, or in a sufficient manner not to unnecessarily impair the usefulness or injure its franchise.

Section 3907 provides for the appropriation of land for the use of the Company.

It is well settled that a street is a highway, and that the fee to the street is in the adjacent land owner, subject to an easement in the public (Cox v. Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. 48 Ind. 178; Indianapolis v. Croas, 7 Ind. 9); and that damages may be properly assessed in favor of the lot owner for the use of a street by a railroad company, and there can be no doubt but that the company may by proper proceedings have the damages assessed to an adjacent lot owner when the street is appropriated for the purpose of constructing a railroad along and over the street adjacent to the lot. The lot owner has an interest in land to be appropriated or used, and the company may have the damages assessed the same as if the appropriation was of a portion of the lot, and this proposition is not controverted by counsel in this case. The findings of facts show that an application was made in pursuance with the Statute to appropriate the property and due notice given, and the damages to the lot in question assessed and paid by the Company and accepted by the owner. The question is presented as to what rights the Railroad Company making such appropriation acquired in the street. The Statute authorizes the location of a railroad upon a street. It likewise authorizes the appropriation of a right of way for the construction of a railroad six rods in width and as much land in addition thereto as may be necessary for the construction and proper use and operation of the railroad. The application for appropriation in this case states that "such appropriation to include the right of said Company to take materials for such construction and repair of said railroad at any point within fifty feet of the center of said railroad except along said street, with the right of way over said tracts of land sufficient to enable said Company to construct and repair said road, and the right to conduct water by aqueducts, and the right to make drains and to have and to hold said rights, interests and privileges to the use of said Company so long as the same shall be required for the use and purposes of said road, in as full and ample and perfect a manner as may be required for that purpose;" and under this application damages resulting therefrom to the lot in question were assessed in favor of the owner and were by him accepted. By this appropriation the Railroad Company obtained the right to lay its track upon and use the street in question for the purpose of constructing and operating its railroad in as full and perfect manner as might be required for the purpose of operating the road.

In treating of the assessment of damages in Wood's Railway Law, vol. 2, pp. 897, 898, § 256, it is said: "The presumption is that every injury which, in judgment of law, would result to the other adjacent property of the owner from taking a part of his land for the construction of the road and from the use of it in a proper manner when constructed, was foreseen by the appraisers and included in their first estimate. The award made by the statutory tribunal is exhaustive, and the land owner cannot maintain an action for damages which should have been, but were not, assessed and allowed in that proceeding, even though he claimed them then and they were erroneously disallowed. His remedy for such error is by steps to review the award. When the appraisal of land damages was reduced below what it otherwise would have been, by the representations of the agents of the company that the road would be constructed in a particular manner, made at the time of the appraisal to the commissioners, and such representations were not fulfilled in the actual construction of the road, whereby the plaintiff sustained serious loss and injury, it was held that the adjudication of the commissioners was a merger of all previous negotiations upon the subject, and that no action could be maintained for the construction of the railway contrary to such representations, provided it was in a prudent and proper manner."

In the case of Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Smith, 111 Ill. 863, it was held that "where a person conveys a right of way on his land it will be conclusively presumed that all the damages to the balance of the land, past, present and future, were included in the consideration paid him for his conveyance, the same as an assessment of damages on a consideration would be presumed to embrace," and that a grant of a right of way "for all uses and purposes of the company, or in any way connected with the construction, preservation, occupation and enjoyment of said road," is broad enough to embrace all uses for railroad purposes, however much increased, and by any other companies authorized by law. It is further held that when a right of way is condemned for public use over a tract of land, the owner will be entitled to compensation not only for the value of the land taken, but also for all damages to the residue of the tract, past, present and future, which the public use may thereafter reasonably produce.

In Babcock v. Western R. Corp. 9 Met. 553, 43 Am. Dec. 411, it is held that a grant of power to accomplish any particular enterprise, especially one of a public nature, carries with it authority to do all that is necessary to effect the principal object.

7 I. R. A.

In Pierce on Railroads, p. 177, it is said: "The final award is a bar to an action for any injury which the appraisers could have legally estimated, irrespective of their action upon the claims for injury, or even their knowledge or ignorance of its existence. They are conclusively presumed to have performed their duty, except in a direct proceeding to set aside the award or on appeal."

The doctrine is well settled by the decisions of our own court that a claim for damages cannot be reviewed, and when damages are assessed for an injury to property resulting from a permanent improvement, or taken for public use, it bars all actions for future damages. See La Fayette v. Nagle, 12 West. Rep. 637, 113 Ind. 425, and authorities cited in that case.

In appropriation of a right of way or the location of a railroad along, upon and over a street or highway, the location and appropriation are made with a view of future use and occupancy by the railroad company to the full extent and purpose as the future operation and business of the company may demand. It gives to the company, as against the property owners affected thereby, the right to use such right of way or street or highway upon which the road is located, a full and complete right to use the same for railroad purposes in as full and ample a manner as the necessity of the company may demand. It is manifest when the road is located that it cannot be successfully operated with but one line of track, without any turn-outs or switches. It is likewise evident that with the future development and improvement of the country along the line of the road the business of the road will increase, and with such increase of business a necessity will arise for additional tracks and switches. When proceedings to appropriate a right of way and for the assessment of damages sustained by property owners along the right of way or abutting upon a street upon which the proposed road is to be located are resorted to, future necessity as well as the present needs of the company are conclusively presumed to be taken into consideration, and when damages are assessed it includes all damages resulting from the construction and from all necessary and proper use of the right of way, road, street or highway by the railroad company for railroad purposes. This would not include damages resulting from the negligent use of a street or highway by the company or for an unnecessary change of an established grade of a street or negligent or unnecessary obstruction of the same, but it does include all damages resulting to the property owner from the legitimate and necessary use of the same for railroad purposes, including the right to lay necessary additional tracks or side tracks. That this is the true rule to apply in such cases we think there can be no doubt, and such rule is, as we believe, supported by the weight of authority. It was certainly not contemplated that after a company had condemned a right of way for railroad purposes, in no way limiting the use to which the same should be put in the future, but stipulating in the instrument of appropriation that it was to be in as full and ample and perfect a manner as may be required for railroad purposes, that it is necessary as often as the future business and necessity of the company demands an additional switch or even an additional track from one station to another, for the company to file an additional instrument of appropriation and have the additional damages assessed resulting to the property abutting the right of way or street along where such additional track or switch is to be located by reason of its construction; and we think there can be no difference between the rights of a land owner abutting on the right of way and abutting on the street in cases where damages have been assessed. In such case damages have been assessed for the necessary use of the same for railroad purposes.

We have not set out the complaint in full in this case. We do not deem it necessary. The complaint is upon the theory that the appellant is entitled to damages by reason of the location of the side-track or switch along and upon said street, on the ground that it is an additional burden not included in the original appropriation, and, taking the theory we do of the law, there can be no recovery on such ground. The facts found show the location of the road, instruments of appropriation filed and damages assessed for the injury to the lot in question and paid and accepted by the then owner; that the appellee has succeeded to all the rights of the original owners of the road.

The court rendered a proper judgment on the facts found, and a judgment will not be reversed for error in a conclusion of law stated if a proper judgment is rendered on the facts found, as such error is harmless.

Counsel have discussed at length the remedy in case the side track constituted an additional burden for which the owner ought to recover damage; but, as we held it constitutes no additional burden for which damages may be recovered, we are not called upon to decide as to what is the proper remedy. There being no wrong, there is no remedy.

If the complaint alleged the unlawful construction and maintenance of the side track in an improper manner, unnecessarily obstructing the street, it would present a different question.

The court having rendered a proper judgment on the facts found, there is no error for which the judgment should be reversed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

A petition for rehearing was subsequently filed and, after consideration, on February 26, 1890, Olds, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Counsel for appellant insist that the court misconstrued the theory of the complaint. In this we think they are mistaken. The complaint charges that "upon the 2d day of April, 1883, and ever since, the defendant has wrongfully, unlawfully and without right, kept up and maintained a second additional track in the center of the south half of said Canal Street," etc. Then it alleges that a portion of the ties, and all of the rails, are above ground, which second railroad track has been so kept up and maintained, etc. Then it alleges the use of the track for running trains of cars, and standing engines upon it, obstructing the street, making it impossible to cross the street for many hours without crawling under the cars so wrongfully kept upon the track; that by reason of the running of engines and trains of cars wrongfully, as aforesaid, upon said second track, so wrongfully maintained, as aforesaid, by the defendant, the plaintiff's said house is rendered grimy and dirty by the dust raised by the defendant's engines and cars, and the smoke which exhales from said engines penetrates into her said house, to her great damage, etc. There is no allegation in the complaint that the running of engines and cars upon said second track, and allowing them to stand upon the same, are not within the ordinary and necessary use of the road. There is no allegation that the second track was improperly constructed. Taking the complaint as a whole, there is but one construction which can reasonably be placed upon it, and that is the one we placed upon it in the original opinion; that it proceeds upon the theory that the plaintiff is entitled to damages by reason of the location of the second track along and upon said street, on the grounds that it is an additional burden, not included within the original appropriation, and that the second track is unlawfully placed upon the street; and it does not proceed upon the theory that the second track is lawfully upon the street, but improperly constructed, and an unlawful use made of the track. Besides, the case was argued upon the same theory on which it was decided. Counsel for appellant, in their original brief, stating the theory of the case, say, "that the appellee had for a number of years rightfully maintained a single track of its road through the center of said street; that ever since the year 1883 the appellee has unlawfully, and without right, kept and maintained an additional track in the center of the south half of said street, in front of and adjacent to the plaintiff's lot and dwelling-house."

It is further stated in the brief that the first question presented is, "Can the plaintiff maintain this action for damages caused by the defendant in using the entire south side of the street in front of plaintiff's lot, with a second or additional railroad track, without further proceedings to have her damages assessed?" "Does the fact that the appellee or its grantors caused damages to be assessed for the right to lay and maintain a single track along the center of the street give it the right to lay additional tracks?" These statements from the original brief of counsel show conclusively that counsel took the same theory of the question presented in the case as did the court in rendering its decision; and it comes in bad grace now for counsel to change base, and insist upon another theory on petition for rehearing, after a suggestion in the decision that the complaint might have been so formed as to present a different question.

It is suggested that we ought to decide upon the question of limitation. Having decided that the plaintiff cannot maintain this action at all, there is no question of limitation to be passed upon. Counsel, in effect, ask the court to pass upon the question as to when some other form of an action would be barred by the Statute of Limitations. This we cannot do.

The petition for rehearing is overruled.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

LAFLIN &amp; RAND POWDER CO.,

Appt.,

v.

Mary TEARNEY.

(.....Ill.....)

1. Instruction to find for the plaintiff if the jury find from the evidence that plaintiff has made out her case as laid in her declaration is not erroneous where the declaration states a good cause of action.
2. A powder magazine so situated that it is liable to inflict serious injury upon the person or property of a person residing near by in case of an explosion is a private nuisance, and liability for such injury is not avoided by care or lack of negligence in keeping the powder.
3. It is not necessary to use the word "nuisance" in a declaration for damages for the maintenance thereof if the facts alleged constitute a nuisance.
4. The fact that an explosion of a magazine of gunpowder destroyed buildings of another shows that keeping the gunpowder, considered with reference to "the locality, the quantity and the surrounding circumstances," constituted a nuisance per se.
5. Damage caused by the explosion of a powder magazine which was located upon a lot smaller than that required by an ordinance is caused by violation of the ordinance.
6. The risk of injury by an explosion of a powder magazine is not assumed by the owner of premises by reason of the fact that other powder magazines were in the neighborhood when the lot was purchased and the buildings erected, and that in one of the other powder companies the owner's husband was a stockholder, and that she had leased land to other companies for storing powder, where neither she nor her husband had ever been employed by, or had relations of any kind with, the owner of the magazine which exploded.
7. Nuisances should be removed, as a city extends, to vacant grounds beyond the immediate neighborhood of the residences of the citizens.

(January 21, 1890.)*

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Superior Court for Cook County in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages resulting to plaintiff's property from the explosion of defendant's powder magazine. Affirmed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Messrs. Mills & Ingham and E. F. Runyan, for appellant:

Where it is sought to fix a liability for damage based upon the violation of an ordinance, it must appear that the violation of the ordinance was the cause of the damage.

*A decision was originally reached in this case reversing the judgment of the appellate court, the opinion being handed down May 18, 1889. On October 4, 1889, a rehearing was granted and after argument the opposite decision was reached and the opinion given herewith delivered. The former opinion is therefore of no importance and is consequently omitted. [Rep.]

Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Thompson, 15 Ill. App. 118; Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. McKean, 40 Ill. 218; Quincy, A. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wellhoener, 72 Ill. 60; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Tulerweiler, 16 Ill. App. 197; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Jenuine, Id. 213; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Wallace, 110 Ill. 117; St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. Manly, 58 Ill. 300; Kepperly v. Ramaden, 83 Ill. 358; Sutton v. Wanawatawa, 29 Wis. 21.

A party is not to be held responsible for injuries which could not reasonably have been foreseen or expected as the result of his misconduct.

Phillips v. Dickerson, 85 Ill. 11; Sharp v. Powell, L. R. 7 C. P. 253, 2 Moak, Eng. Rep. 567.

No man can maintain an action for a wrong where he has consented to the act which occasions his loss.

Broom, Legal Max. 265; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Larmon, 87 Ill. 68; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Pennell, 94 Ill. 454.

One purchasing land takes it subject to all drawbacks existing at the time of the purchase.

Elgin v. Welch, 16 Ill. App. 487; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Hunter, 50 Ill. 325; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1009.

Mr. William H. Barnum, for appellee:

The defendant was charged with wrongfully maintaining a dangerous private nuisance which injured and damaged the plaintiff by destroying her building; and this being so, no charge of negligence in maintaining such nuisance was necessary, since no amount of care exercised in and about maintaining it could save the defendant from liability.

Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 580; Weir's App. 74 Pa. 280; Wood, Nuis. §§115, 130, 133; Hay v. Cohoes Co. 2 N. Y. 159; Tremain v. Cohoes Co. 2 N. Y. 163; Cahill v. Eastman, 18 Minn. 324.

Every person who for his own profit or advantage brings upon his premises, and collects and keeps there, anything which, if it escapes, will do damage to another, is liable for all the consequences of his acts, and is bound at his peril to confine it and keep it upon his own premises.

Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1 Exch. 265.

No degree of care or skill will save him from liability; and this, even though the promoting cause of injury be the action of the elements.

Plintz v. Augusta, 47 Ga. 263; Montgomery v. Fleming, 2 Stuart, 519.

The averment of the violated ordinance makes the second-count charge a public as well as a private nuisance.

Kepperly v. Ramaden, 83 Ill. 358.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on the case, brought in the Superior Court of Cook County by the appellee against the appellant Company; to recover damages to the dwelling, barn and other out-houses upon the premises of appellee, resulting from the explosion of a powder magazine upon the premises of appellant. The buildings of the plaintiff and the powder magazine in question were located upon a street called "Archer Avenue," in the Town of Lake, in the outskirts of the City of Chicago, in Cook County. Verdict and judgment in the trial court were in favor of the plaintiff, and such judgment, having been affirmed by the appellate court, is brought here from the latter court by appeal.

The first instruction given for the plaintiff is as follows: "If the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff has made out her case as laid in her declaration, then the jury must find for the plaintiff." Defendant took exception to the giving of this instruction. We have held that such an instruction does not make the jury the judges of the effect of the averments of the declaration, but merely empowers them to determine whether the proof introduced sustains the issues made by the pleadings in the case. Ohio & M. E. Co. v. Porter, 92 Ill. 437; Pennsylvania Co. v. Marshall, 119 Ill. 399, 7 West. Rep. 445.

The declaration was not demurred to. After the plaintiff had closed her testimony, the defendant moved that the jury be directed to return a verdict in favor of the defendant, which motion was overruled, and exception was taken. After the motion for new trial was overruled, defendant also moved in arrest of judgment, which latter motion being overruled, exception was entered.

It is claimed by the appellant that the declaration does not set out a cause of action. The first objection made to the declaration is that it does not charge the defendant with negligence. The objection is not well taken. The powder magazine kept by the defendant upon its premises was so situated with reference to the dwelling-house of the plaintiff that it was liable to inflict serious injury upon her person or her property in case of an explosion. It was a private nuisance, and therefore the defendant was liable, whether the powder was carefully kept or not. As a general rule the question of care or want of care is not involved in an action for injuries resulting from a nuisance. If actual injury results from the keeping of gunpowder, the person keeping it will be liable therefor, even though the explosion is not chargeable to his personal negligence. 1 Wood, Nuis. §§ 73, 115, 130, 142; Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 579; Cheatham v. Shearon, 1 Swan, 213; Stout v. McAdams, 3 Ill. 67; Ottawa Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Thompson, 39 Ill. 600; Nevins v. Peoria, 41 Ill. 502; Cooper v. Randall, 53 Ill. 24; Myers v. Malcolm, 6 Ill. 292; Hay v. Cohoes Co. 2 N. Y. 159; Phinisy v. Augusta, 47 Ga. 263; Burton v. McClellan, 8 Ill. 434; Wier's App. 74 Pa. 230.

The second objection to the declaration is that it does not specifically aver the powder magazine to be a nuisance. It was not necessary to use the word "nuisance," if the facts alleged constituted a nuisance. The declaration avers that it was the duty of the defendant to so use its premises as not to jeopardize the buildings of the plaintiff, and not to store upon its premises any dangerous substance whereby plaintiff's property might be destroyed in case of an explosion; that the defendant did keep upon its premises a magazine of gunpowder, dynamite, etc., and stored therein a large amount of gunpowder, dynamite, etc.; that the gunpowder, dynamite, etc., so kept upon said premises, exploded; and that by means of such explosion "the material of which such magazine was constructed was then and there driven with great force and violence upon and against the property of the plaintiff, hereinbefore described," and that "the following property of the plaintiff was by means of such explosion, struck by flying missiles, rocks and stones, and was wrecked and torn by means of the concussion of the air, then and there caused by said explosion, and was totally destroyed and lost, and was of great value, to wit: one two-story frame dwelling," etc.

A private nuisance is defined to be "anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements or hereditaments of another." 3 Bl. Com. 216.

Any unwarrantable, unreasonable or unlawful use by a person of his own property, real or personal, to the injury of another, comes within the definition stated, and renders the owner or possessor liable for all damages arising from such use. Heeg v. Licht, supra.

The averments of the declaration bring the present case within the definition thus quoted. The fact that the magazine exploded shows that it was dangerous. The fact that the explosion destroyed plaintiff's buildings shows that the keeping of gunpowder in the magazine, considered with reference to "the locality, the quantity and the surrounding circumstances," constituted a nuisance per se. Heeg v. Licht, supra; Wood, Nuis. § 142.

The declaration contains two counts. The second count, in addition to the averments of the first, as above set forth, further avers that there was an ordinance in the Town of Lake ordaining that "no powder magazine or place for storing or keeping gunpowder or other explosive material shall be kept or maintained within the town: provided, however, the provisions of this section shall not be held or construed to apply," etc., to any magazine located upon a lot of a certain size and area; and that the defendant's magazine was located upon a lot of a smaller size than that required by the ordinance. It is claimed by the defendant that the injury to the plaintiff's property was not caused by the violation of this ordinance, and therefore that such violation imposes no liability upon the defendant. We do not concur in this view. If the magazine had not been where it was, the explosion would not have taken place, and the injury to plaintiff's property would not have resulted. The ordinance absolutely prohibited any powder magazine from being kept within the town, unless the lot upon which it was located should be of a certain size. The defendant kept its magazine within the town upon a smaller lot than the law required. Its magazine was in the town in violation of the law. The keeping of gunpowder in the town was an illegal act. "If an illegal act be done, the party doing or causing the act to be done is responsible for all consequences resulting from the act." Burton v. McClellan, supra.

The cases referred to by counsel as holding a contrary doctrine have no application here. In those cases it is held that, where the plaintiff's right of recovery depends upon his own exercise of due care, as well as upon the defendant's negligence, the failure of the defendant to comply with some statutory requirement, such as ringing a bell, or blowing a whistle, or erecting a sign-board, will not of itself authorize a recovery, in the absence of such care on the part of the plaintiff. There the injury is attributable to the plaintiff's want of ordinary care, and the defendant's neglect of a statutory requirement cannot be set up as an excuse. Here there is no question of the exercise of care by the plaintiff, nor is it a mere matter of non-feasance on the part of the defendant. In keeping a powder magazine in the town without complying with the condition named in the ordinance, the defendant was guilty of malfeasance. Its offense is similar to that of bringing diseased cattle into the State in violation of the Act of the Legislature on that subject, as discussed in Somerleville v. Marks, 58 Ill. 371, and Sangamon Distilling Co. v. Young, 77 Ill. 197.

The appellant complains of the refusal of the court to instruct the jury that there could be no recovery if they should find from the evidence that there were other powder magazines in the neighborhood where plaintiff lived; that such magazines were there when plaintiff bought her lot and erected her buildings; that her husband had been employed in the powder business; that she bought her property in order that her husband might be near the magazines; that she bought said property after the location and erection of defendant's magazine; that her husband had been a stockholder in one of the powder companies; and that she had leased some of her own land to powder companies for the purpose of storing powder thereon. It is claimed that, if the foregoing facts were found to be true, the plaintiff assumed the risk of being injured by the explosion of defendant's magazine. If a servant enters the employment of his master knowing it to be dangerous and unsafe, he assumes the risks attendant upon such employment, and waives all claim for damages against his employer in case of injury. In such cases the risks are a part of the contract of service. 2 Thomp. Neg. 1008.

But in the present case it is not pretended that either the plaintiff or her husband had ever been employed by the defendant, or had ever had any interest in defendant's powder magazine or business, or that there had ever been any relations of any kind between her husband and the defendant.

In Cooper v. Randall, 53 Ill. 24, which was an action to recover damages for the erection, on a lot adjacent to plaintiff's dwelling-house, of a flouring-mill, which threw chaff, dust, smut and dirt into plaintiff's house, the defendants sought to prove that another house in the same neighborhood, owned and rented by the plaintiff, was a disreputable house. The evidence was held to be inadmissible, because wholly foreign to the issue. "The issue was whether the mill was an injury to this property, and no light could be shed upon that question by evidence in regard to the occupancy of another house in the neighborhood."

In Wier's App., 74 Pa. 220, supra, it was said: "Carrying on an offensive trade for any number of years in a place remote from buildings and public roads does not entitle the owner to continue it in the same place after houses have been built and roads laid out in the neighborhood, to the occupants of which, and travelers upon which, it is a nuisance. As the city extends, such nuisances should be removed to the vacant grounds beyond the immediate neighborhood of the residences of the citizens. This public policy, as well as the health and comfort of the population of the city, demand."

We do not think that there was any error in the refusal of the instruction last referred to. The judgment of the Appellate Court is affirmed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS.

S. F. SMITHERS

v.

A. JUNKER.

(41 Fed. Rep. 101.)

A note for value received promising to pay a certain sum at the maker's convenience and upon this express condition, that" he is "to be the sole judge of such convenience and time of payment," may be enforced by an action after the expiration of a reasonable time on demand and refusal of payment. It does not give the maker the sole right to say when it would suit his convenience to pay it.

(December, 1889.)

ACTION upon a promissory note. On demurrer to the declaration. Overruled.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Mr. Harvey H. Anderson for defendant in support of the demurrer.

Mr. B. W. Wilson for plaintiff, contra.

Gresham, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

7 L. R. A

The first, second and third counts are upon a written instrument, which is set out as follows:

Chicago, November 1, 1883.

For value received I promise to pay to S. F. Smithers two thousand and forty-eight and 25-100 dollars, payable at my convenience, and upon this express condition, that I am to be the sole judge of such convenience and time of payment.

A. Junker.

It is averred that, after a reasonable time had elapsed, the plaintiff demanded payment, which was refused by the defendant. The defendant's promise was to pay the money in consideration of something of value received from the plaintiff. If what the defendant received was a mere gift, and it was not contemplated by the parties that the instrument was to be a binding obligation, why was it executed? Its execution is evidence that the plaintiff expected an equivalent for what the defendant received, and that the latter understood he was bound to pay the sum of money specified, not immediately or on any certain day, but within a reasonable time, to be determined by himself.

It was not contemplated, however, that the money should become due only at the pleasure of the defendant, without regard to lapse of time or the rights of the plaintiff. The beginning of the instrument imports an obligation to pay a specific sum of money, and the succeeding language should not be construed to destroy that obligation. If the defendant was given the sole right to say when it would suit his convenience to pay the debt, he might decide that he would never pay it, which would not be a reasonable or honest exercise of his judgment as to time of payment. The instrument was executed on November 1, 1883, and after the lapse of more than five years payment was demanded and the debt became due. Such contracts should be construed liberally, in favor of payees. Lewis v. Tipton, 10 Ohio St. 88; Works v. Hershey, 35 Iowa, 840; Ramot v. Schotenfels, 15 Iowa, 457; Kincaid v. Higgins, 1 Bibb, 896.

Demurrer overruled.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

SUCCESSION OF Joseph LORENZ.

(....La. Ann....)

- *1. In a proceeding taken to put heirs in possession of an estate an issue must be joined, as in other civil matters, with the administrator in possession, and proof must be taken and judgment rendered contradictorily, recognizing their capacity.
2. Judgments of foreign countries must be clothed with all the forms required to prove their authenticity in the country in which they are pronounced. Otherwise, copies of the same will not be considered authentic, and cannot be admitted in evidence in the tribunals of this State.
3. What purports to be the exemplification of a record in the Imperial Royal District Court of Findland, in the Province of Bohemia, in the Empire of Austria, which does not contain intrinsic evidence of a judgment or decree of that court, and which is not shown by extrinsic evidence to have been in the form of a judgment or decree of such court, cannot be admitted in evidence in our court as that of such a judgment or decree.

(December 16, 1889.)

APPPEAL by E. von Meysenburg, petitioner, from a judgment of the Civil District Court, Parish of Orleans, in favor of the administrator in a proceeding instituted by petitioner to have certain nonresident persons recognized as heirs of Joseph Lorenz, deceased, and put in possession of his estate. Affirmed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Mr. Augustus Bernau, for appellant:

The evidence was admissible and conclusive. Glover v. Doty, 1 Rob. (La.) 130.

Mr. Gus. A. Breaux, for appellee:

A judgment recognizing heirs and sending them in possession is one that must be rendered on issue joined and competent evidence, as any other judgment.

Code Prac. art. 1000 et seq.; Civil Code, art. 1183; Calivell v. Glenn, 6 Rob. (La.) 10.

When a deposition is taken in another State or foreign country to be used in a court of this State, the proceedings are those of that court, and must conform to our statutes.

Commandeur v. Russell, 5 Mart. N. S. 460.

A judgment of a foreign court must be rendered upon citation or voluntary appearance, or it is without effect.

Hennen's Dig. Judgment, 13, 2, p. 748.

Watkins, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The deceased, Joseph Lorenz, formerly a citizen of Findland, Bohemia, a province of the Austrian Empire, died in New Orleans on the 17th of November, 1887, intestate, leaving a succession which consisted exclusively of cash and movables. It was placed under an administration by the public administrator, there being no known heirs of the deceased present or represented; and when his gestion closed there was a balance of $2,722.18 shown to be on hand by the final account of December 19, 1887.

*Head notes by WATKINS, J.

7 L. R. A.

The present proceeding was instituted by E. von Meysenburg, consul general of Austria, resident of said city, as the agent of certain persons residing in Findland, Bohemia, to have them recognized, and put in possession, as the heirs of said estate. It was originally begun by rule, but it was dismissed by the court as of nonsuit, and this one was commenced, by citation to the public administrator, in lieu thereof. The answer is a general denial, coupled with an averment that the parties named are not the heirs of Joseph Lorenz, deceased. On the trial, counsel for the petitioner offered to file in evidence the procuration of the consul-general, along with what are alleged to be exemplifications from the records of a certain court in Bohemia, Austria, whereby the petitioning principals were duly recognized as the collateral kindred of the deceased, and as such entitled to inherit his estate. These documents are written in the German language, and are brought up in the original annexed to the record, and it also contains a translation into English. All of these were objected to as evidence, on the grounds, "that the proceedings offered cannot stand as evidence for the decree which is asked for herein, to recognize certain heirs; that said judgment of court has not by any proceeding whatever been recognized as the judgment of a foreign court; that the proceeding is an ex parte proceeding, which is not binding upon the public administrator, in a proceeding against him." These objections were sustained by the judge a quo, and the testimony rejected; and it was brought up, annexed to a bill of exceptions, so that, in the event of an adverse ruling in this court on the question of its admissibility, we could examine it as applicable to the merits, and decide the issues involved.

The contention of the counsel for the public administrator is that in a proceeding taken to send heirs into possession of an estate an issue must be joined, as in other civil matters, before judgment can be rendered; that such proceeding must be conducted contradictorily; and that no testimony can be admitted on the trial, over objection, which has been taken ex parte. To put the defendant's view more tersely, we quote from his brief, at page 2, viz.: "If the decedent had died in Austria, and an administrator or officer . . . had been appointed under its laws, and the claimants herein had then proceeded contradictorily, to have themselves adjudged heirs, upon such a record the court of probate here, in ancillary proceedings, would have admitted the proceedings, and held itself bound by the judgment; but such is not the instant case. There was no succession in Austria, but in independent proceedings, ex parte merely, the petitioners obtained an order, not a judgment, which they say is binding."

This objection raises a question as to what effect is to be given to the proceedings of the Austrian court; as to whether it presents, in effect, any judgment or decree on the question of the heirship of the claimants. It is a requirement of our law that "when the heirs, . . . having a right to a succession, present themselves, or send their powers of attorney to claim it, they are bound to cause themselves to be recognized as such, and shall be put in possession by the judge of the place where the succession is opened, after having cited the curator who has been appointed for the succession." Rev. Civil Code, art. 1198.

Code Prac., art. 1000, is couched in like terms. It is elementary that the form and effect of actions are governed by the law of the place where they are brought. Id. art. 18.

It has been held, invariably, that in such matters heirs must proceed by suit (Caldwell v. Glenn, 6 Rob. (La.) 9), and that ex parte proceedings for the recognition of heirs bind neither creditors nor third persons. Dalton v. Wickliffe, 85 La. Ann. 355; Succession of Lamp-ton, Id. 418; Succession of Charnbury, 84 La. Ann. 21.

Our law further provides that the applicants "shall file along with their petition all such proofs as may go in support of it, to the end that the curator . . . may be made acquainted with them." Code Prac. art. 1001.

It further provides that "if, from the examination of the testimony produced in support of the prayer, the judge discovers that the petitioners are entitled to the succession, he shall put them in possession of it." Art. 1003.

It is plain that the question of the competency of the evidence is one for the court a quo, and that it is authorized to judge of the sufficiency of the proofs offered in support of the pretensions set up by persons alleging themselves to be heirs to an estate under its jurisdiction; and it was the duty of the administrator to require strict legal proof of same. It is true that our law provides that "when the judgments have been rendered in foreign countries the copies presented shall be considered authentic, and admitted in evidence in the tribunals of this State, if they are clothed with all the forms required to prove their authenticity in the countries where they are pronounced." Code Prac. art. 753. (Italics are ours.)

Foreign judgments have frequently been given effect by the decrees of our courts (Brookham v. Turner, 16 La. 424; Jones v. Jamison, 15 La. Ann. 85; Rowand v. Jarvis, 5 La. Ann. 43; West Feliciana R. Co. v. Thornton, 12 La. Ann. 786; State v. Orleans R. Co. 38 La. Ann. 818); but, in our conception, what is presented to us as a judgment of the Imperial Royal District Court of Findland, in the Province of Bohemia, in the Empire of Austria, is not clothed with all the forms requisite to prove its authenticity as such in that country. It contains no intrinsic evidence of a decree or judgment of that court; and no extrinsic evidence was offered in the court below that the forms of law required in that country had been pursued, and that such decree—if, indeed, it be one—legally fixed the status of the claimants there. While it is perfectly true that the claimants are Austrian subjects, and are therefore amenable to the laws of that empire, and within the jurisdiction of the courts of that country ratione personae, it is quite apparent that the res, i. e., the succession of Joseph Lorenz, was not, and hence there was nothing within its control which could make its decrees effective, ratione materiae.

A careful examination of the record offered in evidence has satisfied us that, at most, the proceeding was ex parte, and the hearing was an extrajudicial one, and had for its object the taking of the testimony of certain witnesses, who voluntarily appeared before the judge and gave in their evidence, in order that it might be attached to a power of attorney to be executed in favor of, and forwarded to, the Austrian consul at New Orleans. In effect, this was merely a commission to take testimony, before an Austrian judge, of certain persons residing in that empire, and which has no force and effect whatever as a judgment of a court in that country.

It was the duty of plaintiffs to have obtained a commission from the court in which the suit for the recognition of the heirs was pending to take the testimony of witnesses in Findland, Bohemia, on which they relied. The evidence offered was correctly rejected.

Judgment affirmed.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

Benjamin J. BALDWIN, Appt.,
v.
LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. CO.

(....Ala....)

The State under its police power may require railroad employees to be examined by a competent board constituted by state authority, as to their fitness for their service.
7 L. R. A.

ice, and impose upon the railroad companies the reasonable expense of such examination, and such imposition will not deprive the companies of property without due process of law; but the expense imposed on any company must be restricted to the examination of persons who are about to be, or are at any time, actually employed by it, and as to whom examinations are compulsory.

(Stone, Ch. J., and Somerville, J., dissent.)

(December 10, 1899.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the City Court of Montgomery, in favor of defendant in an action to recover a statutory fee alleged to be due plaintiff as a duly authorized medical examiner for service rendered in examining defendant's employes for color blindness. Reversed.

The action was brought to recover the sum of $1,900 for services rendered by plaintiff for defendant in the examination of defendant's employes for color blindness, and was commenced October 8, 1887. Plaintiff was one of the medical examiners appointed under the provisions of the Act of February 28, 1887, entitled "An Act for the Protection of the Traveling Public against Accidents Caused by Color Blindness and Defective Vision" (Sess. Acts 1886-87, p. 87). He sued to recover the fees prescribed and allowed by section 3 of that Act. The complaint contained a special count only alleging plaintiff's appointment as one of the medical examiners, the performance of services by him in the examination of the defendant's employes, and the defendant's refusal to pay the specified fees on demand. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that the statutory provision was unconstitutional and void. The demurrer was overruled and it filed a special plea denying its liability for the fees claimed by the plaintiff on the same ground. Plaintiff demurred to this plea, the court sustained the demurrer, the defendant declined to plead over, and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, and defendant brought the case to this court for review. After argument a decision was reached on February 6, 1889, in which the judgment below was reversed, Stone, Ch. J., and Somerville, J., holding the Act unconstitutional, and Clopton, J., dissenting from that decision, but concurring in the reversal on other grounds. The case was remanded to the lower court where it was tried a second time and the demurrer to the complaint was sustained on account of the unconstitutionality of the Act. Thereupon plaintiff appealed to this court. In the mean time another judge had been added to the supreme bench, and the new judge concurred in the opinion of Clopton, J., the law being that on a second appeal the court must decide the case according to what in its opinion is then the law without reference to the former decision in the same case. The Act increasing the number of judges to four provided that whenever the four judges shall be equally divided in a case they should certify the fact to the governor, who should then appoint a member of the bar of the supreme court to sit with them and determine the case. The judges in the case being equally divided, the court certified its division to the governor, and he appointed William C. Ward as fifth judge in the case. Mr. Ward announced his concurrence in the opinion of Clopton, J., which was rendered on the former appeal, and that opinion therefore became the law of the case.

The other material facts appear in the opinions.

Messrs. Tompkins, London & Troy, for appellant:

The law in question is not contrary to either the letter or spirit of our Constitution; it is an exercise of a power given to enable the State to discharge its highest duty, and tends to prevent crime and suffering.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 201, 202; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140. See Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205 (33 L. ed. 107); Peters v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 28 Mo. 107; Brans v. Conn. & P. R. R. Co. 31 Vt. 214; Boston, C. & M. R. Co. v. State, 32 N. H. 215.

The courts have universally sustained legislation requiring railroad companies to fence in their tracks when other land owners are not required to do so, and making them liable for damages resulting from a failure to fence.

Blair v. Milwaukee & P. R. Co. 20 Wis. 267; New Albany & S. R. Co. v. Tilton, 12 Ind. 8; Jones v. Galena & C. R. Co. 16 Iowa, 6; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McClelland, 25 Ill. 140; Waldron v. Rensselaer & S. R. Co. 8 Barb. 370; Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Mower, 16 Kan. 593; Gorman v. Pacific R. Co. 26 Mo. 441. See also Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Riblet, 66 Pa. 164.

If the Legislature in the exercise of its police powers has the authority to pass such a law as the one under consideration applicable to all persons and corporations, a statute applicable only to railroad companies cannot be held void.

Bannon v. State, 49 Ark. 167, 31 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 533; Grissell v. Housatonic R. Co. 4 New Eng. Rep. 85, 54 Conn. 447, 32 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 849.

The powers of the State extend to its supervision of the roads to insure that these safeguards against injury to the public are maintained.

Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140.

The law under discussion is nothing but a law requiring the railroad companies at their expense to erect a most important safeguard against accident so as to render their business ordinarily safe to others.

Tiedeman, Pol. Powers, § 194. See Morgun's Steamship Co. v. Louisiana Board of Health, 118 U. S. 455 (30 L. ed. 237).

It is the duty of the company to employ men of the character this law provides for, and it must at its own expense see that the men they do employ are of such character. The cost of having this determined is not and cannot be a tax, which is a contribution levied by the State for the support of the government, and not the compensation required to be paid to an agent of the State appointed to enable a public carrier to discharge a duty he is required by the common law to discharge at his own expense.

Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 480 (31 L. ed. 508); Cooley, Taxn. 1; Burroughs, Taxn. § 9.

The constitutionality of a similar law has been sustained by other courts.

Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 21 S. C. 385, 31 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 464; Albrecht v. State, 8 Tex. App. 216, 34 Am. Rep. 737; Boston & M. R. Co. v. County Comrs. 4 New Eng. Rep. 657, 79 Me. 386; People v. Squire, 10 Cent. Rep. 437, 107 N. Y. 598, 1 Am. St. Rep. 893; Weber v. Reinhard, 73 Pa. 370, 13 Am. Rep. 747; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. People, 9 West. Rep. 151, 120 Ill. 104, 31 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 437; Lent v. Tilton, 72 Cal. 404, 19 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 640.

Mears, Thomas G. Jones and J. M. Falkner, for appellee:

Without a certificate one cannot engage in or be employed in the railroad business, and the certificate is the license to engage in such business.

Baldwin v. Kouns, 81 Ala. 278.

The employé is the direct beneficiary of the license. The State cannot provide that a railroad company shall not do business unless it takes out a license or pays a license fee as a condition precedent.

Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640 (82 L. ed. 811).

Whether or not a fee may be lawfully exacted under the police power is always a question for the courts, and they are the ultimate judges of the rightfulness and the legality of the exaction.

Joseph v. Randolph, 71 Ala. 499; Tiedeman, Pol. Powers, pp. 197, 198.

The Act does not impose any legal duty on railroad companies to have their employés examined; it simply requires them not to have men in their service without certificates. The duty of procuring the examination is put on the employé, and the duty not to hire a man without a certificate put on the railroad company.

An agreement to serve after August 1 without a certificate could not constitute a contract; it would be an act forbidden to both sides under a penalty, and absolutely void.

Woods v. Armstrong, 54 Ala. 150.

What is here attempted is not authorized by the taxing power; and is a thinly veiled attempt under guise of exercise of police power to put the entire expense of a public state burden upon a few taxpayers.

Where the motive of a law is general welfare, the fact that it remotely or incidentally confers more benefit on one class than another cannot justify the imposition of the entire expenses on a class of taxpayers.

Such a law is authorized neither by the taxing nor by the police powers.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. 141, 142; Burroughs, Taxn. 63, 892; Joseph v. Randolph, 71 Ala. 499; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bloomington, 76 Ill. 447; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Lackey, 78 Ill. 55.

The police power is not omnipotent; it cannot run counter to the Constitution or prohibit things which it permits. It can only regulate such right, and the regulation must be reasonable.

Joseph v. Randolph, supra; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 877.

The owner of a railroad has a legal and vested right to use his property in that business and the Legislature cannot prohibit or prevent it; it can only reasonably regulate it.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Howe, 82 Kan. 737; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 618; Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. W. U. Teleg. Co. 96 U. S. 1 (24 L. ed. 708).

Glopton, J., delivered the following opinion:

Appellee was appointed an examiner under the provisions of "An Act for the Protection of the Traveling Public against Accidents Caused by Color Blindness and Defective Vision." The Act disqualifies all persons affected with color blindness and loss of visual power, one or both, to the extent defined therein, from serving on railroad lines in the capacity of locomotive engineer, fireman, train conductor, brakeman, gate tender or signal-man, or in any other position which requires the use of discrimination of form or color signals; and makes it a misdemeanor for any person to serve in any of the capacities mentioned without first having obtained a certificate of fitness in accordance with the provisions of the Act. It requires the governor to appoint as examiners a suitable number of properly qualified medical men distributed throughout the State; authorizes any one of them to make the examination, and issue the certificate; and provides for prescribing the methods in which the examination shall be made. The examiner is entitled to a fee of $3.

The third section provides "that on and after the 1st day of June, 1887, examinations and re-examinations, at the expense of the railroad companies, shall be required under this law; and any railroad company, officer or agent of the same, employing after said date a person in any of the capacities specified in section 1 of this Act, who does not possess a certificate of fitness therefor, in so far as color blindness and visual powers are concerned, duly issued in accordance with the requirements of this Act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each and every offense shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50, nor more than $500; provided, that those persons already in employment in said capacities on the 1st day of June, 1887, shall be allowed until the 1st day of August, 1887, in which to procure the necessary certificates." Acts 1886-87, p. 87.

Appellee brings the action to recover of defendant the fees for examinations of persons serving in the specified capacities on a railroad in this State. The main contention between the parties relates to the power of the Legislature to impose upon the railroad companies the expense of the examinations and re-examinations required by the Act.

The police power, which has always been regarded of the utmost importance, and as essential to good order, extends to the protection of the lives, health, comfort, safety and quiet of all persons, and to the protection of all property. In respect to railroads, it has been said by a learned judge: "It may be extended to the supervision of the track, tending switches, running upon the time of other trains, running a road with a single track, using improper rails, not using proper precaution by way of safety beams in case of the breaking of axle-trees, the number of brakemen upon a train with reference to the number of cars, employing intemperate or incompetent engineers and servants, running beyond a given rate of speed, and a thousand similar things, most of which have been made the subject of legislation or judicial determination, and all of which may be." As to their employés, it may be extended to the police, which the corporations themselves exercise in the absence of legislative regulations. Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625.

In McDonald v. State, 81 Ala. 279, the Act "to Require Locomotive Engineers in This State to be Examined and Licensed by a Board to be Appointed by the Governor for That Purpose" was brought before this court. The enactment declares unlawful, and makes a misdemeanor, for the engineer of any railroad train in this State to drive or operate any train of cars or engine upon the main line or road-bed of any railroad in this State, which is used for the transportation of persons, passengers or freight, without first undergoing an examination and obtaining a license as therein provided. The Act requires the governor to appoint a board of examiners, who are authorized to make the examinations, and to issue the licenses; and the examining member of the board is entitled to a fee of $5, to be paid by the applicant. It was contended that the Act is a regulation of commerce between the States, and contravenes the Constitution of the United States. Somerville, J., speaking for the court, says: "In our opinion, it is a mere internal police regulation, which was competent to be provided for by the State, as a proper mode of preserving the safety of the traveling public, and other persons whose lives may well be imperiled by the negligence of ignorant and incompetent engineers."

The same Statute was brought before the Supreme Court of the United States in Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465 [81 L. ed. 508], on error to this court, when the same constitutional objection was made. The validity of the Act was maintained as a valid exercise of the police power. Matthews, J., says: "It is properly an Act of legislation, within the scope of the admitted power reserved to the State to regulate the relative rights and duties of persons being and acting within its territorial jurisdiction, intended to operate so as to secure for the public safety of person and property."

The Statute now under consideration came before the same court in Nashville, O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96 [32 L. ed. 352], also on error to this court. After referring to the decision in Smith v. Alabama, and the provisions of the Statute adjudged to be valid in that case, Field, J., says: "The Act now under consideration only requires an examination and license of parties to be employed on railroads in certain specified capacities, with reference to one particular qualification,—that relating to his visual organs; but this limitation does not affect the application of the decision. If the State could lawfully require an examination as to the general fitness of a person to be employed on a railway, it could, of course, lawfully require an examination as to his fitness in some one particular. The Statute was held to constitute a part of that body of the local laws which governs the relation between carriers of passengers and freight and the public who employ them. It relates to the duties of railroad companies, and the rights of the traveling public, defining and declaring that certain specified things shall be done and observed to insure the safe carriage of passengers. In view of the foregoing adjudications, that the provisions of the Act fall within the class of police regulations we cannot regard an open question."

The Legislature, having the power to supervise and regulate the business of railway companies, so far as may be needful to the safety of passengers, had implied authority to provide suitable and efficient means of enforcing the regulations, and impose the expense on the companies. On this principle rest the provisions of many such statutes. Dealers in many classes of merchandise are required to submit them to inspection, and dealers using weights and measures to have them officially approved, and pay the fees of the officers. Steam vessels are required to submit to inspection, and pay the expense thereof. The duties have often been imposed on railroad companies to fence their roads, station flag-men at public crossings, and provide safeguards at places of danger at their own expense. The statutes of the several States afford many other illustrations of the application of the same principle, the constitutionality of which has not been doubted. Boston & M. R. Co. v. County Comrs. 79 Me. 386, 4 New Eng. Rep. 657; Morgan's Steamship Co. v. Louisiana Board of Health, 118 U. S. 455 [30 L. ed. 237]; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. supra; Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Mower, 16 Kan. 573.

The supervision is not because of benefit to the parties whose business is supervised, but in the interest of the public good, health and safety. If the State has the authority to impose upon railroad companies the expense of inspecting their tracks and machinery, of stationing flag-men at public crossings, and providing safeguards when necessary, on no sound principle can the right be denied to have their employes examined by a competent board constituted by state authority and to require the companies to pay the reasonable expense of ascertaining that their employes possess the qualifications required by law,—the expense in ascertaining that the agencies used by them in operating their roads, the fitness of which is essential to the protection and safety of life and property, are suitable and efficient. This, as I understand it, is the view of the Statute taken in Nashville, O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, supra, where in answer to the objection that the Act deprived the companies of property without due process of law, Field, J., says: "Requiring railroad companies to pay the fees allowed for the examination of parties who are to serve on their railroad in one of the capacities mentioned is not depriving them of property without due process of law. It is merely imposing upon them the expenses necessary to ascertain whether their employes possess the physical qualifications required by law."

But, conceding the right to require payment of the expense of enforcing proper police regulations, counsel contend that the Statute operates to create a state board of examiners before whom every person desiring to be employed in the specified capacities, whether or not in actual employment when the Statute went into effect, shall appear and be examined, to the end that the State, in exercising its licensing power, may be informed what persons can be trusted to engage in certain occupations; and that the requirement that the railroad companies shall pay the expense is the imposition of a tax, under color of establishing police regulations, unauthorized by the taxing power. Taxation is not the purpose, nor ordinarily a legitimate exercise, of the police power. Its province is to supervise and regulate, in doing which a license fee may be exacted to assist in the regulation, but should not exceed the necessary or probable expense of inspecting and regulating the business to which the power is extended, including the expense of issuing the license, and compensation to the officer required, and such incidental and additional expense as may be necessary to enforce the regulations. Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 361; Cooley, Taxn. 598.

In establishing police regulations, a license fee may be exacted for the purpose of raising revenue; but when done the tax is not imposed under the police power, but under the separate and distinct power of taxation, and comes within the provisions of the Constitution limiting the exercise of the latter power. The requirement that the railroad companies pay the expense of the examinations is not the imposition of a tax, in the constitutional sense. No part of the fee allowed the examiner, which is the only expense required to be paid, goes into the state treasury, or assists in raising the public revenue, and it cannot be applied to any purpose other than payment of the expense of the examination. By the express terms of the Statute, it is allowed for each and every examination, whether or not a certificate of fitness is granted, and was intended to cover, from time to time, the expense of enforcing the statutory regulations.

If the operation of the Act be, as counsel insist, to impose on the companies the fee for examining and licensing persons who are not in their employment, and who sustain no relation to them in the department of their business supervised, it goes beyond the scope and province of the police power, and falls within the provision of the Constitution which prohibits private property being taken for private use, or depriving a person of property without due process of law. It is an essential constituent of a valid law, imposing upon the companies the expense, that it be restricted to the examination of persons who are to be employed or are in the service of the companies in some one of the specified capacities,—agencies employed by them to carry on their business.

As is apparent from the decisions referred to above, the requirement that the examinations shall be at the expense of the companies is sustainable only as an authorized part of the system of supervision. By the Statute all persons, whether or not in employment at the time the Act took effect, are required to obtain the requisite certificate, and of consequence to undergo an examination before serving in any of the specified capacities. The fifth section, which allows the fee, does not prescribe in terms by whom it shall be paid. The third section specially extends the supervision to the business of the railroad companies, and fixes the time on and after which it shall be enforced. The provision is not that all examinations required by the Act shall be at their expense, but that "examinations and re-examinations at the expense of the railroad companies shall be required under this law." The intention is to establish the manner of supervision, and the mode of enforcement, by examinations and re-examinations, and by imposing penalties for employing persons who do not possess the requisite certificate of fitness. The penalty is not incurred by mere contractual employment, without actual service.

But it must be conceded that the Statute, fairly construed, operates to impose upon the companies the expense of examining those persons who were in their employment on and after the 1st day of June, without reference to their continuation in the service after the 1st day of the succeeding August, which time was allowed such employes to procure the requisite certificates. It was so construed in Baldwin v. Kouns, 81 Ala. 272. As has been said, its constitutionality can be maintained only so far as it is a legitimate exercise of the police power. Neither the persons then actually employed, nor the companies, incur the penalties prescribed by statute until after the expiration of the time allowed such employes to obtain the certificates. Until then the supervision, as to those who were in the employment of the companies, does not commence; until then compulsory examinations of such persons cannot be made. Under the police power, the expense of no examination can be imposed upon the companies, except of the agencies used in carrying on their business when it becomes their duty to submit to supervision, and examinations may be compelled. So far as the Statute requires examinations to be made prior to the 1st of August, 1887, at the forced expense of the companies, of persons in their employ on the 1st day of June preceding, without reference to their continuation in service after the 1st of August, it goes beyond a legitimate and constitutional exercise of the police power. My brothers differ from this conclusion, holding the provision of the Statute under consideration unconstitutional, as not being a legitimate exercise of the police power. They express their own views. I concur in the reversal of the judgment, on the ground that the complaint does not aver facts sufficient to show the liability of defendant for examinations had between the 1st day of June and August.

Reversed and remanded.

Stone, Ch. J., dissenting:

The certificate exacted of certain employes of railroad companies, in reference to their power to distinguish colors, is certainly a legitimate exercise of the police power of the government. Its tendency is to increase the chances of safety in railroad travel, at best more or less hazardous. And it is certainly within the pale of legislative power to punish by fine or penalty any railroad company which intrusts the running of a train to the control of an agent or agents who are without the requisite evidence of qualification. This would be dealing with the conduct of the corporation,—its operation, by which it earns its income,—and it is right and proper that it should be made to pay the expense of such violation of its duty.

The question presented by this record is different. It is not whether the road is properly appointed, properly constructed and properly equipped, but whether persons serving it, or seeking employment at its hands, are duly qualified for the service they propose to render. This is made by the law one of the conditions upon which the particular line of duties can be undertaken by the applicant. It is a qualification he must possess before he can accept employment, and hence it is for his benefit that the examination is had, and a certificate given.

The certificate when given is good for five years, and authorizes the holder of it to take employment, not alone from the one railroad company, but from any company that will employ him. On the other hand, it imposes on him no duty to continue in the service of the road on which the Statute proposes to assess the expense of the examination. Can a distinction be drawn between the present case and that of any other professional man, skilled laborer or artisan, who is required to possess certain qualifications before entering upon certain lines of employment or service? And if the expense of establishing the fact that the applicant possesses the necessary qualifications can be imposed on the employer without his consent in the one case, why not in every like case, which requires tests of qualification?

The Statute under consideration attempts to impose on the railroad corporations, without its consent, and whether it will or not, the expense of the examination of certain classes of its employes, for the purpose of determining their fitness for the service. Is this not a mere legislative edict that one person (artificial) shall, without his consent, pay for services rendered to another? This is not "due process of law." Private property shall not be taken for private use. These are constitutional guaranties, and corporations are as much under their protection as natural persons are.

The case of Morgan Steamship Co. v. Louisiana Board of Health, 118 U. S. 455 [80 L. ed. 237], rightly interpreted, is not opposed to the views expressed above, and furnishes no warrant for the Statute we are interpreting. The question in that case arose under the Quarantine Laws of Louisiana, enacted for the purpose of keeping out contagious diseases. To allow vessels to land in New Orleans, not having a bill of health free of contagious or infectious diseases, would be to greatly imperil the inhabitants of the city. The quarantine inspection or examination was required primarily for the safety of the city, but secondarily and largely for the benefit of the vessel. If found free from disease, she could at once proceed, complete her voyage, and come into port. The benefit of the inspection was thus largely the vessel's, and furnished a sufficient consideration to uphold the charge made against her.

In the case of Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96 [32 L. ed. 352], the question we have been considering was not, and could not be, raised. Hence the remark of the eminent jurist who prepared the opinion in that case is not an authoritative adjudication.

The majority of the court hold that so much of the Statute as imposes on the railroads the expense of the examination and certification of the qualification of its employes is unconstitutional and void.

Somerville, J., dissenting:

I concur in the opinion of the chief justice in this case. The law under consideration, in 7 L. R. A.

my judgment, passes beyond the legitimate domain of the police power, and reaches ground forbidden by the prohibitions of the Constitution. It is not denied that the Legislature has the power to regulate the business of common carriers engaged in running railroads in this State by a reasonable exercise of its police power, having in view the preservation of the public safety. Smith v. State, 85 Ala. 341; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465 [81 L. ed. 508]; McDonald v. State, 81 Ala. 279.

It may also, in the lawful exercise of this power, require the examination of railroad employes for color blindness, or other defects of vision, as done in this case, and may require a certificate of personal qualification for the service in question. Baldwin v. Kouns, 81 Ala. 272.

As to these propositions there is no difference of opinion among the members of the court.

Such a certificate, however, is in the nature of a personal license to the employé. It is mainly and primarily for his benefit; as much so as the personal license or diploma of a lawyer, physician, druggist or any other person engaged in any other employment would be. It follows and adheres to his person, unless otherwise restricted, anywhere in the territory of the sovereignty granting it, and in whose-soever employment the licensee may be engaged. It is only incidentally beneficial to the employer, so long as the employment may subsist. It is not the property of the employer, but of the employé. The debt incurred for the service rendered in making the examination is therefore the debt of the latter, not of the former. The law-making power can enact no edict by which a legal liability for the debt of one person can be fastened on another without due process of legal proceedings,—according to the rules and forms established for the protection of private rights. It cannot take the property or money of one person, and give it to another, by naked transfer, nor impose a liability on one person for the private benefit of another, in the absence of some relation between the parties which brings the case within the sphere of the police power. There is a line where taxation may become spoliation. So laws, under the guise of police regulations, may reach the constitutional dead-line of property confiscation. It is impossible to forecast the logical results which may practically flow from the opposite conclusion. Farmers might as well under color of the police power be compelled to pay the licenses of commission merchants employed in sampling their cotton; druggists, for the diplomas of their clerks; the patrons of schools, for certificates of qualification required for teachers; patients, for the diplomas of doctors; or clients, for those of lawyers. No precedent known to us among the adjudged cases goes to this extent, or lays down any principle which, in our opinion, would support the constitutionality of the law under consideration, so far as it seeks to make the railroad companies liable for the expenses incurred in the examination of employes under the provisions of the Act.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

STATE of Maryland, Use of Mary BASHE et al., Appts.,
v.

James BOYCE.

(....Md.....)

The mere pendency of a suit against the lessee of a wharf to recover damages for injuries caused by its defective condition will not abate a subsequent suit for the same purpose against the owner of the wharf.

(March 18, 1880.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Baltimore City Court overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement of the declaration, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Argued before Alvey, Ch. J., and Robinson, Irving and McSherry, JJ.

Messrs. J. Alexander Preston and Harry Welles Rusk, for appellants:

If the appellee is liable, he is liable whether there is an action pending against another defendant or not.

See Seevers v. Clement, 28 Md. 436; Livingston v. Bishop, 1 Johns. 290.

For a joint trespass the plaintiff may sue all the trespassers jointly or each of them separately.

Thomas v. Rumsey, 6 Johns. 26; Osterhout v. Roberts, 8 Cow. 43.

A plea in abatement, to be effective, should set forth "that at the time of the issuing of the summons another action was pending in the same court, or in some other court within the State, between the same parties, on the same cause of action."

1 Poe, Pl. p. 502; U. S. Bank v. Baltimore Bank, 7 Gill, 426; Brown v. Somerville, 8 Md. 444; Seevers v. Clement, 28 Md. 434; Marshall v. Cooper, 43 Md. 63; Watson v. Jones, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 679 (20 L. ed. 666); Cook v. Burnley, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 659 (20 L. ed. 29); Albert v. State, 6 Cent. Rep. 447, 66 Md. 825.

A plea of prior action pending, in order to suspend or abate the action to which it is pleaded, must show that the action pending is between the same parties, and for the same cause as that involved in the case which is sought to be abated.

Bryan v. Scholl, 7 West. Rep. 560, 109 Ind. 387, and cases cited; 6 Wait, Act. and Def. p. 397; Adams v. Gardiner, 13 B. Mon. 197; Harris v. Johnson, 65 N. C. 478; Ratzer v. Ratzer, 2 Abb. N. C. 466; Garnaby v. Ray, 52 N. H. 513; Walworth v. Johnson, 41 Cal. 61; Compton v. Green, 9 How. Pr. 228; Gould, Pl. chap. 5, §§ 122-125.

Messrs. William A. Fisher, W. Cabell Bruce and D. K. E. Fisher, for appellee:

If said wharf or pier was out of repair at the time of the accident, and the decedent was without fault, the Consolidation Coal Company and the appellee are co-tortfeasors.

1 Thomp. Neg. 319; Bears v. Ambler, 9 Pa. 193, 194.

7 L. R. A.

If such is the relation between the Consolidation Coal Company and the appellee, then the appellee had the right to plead the pendency of the prior suit brought by the equitable appellants against the company in abatement of this suit.

1 Chitty, Pl. 100; Boyce v. Bayliffe, 1 Campb. 60, 61.

The effect of the plea is to put an end to this suit, and the equitable appellants cannot avoid its effect by discontinuing the action against the Consolidated Coal Company.

Stephen, Pl. 49; 1 Chitty, Pl. p. 470; Leavitt v. Mowe, 54 Md. 617.

McSherry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There is but a single question involved in this appeal. It arises upon the following facts: The appellee owned a wharf which was under lease to the Consolidated Coal Company. By reason of the wharf being, as alleged, out of repair, Joseph Bashe was injured, and shortly afterwards died from the effects of that injury. The widow, children and mother of the deceased brought suit against the coal company, the lessee of the wharf; and whilst that suit was still pending and undisposed of, they brought another action, for the same cause, against the appellee, the owner of the wharf. Both suits were instituted in Baltimore City. To the declaration filed in the second action the appellee pleaded in abatement the pendency of the prior suit against the coal company; the appellants demurred to the plea, and the Baltimore City Court entered judgment on the demurrer for the appellee. From that judgment this appeal has been taken.

In support of the plea reference was made by the appellee to 1 Chitty, Pl. 100; Boyce v. Bayliffe, 1 Campb. 60, and Ravulinson v. Orielt, Carth. 96. The text of Mr. Chitty relies only on the case in 1 Campb. which was decided by Lord Ellenborough at Nisi Prius. The case in Carthew states that Holt, Ch. J., dubitabat, but the other three judges inclined that the plea was good.

Much as we respect the opinion of Mr. Chitty, we think that the great weight of authority is against the sufficiency of the plea.

The general rule is this: where the two suits are for the same cause of action and between the same parties, the pendency of the first may be pleaded in abatement of the second. The identity of the subject matter and of the parties must be alleged (Poe, Pl. 502; Cook v. Burnley, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 659 [20 L. ed. 29]; Bryan v. Scholl, 109 Ind. 387, 7 West. Rep. 560); and the two suits must be pending in the courts of the same State. Seevers v. Clement, 28 Md. 426.

Now, whilst the cause of action is alleged to be the same in both suits, the defendants are admitted by the plea to be different, and therefore the plea is undoubtedly bad unless an exception to the general rule obtains in the case of joint tortfeasors. No reason is perceived for the existence of such an exception, and no authorities have been cited to support it other than those already alluded to. It may be regarded as very generally accepted law in this country that where two or more persons jointly commit an actionable tort the injured party may join them all in one action or he may bring a separate action against each, though he can have but one satisfaction. He has his election de melioribus damnis. Nothing short of the satisfaction of a judgment obtained against one, or his release, will operate to defeat a recovery by the same plaintiff against another joint trespasser in a subsequent action founded on the same tort. Lovejoy v. Murray, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 1 [18 L. ed. 129]; Sheldon v. Kibbe, 8 Conn. 214; Morgan v. Chester, 4 Conn. 387; Sanderson v. Caldwell, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 195; Blann v. Orocheron, 20 Ala. 320; Du Bose v. Marr, 52 Ala. 506; Knott v. Cunningham, 2 Sneed, 204; Page v. Freeman, 19 Mo. 421; Elliott v. Hayden, 104 Mass. 180; Woods v. Pangburn, 75 N. Y. 498.

Why then should the mere pendency of another suit which has not yet even ripened into a judgment, and which may never do so, abate all subsequent suit against a different joint tortfeasor for the same trespass? No satisfactory reason can be given to support any such distinction. The principle governing the question involved here is clearly stated in Livingston v. Bishop, 1 Johns. 290, in the opinion delivered by Kent, Chief Justice. That case was sanctioned and approved in Lovejoy v. Murray, and referred to by this court in Gunther v. Lee, 45 Md. 66.

It was suggested at the argument that art. 47, § 2, of the Code allows but one action to be brought for the same injury in cases of this character. This Statute, which gives a right of action in the name of the State for the use of the wife, husband, parent and child of a person whose death has been caused by negligence, provides "that not more than one action shall lie for and in respect of the same subject matter of complaint." It permits but one suit to be instituted against the same defendant for an injury resulting in death; and therefore all who have a right to unite as plaintiffs, but who omit to become parties, are excluded from bringing a subsequent action. Deford v. State, 30 Md. 208.

Its object was to protect a defendant from being vexed by several suits instituted by or in behalf of different equitable plaintiffs for the same injury when all the parties could, with perfect convenience, be joined in one proceeding. It never contemplated depriving a plaintiff of the right to sue separately different joint tortfeasors, though, of course, there can be but one satisfaction, no matter how many judgments may be recovered.

For the reasons we have given we are of opinion that the court below erred in overruling the demurrer and in entering judgment for the appellee. The plea was bad and the judgment must therefore be reversed and a new trial will be awarded.

Judgment reversed, and new trial awarded.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

H. COOK, Admr., etc., of A. C. McDonald, Deceased, Appl.,
v.

Martin L. COOPER, Admr., etc., of George Cooper, Deceased, et al., Respts.

(....Or.....)

*1. Where at a void foreclosure sale the mortgagee becomes the purchaser of *Head notes by STEAHAN, J.

NOTE.—Mortgage of real property; common-law doctrine.

At the common law the ordinary mortgage was to all intents and purposes a conveyance of the legal estate, subject to be defeated by performance by the mortgagor of the condition by payment of the debt upon the prescribed day; and in case of default the estate of the mortgagee, which was before conditional, became absolute, "leaving to the mortgagor only an equity of redemption, which chancery will lay hold of and give effect to by compelling a reconveyance on equitable terms." Shields v. Lozeau, 34 N. J. L. 496; Davis v. Teays, 3 Gratt. 293; 1 Jones, Mort. § 9; Coote, Mort. 4th ed. 15.

This equitable right of the mortgagor was termed his "equity of redemption" which was eventually recognized as an estate in land capable of being devised, granted or entailed with remainders: an estate in which there may be seisin, while the mortgage in fee is considered as personal assets. Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 603.

The equitable theory.

The mortgage is regarded primarily as a security for the debt, which is the principal fact, the interest L. R. A.

the mortgaged premises, and enters into the possession thereof, and then sells and attempts to convey such premises by deed, such deed operates as an assignment of the mortgage debt, as well as the mortgage securing the same, to the grantee in such deed, and each successive deed to said premises by persons holding under such mortgage must have the same effect.

2. If for any cause in the foreclosure suit, the proceeding is ineffectual to foreclose the mortgage, and the mortgagee purchases at a sale under such void proceedings, and est of the mortgagee being merely a lien on the land,—a thing in action which may be assigned and transferred without conveyance of the land itself, and a personal asset which on the death of the mortgagee passes to his legal representatives, and not to his heirs. 1 Washb. Real Prop. chap. 18.

Under this system, after a redemption a deed from the mortgagee to the mortgagor is necessary to invest the latter with the full legal title, and a decree in the redemption suit directs such conveyance. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 151.

The estate and title of subsequent mortgagees are therefore regarded as purely equitable and a mortgage of the equity of redemption is necessarily an equitable mortgage; and this is the foundation of the English doctrine of "tacking," whereby a junior mortgagee without notice may buy in or procure a transfer of the first mortgage and thereby obtain precedence over the holder of an intermediate mortgage in the satisfaction of liens out of the mortgaged premises. Marsh v. Lee, 2 Vent. 337, 1 Cas. in Ch. 162; Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. Wms. 491; Young v. Young, L. R. 3 Eq. 801; Pease v. Jackson, L. R. 3 Ch. 576; Prosser enters into the possession under such sale, his relation to the mortgaged premises is that of a mortgagee in possession.

3. Under § 386, Hill's Code, a mortgagee is precluded from recovering possession of the mortgaged premises after forfeiture by action; but if he can obtain possession of such premises in any lawful or peaceable mode, that is, without force, he may retain possession of such premises, as against the mortgagor or any person claiming under him subsequent to the mortgage, until his mortgage debt is paid.
4. A mortgagee in possession is not to be treated as a mere stranger would be who went upon the land of another and placed improvements thereon without the owner's consent. But, on the contrary, he may lawfully take down or carry away buildings erected by him on the land mortgaged, the materials of which were his own, and not so connected with the soil that they cannot be removed without prejudice to it.
5. Where the right to remove a chattel from another's land exists, and the party entitled to remove is in possession of the premises, he may exercise the right of removal while so in possession, and a resort to equity is unnecessary.

(November 12, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in favor of defendants in an action to recover damages for the removal of alleged fixtures from certain land. Affirmed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Nicholas & Deady and Gearin & Gilbert for appellant.

seer v. Rice, 28 Beav. 68; Bates v. Johnson, Johns. (Eng.) 304.

But this rule of "tacking" has been rejected by the courts of this country as being impossible under our registry system. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 281.

The American doctrine; modification of the English doctrine, legal and equitable combined.

Even in those States which regard the mortgage as in any sense conveying a legal estate many incidents of such title are abandoned. The mortgagee has the legal title, as between himself and the mortgagor, only so far as necessary to preserve the mortgage as a valid security, and the mortgagor as against all other persons is regarded as retaining the legal estate. Kannady v. McCarron, 18 Ark. 166; Terry v. Rosell, 32 Ark. 478; Delahay v. Clement, 4 Ill. 201; Vansant v. Allmon, 23 Ill. 80; Carroll v. Ballance, 26 Ill. 9; Nelson v. Pinegar, 30 Ill. 473; Jackson v. Warren, 32 Ill. 381; Pollock v. Malson, 41 Ill. 516; Harper v. Ely, 70 Ill. 581; Clark v. Reyburn, 1 Kan. 231; Redman v. Sanders, 2 Dana, 68; Stewart v. Barrow, 7 Bush, 368; Woolley v. Holt, 14 Bush, 788; Blaney v. Bearce, 2 Me. 132; Wilkins v. French, 20 Me. 111; Stratton v. Cole, 3 New Eng. Rep. 383, 75 Me. 553; Jones v. Smith, 4 New Eng. Rep. 689, 79 Me. 446; Brown v. Stewart, 1 Md. Ch. 87; McKim v. Mason, 3 Md. Ch. 186; Leighton v. Preston, 9 Gill, 201; Evans v. Merriken, 8 Gill & J. 47; Jamieson v. Bruce, 6 Gill & J. 72; Sumwalt v. Tucker, 34 Md. 89; Timms v. Shannon, 19 Md. 236; Annapolis & E. R. Co. v. Gantt, 39 Md. 115; Barnard v. Eaton, 2 Cush. 304; Brookover v. Hurst, 1 Met. (Ky.) 665; Ewer v. Hobbs, 5 Met. 3; Howard v. Robinson, 5 Cush. 128; Brown v. Cram, 1 N. H. 169; McMurphy v. Minot, 4 N. H. 261; Southerlin v. Mendum, 5 N. H. 420; Glass v. Ellison, 9 N. H. 60; Hobart v. Sanborn, 13 N. H. 226; Tripe v. Maroy, 39 N. H. 439; 7 L. R. A.

Messrs. Moreland & Masters, for respondents:

Defendants had a right to remove the house. Taylor v. Townsend, 8 Mass. 411; Waters v. Reuber, 16 Neb. 99, 49 Am. Rep. 710; Kibbe v. Campbell, 34 La. Ann. 1163; Little v. Willford, 81 Minn. 173; McKelway v. Armour, 10 N. J. Eq. 115, 64 Am. Dec. 445; Tyler v. Decker, 10 Cal. 435; 1 Hillard, Real Prop. p. 8; Wickliffe v. Clay, 1 Dana, 591.

Defendants could recover in equity the value of the improvements under the circumstances of this case.

See Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, 478, 2 Story, 607; Taylor v. Cozart, 4 Humph. 433, 40 Am. Dec. 655; Scott v. Dunn, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. 425, 30 Am. Dec. 177, note; French v. Grenet, 57 Tex. 278; Hawkins v. Brown, 80 Ky. 186; Thomas v. Malcom, 89 Ga. 328, 99 Am. Dec. 459; McKelway v. Armour, 10 N. J. Eq. 118; Union Hall Assn. v. Morrison, 39 Md. 281; Hatcher v. Briggs, 6 Or. 50.

Having a good and complete defense in equity to plaintiff's claim, defendants may avail themselves of the same in this action.

Onson v. Cown, 22 Wis. 329; Estrada v. Murphy, 19 Cal. 250; Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 672; Pitcher v. Hennesey, 48 N. Y. 423; New York Ice Co. v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 21 How. Pr. 296; Phillips v. Gorham, 17 N. Y. 270; Bartlett v. Judd, 21 N. Y. 200; Lattin v. McCarty, 41 N. Y. 107; Hoppough v. Struble, 60 N. Y. 430.

Strahan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause was tried by the court below with-

Hemphill v. Ross, 66 N. C. 477; Ellis v. Humsey, 66 N. C. 501; State v. Ragland, 75 N. C. 12; Harkrader v. Leiby, 4 Ohio St. 602; Allen v. Everly, 24 Ohio St. 97; Randa v. Kendall, 15 Ohio, 671; Youngman v. Elmira & W. R. Co. 65 Pa. 278; Brobst v. Brook, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 519 (19 L. ed. 1003); Tryon v. Munson, 77 Pa. 250; Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 441 (7 L. ed. 213); Carpenter v. Carpenter, 6 R. I. 642; Waterman v. Matteson, 4 R. I. 539; Henshaw v. Wells, 9 Humph. 568; Vance v. Johnson, 10 Humph. 214; Faulkner v. Brockenbrough, 4 Rand. 245.

Mortgagee entitled to possession.

As against the mortgagor, the mortgagee is entitled to possession at once, unless the mortgage itself shows a different intent. Knox v. Easton, 38 Ala. 345; Welsh v. Phillips, 54 Ala. 309; Doe v. Mooloekey, 1 Ala. 708; Grandin v. Hurt, 30 Ala. 116; Blaney v. Bearce, 2 Me. 132.

The same rule applies in Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Tennessee and Virginia.

That mortgagee is entitled to possession after default, see Harmon v. Short, 8 Smedes & M. 438; Hill v. Robertson, 24 Miss. 368; Walcoo v. McKinney, 10 Mo. 229; Kennett v. Plummer, 23 Mo. 142; Cockrill v. Bane, 13 West. Rep. 656, 94 Mo. 444; Sutton v. Mason, 38 Mo. 120; Woods v. Hilderbrand, 46 Mo. 284; Johnson v. Houston, 47 Mo. 227; Reddiok v. Gressman, 49 Mo. 389; Sanderson v. Price, 21 N. J. L. 646, note; Shields v. Lozeau, 34 N. J. L. 493.

In Vermont, upon default, the mortgagee is entitled to possession, and may enter, or may immediately bring ejectment. Lull v. Matthews, 19 Vt. 322; Hagar v. Brainerd, 44 Vt. 294.

After default the mortgagee's legal estate is absolute, and the mortgagor's only interest is equiout the intervention of a jury, and the only questions of law we are required to consider arise upon the findings, which are as follows:

"(1) That A. C. McDonald, named in the complaint, died intestate on the 21st day of September, 1878, seised and possessed at the time of his death of the real property mentioned in the complaint, and described as lots one (1) and two (2) in block 120, Stephen's Addition to East Portland, Multnomah County, Or.

"(2) That said A. C. McDonald and his wife, on the 28d day of March, 1878, to secure the payment of part of the purchase price of the aforesaid real property for which said A. C. McDonald had given his promissory note, executed and delivered to B. Boesch, their vendor, a mortgage on said real property, which debt and mortgage were not paid at the date of the death of said A. C. McDonald.

"(3) That on the 25th day of August, 1879, said B. Boesch commenced a suit in this court, in the equity department thereof, against the widow and heirs of said A. C. McDonald, deceased, to foreclose said mortgage, though no administration of the estate of said deceased had been had, nor any administrator appointed for said estate, and said mortgage had not been nor has it yet been recorded; that a supposed service of summons in said suit was made on the defendants therein, by publication, as against nonresidents, and a decree of foreclosure regular in form was made and rendered by this court in said suit on the 15th day of October, 1879.

"(4) That pursuant to the decree of foreclosure in said suit the lands in said mortgage described, being the same lots one and two, in block 120, in Stephen's Addition to East Portland, in this county, which are mentioned in the complaint herein, were sold at sheriff's sale on the 22d day of November, 1879, and were bid off by said B. Boesch; and, said sale having been duly approved by this court, a deed for said lots was in due form made by the sheriff to said Boesch, which purported to convey to said Boesch all the right, title, estate and interest which said A. C. McDonald had in said lots at the time of his death, which deed was duly recorded in the records of deeds for this county.

"(5) That said lots passed by a regular chain of conveyances, as alleged in the answer, from said B. Boesch to the defendant, Martin L. Cooper's intestate, the said George Cooper, deceased; the several purchasers under said Boesch down to George Cooper entering into possession of said lots, and exercising acts of ownership over the same.

"(6) That said George Cooper's immediate vendors were in actual possession of said lots, and said George Cooper took the advice of counsel concerning the title to said lots, and procured an abstract of the title thereof to be made, and the certificate of reputable attorneys of this court, declaring the title of the Forbes, the immediate vendors of said George Cooper, in and to said lots to be good and in fee simple; and said George Cooper thereupon purchased said lots, and paid the full value thereof in cash, and took a deed therefor; and went into the actual possession of the same on or about table. Paulling v. Barrow, 22 Ala. 9; Barker v. Bell, 37 Ala. 354; Edwards v. Farmers F. Ins. Co. 21 Wend. 467; Jackson v. Pierce, 10 Johns. 414; Smith v. Shuler, 12 Serg. & R. 240; Simpson v. Ammons, 1 Binn. 175.

In Massachusetts his legal estate is ordinarily made absolute by a strict foreclosure rather than by a decree for a judicial sale. Bradley v. Fuller, 23 Pick. 1; Hapgood v. Blood, 11 Gray, 400; Sparhawk v. Bagg, 16 Gray, 538; Steel v. Steel, 4 Allen, 417; Silloway v. Brown, 12 Allen, 30; Norcross v. Norcross, 105 Mass. 265.

A strict foreclosure proceeds upon the theory that the mortgagee or purchaser has acquired the legal title and obtained possession of the estate, but that the right and equity of redemption have not been cut off or barred. Jefferson v. Coleman, 9 West. Rep. 73, 110 Ind. 515.

In such case, the legal title of the mortgagor having been acquired, the remedy by strict foreclosure is proper to cut off the right and equity of junior incumbrancers to redeem. Ibid.

Title of mortgage.

Until the mortgagee takes possession or files a bill to foreclose and for a receiver, the mortgagor is owner as to all the world, and is entitled to the rents and profits. American Bridge Co. v. Heidelberg, 24 U. S. 800 (24 L. ed. 144).

As against the mortgagee and those holding under him, the estate of the mortgagor is purely equitable; but as against all others, it is to all intents and purposes the true and legal ownership with all its incidents and qualities. Middletown Sav. Bank v. Bates, 11 Conn. 519; Cooch v. Gerry, 3 Harr. (Del.) 230; Harper v. Ely, 70 Ill. 581; Georges Creek C. & I. Co. v. Detmold, 1 Md. 225.

So he may recover possession of the land by an 7 L. R. A.

action at law. Ellison v. Daniels, 11 N. H. 274; Parish v. Gilmanton, 11 N. H. 298; Great Falls Co. v. Worstar, 15 N. H. 412; Whittemore v. Gibbs, 24 N. H. 484.

Or he may maintain a legal action for injuries done to the estate by a third person. Annapolis & E. R. Co. v. Gantt, 39 Md. 115; Wilson v. Hooper, 13 Vt. 653; Hooper v. Wilson, 12 Vt. 605; Walker v. King, 44 Vt. 601.

After default the mortgagee may pursue any or all remedies, legal or equitable, which he may have at the same time. Fitzgerald v. Beebe, 7 Ark. 310; Gilchrist v. Patterson, 18 Ark. 575; Reynolds v. New Orleans Canal & Bkg. Co. 30 Ark. 530.

He may obtain possession by ejectment. Rockwell v. Bradley, 2 Conn. 1; Beach v. Clark, 6 Conn. 364; Chamberlain v. Thompson, 10 Conn. 243; Middletown Sav. Bank v. Bates, 11 Conn. 519; Newbold v. Newbold, 1 Del. Ch. 310; Karnes v. Lloyd, 52 Ill. 118; Erickson v. Rafferty, 79 Ill. 209; Brown v. Stewart, 1 Md. Ch. 87; Wilhelm v. Lee, 2 Md. Ch. 322; Buckley v. Daley, 45 Miss. 533; Carpenter v. Bowen, 42 Miss. 28; Buck v. Payne, 52 Miss. 271.

Abandonment of the legal theory.

In some States, partly through the operation of statutes, and partly through the adoption of equitable doctrines by the law courts, the equitable theory that a mortgage is a mere security for the debt, and conveys no title to or estate in the mortgaged premises, is adopted. McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 365; Nagle v. Macy, 9 Cal. 426; Haffey v. Maier, 13 Cal. 18; Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 461; Boggs v. Fowler, 16 Cal. 559; Fogarty v. Sawyer, 17 Cal. 589; Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 487; Dutton v. Warchauer, 21 Cal. 606; Kid v. Teepie, 22 Cal. 255; Skinner v. Buck, 29 Cal. 253; Bloodworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 255; Jackson v. Lodge, 36 Cal. 28; Maack v. Wetzel, 39 Cal. 247;

the 17th day of March, 1885, in good faith, and fully believing that he had a good title thereto, and wholly ignorant of any adverse title thereto.

"(7) That while said George Cooper was in possession of said lots, to wit, in the year 1886, he built upon said lots the dwelling-house described in the complaint, with material and funds wholly his own, and in good faith, without notice of any adverse title, and verily believing that he was the owner in fee of said lots, and of the whole thereof.

"(8) That on June 25, 1887, an action was begun in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Oregon, against said George Cooper by Angus McDonald, heir-at-law of said A. C. McDonald, in which said action said plaintiff, Angus McDonald, claimed to be the owner in fee of said lots hereinbefore mentioned, and demanded possession of the same; and said United States Circuit Court having jurisdiction did in said action, on the 28th day of November, 1887, adjudge that said Angus McDonald was owner in fee of said lots, and in possession thereof, and did in substance and effect adjudge that said George Cooper had no title to said lots, and that the decree of this court in the hereinbefore described suit of Boeschen v. McDonald, and the sheriff's deed aforesaid to said Boeschen, were invalid and of no effect.

"(9) That while said action in said United States circuit court was pending, and two days before said judgment therein had been rendered, to wit, on the 26th day of November, 1887, the said George Cooper, the defendant,

Martin L. Cooper's intestate, being still in possession of said lots, caused said dwelling erected by him as aforesaid on said lots to be removed therefrom, and had the same on the said 26th day of November, 1887, on the street near said lots, and afterwards removed the same, and placed it upon another lot belonging to said George Cooper, in the same block, and that in and by said removal of said house from said lots no injury was done to the soil of said lots, nor was there any injury to the inheritance, and said George Cooper removed nothing from said lots except what he had himself and with his own means placed thereon.

"(10) That the value of said houses at the time of removal was $700.

"(11) That said defendant W. O. Allen did not remove, nor aid or assist or advise or encourage any other person to remove, said house; that said Martin L. Cooper, defendant, did employ men to remove said house, and did direct them in regard to the same; but that said Martin L. Cooper, in all that he did in and about the removal of said house, was only the agent for, and acted only for and in behalf of, said George Cooper, his intestate."

As conclusions of law the court finds, from the foregoing facts:

"(1) That the plaintiff is not entitled to recover from any of the defendants any sum whatever for said house, or the removal of the same.

"(2) That the defendants are entitled to judgment that they go without day, and recover their costs and disbursements from the plaintiff. E. D. Shattuck, Judge."

Carpentier v. Brenham, 40 Cal. 221; Harp v. Calahan, 46 Cal. 222; Frink v. Leroy, 49 Cal. 314; Drake v. Root, 2 Colo. 685.

Under the equitable theory, which has been very generally adopted by statute, the mortgage is merely a lien on the premises, and the mortgagee has no right to possession except by means of a foreclosure of the mortgage, the mortgagor having the right to possession until removed after a decree of foreclosure and a sale thereunder. Davis v. Anderson, 1 Ga. 176; Seals v. Cashion, 2 Ga. Dec. 76; Ragland v. Justices, 10 Ga. 65; Elfe v. Cole, 26 Ga. 197; Jackson v. Carswell, 34 Ga. 279; United States v. Athens Armory, 35 Ga. 344; Burnside v. Terry, 45 Ga. 621; Vason v. Ball, 56 Ga. 268; Reasoner v. Edmundson, 5 Ind. 393; Francis v. Porter, 7 Ind. 213; Morton v. Noble, 22 Ind. 160; Grable v. McCulloch, 27 Ind. 472; Fletcher v. Holmes, 32 Ind. 497; Hall v. Savill, 3 Greene (Iowa) 87; Courtney v. Carr, 6 Iowa, 238; White v. Rittenmeyer, 30 Iowa, 268; Life Assn. of America v. Cook, 30 Kan. 19; Chick v. Willetts, 2 Kan. 384; Duclaud v. Rousseau, 2 La. Ann. 168; Gorham v. Arnold, 22 Mich. 247; Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 Mich. 270; Wagar v. Stone, 36 Mich. 364; Adams v. Corrison, 7 Minn. 456; Donnelly v. Simonton, 7 Minn. 167; Berthold v. Holman, 12 Minn. 335; Berthold v. Fox, 13 Minn. 501; Parsons v. Noggle, 23 Minn. 328; Rice v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 24 Minn. 464; Kyger v. Ryley, 2 Neb. 20; Hurley v. Estes, 6 Neb. 338; Davidson v. Cox, 11 Neb. 260; Hyman v. Kelly, 1 Nev. 179; Whitmore v. Shiverick, 3 Nev. 238; Waring v. Smyth, 2 Barb. Ch. 119, 5 N. Y. Ch. L. ed. 580; Besser v. Hawthorn, 3 Or. 123; Thayer v. Cramer, 1 McCord, Ch. 896; Nixon v. Bynum, 1 Bailey, L. 148; Annelly v. De Saussure, 12 S. C. 488; Wright v. Henderson, 12 Tex. 48; Mann v. Falcon, 25 Tex. 271; Walker v. Johnson, 37 Tex. 127; Wood v. Trask, 7 Wis. 568.

Under this theory, a deed of trust to secure payment of a debt is regarded as a mortgage, the legal title remaining in the grantor. Kyger v. Ryley, 2 Neb. 20; Webb v. Hoselton, 4 Neb. 308; Walker v. Johnson, 37 Tex. 127.
7 L. R. A.

It is held otherwise under the Statute of Florida. Soutter v. Miller, 15 Fla. 625.

Rights of mortgagee in possession.

A mortgagee who obtains possession peaceably under the equitable theory will not be dispossessed until the debt is paid. Eyster v. Gaff, 2 Colo. 228; Packer v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 17 N. Y. 281; Hubbell v. Moulson, 53 N. Y. 223; Mickles v. Townsend, 18 N. Y. 575; White v. Rittenmeyer, 30 Iowa, 268; Roberts v. Sutherland, 4 Or. 219; Gillett v. Eaton, 6 Wis. 30; Tallman v. Fly, 6 Wis. 244; Fladland v. Delaplaine, 19 Wis. 459; Hennesey v. Farrell, 20 Wis. 48; Avery v. Judd, 21 Wis. 263; Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 498; Chase v. Peck, 21 N. Y. 581; Sahler v. Signer, 44 Barb. 608; Munro v. Merchant, 26 Barb. 383; Casey v. Buttolph, 12 Barb. 637; Jackson v. Delancy, 13 Johns. 537, 7 Am. Dec. 403; Moore v. Cable, 1 Johns. Ch. 385; Watson v. Spence, 20 Wend. 280; Phyfe v. Riley, 15 Wend. 248; Van Duyn v. Thayer, 14 Wend. 234; Bussey v. Page, 14 Me. 132; Pace v. Chadderdon, 4 Minn. 499; Pettengill v. Evans, 5 N. H. 54; Henry v. Confidence G. & S. Min. Co. 1 Nev. 619; Deu v. Wright, 7 N. J. L. 176, 11 Am. Dec. 548; Harris v. Haynes, 34 Vt. 220.

A mortgagee in possession, selling part of the land, is chargeable with its value at the date of sale. Turner v. Johnson, 12 West. Rep. 701, 95 Mo. 431.

The right of a mortgagee in possession, or his assignee, to prevail against the grantee of the mortgagor, must have proceeded from the mortgagor prior to his conveyance to his grantee. Berlaack v. Halle, 22 Fla. 233.

"Supplemental Findings.

"That said mortgage mentioned in finding of fact No. 2 was not produced at the trial of this action, although due notice was served upon defendant and his attorneys to produce the same, nor was its absence accounted for other than by the statement by witness (Moreland) that he had it when foreclosure suit was pending, and had looked for it since this action was begun, but that it could not be found, and that said mortgage was never recorded in the office of the county clerk of Multnomah County, Or.

E. D. Shattuck, Judge."

1. It does not affirmatively appear from the findings of the court below for what reason the United States Circuit Court for the District of Oregon adjudged the title to the premises described to be in the heir of A. C. McDonald, but no doubt it was on the ground that the circuit court in which the foreclosure proceedings were had failed to acquire jurisdiction over the heir-at-law of A. C. McDonald, deceased. Nor is it material in the form in which this record is presented. The findings, in effect, show that there was an attempted foreclosure, followed by a sale of the property; that such sale was approved by the court, and a proper deed executed to Boesch, the plaintiff and mortgagee, who became the purchaser at the sale and entered into the possession by virtue of said deed. He subsequently sold his interest in said premises, which passed with the possession thereof by mesne conveyances to George Cooper, who erected the house thereon. These conveyances, if they failed to pass title to the lots described, operated as an assignment of Boesch's mortgage to the successive grantees named in said several deeds. Robinson v. Ryan, 25 N. Y. 320; Winslow v. Clark, 47 N. Y. 261; Miner v. Beckman, 50 N. Y. 337; Murdock v. Chapman, 9 Gray, 156; Hinds v. Ballou, 44 N. H. 619; Smith v. Smith, 15 N. H. 55; Lamprey v. Nudd, 29 N. H. 299.

If the Boesch mortgage was not foreclosed, it remained in full force and unsatisfied, and by the conveyances set out in the findings was owned by George Cooper at the time he placed the erections on the lots, and in such case his relation to the lots was that of a mortgagee in possession.

I am aware that it was said by this court in Roberts v. Sutherland, 4 Or. 219, that a mortgagee who obtains possession of the mortgaged premises with the assent of the mortgagor, after default of the latter, may retain such possession until payment of the mortgage debt. Such possession is a good defense against an action of ejectment brought by the mortgagor, so long as the mortgage debt remains unpaid. This is a correct statement of the law as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. It is true Hill's Code, § 326, provides: "A mortgage of real property shall not be deemed a conveyance, so as to enable the owner of the mortgage to recover possession of the real property without a foreclosure and sale according to law." This provision of the Statute is copied from the Revised Statutes of the State of New York (2 Rev. Stat. p. 312, § 57); but after the enactment of this Statute it was held in that State that "if the mortgagee, after for-

Under this theory of the mortgage the mortgagor's interest is for all purposes, and under all circumstances, and between all parties, the legal estate in the premises with all the incidents and qualities of legal ownership; and the application of the term "equity of redemption" to this legal estate and its employment in the legislation of States adopting this theory of the mortgage is the occasion of constant misapprehension and confusion of thought. Trim v. Marsh, 54 N. Y. 408; Chick v. Willetta, 2 Kan. 854.

Mortgagee in possession.

A mortgagee in possession is entitled to rents and profits until his claim is wholly paid, as against one who became the wife of the mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage. Walt v. Savage (N. J.) 13 Cent. Rep. 348.

He will be subject to the duty of applying the rents and profits in discharge of the debt, and rendering an account of their receipt and application. Chamberlain v. Connecticut Cent. R. Co. 4 New Eng. Rep. 477, 54 Conn. 472; Caldwell v. Hall, 49 Ark. 508.

He is only amenable for rents received, unless guilty of negligence or fraud, but is not entitled to compensation for trouble in care of the property. Turner v. Johnson, 13 West. Rep. 701, 96 Mo. 431; Stevenson v. Edwards, 98 Mo. 622; Lambertville Nat. Bank v. Boes (N. J.) 11 Cent. Rep. 238.

He is only required to account for actual receipts less such sums as he may have paid out for taxes and necessary repairs, unless it is shown that more could have been realized by reasonable diligence. Pinneo v. Goodspeed, 9 West. Rep. 479, 120 Ill. 524.

Where possession was not only wrongfully taken by the mortgagee, but accompanied by force and fraud, on a suit to redeem he cannot be charged with less than the whole rental value during his possession. Meigs v. McFarlan (Mich.) 40 N. W. 7 L. R. A.

Rep. 246; Brown v. South Boston Sav. Bank, 148 Mass. 300.

Where mortgagee was in possession of a portion of the mortgaged land, under a parol agreement with the mortgagor, and rented a portion of land in his possession to a tenant on a rental of half of the crop, and the portion of the mortgage was set aside and delivered to him and was in his possession, replevin will not lie at the suit of the mortgagor against the mortgagee. Byers v. Byers, 9 West. Rep. 316, 65 Mich. 568.

A mortgagee in possession may make such repairs as are reasonably necessary for the preservation of the property, but cannot make permanent improvements or repairs which conduce merely to his comfort or convenience. Raynor v. Drew, 73 Cal. 307.

He is bound to keep the property without unreasonable deterioration, and is therefore credited with necessary repairs; but he has no right to enhance the value of the estate, and thus render it more difficult for the mortgagor to redeem. See Quinn v. Brittain, Hoff. Ch. 353; Moore v. Cable, 1 Johns. Ch. 386; Bell v. New York, 10 Paige, 49; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 205.

On redemption of the mortgage, he is entitled to be reimbursed for necessary repairs made on the premises. Johnson v. Hosford, 10 West. Rep. 254, 110 Ind. 578; Stevenson v. Edwards, 98 Mo. 622.

There is, however, no principle of law permitting the owner or mortgagor or their grantees, or a subsequent purchaser with notice of prior equities of the first purchaser, to make improvements on the premises, and have a prior lien therefor; but such improvements will pass upon sale of the premises. Cable v. Ellis, 8 West. Rep. 431, 120 Ill. 126.

Mortgagee obtaining possession may retain it till his debt is paid.

Prior mortgagee is entitled to retain possession feiture, entered into possession, either by the consent of the mortgagor or by means of legal proceedings, he may defend himself there, at least till his debt is paid." Van Duyn v. Thayer, 14 Wend. 234.

So it was said in Phyfe v. Riley, 15 Wend. 248: "Now, by the Revised Statutes, the mortgagee must complete his title by other proceedings before he brings his suit; but if the mortgagee, after forfeiture, obtains possession in some legal mode other than by an action, why should the mortgagor, or those claiming under him, recover the possession from the mortgagee without paying the money secured by it?"

Miner v. Beekman, supra, was a case where the mortgagee bid off the mortgaged premises at a void foreclosure sale, and entered into the possession of the premises; and the court held, if the defendants had acquired the rights of the mortgagee, they could defend their possession by virtue of the mortgage.

So Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 575, was also a void foreclosure by reason of the owner of the property not having been made a party to the suit, and at the attempted sale under the decree a stranger, and not the mortgagee, became the purchaser and entered into the possession, and the court by Folger, Ch. J., said, distinguishing the case from Miner v. Beekman, supra: "The case is supposed to be like that of Miner v. Beekman, 50 N. Y. 337. It is different in an important particular. There the entry was by the mortgagee, who was also the purchaser at the sale. He thus became a mortgagee in possession, and could defend against the owner of the equity of redemption or his representative any action, except one for an accounting of the rents and profits and to redeem." And this seems to be the settled rule in New York. Casey v. Buttolph, 13 Barb. 637; St. John v. Bumpstead, 17 Barb. 100; Munro v. Merchant, 26 Barb. 383; Winslow v. v. McCall, 32 Barb. 241; Randall v. Raab, 2 Abb. Pr. 307; Jackson v. Bowen, 7 Cow. 18; Watson v. Spence, 20 Wend. 280; Madison Ave. Baptist Church v. Baptist Church in Oliver St. 73 N. Y. 82; Trimm v. Marsh, 54 N. Y. 599; until his claim is fully paid. Callanan v. Shaw, 19 Iowa, 183.

As against a prior mortgagee in possession of the property, a receiver will not be allowed in favor of a subsequent mortgagee, as long as any part of the debt remains unpaid to the prior mortgagee. Patton v. Accessory Transit Co. 4 Abb. Pr. 235, 13 How. Pr. 502; Quinn v. Brittain, 3 Edw. Ch. 314; Bolles v. Duff, 35 How. Pr. 481; Rapier v. Gulf City Paper Co. 64 Ala. 330; Callanan v. Shaw, 19 Iowa, 183; Trenton Bkg. Co. v. Woodruff, 3 N. J. Eq. 210; Rowe v. Wood, 2 Jac. & W. 553.

A senior mortgagee, acquiring possession by consent of the mortgagor after a foreclosure sale under a junior mortgage, but before the expiration of the year for redemption, has the rights of a mortgagee in possession. Jones v. Rigby (Minn.) 43 N.W. Rep. 390.

The subsequent mortgagee must redeem from the prior mortgagee. See Mahon v. Crothers, 28 N. J. Eq. 567; Cortleyeu v. Hathaway, 11 N. J. Eq. 86, 64 Am. Dec. 478; Trenton Bkg. Co. v. Woodruff, supra; Schreiber v. Carey, 48 Wis. 213; Hiles v. Moore, 15 Beav. 175; Rowe v. Wood, supra.

A prior mortgagee who has had possession of the mortgaged premises must account for rents and profits to the subsequent incumbrancer; but a subsequent incumbrancer in possession is not bound to account to the prior incumbrancer. Leeds v. Gifford, 4 Cent. Rep. 148, 41 N. J. Eq. 464.

A mortgagee out of possession of the mortgaged premises cannot be held accountable for the rents and profits thereof. Van Duyn v. Shann, 5 Cent. Rep. 118, 41 N. J. Eq. 311.

A mortgagee in rendering an account of the amount due on his mortgage is bound to use all reasonable efforts to make it just and correct; but having done so, an unintentional error, the result of accident or mistake, without culpable negligence, will not effect a forfeiture of his security. Gibbs v. Parsons, 2 New Eng. Rep. 912, 64 N. H. 66.

A mortgagee, either in possession or out of possession, is not entitled to purchase the mortgaged estate at a tax sale, and set up the tax title as against the mortgagor or other mortgagees. It is to be presumed that he made the purchase for the common protection. Hall v. Westcott, 2 New Eng. Rep. 887, 15 R. I. 373.

Purchaser at foreclosure sale.

The purchaser will acquire title to the fixtures as a part of the realty. Voorhees v. McGinnis, 48 N. Y. 278; Snedeker v. Warring, 12 N. Y. 170; Bishop v. L. R. A.

Bishop, 11 N. Y. 123, 62 Am. Dec. 66; Rice v. Dewey, 54 Barb. 455; Gardner v. Finley, 19 Barb. 317; Miller v. Plumb, 6 Cow. 665, 16 Am. Dec. 456; Robinson v. Preswick, 3 Edw. Ch. 246; Babcock v. Utter, 32 How. Pr. 430, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 27; Sullivan v. Toole, 26 Hun, 208; Main v. Schwarzwaelder, 4 R. D. Smith, 273; Sands v. Pfeiffer, 10 Cal. 258; Clore v. Lambert, 78 Ky. 224; Wight v. Gray, 78 Me. 297; Union Bank v. Emerson, 15 Mass. 159; Lackas v. Bahl, 43 Wis. 58.

The rules as to fixtures which pass to a purchaser on a mortgage foreclosure sale are the same as those which govern a conveyance from a grantor to a grantee. Snedeker v. Warring, supra. See Bishop v. Bishop, supra; Bank of Utica v. Finch, 3 Barb. Ch. 293, 299; Robinson v. Preswick and Main v. Schwarzwaelder, supra; Winslow v. Merchants Ins. Co. 4 Met. 308, 38 Am. Dec. 368; Union Bank v. Emerson, supra; Longstaff v. Meagoe, 2 Ad. & EL. 187.

The grantor of a mortgagor, subject to the mortgage, cannot retain possession against a purchaser under foreclosure. Chadwick v. Island Beach Co. 10 Cent. Rep. 863, 43 N. J. Eq. 616.

A bona fide purchaser at a foreclosure sale of a senior mortgage, to which junior mortgagees were not made parties, who takes possession of the land and makes lasting and valuable improvements thereon, is entitled to credit therefor in a suit against him by the junior mortgagees to require him to redeem, and should not be charged with the rental value of the premises during his possession. Higginbottom v. Benson, 24 Neb. 461.

Permanent improvements pass to purchaser.

All additions of a permanent character by way of improvement are regarded as part of the mortgaged estate and will inure to the benefit of the holder of the mortgage, and will pass to the purchaser on a foreclosure sale. Baird v. Jackson, 98 Ill. 78; Wood v. Whelen, 98 Ill. 157.

A house erected on the premises by the mortgagor becomes part of the realty and passes with it to the purchaser at the mortgage sale. Matzon v. Griffin, 78 Ill. 477; Dooley v. Crist, 25 Ill. 551.

A bona fide occupant under claim of title, who erects permanent and valuable improvements, is entitled to compensation, at least as a set-off, against meane profits; but knowledge or notice of adversary rights is fatal to the claim for compensation, and a mortgagee who repudiates the relation, or a purchaser from him with notice, is regarded as a wrong-doer, and is not entitled to compensation. Gresham v. Ware, 79 Ala. 192.

Pell v. Ulmar, 18 N. Y. 189; Craft v. Merrill, 14 N. Y. 456.

And in such case it seems that an entry by the mortgagee after condition broken, without actual force, is sufficient.

In Pell v. Ulmar, supra, it is said: "Formerly the mortgagee could maintain ejectment, but this is prohibited by the Revised Statutes. 2 Rev. Stat. p. 812, § 57. If, however, the mortgagee obtains possession without force, he is entitled as well since as before the Statute to hold it against the mortgagor." Van Duyne v. Thayer, 14 Wend. 288; Phyfe v. Riley, 15 Wend. 248; Watson v. Spence, 20 Wend. 260; Fox v. Lipe, 24 Wend. 164; Olmsted v. Elder, 2 Sandf. 325."

On the point under consideration these authorities are fully approved by the court.

It results, therefore, that while a mortgagee is not permitted to maintain a possessory action to recover the mortgaged premises by reason of the default of the mortgagor, still, if he can make a peaceable entry upon the mortgaged premises after condition broken, he may do so, and may maintain such possession against the mortgagor and every person claiming under him subsequent to the mortgage, subject to be defeated only by the payment of his debt. This view of the law in no manner interferes with the just rights of the mortgagor, and at the same time it does not sacrifice the interest of the mortgagee to the merest technicalities of the law, which have sometimes been permitted to prevail, and the mortgagee turned out of possession stripped both of the property and his mortgage debt as well.

2. Having reached the conclusion that George Cooper, at the time of the removal of the house mentioned in the pleadings, was a mortgagee in possession, he is not to be treated as a mere stranger would be, who went upon the land of another and placed improvements there without the consent of the owner. The rights of a mortgagee in possession, who had placed improvements on the mortgaged premises, came directly before the court in Taylor v. Townsend, 8 Mass. 411, where it was held that a mortgagee, after a recovery on a bill in equity by the mortgagor to redeem, and before possession taken under the judgment, may lawfully take down and carry away any buildings erected by him on the land mortgaged, the materials of which were his own, and not so connected with the soil that they cannot be removed without prejudice to it.

And Ellwell, on Fixtures, 237, says in reference to this case, that the same rule was here apparently applied as in the relation of landlord

Mortgagee as purchaser.

Where by statutory provision, or by the permission of the court, the mortgaged premises are purchased by the mortgagee or his assignee, such purchase does not extinguish the mortgage debt nor any balance that may remain unpaid. Holcomb v. Holcomb, 11 N. J. Eq. 281.

It does not necessarily follow that, by a mortgagee becoming the purchaser and taking title at the sale under the foreclosure, his mortgage is merged or extinguished in his legal title. Benedict v. Gilman, 4 Paige, 58; Parker v. Child, 25 N. J. Eq. 48; Forbes v. Moffatt, 18 Ves. Jr. 384, 394; Mocatta v. Murgatroyd, 1 P. Wms. 333; Hinchman v. Emans, 1 N. J. Eq. 100, 110; Gibson v. Crehore, 3 Pick. 475; Hunt v. Hunt, 14 Pick. 374, 384; Duncan v. Smith, 81 N. J. L. 325, 327; Mulford v. Peterson, 35 N. J. L. 127, 131; Clos v. Boppe, 23 N. J. Eq. 270; Thompson v. Chandler, 7 Me. 377, 380, 381; Cooper v. Martin, 1 Dana, 23; Vanderkemp v. Shelton, 11 Paige, 28.

The mortgagee as purchaser takes the title with notice of the defects, if any, in the foreclosure proceedings. Boyd v. Ellis, 11 Iowa, 97; Corriell v. Doolittle, 2 G. Greene (Iowa) 385, 389.

He cannot be heard to say that the sale is illegal or irregular where the holder of the subsequent mortgages and the mortgagor make no objection. Andrews v. O'Mahoney, 112 N. Y. 567.

Where he bid in the land on a judgment for more than the debt, he is liable to the person whose land was sold, and who elects to affirm the sale for the excess of the judgment over what he was entitled to. Mitchell v. Weaver, 118 Ind. 55.

Where he purchases on execution sale subject to this mortgage, the purchase money being paid by the debtor, and at the debtor's request conveyance is made to the wife of the debtor, the mortgagee does not thereby lose his right to foreclose his mortgage. Corbett v. Howell, 10 Ky. Law Rep. 793, 10 S. W. Rep. 653.

A mortgagee who becomes the purchaser on foreclosure is not entitled to ice cut by a lessee of the mortgagor before foreclosure although the house in which it was stored, the land on which the house was situated and the pond from which the ice was cut, were all sold under the mortgage. Gregory v. Rosenkrans, 72 Wis. 220.

7 L. R. A.

Removal of fixtures takes them out of the lien.

On a bill to foreclose a mortgage, where a building removed by the mortgagor in possession could not be returned to the mortgaged land, the remedy of the mortgagee is at law. Betz v. Verner (N. J.) 19 Atl. Rep. 208.

When buildings are severed from the mortgaged premises and become part of another freehold, the lien upon them is gone. Harris v. Bannon, 78 Ky. 568.

Where materials of a house were used in the construction of a house on other land, the right of property vested in the grantee of the land. Peirce v. Goddard, 22 Pick. 559.

And so where mill-stones were severed from the mill and sold by the mortgagor.

Where a house was floated off the lot by a flood, and sold, it was severed from the land and the lien thereon was lost. Buckout v. Swift, 27 Cal. 423.

Where property affixed to mortgaged land is severed and sold to a bona fide purchaser, it cannot be followed and reclaimed. Hutchins v. King, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 53 (17 L. ed. 544); Clark v. Reyburn, 1 Kan. 281; Gore v. Jenness, 19 Me. 53; Gowding v. Shea, 103 Mass. 360; Byrom v. Chapin, 118 Mass. 308; Kircher v. Schalk, 39 N. J. L. 335; Van Pelt v. McGraw, 4 N. Y. 110; Wilson v. Maltby, 59 N. Y. 126; Gardner v. Heartt, 3 Denio, 232; Lane v. Hitchcock, 14 Johns. 213; Kimball v. Darling, 32 Wis. 384; Citizens Bank v. Knapp, 22 La. Ann. 117; Codrington v. Johnstone, 1 Beav. 520; Fryatt v. Sullivan Co. 5 Hill, 116; Cooper v. Davis, 15 Conn. 556.

But opinions differ in determining the rights of parties when fixtures are severed from the mortgaged lands; so in Hoskin v. Woodward, 45 Pa. 42, it is said that while a mortgagor may sell things usually intended for consumption and sale, yet in the case of a factory or other building, from whose use as it is its profits are to be derived, the fixtures which are necessary to its operation cannot be severed.

Where a mortgagor moved a dwelling to an adjoining lot belonging to his wife, without the knowledge of the mortgagee, but with her knowledge, it was held that the lien on the dwelling-house remained. Hamlin v. Parsons, 12 Minn. 108.

and tenant, and to this we see no objection. This party owned the materials used in the construction of that house. He did not intend to part with their ownership. He acted in good faith in placing them on another's land while he was in the lawful possession under the belief that he owned the same, and upon the discovery of his mistake removed his structure from the land without injury to it and before he was ousted. I confess it is difficult to see the justice of a rule of law that could by mere construction thus take one man's property and give it to another, or, what seems still more repugnant to every sense of right, to compel a party to pay for his own property. But this is authority for carrying the principle of the right to remove even further.

In Tyler v. Decker, 10 Cal. 485, D. purchased a lot of land at sheriff's sale, on execution, and entered into possession, and erected certain buildings thereon, and afterwards removed the buildings. On the same day the buildings were removed the defendants in the execution sold the premises to T., and a day or two afterwards T. redeemed the lot from the sale and then brought suit against D. to recover the value of the buildings. Held, That, as there was no evidence that the buildings were attached to the soil, T. could not recover.

Little v. Willford, 81 Minn. 173, is a case where a party made a deed of certain lands to "the trustees of M. E. Church for Elgin Circuit," for a church building, upon which a building was erected, and, the title failing because no granters were named in the deed, it was held the building was property removable.

So in Wickliffe v. Clay, 1 Dana, 585, it was decided that where one was in possession of land held bona fide as his own, and had erected buildings thereon, he (or those claiming under him) might remove them without incurring any responsibility to the owner of the paramount title.

It was argued by counsel for the appellant that while it might be true that George Cooper would in equity have been entitled to claim compensation for the house placed on the land, or possibly have been entitled to retain the possession of the property until he had been paid for his improvements, as in Hatcher v. Briggs, 6 Or. 81, the right is purely equitable in its nature, and must be sought in that forum only. If George Cooper's heirs or legal representative were seeking compensation for betterments placed upon another's lands by him in his lifetime, no doubt appellant's contention might be sustained. If the improvements were of such a nature that they were not removable, such as grubbing, clearing land and the like, as in Hatcher v. Briggs, supra, then the only remedy open to him would be in equity, where complete relief would be administered on equitable principles; but when he has simply placed his own chattels on such lands under the honest belief that he owned such lands, and had reason so to believe, and acted in good faith in the matter, and upon the discovery of the true status of the title he removes such chattels, though they had been erected into a house, it is not perceived that he has in any manner injured the plaintiff, or that equity could be successfully invoked in such case. There is no occasion for the interposition of equity, for the reason that such party has exercised no right to remove his chattel, and he has no cause of suit against the owners of the land.

These conclusions lead to an affirmation of the judgment of the court below, and it is so ordered.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

William BEARD et al.

v.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. CO., Appt.

(....Iowa....)

1. A carrier's duty is not limited to the transportation of goods delivered for carriage. He must exercise such diligence as is required by law to protect the goods from destruction and injury from any source which may be averted, and which in the exercise of care and ordinary intelligence may be known or anticipated.
2. A carrier that has accepted butter for transportation cannot escape liability for damage to the butter from the heat during transportation, by the fact that it did not have refrigerator cars which were ready for use, at least when it could have been carried safely by the use of ice in the cars, which were used.
3. The sealing of a car containing butter when received from a connecting carrier is no excuse for failure to put ice in the car if necessary to protect the butter from the heat.
4. A custom to take cars from connecting carriers without changing the goods cannot be invoked to protect from negligence in failing to transport the goods with care.

7 L. R. A.

5. The rate of charges as shown by the way bill of butter, if it does not express a contract to excuse the carrier from the exercise of the care required by law, although it is the rate for common cars, will not limit the care to be exercised by the carrier, or restrict its liability.
6. A petition charging negligence of a carrier in not taking proper precautions to preserve butter will admit evidence of a custom to put the butter into cold storage until refrigerator cars are ready to receive it.
7. A carrier has the burden of proving that goods were not in good condition when received from a connecting carrier.

(February 10, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Cedar Rapids in favor of plaintiffs in an action to recover damages for injuries to certain butter while in defendant's possession for the purpose of transportation and alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Mills & Keeler, for appellant:

The St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute R. R. Co. was the agent of plaintiffs in turning over this butter to defendant.

It had full actual knowledge that the butter was to be, and would be, carried through to New Orleans without change, and in the manner in which it was actually forwarded, and impliedly so directed and consented on behalf of plaintiffs.

Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 45 Mich. 54; Patten v. Union Pac. R. Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 592; Snow v. Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. 109 Ind. 422.

Wetzel v. Chicago & Alton R. Co. 12 Mo. App. 599, is directly in point, and decisive against plaintiffs in this action.

The damage to this butter was caused by the ordinary action of the weather, and its own inherent tendency to damage by heat, for which the owner, and not the carrier is responsible.

Nelson v. Woodruff, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 156 (17 L. ed. 97); Warden v. Greer, 6 Watts, 424; Story, Bailm. par. 492 a, and cases; Lawson, Carr. p. 15, par. 14; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. L. p. 853 (7).

Plaintiffs had the burden of showing that the butter was in good condition when it came into defendant's possession.

Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Langton, 82 Mich. 251; Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Kirkwood, supra; Naugatuck R. R. Co. v. Beardsley Seytho Co. 83 Conn. 218.

Messrs. Rickel & Crocker, for appellees: Failure to open the seals, thereby failing to acquire any information that defendant might have acquired by doing so, was negligence.

Dixon v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 74 N. C. 588, 18 Am. R. R. Rep. 99.

Having accepted the goods the carrier cannot escape liability by claiming that he had not the means at hand at time of acceptance with which to safely forward them.

2 Am. & Eng. Encyp. L. p. 788; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Swift, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 262 (20 L. ed. 428); Hellinwell v. Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada, 7 Fed. Rep. 76.

A railroad company by the very act of accepting goods for transportation thereby enters into an implied undertaking to furnish such cars and exercise such diligence as may be necessary for their safe transportation.

Merchants Dispatch Transp. Co. v. Cornforth, 8 Colo. 290, 25 Am. Rep. 759; Wing v. New York & E. R. Co. 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 241; 2 Wood, Railway Law, p. 1582, §§ 429, 430; Ogdensburg R. Co. v. Pratt, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 123 (22 L. ed. 827); Hawkins v. Great Western R. Co. 17 Mich. 62, 18 Mich. 427; Sager v. Portsmouth, S. & P. & E. R. Co. 81 Me. 235.

If the carrier is informed that the goods are perishable, or should know it from the nature of the goods, the carrier is bound to use all reasonable precautions and means to prevent loss.

2 Parsons, Cont. 5th ed. p. 162; Hastings v. Pepper, 11 Pick. 41; Sager v. Portsmouth, S. & P. & E. R. Co. 81 Me. 228; Hawkins v. Great Western R. Co., Merchants Dispatch Transp. Co. v. Cornforth and Wing v. New York & E. R. Co. supra.

When property is perishable the law imposes a duty of the carrier to use diligence to guard it.

Hewitt v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 611.

It is a part of the common-law liability of the carrier in the selection of his vehicles to provide himself with those of the most approved modes of construction and such contrivances as are in approved use for the prevention of loss or damage to the goods he undertakes to carry.
7 L. R. A.

Boscovitz v. Adams Exp. Co. 98 Ill. 523, 34 Am. Rep. 191; Steinweg v. Erie R. Co. 43 N. Y. 127. See also Hutchinson, Carr. § 294.

The habit of a single railroad company does not constitute a legal custom of any character.

Lawson, Usages and Customs, p. 41; Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

If the "established and customary mode" defendant had of doing business with the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railway Company was negligent, it was no excuse in any event.

Hamilton v. Des Moines M. V. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 37; Horie v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 75 Iowa, 683; Allen v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 64 Iowa, 94; Cole v. Goodwin, 19 Wend. 251; Lawson, Usages and Customs, p. 187; Sumner v. Southern R. Asso. 7 Bart. 345, 9 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 18.

The presumption is that goods transported by several successive carriers came into possession of the last carrier in the same order and condition in which they were delivered to the first carrier, there being no direct evidence to the contrary.

Shriver v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. 24 Minn. 506, 31 Am. Rep. 855; Leo v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 30 Minn. 438; Laughlin v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 28 Wis. 204; Smith v. New York Cent. R. Co. 43 Barb. 225; Dixon v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 74 N. C. 588, 18 Am. R. R. Rep. 99; Hutchinson, Carr. § 761; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. L. p. 783; Brintall v. Saratoga & W. R. Co. 82 Vt. 665.

Beck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The plaintiff delivered to the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern Railway Company, at West Union, in two consignments, a large quantity of butter for transportation to New Orleans. The facts as to both separate consignments are identical. In the further statement of facts they will be referred to as but one transaction. The butter was put in refrigerator cars by the company first receiving it, and was transported therein over connecting roads to St. Louis, where it was transferred by drays across the river, and delivered to the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railway Company, known as the "Cairo Short-Line," and put in a common box car, and a lined fruit car, each of which was sealed, as is usually done, and sent on the same day to Duquoin, Ill., and delivered to defendant, which transported it to New Orleans in the same cars. The butter was not examined by defendant, and no attempt was made to ascertain its condition, on the probability that it could or would not be transported in the cars, without injury, to New Orleans. The Cairo Short-Line Company billed the butter to New Orleans at a rate of freight charged for common cars. It appears that the consignment took the usual course of transaction between defendant and the Cairo Short-Line, at Duquoin. It is not shown that plaintiff, the initial or connecting carrier, made any demand of defendant or the Cairo Short-Line Company for a refrigerator car, or for the protection of the butter from the effects of heat by the use of ice in the common car in which it was transported, and it is not shown that plaintiff, or the initial carrier, or the connecting companies to St. Louis, had any notice or information in any way, directly or indirectly, of the shipment of the butter without protection from the effects of the heat, nor did they have any notice or information of the practice and course of business adopted by defendant and the Cairo Short-Line at Duquoin. We are required to determine whether, under the law upon these facts, the defendant is liable. The discussion of this question will dispose of certain objections made by the counsel of defendant to the rulings of the court below upon instructions and admissions of evidence.

2. We will proceed to inquire as to the duty of defendant upon receiving the butter in a car from the Cairo Short-Line for transportation to New Orleans, without directions or instructions as to the character of the car in which it should be carried. A carrier's duty is not limited to the transportation of goods delivered for carriage. He must exercise such diligence as is required by law to protect the goods from destruction and injury resulting from conditions which, in the exercise of due care, may be averted or counteracted. He must guard the goods from destruction or injury by the elements; from the effects of delays; indeed, from every source of injury which he may avert, and which, in the exercise of care and ordinary intelligence, may be known or anticipated. Unknown causes, or those which are inherent in the nature of goods, and cannot be, in the exercise of diligence, averted, will not render the carrier liable. The nature of the goods must be considered in determining the carrier's duty. Some metals may be transported in open cars. Many articles of commerce, when transported, must be protected from rain, sunshine and heat, and must have cars fitted for their safe transportation. Live animals must have food and water, when the distance of transportation demands it. Fruit, and some other perishable articles, must be carried with expedition and protection from frost. So the carrier must attend to the character of the goods he transports. He is informed thereof by inspection of the freight bills, or by other papers accompanying the shipment.

In the case before us the marks on the package and the way-bill disclosed that the subject of shipment was butter. The employes of defendant were endowed with intelligence which taught them that the season was summer, when warm weather prevailed; that butter in common cars would be greatly injured by the ordinary heat of the climate; and that the butter, as it approached its destination, would be subject, by reason of the change of latitude, to greatly increased heat from the weather. All these things are familiarly known to all men. Surely, the law will presume that defendant's employes had full knowledge thereof. The law required the defendant, having received the perishable cargo involved in this suit, to exercise the care and diligence necessary to protect it; and if improved cars for the transportation of articles of commerce liable to injury from heat were in use, it was defendant's duty to use such cars in carrying the butter. These views are supported by the following, among other cases: Hewett v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 611; Sager v. Portsmouth, St. P. & E. R. Co. 81 Me. 228; Hawkins v. Great Western R. Co. 17 Mich. 62; Great Western R. Co. v. Hawkins, 18 Mich. 427; Ogdensburg R. Co. v. Pratt, 89 U. S. 23 Wall. 123 [23 L. ed. 827]; Wing v. New York & E. R. Co. 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 241; Merchants Dispatch Transp. Co. v. Cornforth, 8 Colo. 280.

As to the duty of defendant to use cars so constructed and used as to avoid injury from heat, see Hutch. Carr. § 294; Boscovits v. Adams Exp. Co. 98 Ill. 525; Steinweg v. Erie R. Co. 48 N. Y. 123.

3. But it is said (1) that defendant did not have refrigerator cars which it could have used on the day it received the butter; (2) that the cars were sealed; (3) that it was accustomed to haul the cars received from the Cairo Short-Line without changing the cargo. We may here assume that defendant will be excused from using refrigerator cars. But it is shown that the butter could have been carried safely by the use of ice in the box cars. It was defendant's duty to use it. But, having accepted the butter for transportation, defendant cannot escape liability for not safely transporting it, on the ground that it did not have cars sufficient for that purpose. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Swift, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 263 [20 L. ed. 428]; Hellivell v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 7 Fed. Rep. 76; Paramore v. Western R. Co. 53 Ga. 385.

The sealing of the car was not to protect it from defendant, the carrier having it under control. Surely, if it was necessary for the protection of the goods, defendant had full power to enter the car, and failure to exercise the power was negligence. Dixon v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 74 N. C. 538.

The custom of the defendant and Cairo Short-Line cannot be invoked to protect one or both from negligence causing destruction to goods transported by them. A custom to take cars without changing the goods in them when their safety demanded it would be a custom based upon negligence, and cannot be regarded or enforced. Hamilton v. Des Moines Valley R. Co. 36 Iowa, 81; Allen v. Burlington C. R. & N. R. Co. 64 Iowa, 95.

4. It is said that the rate of charges, as shown by the way-bill, was for common cars, and the defendant, therefore, undertook to furnish no other kind. If the freight charges fixed in the way-bill do not express a contract that the butter may be transported so as to destroy its value, and that the carrier is excused from the exercise of the care required of him by law, we think the freight charges in no case will limit the care to be exercised by the carrier, and restrict his liability. The defendant was not restricted, by the rate of freight charges named in the way-bill, from claiming and enforcing the payment of a just compensation for charges incurred on account of outlays made in order to safely transport the goods. Sumner v. Southern R. Assn. 7 Baxt. 345.

Many of the rulings of the district court upon the admission of evidence and instructions, objected to by defendant, are in accord with the views we have expressed.

5. Evidence was admitted, against defendant's objection, tending to show that a custom prevailed among carriers by railroads to put butter into cold storage, when refrigerator cars were not ready to receive it. This evidence was objected to on the ground that the petition contained no allegation of negligence by reason of the failure of defendant to put the butter into cold storage. But the petition does charge negligence on the part of the defendant in not taking proper precautions to preserve the butter. The evidence tends to show what precautions ought to have been taken in this case. Besides, the evidence serves to show that defendant's excuse for sending the butter in the common car, and for not retaining it until a refrigerator car on defendant's road came along, is not sufficient. It is shown that such a car was run on defendant's trains on two or three days each week.

6. The superior court, in the seventh instruction given, directed the jury that they could infer that the butter was in good order when received by defendant, from the fact that it was shipped in good condition, in a refrigerator car, for St. Louis. Of this instruction defendant complains. It is correct. The presumption arises that goods shipped in good order continue in that condition when in the hands of a connecting carrier. The burden rests on such carrier to show that they were not in good condition when received by him. Hutch. Carr. § 761; Shriver v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. 24 Minn. 506; Leo v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 30 Minn. 488; Laughlin v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 28 Wis. 204; Dizon v. Richmond R. Co. 74 N. C. 588; Paramore v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 53 Ga. 385.

7. The defendant, in its answer, set up as a defense that plaintiffs had fully compromised this claim for loss of the butter with preceding connecting carriers, transporting the butter to defendant. The court withdrew the issue upon this defense from the jury, on the ground that there was no evidence supporting the defense. Of this ruling the defendant now complains. The court, we think, ruled rightly. The evidence totally fails to show a settlement. The most that could be said is that the evidence shows propositions for settlements, and agreements to settle. But it is not shown, as is alleged in defendant's answer, that there was in fact a settlement and payment thereon, and a discharge of the claim. The action of the court in this regard is correct. The foregoing discussion disposes of all the questions requiring consideration in this opinion.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

John M. DAVIS, Admr., etc., of Clarence Davis, Deceased, Appt.,

ST. LOUIS, IRON MOUNTAIN & SOUTHERN R. CO.,

AND TWO OTHER CASES.

(....Ark.....)

1. The Act of 1883 (Mansf. Dig. §§ 5225, 5226) embodying the provisions of Lord Campbell's Act in regard to suits to recover damages for death resulting from the wrongful act, neglect or default of another, applies to all cases in which a recovery may be had under that Act regardless of the agency by which the injury was inflicted, and supersedes the Act of 1875 relating to suits for injuries by railway trains; hence such suits must be brought by the personal representative for the benefit of the widow and next of kin.

2. That Act does not take away the right which survives to the personal representative by § 5223, Mansf. Dig., to recover upon the cause of action for the injuries which accrued by the common law to the injured party in his lifetime; nor does it deprive a father of his right to maintain his common-law action for loss of services of his minor child. Therefore in the case of the death of a minor the three actions may be prosecuted at the same time and recoveries had in each and all of them.

3. In an action by a father to recover for the loss of services of his minor child by reason of injuries inflicted upon him by a third person, which result in his death, the recovery must be limited to the damages which accrued during the period between the injury and the death, and cannot embrace those accruing after the death occurred.

4. An employee does not, by entering the service, assume a risk of danger incident thereto, which by reason of his youth and inexperience he does not know or appreciate, and to which the employer exposes him without warning him of it.

5. Whether or not a youth employed in coupling cars had, or ought to have had, knowledge or appreciation of the danger incident to the use of guard rails with no blocking between them and the main rails is a question for the jury.

6. Although it is the duty of counsel to present their prayers for instructions to the court, the court should embody no more than the substance of them in the charge, and should not give them in extenso as requested, to the jury.

(April 5, 1890.)

APPEALS from judgments of the Circuit Court for White County in actions to recover damages alleged to have accrued from a death due to defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion. Messrs. Sanders & Watkins, for appellant:

The first cause of action was based upon § 5223, Mansf. Dig., and is simply the cause of action which accrued to the deceased by reason of the injury, and covered only the period from the injury to the death of the injured party. The Act providing for this cause of action has not been repealed.

Ward v. Blackwood, 41 Ark. 295.

A youth of immature years, inexperienced, and naturally and necessarily incapable of understanding and appreciating the dangers and

NOTE.—See also Crisack v. Merchants Woolen Co. (Mass.) 6 L. R. A. 732.

7 L. R. A.

risks incident to the service such as he was called on in this case to engage in, does not waive or assume the unknown hazards incident to his employment.

Jones v. Florence Min. Co. 66 Wis. 277; Sandborn v. Madera Plums Co. 70 Cal. 261; Russell v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 82 Minn. 283; Cook v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 84 Minn. 45, 82 Alb. L. J. 319; Smith v. Penninsular Car Works Co. 60 Mich. 502; Huhn v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 10 West. Rep. 405, 92 Mo. 440, 81 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 221; Hulehan v. Green Bay, W. & St. P. R. Co. 68 Wis. 520; Colbert v. Rankin, 72 Cal. 197; Kane v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 128 U. S. 91 (32 L. ed. 339); Franklin v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 37 Minn. 409; Snow v. Housatonic R. Co. 8 Allen, 441; Coombs v. New Bedford Cordage Co. 103 Mass. 572; Sullivan v. India Mfg. Co. 118 Mass. 396; Griezele v. Frost, 8 Fost. & F. 622; Gilman v. Eastern R. Co. 13 Allen, 438; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Fort, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 553 (21 L. ed. 789); Parkhurst v. Johnson, 50 Mich. 70; 8 Wood, Railways, note 2, p. 1488; 2 Thompson, Neg. 977; Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 338.

Messrs. Dodge & Johnson, for appellee:

Section 5223 of Mansfield's Digest was repealed by sections 5225 and 5226.

Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Townsend, 41 Ark. 888.

An administrator has no legal capacity under the laws of Arkansas to sue for the death of a minor, for the reason that under section 3 of the Act of February 3, 1875, that right devolved upon, and survived alone to the father, who was living at the time of the institution of the action.

See Lehigh Iron Co. v. Rupp, 100 Pa. 95, 7 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 25; Litchfield Coal Co. v. Taylor, 81 Ill. 590; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Yocum, 84 Ark. 493; Acts 1875, p. 183.

A suit by the father for such wrongful or negligent act bars all other actions, whether instituted by an administrator or other legal representative.

Sheldon, Subr. § 230; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Moore, 49 Tex. 31; Sibley v. Railiffe, 50 Ark. 477.

The knowledge of the employé, of the character of the guard rail, and his election to work with it in the condition in which it was constructed, bars all right of recovery for injuries resulting therefrom, for the reason that he assumes the risk as one of the usual hazards of the employment.

Wood v. Locke, 147 Mass. 605; Pingree v. Leyland, 135 Mass. 398; Moulton v. Gage, 138 Mass. 290; Leary v. Boston & A. R. Co. 139 Mass. 580; Taylor v. Carey Mfg. Co. 140 Mass. 150; Rains v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 71 Mo. 164, 5 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 610; Crutchfield v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 78 N. C. 800; Piquegno v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 52 Mich. 40, 13 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 210; Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 49 Mich. 184.

Cockrill, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These appeals involve three suits brought against the railway on account of an injury to a minor resulting in his death. Two are by the personal representative of the minor—one of them for the benefit of his estate, the other for the benefit of the next of kin. The third is an action by the father of the minor to recover for the loss of his son's services during his minority.

The question presented at the threshold of the cases is, Who can maintain action against a railroad for an actionable injury resulting in the death of a minor?

The answer involves a consideration of the common law and the statutes on this subject.

The cause of action which accrued to the injured party by the common law survives to his administrator after his death by virtue of a provision of the Revised Statutes of 1888, which is carried into Mansfield's Digest as section 5223.

The third section of the Act of February 3, 1875, prescribed that when a wife was killed by a railway train, the husband should sue; when a minor was killed, the father, mother or guardian should sue; in all other cases the suit was to be by the legal representative. Acts 1875, p. 183.

The Act applied only to injuries by the trains of railways.

In 1883 another Act upon the subject was passed, embodying in this particular the provisions of the English Statute of 9 and 10 Victoria, known as Lord Campbell's Act. Mansf. Dig. §§ 5225, 5226.

It contains no express repeal of either of the other provisions, and it is argued that as the Act of 1875 is a special Act relating only to railways, none of its provisions are abrogated by the subsequent General Act, but, unless it supersedes the Act of 1875 in so far as it affects this inquiry, the law is left in an anomalous condition. It would stand thus: If an actionable injury resulting in death should occur by an agency other than the trains of a railway, the widow and next of kin would enjoy the benefit of damages recovered therefor under the last Act; but if the injury was inflicted by the trains of a railway, the recovery would be solely for the benefit of the estate, because the last Act would not apply in such cases. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Townsend, 41 Ark. 882.

Again, a mother dependent upon her adult son for support could recover nothing for a culpable injury to him by the trains of a railway resulting in death, but could recover if the injury was inflicted by a natural person, a street railway or other corporation, or perhaps by a steam railway by other means than through its trains. We cannot attribute an intention to the Legislature to work out such a result. As if to dispel all doubt as to the intent to extend the benefits of the last Act to the widow and next of kin of the deceased in all classes of cases, the Act declares that it shall apply in every case where "the person who, or the company or corporation which," is liable for the injury, is sued. The reasonable construction of the Act is that it applies to all cases in which a recovery may be had regardless of the agency by which the injury was inflicted. Such has been the accepted construction of the Act by bench and bar without an express ruling on the point. See Fordyce v. McCants, 51 Ark. 509; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Townsend, supra.

The question then is, What is the effect of this Statute (Mansf. Dig. §§ 5225, 5226) upon the general provision (Id. 5223) regulating the survival of actionable wrongs to the administrator or executor of the injured person? We are not without authority upon the question. The English rule which is commonly followed by the courts of the States whose statutes embody the provisions of Lord Campbell's Act is that the right of action given by the latter Statute to the personal representative of one whose death has been caused by the default of another is created by the Statute, and is not a continuation of the right of action which the deceased had in his lifetime, although the new right, it has been ruled, arises only by preserving the cause of action which was in the deceased. If the deceased never had a cause of action none accrues to his representative or next of kin. The right which accrued to the deceased revives to his administrator by virtue of the former Statute (Manuf. Dig. § 5223); the newly created right results from an accrual on the death of the injured party. Both actions are prosecuted in the name of the personal representative where there is one, and may proceed pari passu without a recovery in the one having the effect of barring a recovery in the other, because the suits are prosecuted in different rights and the damages are given upon different principles to compensate different injuries. One is for the loss sustained by the estate and for the suffering from the personal injury in the lifetime of the decedent, the recovery in which goes to the benefit of the decedent's creditors, if there are any; the other takes no account of the wrongs done to the decedent, but is for the pecuniary loss to the next of kin, occasioned by the death alone. The death is the end of the period of recovery in one case and the beginning in the other. In one case the administrator sues as legal representative of the estate, for what belonged to the deceased; in the other he acts as trustee for those upon whom the Act confers the right of recovery for the pecuniary loss inflicted upon them. Blake v. Midland R. Co. 13 Q. B. 98; Pym v. Great Northern R. Co. 2 Best & S. 759; Barnett v. Lucas, 6 Ir. Rep. C. L. 247; Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294; Ansonia B. & C. Co. v. Babbitt, 74 N. Y. 896; Littlewood v. New York, 89 N. Y. 24; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Phillips, 64 Miss. 693; Hulbert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510; Fordyce v. McCants, supra.

The statutes under which the two actions are brought do not therefore cover the same ground; there is no repugnancy between them, and the latter does not impair the right conferred by the former. Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. supra; Com. v. Metropolitan R. Co. 107 Mass. 236.

We are aware that the cases are not harmonious to this effect. The conflicting arrays are marshaled in an elaborate article on the subject in 37 Am. Law Reg. pp. 385, 513. But the position assumed above is, as we conceive, sustained by principle and the weight of authority.

The same reasons which prevent the right given by the Statute to the next of kin from being exclusive of that which accrued to the decedent and survived to his administrator preserve the right of the father to maintain his common-law action against the railway for the deprivation of his minor child's services.

The Statute confers no right of recovery upon the father for the loss of services prior to the minor child's death, nor was it intended to deprive him of any right. Its object was to enable him, through the personal representative, to recover the value of the services of which he is deprived, just as he recovers for any other pecuniary loss which he sustains by the death.

But where the injury resulted in death, the father's right of recovery by the common law was limited to the interim between the disabling injury to the child and its death. His right of recovery was restricted to the value of the minor's services and the cost of medical attendance and nursing to the time of death. The right fell with the life of the minor. This was upon the theory that no civil action would lie for a right springing from the death of a human being. The application of the rule to a case like this has been ably contested and denied (see opinion by Judge Dillon in Sullivan v. Union Pac. R. Co. 8 Dill. 334), but the question is not an open one upon authority. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Barker, 38 Ark. 350; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Townsend, supra; Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Brame, 95 U. S. 754 [24 L. ed. 580]; The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199 [30 L. ed. 358]; Cooley, Torts, § 262.

It follows from these views that the court erred in dismissing the action prosecuted by the administrator for the benefit of the estate; and also in permitting the plaintiff in his suit as parent to recover the value of his minor son's services after the latter's death. Damages accruing from that cause could be recovered only in the suit by the administrator, prosecuted for the benefit of the father as next of kin. In that suit the verdict was for the railway company and we are asked to reverse it upon the ground that the court's charge to the jury is erroneous.

While the plaintiff's intestate, who was a youth eighteen years old and of limited experience in railway matters, was in the discharge of his duty in uncoupling the cars of one of the defendant's trains in its yard at Knob where he was employed, his foot caught in a space between the guard and main rails of the track, and he was injured by the moving train. The testimony was conflicting upon the question whether a block in the space where the boy's foot was caught could be used so as to lessen the hazard of the employé without enhancing the danger of derailing the trains.

The question for the jury's consideration was not whether the railway company was guilty of negligence in failing to block the space between the main and guard rails, because even if the failure to do that could upon the evidence adduced be found to constitute negligence (as to which see Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Loneragan, 118 Ill. 45, 6 West. Rep. 59; Rush v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 36 Kan. 129, 28 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 488 and note; Mayes v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 562; Huhn v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 10 West. Rep. 405, 92 Mo. 440, 31 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 221), the proof shows that the deceased continued in the service after he knew, or, what is the same thing, had full opportunity to know, that the rails were unblocked. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 333.

But service about the unblocked rails was attended with danger, and the knowledge of the fact that the rails were unblocked did not necessarily imply knowledge of the attendant danger. Knowledge of the danger was itself a question of fact, and if the jury believed that the deceased, by reason of his youth and inexperience, did not know of or appreciate the danger incident to service about the unblocked rails, and that the Company had exposed him to the danger without warning him of it, they should have found that the risk was not one he had assumed by entering the service. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 883; Fones v. Phillips, 89 Ark. 17; Bauer v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 46 Ark. 396; Jones v. Florence Min. Co. 66 Wis. 268.

It is useless to follow the charge on these points. The duty of the master to instruct the young and inexperienced servant so as to enable him to appreciate the danger attending the employment was submitted to the jury in an instruction given on behalf of the plaintiff, while the charge given at the instance of the defendant submitted the case as though there were no question of inexperience in the servant presented by the evidence. That was at least misleading and its tendency was to confuse the jury. But there was positive error in the charge in saying to the jury, in effect, that the intestate's knowledge of the fact that the rails were unblocked was knowledge of the attendant danger. Whether he had knowledge of or appreciated the danger or ought to have done so, was a question for the jury to determine upon the facts and circumstances shedding light upon the question. The charge is made up wholly of requests for instructions from the parties, and the two theories of the case presented by them are not so consistent and harmonious as to render it an easy task for the jury to determine where their duty lay. The fault is inherent in the practice of giving in charge to the jury the requests for instructions prepared by counsel. They are not uncommonly framed with a view to giving the greatest advantage to the side which presents them, and do not in that event tend to lighten the labors of the jury; and when they are accurately and fairly framed on both sides and involve no contradictions, the issues are presented in disconnected propositions of law which the jury will find more difficult to comprehend than in a charge presenting all the issues on a single phase of the case together in close contrast, and presenting the whole law of the case as emanating from the court without apparent instigation from either side. What can be a greater paradox in the administration of justice or more confounding to a jury than for a court to say to them, as is sometimes done, "For the plaintiff, the court declares the law to be thus; for the defendant, so, and on its own motion as follows," as though there were three sides to a single legal proposition between which the jury are at liberty to choose?

It is the duty of counsel to present their prayers for instructions in order to aid the court and to show their position in the case on appeal, but the better rule for the court would be to treat the request only as counsel's suggestions of what they desire the court to call the jury's attention to, and to embody no more than the substance of them in the charge.

The records of this court bear abundant testimony of the success of this practice at the hands of the learned and usually careful and painstaking judge who tried this cause. The practice of making up the charge from the requests for instructions prepared by counsel leads to the constantly recurring argument in this court that the charge to the jury is inconsistent and misleading and has resulted in the remanding of many causes, and perhaps in the miscarriage of justice in many others by the indulgence of the presumption that the jury was able to reconcile the apparent inconsistencies or penetrate the obscurities of the charge.

For the errors indicated each of the judgments will be reversed, and the causes remanded for further proceedings.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Dwight PIERCE

v.

Frank H. WHITTLESEY, Appel.

(58 Conn. 104.)

1. An agreement between an employer and employe that either shall forfeit two weeks' wages by terminating the employment without two weeks' notice thereof, is not unreasonable, and is not affected by Gen. Stat., § 1748, imposing a penalty upon an employer who withholds any part of the wages of any person because of any agreement requiring notice before leaving the employment. Two weeks' wages of the employe quitting without notice being forfeited are not due him, and therefore a refusal to pay them is not a withholding of any part of his wages.

NOTE.

Substantial breach of contract resulting in more than nominal damages to the other party must
7 L. R. A.

2. Where one employed under a valid contract, providing that in case he leaves the service without giving two weeks' notice he shall forfeit two weeks' wages, leaves without giving the required notice and sues to recover the wages forfeited, such forfeiture may be relied on as a defense, although no special damage is alleged or shown.

(December 16, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Hartford County in favor of plaintiff, upon appeal from a justice of the peace, in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due for the rendition of certain personal services. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. J. W. Johnson for appellant.

Mr. M. M. O'Sullivan for appellee.

exist before liability attaches to pay liquidated damages. Hathaway v. Lynn (Wis.) 6 L. R. A. 551.

Carpenter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action by an assignee of a claim for personal services. The answer is that Thomas Nolan, the assignor of the claim, entered the employment of the defendant in June, 1888, under an agreement that if he should at any time desire to leave the employment of the defendant, he should give him two weeks' notice thereof; and that in case he should leave his employment without giving two weeks' notice of his intention to do so, he should forfeit two weeks' wages to the defendant; and it was also agreed that the defendant should give Nolan two weeks' notice if he desired to dismiss him from his employment, and in case he failed to give such notice he should forfeit to him two weeks' wages; that he entered into the employment of the defendant and there remained until October 16, 1888, when he left without giving two weeks' notice and without just cause; and that the two weeks' wages claimed by the plaintiff are the same two weeks' wages forfeited by him, etc.

The plaintiff denied all the allegations in the answer. On that issue the cause was tried in the court below, and the allegations of the answer found true, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff on the ground that it did not appear, and was not alleged, that the defendant had suffered damages from Nolan's leaving his employment without notice. The defendant appealed to this court.

Questions of pleading and practice are raised, but we pass them and will consider the case and dispose of it upon its merits. The case was submitted without oral argument, counsel for the defendant filing a printed brief and counsel for the plaintiff filing no brief. The defendant's counsel proceeds upon the theory that the defense was held insufficient by reason of the Statute (§ 1748, Gen. Stat.), while it may be fairly inferred from the record that the court overruled the defense for the reason that no special damage was alleged or shown.

Considering the case in either aspect, or in both, we are constrained to say that we think the court erred.

The section of the Statute referred to is as follows: "Any person or corporation who shall withhold any part of the wages of any person, because of any agreement, expressed or implied, requiring notice before leaving the employment, shall forfeit fifty dollars, half to him who shall sue therefor and half to the State."

Here a penalty is prescribed for doing an act; hence the act is impliedly prohibited. What is the act? Simply withholding payment for the reason given. A contract requiring notice is lawful, as there is no penalty imposed for making it. It is withholding wages that comes under the consideration of the Statute, and not the making of the contract. Such a contract may be made and enforced, if it can be done without withholding wages.

The spirit of the Act, and perhaps its letter, forbids the setting up of the broken agreement as a defense to an action for wages; that would be using such agreement as a means of withholding payment.

The distinction between resisting an action for wages and bringing an action for damages is not new. Hunt v. The Otis Co. 4 Met. 464, 7 L. R. A.

decided in 1842, turned on that distinction. But it was not alone, or principally, for cases in court that the Act was passed. A refusal to pay for the reason given by the Statute, either with or without a suit, is an offense. If this case was defended solely on the ground of a broken agreement to give notice, it would be difficult to deliver it from the operation of the Statute. But the agreement is more extensive. It is coupled with a like agreement by the defendant. Each party makes precisely the same agreement. Each party agrees to give the same notice, and in case of failure to submit to the same forfeiture—Nolan to lose two weeks' wages, and the defendant to pay two weeks' wages in addition to payment for services actually rendered. In this there was nothing oppressive, one-sided, unfair or unreasonable. Presumptively it was mutually advantageous. Whatever may be said of a unilateral obligation by an employe, it can hardly be said that the Legislature intended to prohibit a fair and reasonable agreement in which both parties assume the same obligation.

Even if it be conceded that such legislation would be constitutional, we should expect to find the intent expressed in direct and unequivocal language. We cannot give language of doubtful import any such effect by implication or construction.

The Act was passed for the benefit of the employe—to protect him against injustice and oppression. So far as effect can be given to that intention without violating important principles, it is well. In cases of a mere promise by an employe to give notice of his intention to terminate a contract, the Legislature may well say that the employer shall not take advantage of it to withhold wages, and the courts may well enforce the restriction. But when it is a mutual agreement on equal terms another principle is to be considered. Let us illustrate by a supposed case. If the defendant had discharged Nolan without giving the agreed notice, and Nolan had brought a suit to recover the two weeks' wages agreed to be forfeited, is it not clear that the defendant could not have set up this Statute as a defense? The agreement and the acts of the parties are neither within the letter nor spirit of the Act. If the Statute does not annul the agreement as to one, why should it as to the other? If it does, it makes the contract void as to one, leaving it in force as to the other—a result which the Legislature could not have intended.

But the contract is not only mutual, but it covers ground otherwise not contemplated by the Statute. It provides in direct terms that a violation by either party shall work a forfeiture of two weeks' wages—that is, they agree upon the amount of damages in case of a breach—liquidated damages. It is not an extravagant sum, it is moderate and reasonable; large enough to insure a probable compliance, and not large enough to make it inequitable to enforce it. Besides, the duty required is light, imposing no hardship, so that the forfeiture can be easily avoided. With such a contract it cannot be said that wages were withheld because of a mere agreement to give notice. They were withheld because Nolan in a fair contract upon a sufficient consideration agreed to relinquish them. By their contract no fact that the rails were unblocked did not necessarily imply knowledge of the attendant danger. Knowledge of the danger was itself a question of fact, and if the jury believed that the deceased, by reason of his youth and inexperience, did not know of or appreciate the danger incident to service about the unblocked rails, and that the Company had exposed him to the danger without warning him of it, they should have found that the risk was not one he had assumed by entering the service. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 889; Fones v. Phillips, 89 Ark. 17; Bauer v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 46 Ark. 396; Jones v. Florence Min. Co. 66 Wis. 288.

It is useless to follow the charge on these points. The duty of the master to instruct the young and inexperienced servant so as to enable him to appreciate the danger attending the employment was submitted to the jury in an instruction given on behalf of the plaintiff, while the charge given at the instance of the defendant submitted the case as though there were no question of inexperience in the servant presented by the evidence. That was at least misleading and its tendency was to confuse the jury. But there was positive error in the charge in saying to the jury, in effect, that the intestate's knowledge of the fact that the rails were unblocked was knowledge of the attendant danger. Whether he had knowledge of or appreciated the danger or ought to have done so, was a question for the jury to determine upon the facts and circumstances shedding light upon the question. The charge is made up wholly of requests for instructions from the parties, and the two theories of the case presented by them are not so consistent and harmonious as to render it an easy task for the jury to determine where their duty lay. The fault is inherent in the practice of giving in charge to the jury the requests for instructions prepared by counsel. They are not uncommonly framed with a view to giving the greatest advantage to the side which presents them, and do not in that event tend to lighten the labors of the jury; and when they are accurately and fairly framed on both sides and involve no contradictions, the issues are presented in disconnected propositions of law which the jury will find more difficult to comprehend than in a charge presenting all the issues on a single phase of the case together in close contrast, and presenting the whole law of the case as emanating from the court without apparent instigation from either side. What can be a greater paradox in the administration of justice or more confounding to a jury than for a court to say to them, as is sometimes done, "For the plaintiff, the court declares the law to be thus; for the defendant, so, and on its own motion as follows," as though there were three sides to a single legal proposition between which the jury are at liberty to choose?

It is the duty of counsel to present their prayers for instructions in order to aid the court and to show their position in the case on appeal, but the better rule for the court would be to treat the request only as counsel's suggestions of what they desire the court to call the jury's attention to, and to embody no more than the substance of them in the charge.

The records of this court bear abundant testimony of the success of this practice at the hands of the learned and usually careful and painstaking judge who tried this cause. The practice of making up the charge from the requests for instructions prepared by counsel leads to the constantly recurring argument in this court that the charge to the jury is inconsistent and misleading and has resulted in the remanding of many causes, and perhaps in the miscarriage of justice in many others by the indulgence of the presumption that the jury was able to reconcile the apparent inconsistencies or penetrate the obscurities of the charge.

For the errors indicated each of the judgments will be reversed, and the causes remanded for further proceedings.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Dwight PIERCE
v.

Frank H. WHITTLESEY, Appd.

(58 Conn. 104.)

1. An agreement between an employer and employe that either shall forfeit two weeks' wages by terminating the employment without two weeks' notice thereof, is not unreasonable, and is not affected by Gen. Stat., § 1748, imposing a penalty upon an employer who withholds any part of the wages of any person because of any agreement requiring notice before leaving the employment. Two weeks' wages of the employe quitting without notice being forfeited are not due him, and therefore a refusal to pay them is not a withholding of any part of his wages.

NOTE.

Substantial breach of contract resulting in more than nominal damages to the other party must
7 L. R. A.

2. Where one employed under a valid contract, providing that in case he leaves the service without giving two weeks' notice he shall forfeit two weeks' wages, leaves without giving the required notice and sues to recover the wages forfeited, such forfeiture may be relied on as a defense, although no special damage is alleged or shown.

(December 18, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Hartford County in favor of plaintiff, upon appeal from a justice of the peace, in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due for the rendition of certain personal services. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. J. W. Johnson for appellant.

Mr. M. M. O'Sullivan for appellee.

exist before liability attaches to pay liquidated damages. Hathaway v. Lynn (Wis.) 6 L. R. A. 551.

Carpenter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action by an assignee of a claim for personal services. The answer is that Thomas Nolan, the assignor of the claim, entered the employment of the defendant in June, 1888, under an agreement that if he should at any time desire to leave the employment of the defendant, he should give him two weeks' notice thereof; and that in case he should leave his employment without giving two weeks' notice of his intention to do so, he should forfeit two weeks' wages to the defendant; and it was also agreed that the defendant should give Nolan two weeks' notice if he desired to dismiss him from his employment, and in case he failed to give such notice he should forfeit to him two weeks' wages; that he entered into the employment of the defendant and there remained until October 16, 1888, when he left without giving two weeks' notice and without just cause; and that the two weeks' wages claimed by the plaintiff are the same two weeks' wages forfeited by him, etc.

The plaintiff denied all the allegations in the answer. On that issue the cause was tried in the court below, and the allegations of the answer found true, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff on the ground that it did not appear, and was not alleged, that the defendant had suffered damages from Nolan's leaving his employment without notice. The defendant appealed to this court.

Questions of pleading and practice are raised, but we pass them and will consider the case and dispose of it upon its merits. The case was submitted without oral argument, counsel for the defendant filing a printed brief and counsel for the plaintiff filing no brief. The defendant's counsel proceeds upon the theory that the defense was held insufficient by reason of the Statute (§ 1748, Gen. Stat.), while it may be fairly inferred from the record that the court overruled the defense for the reason that no special damage was alleged or shown.

Considering the case in either aspect, or in both, we are constrained to say that we think the court erred.

The section of the Statute referred to is as follows: "Any person or corporation who shall withhold any part of the wages of any person, because of any agreement, expressed or implied, requiring notice before leaving the employment, shall forfeit fifty dollars, half to him who shall sue therefor and half to the State."

Here a penalty is prescribed for doing an act; hence the act is impliedly prohibited. What is the act? Simply withholding payment for the reason given. A contract requiring notice is lawful, as there is no penalty imposed for making it. It is withholding wages that comes under the consideration of the Statute, and not the making of the contract. Such a contract may be made and enforced, if it can be done without withholding wages.

The spirit of the Act, and perhaps its letter, forbids the setting up of the broken agreement as a defense to an action for wages; that would be using such agreement as a means of withholding payment.

The distinction between resisting an action for wages and bringing an action for damages is not new. Hunt v. The Otis Co. 4 Met. 464, 7 L. R. A.

decided in 1842, turned on that distinction. But it was not alone, or principally, for cases in court that the Act was passed. A refusal to pay for the reason given by the Statute, either with or without a suit, is an offense. If this case was defended solely on the ground of a broken agreement to give notice, it would be difficult to deliver it from the operation of the Statute. But the agreement is more extensive. It is coupled with a like agreement by the defendant. Each party makes precisely the same agreement. Each party agrees to give the same notice, and in case of failure to submit to the same forfeiture—Nolan to lose two weeks' wages, and the defendant to pay two weeks' wages in addition to payment for services actually rendered. In this there was nothing oppressive, one-sided, unfair or unreasonable. Presumptively it was mutually advantageous. Whatever may be said of a unilateral obligation by an employé, it can hardly be said that the Legislature intended to prohibit a fair and reasonable agreement in which both parties assume the same obligation.

Even if it be conceded that such legislation would be constitutional, we should expect to find the intent expressed in direct and unequivocal language. We cannot give language of doubtful import any such effect by implication or construction.

The Act was passed for the benefit of the employé—to protect him against injustice and oppression. So far as effect can be given to that intention without violating important principles, it is well. In cases of a mere promise by an employé to give notice of his intention to terminate a contract, the Legislature may well say that the employer shall not take advantage of it to withhold wages, and the courts may well enforce the restriction. But when it is a mutual agreement on equal terms another principle is to be considered. Let us illustrate by a supposed case. If the defendant had discharged Nolan without giving the agreed notice, and Nolan had brought a suit to recover the two weeks' wages agreed to be forfeited, is it not clear that the defendant could not have set up this Statute as a defense? The agreement and the acts of the parties are neither within the letter nor spirit of the Act. If the Statute does not annul the agreement as to one, why should it as to the other? If it does, it makes the contract void as to one, leaving it in force as to the other—a result which the Legislature could not have intended.

But the contract is not only mutual, but it covers ground otherwise not contemplated by the Statute. It provides in direct terms that a violation by either party shall work a forfeiture of two weeks' wages—that is, they agree upon the amount of damages in case of a breach—liquidated damages. It is not an extravagant sum, it is moderate and reasonable; large enough to insure a probable compliance, and not large enough to make it inequitable to enforce it. Besides, the duty required is light, imposing no hardship, so that the forfeiture can be easily avoided. With such a contract it cannot be said that wages were withheld because of a mere agreement to give notice. They were withheld because Nolan in a fair contract upon a sufficient consideration agreed to relinquish them. By their contract no wages were due, and therefore there were none to pay, strictly speaking none to withhold. The case is not within the letter, and it certainly is not within the spirit, of the Statute.

The ground on which the court placed its judgment is equally untenable, and partly for reasons already suggested. It virtually puts into the contract what the parties did not place there—that a breach should entitle the other party to such damages only as he could show that he actually sustained; whereas the parties in effect agreed that a sum equal to two weeks' wages should be regarded as liquidated damages.

There is error and the judgment is reversed.

In this opinion the other Judges concurred.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

TERRITORY OF IDAHO, Resp't.,

v.

Thomas EVANS, Impleaded, etc., Appt.

(....Idaho....)

*Section 7193, Rev. Stat., prohibiting the exportation of fish from this Territory, being in conflict with § 8, art. 1, of the Constitution of the United States, providing for the regulation by Congress of commerce between the States, is void.

(February 24, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Bingham County convicting him of a violation of the Statute against shipping fish from the Territory. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. Hawley & Reeves for appellant. Mr. R. Z. Wood, Atty-Gen., for respondent.

Beatty, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, Thomas Evans, was indicted with George Rae for a violation of section 7193 of the Revised Statutes of Idaho, as same is amended by Act of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly, which, as amended, reads: "It is unlawful for any person in this Territory to make any dam, or use any nets, seines, fish-traps or any similar device or measures for catching fish, or to ship the same out of this Territory for speculative purposes." The appellant, Evans, alone, was tried upon this charge, and from the judgment rendered against him upon his conviction thereof he has appealed to this court. While the record contains various specifications of alleged error, the appellant has in his argument of the cause referred to but two, viz.: That the Statute does not prohibit the exportation of fish, and, if it does, it is in violation of § 8, art. 1, of the Constitution of the United States.

It is true the Statute does not read as it undoubtedly was intended it should, and it is surprising that it passed unchallenged the ordeal of six readings in the presence of careful legislators. Construed as it reads, it prohibits the exportation from this Territory only of dams, and the use of nets, fish-traps, and other devices for catching fish, and not the nets, fish-traps, etc., themselves. As dams cannot be shipped, and the use of a thing is an incorporeal right, this Statute, if construed by its words, undertakes to prevent the performance of an impossibility; hence, in effect, is void. Conceding, however, that it may be construed to prohibit the exportation of fish, as the Legislature undoubtedly designed it, is it in violation of the section referred to of the supreme law of the land? This question was involved in the court below, in the demurrer to the indictment, on the exceptions to the instructions, and in the motion for arrest of judgment, and is saved by appellant's exception to the ruling of the court in those matters.

The provision of § 8, art. 1, of the Constitution of the United States, that "Congress shall have power . . . to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States," having been so frequently and fully considered by the ablest, including the highest, courts in the nation, it will not be expected we shall, to any length, now attempt its discussion. It is clearly settled and conceded by all, that the above provision of the Constitution confers upon Congress the exclusive power to regulate commerce between the States, and any statute which attempts to prohibit the shipment into or out of a State of any lawful commodities or articles of commerce or trade is in conflict therewith, and necessarily void. To each State is reserved the power of regulating commerce within its borders, but not that extending across its boundary lines. The State may also, under its police power, enact such laws as are necessary to the protection of the lives, the health and comfort of its citizens, and for the promotion of good order within its limits. But whenever, under the pretence of an exercise of its police power, the State enacts any statute which operates to prevent the free exchange between the States of lawful articles of trade, it is void because in conflict with that constitutional provision. This is clearly illustrated in a number of recent and interesting cases.

Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 438 [24 L. ed. 539], is a case in which the State of Missouri, under the claim of exercising its police prerogative, and to prevent the spread of contagious cattle disease in the State, enacted a Statute forbidding the unloading of Texas cattle within the State, but allowing their passage through it on board of cars or vessels. The court held that cattle were subjects of lawful commerce, and could not be excluded, except when diseased; that the Statute practically operated, not in the exclusion of diseased cattle alone, but of all Texas cattle, and was void. The business of butchering cattle, and shipping the dressed fresh meat into the surrounding States from the place of slaughter, has in recent years become an important pursuit, but one which came in conflict with local dealers. To prevent this, Statutes were enacted in several of the western States, purporting to be in pursuance of their police power, and to promote the health of their inhabitants by preventing the importation of diseased meat. They required that all animals should be inspected within twenty-four hours before their slaughter, and the sale of meat of animals not so inspected should be prohibited. The courts have uniformly held that such statutes are not within the police power of the State, and that, whatever their design, they operate as a prohibition to the importation of dressed meat, which is a lawful article of trade; and whenever these Statutes have come before the courts for consideration, they have been held void. The following cases on this subject will be found of interest, and in them the whole subject is fully reviewed: Swift v. Sulphur, 39 Fed. Rep. 630; Re Barber, Id. 641; Re Christian, Id. 630; Harvey v. Huffman, Id. 646; Ex parte Kieffer, 40 Fed. Rep. 400.

*Head note by BEATTY, Ch. J.

In the State of Indiana a statute prohibiting the exportation of natural gas from the State through pipes has, upon the same principle, recently been held void. The State of Kansas has had a statute to prevent the shipment therefrom of fowls and other game. For a violation of this, an express agent was indicted for shipping to Chicago four prairie chickens. The Act only prevented the exportation of chickens, and did not prevent their capture and use by the denizens of Kansas, but seemed rather to preserve them for their exclusive use and comfort. It was held void in State v. Saunders, 19 Kan. 123.

By the law of this Territory we recognize fish as a lawful article of trade. The Statute only attempts to preserve them for us, and to deprive our neighbors of their use, which, in the light of the authorities, we must conclude is in violation of the constitutional provision referred to, and therefore void.

It follows that the demurrer to the indictment above referred to should be sustained, and it is therefore ordered that the judgment appealed from be set aside, and the indictment dismissed.

Berry, J.:

I concur that the Act, so far as it prohibits the shipping of fish out of this Territory for speculative purposes, is unconstitutional. I think the Statute is not against the shipping of dams, etc., but is against shipping of fish only.

Sweet, J., concurs.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS (2d Div.)

David NEWMAN, Resp't.,
v.

METROPOLITAN ELEVATED R. CO. et al., App'ls.

(.....N. Y. ....)

1. The benefits which will accrue to

NOTE.—Elevated railroad; benefits considered on assessment of damages to abutting owner.

On the establishment of a street private rights of access to adjacent property attach, as well as an uninterrupted right to light and air. South Car. R. Co. v. Steiner, 44 Ga. 546; Chicago v. Union Bldg. Assn. 102 Ill. 379; Denver v. Bayer, 7 Colo. 113; Lexington & O. R. Co. v. Appleton, 8 Dana, 289; Transylvania University v. Lexington, 3 B. Mon. 27; Elizabethtown & L. R. Co. v. Combs, 10 Bush, 382; Rensselaer v. Leopold, 106 Ind. 29; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Eberle, 110 Ind. 542, 9 West. Rep. 206; Grand Rapids & L. R. Co. v. Helsel, 38 Mich. 62; Lackland v. North Mo. R. Co. 31 Mo. 180; Thurston v. St. Joseph, 51 Mo. 510; Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Reinhackle, 15 Neb. 279; People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188; Kellinger v. 42d St. R. Co. 50 N. Y. 206; Crawford v. Delaware, 7 Ohio, 459; Jackson v. Jackson, 16 Ohio, 163; Anderson v. Turbeville, 6 Coldw. 150.

The rights of abutters on streets are subject to the use of the public, only for the purposes of a highway, and any interference for other purposes is a taking of private property, and a damage to the extent of such interference. Shawneetown v. Mason, 82 Ill. 337; Buchner v. Chicago, M. & N. W. R. Co. 60 Wis. 264; Story v. New York Elevated R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122.

Where the fee of land has been taken by the city in trust to be kept open and used as a public street, no structure can be authorized which is inconsistent with its use as a public open street, even if the obstruction be to the crossing of light and air. Doyle v. Lord, 64 N. Y. 432.

An abutting owner is entitled to have the whole property by reason of the construction of a railroad must necessarily be considered in determining the amount of the consequential damages to be allowed to its owner on account of such construction, and their consideration for such purpose is not prohibited by the statute which forbids commissioners in determining the compensation to be made to owners of property acquired space occupied by a street, open from the soil upward to the free admission of light and air and the prospect unobstructed from any point. Codman v. Evans, 5 Allen, 308.

The right to the enjoyment of the unobstructed passage of light and air is so essential that it exists by a law common to the whole civilized world. Barnett v. Johnson, 15 N. J. Eq. 499. See Stevens v. Paterson & N. R. Co. 34 N. J. L. 564.

The right of abutting owners in such cases was first passed upon in the case of Story v. New York Elevated R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, 11 Abb. N. C. 236, and this case has been followed in Tiffany v. United States Ill. Co. 67 How. Pr. 73, and Peyser v. New York Elevated R. Co. 12 Abb. N. C. 276, where it was held that the rule applies where the street is held by the city in trust for public use as a highway, as well as where the fee, subject to such easement, is in the abutting owners.

That special benefits only may be set off against both the value of the part taken and the damages to the remainder is a doctrine maintained by the courts of the following States: Connecticut, Kansas, Maine, Minnesota, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and Vermont. Lewis, Em. Dom. § 469.

Special benefits are such as affect the actual use and enjoyment of property and thereby render it more valuable. Id. § 476.

Condemnation advantages and disadvantages considered in condemnation proceedings. See notes to San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Neale (Cal.) 8 L. R. A. 83; Leroy & Western R. Co. v. Ross (Kan.) 3 L. R. A. 217.

for the construction of railroads to make any allowance or deduction on account of any real or supposed benefits which the party in interest may derive from the construction of the proposed road.

2. The damages to abutting property owners by reason of the destruction of their easements for ingress and egress to and from a public street and the free circulation of light and air therefrom to their property by the construction of an elevated railroad in such street, are entirely consequential; and in determining the amount to be awarded therefor the jury may consider the benefits as well as the injuries resulting from such construction.

3. In an action by a lessee of property abutting upon a street through which an elevated railroad is constructed to recover damages for the permanent impairment of his easement in the street for light, air and access, the general appreciation of the value of property consequent upon such improvement cannot be considered as it belongs to the property owner, but special and peculiar advantages which tend to increase the rental value of the property are elements which the jury must consider in determining the amount of their award.

(March, 1890.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of the New York Circuit in favor of plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for a new trial in an action by a lessee of property abutting on a street through which an elevated railroad was constructed to recover damages for the permanent injuries to his easements therein. Reversed.

Statement by Brown, J.:

Appeal from a judgment of the General Term of the First Judicial Department affirming a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff upon a verdict and affirming an order denying a motion for a new trial.

At the commencement of this action the plaintiff held a lease of property situated upon the northwest corner of Church and Rector Streets, in the City of New York. The lease bore date May 1, 1877, and was for the term of fifteen years with a right of renewal for an additional term of ten years. Upon the property there was a brick building five stories in height, the first floor of which was used as a restaurant, and the other floors for dwellings.

The Metropolitan Elevated Railway was constructed through Church Street in front of said premises, and in Rector Street there had been erected by the defendants a station from which a covered platform ran to Greenwich Street, and there connected with the Ninth Avenue Elevated Road.

The plaintiff claimed in his complaint that the defendants' structure interfered with the ingress and egress to and from his premises, and also impaired the circulation of light and air from the street to his building, and deprived him of its customary and lawful use, and greatly reduced its value to him as lessee.

It was admitted that the action was brought and tried as to one to recover in one sum the whole damage sustained and to be sustained from the depreciation of the plaintiff's estate, on the assumption that the defendant's structure caused a permanent impairment of the easements in the street for light, air and access.

The court having charged the jury that "the damage to plaintiff's leasehold was to be measured by the depreciation of rents caused by defendant's structure in depriving the premises of the accustomed light, air and access which it had had before said structure was placed thereon," and that in considering the question of damages "the fact that real estate had risen generally in that district of the city, did not relieve the Railroad Company from the element of damage," was requested by the defendants to charge as follows: "That in estimating the damages to the leasehold interest in this plaintiff caused by the interference by the defendants with the light, air and access appurtenant to the premises, the jury may take into consideration any benefits peculiar to his house which have arisen by the construction of the road as shown by the evidence." To this the court replied: "That I refuse to charge. On the contrary, the jury have no right to take any such fact into consideration."

The defendants gave evidence tending to show, and from which the jury might have found, that while the upper parts of the building had been made less desirable for dwellings by reason of the erection of defendant's structure, and in consequence thereof the rents had fallen, the location of the station in Record Street had, from the greater number of people resorting there, caused the first or store floor of the building to become more desirable for business purposes, and greatly enhanced in rental value.

Messrs. W. Bourke Cockran, Julien T. Davies and Edward S. Rapallo, for appellants:

"Just compensation" does not exclude the consideration of special benefits in the estimation of consequential damages.

Rexford v. Knight, 15 Barb. 627; Betts v. Williamsburgh, Id. 255; Granger v. Syracuse, 28 How. Pr. 808; Genet v. Brooklyn, 99 N. Y. 298.

The plaintiff can recover only consequential damages to his lease, which can only be estimated by taking into consideration all the consequences, beneficial or injurious, of the taking of the condemned portion of the parcel, to wit, so much of plaintiff's easements as have been interfered with or destroyed.

Drucker v. Manhattan R. Co. 106 N. Y. 157.

The clauses in the 16th section of the General Railroad Act relating to the non-allowance of benefits, while providing that no benefits shall be considered as offsetting the value of property taken, cannot be reasonably construed to prevent the consideration of benefits in estimating consequential damages.

Gould v. Hudson River R. Co. 6 N. Y. 558; Canandaigua R. Co. v. Payne, 16 Barb. 278; Albany R. Co. v. Lansing, 16 Barb. 68; Cooley, Const. Lim. *565; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 471; Setzler v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 113 Pa. 56; Bangor & P. R. Co. v. McComb, 60 Me. 290; Meacham v. Fitchburg R. Co. 4 Cush. 291; Nicholson v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 22 Conn. 74; Adams v. St. Johnsbury & L. O. R. Co. 57 Vt. 240; Paducah & M. R. Co. v. Stowall, 12 Heisk. 1; Adden v. White Mts. N. H. R. Co. 55

N. H. 418; Raleigh v. Wicker, 74 N. C. 220; Page v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 70 Ill. 824; Deputy v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 115 Ill. 100; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Blake, 116 Ill. 163; McReynolds v. Burlington & O. R. R. Co. 106 Ill. 152; Oregon Cent. R. Co. v. Wait, 3 Or. 91; Cleveland & P. R. Co. v. Ball, 5 Ohio St. 568; Henderson v. New York Cent. R. Co. 78 N. Y. 423; Matter of Utica, C. & S. V. R. Co. 56 Barb. 456; Matter of New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 15 Hun, 63; Matter of New York, L. & W. R. Co. 29 Hun, 1; Matter of New York, L. & W. R. Co. 49 Hun, 539.

If the General Railroad Act does not prohibit the consideration of special benefits in ascertaining the amount, if any, of consequential damages, it certainly did not prohibit the jury, in the case at bar, from taking into account special benefits in forming their verdict.

Lahr v. Metropolitan Elevated R. Co. 104 N. Y. 295; Fletcher v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 25 Wend. 462; Williams v. New York Cent. R. Co. 16 N. Y. 97; Drake v. Hudson River R. Co. 7 Barb. 508.

Messrs. James M. Smith and Inglis Stuart, for respondent:

Story v. New York Elevated R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, and Lahr v. Metropolitan Elevated R. Co. 104 N. Y. 268, have settled the law as to the right of the plaintiff to recover damages for the injury done to his property.

See also Ireland v. Metropolitan Elevated R. Co. 20 Jones & S. 455; McGean v. Manhattan R. Co. 117 N. Y. 219.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The basis of the court's refusal to charge as requested is to be found in the Rapid Transit Act, chap. 606 (Laws 1875, § 20), and in the General Railroad Law (chap. 40, Laws 1850, § 16); which by § 8, chap. 885, Laws of 1872, was made applicable to the Gilbert Elevated Railroad Company, to whose rights the Metropolitan Railway Company succeeded.

These laws provide that commissioners of appraisal shall not, in determining the amount of compensation to be made to parties owning or interested in property acquired for the construction and operation of railways formed thereunder, "make any allowance or deduction on account of any real or supposed benefits which the party in interest may derive from the construction of the proposed railway."

What is the true meaning of this provision and how far it is applicable to a case of the character we are considering, are the questions we are to determine upon this appeal. The principle upon which compensation is to be made to the owner of lands taken by proceedings under the General Railroad Law has been frequently considered by the courts of this State, and the rule is now established that such owner is to receive, first, the full value of the land taken, and, second, where a part only of land is taken a fair and adequate compensation for all injury to the residue sustained, or to be sustained, by the construction and operation of the railroad. Troy & B. R. Co. v. Lee, 18 Barb. 169; Matter of Utica, C. & S. V. R. Co. 56 Barb. 456; Matter of Prospect Park & C. I. R. Co. 18 Hun, 845; Matter of New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 15 Hun, 63; Matter of New York, L. & W. 7 L. R. A.

R. Co. 29 Hun, 1; Matter of New York, L. & W. R. Co. 49 Hun, 539; Henderson v. New York Cent. R. Co. 78 N. Y. 423.

The first element in the award represents the compensation for land which the railroad takes, and to which it acquires title. The second element represents damages which are the result or consequences of the construction of the road upon property not taken, and which the owner still retains. Such damages are wholly consequential, and to ascertain them necessarily involves an inquiry into the effect of the road upon the property, and a consideration of all the advantages and disadvantages resulting and to result therefrom. The rule is well stated in Lewis, on Eminent Domain, § 471, as follows: "When part of a tract is taken, just compensation would therefore consist of the value of the part taken, and damages to the remainder, less any special benefits to such remainder by reason of the taking and use of the part for the purpose proposed."

In this rule, thus settled in this State, and which controls all awards for taking of land under the General Railroad Act, is to be found the true application of the statutory provision which forbids deductions and allowances to be made by commissioners for any real or supposed benefits which the parties interested may derive from the construction of the railroad. Whatever land is taken must be paid for by the railroad company at its full market value, and from such value no deduction can be made, although the remainder of the land owners' property may be largely enhanced in value as a result of the operation of the railroad. But in considering the question of damages to the remainder of the land not taken, the commissioner must consider the effect of the road upon the whole of that remainder, its advantages and disadvantages, benefits and injuries, and if the result is beneficial there is no damage, and nothing can be awarded. The rule established under the General Railroad Law must govern and control awards made under the Rapid Transit Act. The last-named Act confers upon corporations formed thereunder the power to acquire property for railroad purposes, and the statutory proceedings prescribed are substantially the same as those under the General Railroad Act, and no reason is apparent why the same rule should not apply to proceedings under both Acts.

While this court has decided that owners of land abutting upon public streets have easements therein for ingress and egress to and from their premises, and for the free circulation of light and air to their property, which easements are interests in real estate, and constitute property within the meaning of that term, as used in the Constitution, it is impossible to consider such easements as separate and distinct from the land to which they are appurtenant. They cannot be severed from the land abutting on the street, and the effect of the construction of a railroad in the street is not to transfer them to the company, but to destroy or impair them. The right, therefore, of the property owner to compensation is not the value of the easements, in the street separate and distinct from his abutting property, but the damages his property sustains as a result or consequence of the loss of those easements.

It follows that in making an award to a party situated as the plaintiff was with reference to the defendant's railroad, there could be no compensation for property taken beyond a nominal sum, and that his right to recover rested entirely upon proof of consequential damages. An estimate of such damages, as I have already shown, involves an inquiry into the effect of the railroad upon the whole property and a consideration of all its advantages and disadvantages. If the rental value of the whole building was shown to have been diminished, there was injury for which plaintiff was entitled to recover, but if the diminished rental value of the upper floors was equalled or overcome by increased rental value in the store, then there was no injury and no basis for a recovery of substantial damages against the defendants. While the precise question presented by the exception in this case has not heretofore been decided in this court it is covered by the decisions under the General Railroad Law which have been cited, and the rule established by those decisions has recently been applied in the Second Judicial Department to the case of an elevated railroad (Re Brooklyn Elevated R. Co. v. Phillips, 18 N. Y. Supp. 78). That case was an appeal by property owners from an award of nominal damages in proceedings by an elevated railroad company to condemn an easement in a street. The court said: "The inquiry necessarily takes in the advantages from the railroad when the extent of the injury is to be based upon the diminution of value by reason of its construction. The basis of appraisal must then be the difference in value between the abutting house before the construction of the railroad and afterwards."

In Drucker v. Manhattan R. Co. 106 N. Y. 157, this court held admissible evidence offered by the property owner that trade and business had fallen off in the street since the erection of the railroad, and that property was for that reason diminished in value. If such evidence is competent to sustain a recovery it is difficult to see why it is not competent for the railroad company to show that the effect of the road has been to cause an increase in business and have an enhancement of the value in abutting property. The question whether in awarding damages flowing from the construction of a railroad, its injurious effect upon a part of a residue of a tract of land could alone be considered has been expressly decided in Illinois. Page v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co. 70 Ill. 324.

That case was an assessment of damages for a right of way across a tract of forty acres of land. Compensation was awarded for the part taken, but the evidence showing that the residue of the tract would be enhanced in value by the construction and operation of the road, no consequential damages were allowed to the land owner. The owner claimed that a strip of land next to the railroad was lessened in value by the proximity of the road. The constitutional provision in Illinois relating to the taking of property for public use is the same as our own, and the Statute under which the assessment was made provided that benefits should not be set off against or deducted from compensation.

The award was sustained on appeal, the court holding "that it was not the damages to a strip lying within a limited number of feet of the road-bed that the jury were required to assess, but the damages, if any, to the entire tract. That the effect of the road upon a part of the tract was not to be considered, but upon the whole tract. "This," the court said, "is not deducting benefits from damages, but it is ascertaining whether there be damages or not." To the same effect is the case of Oregon R. Co. v. Wait, 8 Or. 91.
7 L. R. A.

The Statutes we have considered are founded upon the provision of the Constitution forbidding the taking of private property for public purposes without just compensation. Their purpose was to do exact and equal justice among all citizens of the State and to award to everyone full and fair compensation for all property taken for public use or injured by the erection of public improvements. The rule established by the courts and prevailing under the General Railroad Law accomplished in a broad and liberal manner that object. The meaning of the expression "just compensation" has not been limited to the value of property actually taken, but has been held to include all consequential injuries which the land owner may sustain by reason of depreciation of value in the residue of the property by reason of the taking of a part and the construction thereon of the public improvement. This rule affords full indemnity to the property owner, and leaves him in as good condition as he was before the construction of the road. And this is all that any citizen has a right to ask. If the rule which the court held in this case is to govern awards made against railroad companies when structures are erected in the public streets under public authority, when no land is taken and the compensation is confined to consequential injuries sustained by abutting property, the companies will be compelled in many instances to pay where no injury has been done, and parties will recover who have sustained no loss. Such a rule has not yet received judicial sanction.

The increase of value resulting from the growth of public improvements, the construction of railroads, and improved means of transit accrues to the public benefit generally, and the general appreciation of property consequent upon such improvements belongs to the property owner, and the Railroad Company is not entitled to the consideration of that element in the ascertainment of the compensation it must pay to the abutting proprietor. But the special and peculiar advantages which property receives from the construction and operation of the road, and the location of the stations, are elements which enter largely into the inquiry whether there is injury or not, and the jury must consider them and give to them due weight in their verdict. Between this rule and the statutory provision quoted there is no conflict. The property owner will in every instance receive the "just compensation" which the Constitution secures to him for his property which is taken or injured by the Railroad, and the corporation will be compelled to pay whenever damages result from the erection of its structures and the construction of the road.

Our conclusion is that the defendant was entitled to the instruction requested, and the exception to its refusal was well taken.

The judgment should be reversed and a new trial granted, with costs to abide the event. All concur, Follett, Ch. J., in result.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

John T. BAXTER, Respt.,
v.
BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE CO., Appt.

(....N. Y....)

1. Failure of a person insured to pay a premium becoming due before his death, under a contract which requires proof of death "during the life of the policy," and renders the policy void upon failure to pay a premium when due, where no notice that the premium is due has been sent him, does not destroy the validity of the policy under the Act of 1877, chap. 821, which requires that if a premium becomes due notice must be given, and thirty days allowed in which to pay, before the policy can be forfeited for non-payment of premium.

2. Before an insurance company can question the validity of a policy issued since the Act of 1877, because of the nonpayment of a premium, it must show that it has complied with the terms of the Statute by giving notice to insured stating that the premium has become due, its amount and the place where and person to whom it is payable.

3. Payment or tender of a premium becoming due before the death of insured is not necessary before bringing action on the policy which was continued in force under the Act of 1877, by reason of the company's failure to give notice after the premium was due.

(Andrews, Earl and Gray, JJ., dissent.)

(February 25, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fifth Department, overruling its motion for new trial on exceptions taken at the Cattaraugus Circuit, and ordered to be heard at General Term in the first instance, and directing judgment upon the verdict after trial and verdict for plaintiff in an action upon a policy of life insurance. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. Nathaniel C. Moak, with Mr. William H. Ford, for appellant:

Where there has been no forfeiture by notice under the Statute, if the insured seeks the aid of the court he must offer to pay the premiums or a legal excuse for nonpayment, or at least plead his willingness to pay.

Howell v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 44 N. Y. 276; Bogardus v. New York L. Ins. Co. 2 Cent. Rep. 150, 101 N. Y. 828.

The payment of the premium during the life of the insured remains a condition precedent, statute or no statute, and by every rule of pleadings such payment must be pleaded and proved.

Bacon v. Munn, 2 Wend. 399; Orandall v. Clark, 7 Barb. 169; People's Bank v. Mitchell, 73 N. Y. 406; Bogardus v. New York L. Ins. Co. supra; Oakley v. Morton, 11 N. Y. 25; Howell v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. supra.
7 L. R. A.

There is a legal right in every contracting party to hold himself absolved from his obligation when the other contracting party fails to keep some condition precedent which he is bound to perform.

Higgins v. Delaware L. & W. R. Co. 60 N. Y. 553; Kimberly v. Patchin, 19 N. Y. 830; Russell v. Carrington, 42 N. Y. 118.

Messrs. Cary & Rumsey, for respondent:
Defendant could not declare this policy forfeited by reason of the nonpayment of premium without showing or attempting to show that it had given the notice required by statute.

Re Booth, 11 Abb. N. C. 145; (arter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 12 Cent. Rep. 756, 110 N. Y. 15.

Independent of the Statute referred to, the burden is upon the defendant of proving a forfeiture of the policy.

Van Valkenburgh v. Am. Popular L. Ins. Co. 70 N. Y. 605.

The payment of the quarterly premium falling due August 24, 1884, was a condition subsequent, and he who seeks to avoid a contract for failure to perform a condition subsequent must make proof that the condition has not been complied with.

See Van Valkenburgh v. Am. Popular L. Ins. Co. 9 Hun, 583, 70 N. Y. 605; Jones v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 79; Sands v. New York L. Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 628.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff is the assignee of a policy of insurance upon the life of one Joel J. Mattison issued by the defendant, dated May 24, 1884, whereby in consideration of a quarter-annual premium of $20.97 to be paid upon delivery of the policy and thereafter on the 24th day of August, November, February and May in each year the defendant insured Mattison's life in the sum of $3,000 payable to his wife at the office of the Company, in the City of New York, within sixty days after receipt of satisfactory proof of death during the life of the policy. The policy was made subject to numerous conditions, none of which are important for the purposes of this appeal except the condition that it should be void upon failure to pay the premium when due. The complaint alleged the delivery of this contract to the insured, his death on the 7th day of September, 1884, the presentation to the defendant of satisfactory proofs of death according to the terms of the policy, the refusal of the defendant to pay, and that the insured had made the payments of premium according to his agreement with the defendant. No issue was made by the defendant upon any of the allegations of the complaint, except the averment that the insured had paid the premiums according to the terms of the policy, which it denied, and specially alleged that the premium which became due on the 24th day of August, 1884, had not been paid. On the trial the plaintiff put in evidence the policy and a written assignment by the wife of the insured to him of the claim or cause of action, and rested. The defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground that the insured had failed to comply with the terms and conditions of the policy by neglecting to pay the quarterly premium stipulated to be paid by the terms of the policy on the 24th day of August prior to the death of the insured. This motion was denied, and the defendant excepted, and the only question in the case is thus presented. The death of the insured occurred within less than four months from the time that the policy was delivered. The production of the policy at the trial proved the payment of the first quarterly premium. But it was essential to the maintenance of the plaintiff's cause of action to show that the policy was a valid subsisting contract at the time of the death of the insured. The policy itself contained the stipulation that it was a contract made and to be executed in the State of New York, and construed only according to the laws of that State. Aside from this provision of the policy, and under general rules of law, this contract was subject to the terms and conditions expressed in chapter 841 of the Laws of 1876, as amended by chapter 321 of the Laws of 1877. This Statute was a part of the contract in question, and governed the rights and obligations of the parties in precisely the same way and to the same extent as if all its terms and conditions had been actually incorporated into the policy.

The promise of the defendant was to pay to the beneficiary named the sum of $3,000 upon the death of the insured, in case that event occurred during the continuance of the contract. It therefore becomes important to inquire whether the policy in question was in force at the time of the death of the insured, on the 7th day of September, 1884. If upon that day it was a valid subsisting contract, notwithstanding the failure to pay the premium due on the preceding 24th day of August, then the very contingency upon which the defendant agreed to pay the amount of insurance has happened.

The Statute above referred to (Laws 1877, chap. 321) declares that no life insurance company doing business in this State shall have power to declare forfeited or lapsed any policy thereafter issued by reason of nonpayment of premium, unless, after it becomes due, a notice stating the amount of such premium, the place where it should be paid, and the person to whom the same is payable, shall be duly addressed and mailed to the person whose life is assured, at his last-known postoffice address, postage paid by the company; and further stating that unless the premium then due shall be paid to the company or its agent within thirty days after the mailing of such notice, the policy and all payments thereon will become forfeited and void. It is also provided by the same section that in case such payment is made within the thirty days limited therefore, it shall be deemed a full compliance with the requirements of the policy in respect to the payment of premium, and it declares that no such policy shall in any case be forfeited until the expiration of thirty days after the mailing of such notice. These provisions are to have full effect, any condition of the policy to the contrary notwithstanding. There was no proof given at the trial by either party to show whether this notice was served or not. It is obvious that this Statute when imputed into the contract modified its conditions in very material respects. The duration and validity of the policy is not then dependent upon payment of the premium on the day named therein, but upon payment within thirty days after the notice has been given. The condition upon which the policy can be forfeited, or in any way impaired, as a subsisting contract of insurance, is a failure on the part of the insured to pay the premium within thirty days after notice. The complaint alleges that the insured, up to the time of his death, made the payments on the policy as agreed with the defendant. That he actually paid the premium necessary to keep the policy in life till the 24th of August, prior to his death, was established and admitted. It was not necessary to prove that he also paid the premium on the 24th of August because the contract was not impaired by a failure to pay on that day, but by a failure to pay within thirty days after the defendant had served the statutory notice.

7 L. R. A.

The Statute prescribes this notice as a necessary condition of forfeiture, and unless it was served the insured was not in default, because payment within thirty days after notice is to be taken as a full compliance with the conditions as to payment of premium. In the absence of proof on the part of the defendant as to the service of the notice, this allegation of the complaint was sufficiently established within the meaning of the contract as evidenced by the policy and the Statute when read together. Before the defendant could raise any question in regard to the nonpayment of the August premium it was necessary for it to show that it had complied with the Statute by serving the notice, as this step was essential in order to put the insured in default or to raise any point based on his omission to pay the last quarterly premium. It must therefore be assumed, in the absence of such notice, that the policy in question was in full force at the death of the insured; and even if the payment of the last premium was omitted, the obligation and promise of the defendant to pay upon death, during the life of the policy, was unimpaired. The purpose of the Statute referred to was to establish a rule which would preserve to the assured the benefit of premiums paid and to prevent the lapse of policies of life insurance without ample notice and an opportunity to save them from forfeiture by payment of premiums due within the specified time, and at the same time secure to the company, in case it is obliged to pay, the full amount of the premiums which the policy calls for.

When the provisions of this Statute are adopted in a contract of insurance for the purpose of modifying the forfeiture clause and the other strict conditions contained therein, then this clause and these conditions shall be so construed as to give to the assured the full benefit contemplated, without altering any other provision of the policy, if this can be done without violating any rule of law. When the scope and purpose of the law as deduced from the decisions of this court and the courts of other States involving a construction of the same or similar Statutes is considered, no good reason is perceived for interfering with the result in this case in the courts below. Phelan v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 118 N. Y. 147; Carter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 110 N. Y. 15, 12 Cent. Rep. 756; Carter v. John Hancock L. Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 153; Boyd v. Cedar Rapids Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 325.

It was not necessary, in order to enable the plaintiff to recover the sum insured, to pay, or tender before action brought, the premium that was payable on the 24th day of August prior to the death of the insured. If the policy was in full force when the assured died, as we think it was, that event fixed the liability and obligation of the defendant, notwithstanding the omission to make that payment. Nothing remained to be done by the widow of the assured or her assignee except to present to the defendant the proofs of death required by the policy. The death of the assured terminated the contract. The defendant's promise to pay, if it was not discharged, had matured, and the persons entitled to the benefits of the policy had only to establish the fact of death within the time and in the manner prescribed therein. The contract was kept in life by force of the Statute till the contingency upon which payment depended occurred. The death of the assured created the relation of debtor and creditor between the defendant and his widow, and the unpaid premium, with interest from the date when payable, was a claim to be deducted by the defendant from the sum due upon the policy. This puts the defendant in precisely the same position in which it would have been if the premium had been duly paid. Carter v. John Hancock L. Ins. Co. supra.

It was conceded upon the argument in this case that the unpaid premium, and interest thereon, was deducted from the verdict, and therefore no injustice has been done.

The judgment should be affirmed.

Ruger, C. J., Finch and Peckham, JJ., concur.

Andrews, J., dissenting:

I dissent from the prevailing opinion in this case. The sole purpose of the Statute of 1877, a purpose indicated as well by the title as the body of the Act, was to abrogate the rule that the failure to pay the premium on a life policy on the day specified therein created a forfeiture and rendered the policy void. The Act, therefore, provided that nonpayment of the premium at the day should not work a forfeiture, and that the policy should continue in force, notwithstanding such omission, until notice by the Company and default of the insured for thirty days thereafter to make payment.

The construction placed on the Statute in the prevailing opinion, that by its operation the premium does not become due until after notice and expiration of the thirty days, and that meanwhile an action may be brought and a recovery had on the policy, although the premium has not been paid or tendered, is, I think, untenable. The premium is due from the time it becomes due according to the terms of the policy, and remains due at all times thereafter until actually paid, but under the Statute default in making payment at the pay-day nevertheless leaves the contract of the Company subsisting, and an action may therefore be maintained upon it in case of the death of the insured, unless it is shown that the notice has been given and that the premium was not paid within thirty days thereafter.

But it is a condition precedent to the maintenance of such action, that the plaintiff must before suit brought have paid or tendered the premium unpaid. The plaintiff under the Statute of 1877 is not required, as before, to show that it was paid or tendered on the day fixed in the policy, but he must aver and prove that payment was made at some time before the action was commenced, or else no right of action has accrued. This is in accordance with the well-settled rule that in mutual promises the plaintiff, seeking to charge the defendant, must aver and prove performance on his part of that which was the consideration of the defendant's promise, and this as well where the promise of the plaintiff was to be performed before the day fixed for performance by the defendant, as where the performance of respective promises were concurrent and dependent. The construction I have given to the Statute of 1877 fully accomplishes its purpose, while relieving it of the anomaly that a contract to pay an insurance on condition of the payment of the premiums may be enforced although the party claiming performance has never paid or offered to pay what was stipulated.

The cases in Massachusetts and other States have, I think, no bearing upon the present one. They were well decided and involved no such question as is presented in this case under the Statute of 1877.

The judgment should be reversed.

Earl and Gray, JJ., concur.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF IOWA

v.
Con CREEDEN, Certain Intoxicating Liquors,
and
CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC
R. CO., Appt.

(....Iowa....)

1. Intoxicating Liquors transported

NOTE.—Right of State to prohibit manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors.

A state law prohibiting the manufacture of from one State cannot be sold within another State for uses forbidden by its laws, although the transportation itself cannot be prevented by such State.
7 L. R. A.

2. When a carrier ceases to be a carrier and becomes a warehouseman he cannot be protected as a carrier by the constitutional provisions as to regulations of commerce.

3. A railroad company which has en- liquor within its limits, to be there sold as a beverage, does not necessarily infringe any right, privilege or immunity secured by the Federal Consti-gaged with and aided a person in violation of the law against the sale of intoxicating liquors by keeping them in its warehouse for him, cannot defeat a proceeding to condemn them and escape the judgment of the law, on the ground that it has a lien upon the liquors for freight.

(October 18, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendant, The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company from a judgment of the District Court of Polk County condemning to destruction certain liquors in its possession and ordering it to pay the costs of the proceeding. Affirmed.

An information was filed in the office of a justice of the peace alleging that certain intoxicating liquors were kept in the freight depot of the defendant Railway Company which were owned by Con Creeden and were intended to be sold by him in violation of law. A search warrant was issued and six separate boxes containing in all about twenty-eight and three-fourths gallons of whiskey were found in such depot and seized. The Railway Company answered that it was not guilty of the offense charged in the information; that the liquors were shipped from points without the State into the State, and were not subject to seizure; that defendant held the liquors simply as a common carrier having a lien thereon for freight charges, and denied that the liquors were kept for sale in violation of law.

tution. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623 (81 L. ed. 205); Re Hoover, 30 Fed. Rep. 51.

The prohibition may be supported upon the ground that per se it has a deleterious effect upon good order and the peace, comfort and morals of the people of the State. Pearson v. International Distillery, 72 Iowa, 348.

A State has the right to prohibit, restrict or regulate all sale and traffic in intoxicating liquors within the State; and to inflict penalties for their manufacture and sale, and provide regulations for the abatement of property used for such forbidden purposes. Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1 (32 L. ed. 846), 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 222; Kohn v. Melcher, 29 Fed. Rep. 433; State v. Kane, 8 New Eng. Rep. 143, 15 R. I. 395; Groesch v. State, 42 Ind. 547; State v. Allmond, 2 Houst. (Del.) 512; Ex parte Campbell, 74 Cal. 20; State v. Schweiter, 27 Kan. 499; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623 (81 L. ed. 205).

The power to make laws regulating or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors is undoubtedly within the police power of the State or nation. Cooley, Const. Lim. 720; United States v. Nelson, 29 Fed. Rep. 202; Com. v. Kendall, 12 Cush. 414; Com. v. Clapp, 5 Gray, 97; Santo v. State, 2 Iowa, 202; State v. Wheeler, 25 Conn. 290; People v. Hawley, 8 Mich. 330; Jones v. People, 14 Ill. 196; State v. Prescott, 27 Vt. 194; Territory v. O'Connor, 8 L. R. A. 357, 5 Dak. 397; State v. Wright, 14 Or. 355.

It is within the police power of the State to prohibit the giving away of intoxicating liquor, in a social or other manner, to one who at the time is already visibly intoxicated, although he be a friend. Altenburg v. Com. 4 L. R. A. 543, 126 Pa. 632.

The Legislature has authority absolutely to prohibit "drinking saloons" or saloons for the purpose of carrying on the liquor traffic; and to regulate the mode, manner and circumstances in which they shall be conducted and carried on, and to surround the right with such conditions, restrictions and limitations as may appear judicious. Ex parte Bell, 24 Tex. App. 428.

Iowa Laws 1873, chap. 119, prohibiting sale of malt or vinous liquors within two miles of the corporate limits of any municipality, is constitutional. State v. Schroeder, 51 Iowa, 197.

Ark. Act of March 2, 1875, "to prevent the sale or giving away of vinous, spirituous or intoxicating liquors within three miles of any academy, college or university," is constitutional (Boyd v. Bryant, 35 Ark. 69, 37 Am. Rep. 6); in Tennessee within four miles (State v. Tarver, 11 Lea, 658; Tillery v. State, 10 Lea, 35; Harney v. State, 8 Lea, 113); in Rhode Island within 400 feet of any public school. Re Liquor Locations, 13 R. I. 733.

Cal. Code, § 172, making it a misdemeanor to sell, give away or expose for sale, intoxicating liquor within two miles of the State prison or within one mile of the insane asylum or of the University of California or in the state capitol grounds, is valid. Ex parte McClain, 61 Cal. 436, 44 Am. Rep. 554, 7 L. R. A.

Transportation prohibited.

The words "any other person," in Iowa Code, § 1553, following a specification of certain companies and other carriers and their agents, etc., who are prohibited from transporting intoxicating liquors without a certificate, mean simply other persons of like kind or in like employment with those specified. State v. Campbell, 76 Iowa, 122.

One employed to transport goods sold is a carrier for hire, and his driver is required to have a certificate for transporting intoxicating liquors, under this section. Ibid.

A statute prohibiting the manufacture of intoxicating liquor for exportation from the State is valid. Pearson v. International Distillery, 72 Iowa, 348.

Iowa Code, § 1555, prohibiting the sale of wine made from fruits grown outside the State, but permitting the sale of that made from fruits grown in the State, is constitutional, not being a regulation of commerce, nor an invasion of "the privileges and immunities" of the citizens of another State. State v. Stucker, 58 Iowa, 496.

Defendant must show that the wine sold was made from domestic fruits. State v. Miller, 53 Iowa, 84.

Imported liquors.

The United States Supreme Court decided on April 23, 1890, in the case of Leisy v. Hardin, generally known as the "Original Package Case," that in the absence of Congressional permission a State has no right to interfere with the sale by an importer of intoxicating liquors, imported from another State, in the original packages in which they were imported, as such action would infringe upon the right of Congress to regulate commerce (134 U. S. —, 83 L. ed. —). Prior to that time the Iowa court had made the following decisions:

Sale of intoxicating liquors in the original packages in which they were received could be and were prohibited. State v. Bowman (Iowa) 43 N. W. Rep. 302; Collins v. Hills, 3 L. R. A. 110, 77 Iowa, 181.

After reaching their destination, they are subject to the restrictions of the Iowa statute applicable to liquors kept for use as a beverage. State v. Zimmerman (Iowa) 43 N. W. Rep. 458.

Liquors imported by express, and held by the company as agent for the consignor, to be delivered to the consignee upon payment of the purchase price, are subject to be seized and destroyed as contraband property, in a proceeding against the liquors. It is wholly immaterial whether the officers of the express company know the character of the property or the uses to which it is to be put; and where the company voluntarily appears in the proceeding and claims the liquors, the costs may properly be taxed against it. State v. U. S. Exp. Co. 70 Iowa, 271.

The justice entered a judgment condemning the liquors and taxing the costs to the Railway Company, whereupon it appealed to the district court.

In that court it was admitted that the packages were shipped as stated in the answer; that upon their arrival they were taken into the Company's freight warehouse, the consignee was notified, and they remained in the warehouse until seized under the warrant issued in this case. That payment of the freight charges was demanded of the officer making the seizure.

There was nothing to show why the packages were left at the Company's depot so long as they were, and the only evidence bearing on the question was that of the Company's freight agent and freight-house foreman. The former testified as follows:

"When goods are received as these were, it is customary for the Company to notify the consignee by postal card through the government postoffice. We deliver freight as soon as we can. In the mean time we hold it in the Company's freight house. We give the consignee notice and hold the goods to wait their sending for them, but where the drayman has an order from the consignee authorizing him to receipt for the goods, we deliver directly from the depot or sometimes from the car. I have no personal knowledge of any other shipments than these in question from the same

The mere giving an order for liquors to an agent of a seller, residing in another State, subject to the approval or disapproval of his principal, does not fix the place of contract, in Iowa, within the meaning of Rev., § 1571, making payment for liquors sold, etc., to be without consideration. Otherwise as to the sale for which the agent had power to contract, and intended by the seller to aid the purchaser to violate the liquor law. Tegler v. Shipman, 83 Iowa, 194.

Statutes construed.

The statute expressly requires courts and jurors to construe its provisions so as to prevent evasion, and so as to cover the act of giving as well as selling. State v. Reinhartz, 69 Iowa, 224.

The Iowa laws forbidding the sale of intoxicating liquors are applicable to all persons irrespective of their residence, or of the manner or vessels in which the liquors are put up. Lelsey v. Hardin (Iowa) 48 N. W. Rep. 188, but see S. C. 134 U. S. —, 83 L. ed. —.

The proviso in Ala. Act of February 23, 1881, prohibiting the sale of liquor, except wine raised from grapes grown in Alabama, being a discrimination against foreign wines, is unconstitutional. McCready v. State, 73 Ala. 490.

But the Act of March 1, 1881, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, but providing that it shall not prevent the sale of domestic wines manufactured from grapes grown in the State, is valid in its prohibitory section. Powell v. State, 69 Ala. 10.

Under the Iowa statute, providing that the words "intoxicating liquors" as used therein shall be construed to mean "alcohol, wine, beer, spirituous, vinuous and malt liquors and all intoxicating liquors whatever," liquor containing alcohol is, as a matter of law, intoxicating, however much it may be diluted, and regardless of the fact that the quantity drunk at any one time would not produce intoxication. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 2 L. R. A. 408, 76 Iowa, 248.

Special licenses for sale.

Iowa Code, §§ 1523, 1526, which limit the giving of licenses to sell and buy intoxicating liquors to certain classes of citizens for certain purposes, do not violate the Federal Constitution. Kohn v. Melcher, 20 Fed. Rep. 453.

Municipal corporations under Iowa Law 1888, chap. 154, § 2, may license their sale. Keokuk v. Dressell, 47 Iowa, 597.

The Acts authorizing all towns and cities incorporated under special charters to regulate and prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors not prohibited by state law, are constitutional. State v. King, 37 Iowa, 462.

Where the town prohibited the sale of liquors which it had authority to do, and also others which it had no power to prohibit, the ordinance may be enforced as to the former. Eldora v. Burlingame, 62 Iowa, 32.

7 L. R. A.

The town has no authority to prohibit any liquors but those prohibited by the statutes. Cantril v. Sainer, 59 Iowa, 28.

An ordinance entitled "regulating the use and sale" and in substance being entirely prohibited is unconstitutional (void); or it may be taken away by the town ordinance (Columbus City v. Cutcomp, 61 Iowa, 672); and it may be revoked for a single unlawful sale. Hildreth v. Crawford, 65 Iowa, 330.

For the violation of an ordinance under which a liquor license was granted, the city may cause the license to be forfeited. Ottumwa v. Schaub, 59 Iowa, 515.

A licensed liquor dealer must act in good faith in his sales, but is not liable, if his purchaser entertains a secret purpose to use the liquor for unlawful purpose. Taylor v. Pickett, 52 Iowa, 467.

Permits to pharmacists.

Code, § 1558, does not apply to a physician who treats a person professionally who is injured while intoxicated. Sansom v. Greenough, 55 Iowa, 127.

To give a right of action under Code, § 1557, the liquor sold must contribute to the intoxication by which the wife is injured. Welch v. Jugenheimer, 56 Iowa, 11.

Iowa Laws 1880, chap. 75, regulating the sale of liquor by apothecaries, and providing a somewhat different penalty for an unlawful sale than Iowa Code, title 11, chap. 6, was held not to repeal the latter. State v. Mercer, 58 Iowa, 182.

The Laws of 1884, chap. 145, providing additional penalties for illegal sales of liquors, is not repugnant to Const., art. 3, § 29, which provides that "every Act shall embrace but one subject," etc.; nor is it in conflict with art. 1, § 6, which declares that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." Martin v. Blattner, 68 Iowa, 236.

It is a general prohibitory law and repeals by implication earlier statutes excepting pharmacists from their operation. State v. Bissell, 67 Iowa, 616.

A person who holds a permit to manufacture or sell intoxicating liquors, and who fails to make return to the county auditor on the last Saturday of each month, or within five days thereafter, renders himself and bondsmen liable for the penalty prescribed by Laws 1884, chap. 143, § 8. State v. Montee, 68 Iowa, 831.

As to druggists, physicians and pharmacists in other States, see People v. Hinohman (Mich.) 4 L. R. A. 707; Battle v. State, 51 Ark. 97; State v. Pierce, 26 Kan. 777; Intoxicating Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 751; Sarris v. Com. 83 Ky. 327; Com. v. Minor, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 1008, 11 S. W. Rep. 472; Carrington v. Com. 78 Ky. 88; Wright v. People, 101 Ill. 126; State v. Scott, 2 West. Rep. 544, 20 Mo. App. 418; State v. Roller, 77 Mo. 120; State v. Shaw, 58 N. H. 72; State v. McBrayer, 98 N. C. 619; The Druggist Cases, 85 Tenn. 449; Boone v. State, 10 Tex. App. 418; State v. Thompson, 20 W. Va. 674; State v. Cox, 23 W. Va. 797; Miles v. State, 5 W. Va. 524.

consignors to Con Creeden. I have not examined the books to determine as to others. There may have been others but I did not look up the records to see. Knowing I was going to be inquired of in regard to these shipments, I consulted the books and now have a recollection in regard to them. I was not the person who demanded the freight of the officer."

The latter testified: "I never saw Con Creeden at the freight house in my life. There has been freight taken from there consigned to him before the time of this seizure. The expressman came and got goods, receipted for them and paid the freight bills. It is customary to deliver freight to all transfer lines that take up the expense bills when they present an order from the consignee, or if we know the expressmen are responsible, and they call for the goods, we would deliver them, especially if they have a bill of lading. Before this seizure, I think there was but one package at a time there for Con Creeden. It always came in single packages. These packages came singly, but he did not call for them."

A jury having been waived, the court entered judgment condemning the liquors and directing the Company to pay the costs; whereupon it appealed to this court.

Messrs. Thomas S. Wright and George E. McCoughan, for appellant:

The defendant, a common carrier, was bound

Remedy by criminal prosecution.

The Iowa Revision, § 5110, does not attempt any restrictions upon subsequent legislation, and the Act of 1870, chap. 69, applies to convictions for keeping liquor nuisances. State v. Winstrand, 87 Iowa, 110.

One who keeps liquor which he intends shall be sold lawfully is not liable for a sale made without his knowledge. State v. Hayes, 67 Iowa, 27.

Treating a drunken person is the offense of disposing of liquor to an intoxicated person. State v. Hubbard, 60 Iowa, 466.

Where a pint of whiskey was sold to a stranger on his mere statement that he wanted it for medicine, the finding that it was sold as a beverage is justified. State v. Knowles, 57 Iowa, 669.

An indictment charging unlawful sale of whiskey is not supported by proof of sale of other liquors. State v. Hesner, 55 Iowa, 494.

An indictment charging in one count the keeping of liquors with intent to sell contrary to law, and in another count the unlawful sale, is not bad for duplicity. State v. Howorth, 70 Iowa, 157.

An information charging an illegal sale with a view to having the permit revoked (Code, § 1535) is not a criminal proceeding, and a bond to supersede the judgment appealed from may be given. State v. Schmidt, 65 Iowa, 556.

Unlawful intent may be presumed from the fact of their sale in violation of law. State v. Sartori, 55 Iowa, 340.

Where the sale of intoxicating liquors is a crime under the Prohibitory Law, the purchaser is not a participant in the crime, and he cannot excuse himself from testifying as to such purchases made by him, on the ground that his testimony would tend to criminate himself. Wakeman v. Chambers, 69 Iowa, 169.

One indicted for a third offense may be convicted of a first offense. State v. Gaffney, 66 Iowa, 262.

A conviction of selling ale, beer and wine without license is not invalidated by the fact that the sale of ale is prohibited by state law. Keokuk v. Dressell, 47 Iowa, 597.

The Amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the sale of beer, submitted to the people June 27, 1882, not having been lawfully adopted, no one could be convicted of a sale thereof, under Iowa Code, § 4082.

A party, to justify the act of giving intoxicating liquors to a minor, must show that the order was in writing. State v. Coenan, 48 Iowa, 567.

Seizure of liquors.

The compensation which a sheriff is entitled to receive for executing a warrant for the seizure of intoxicating liquors is $2,—the fee fixed by Laws 1882, chap. 94, § 4, for serving all warrants. Section 3807 stands repealed as to sheriffs, but remains good as to constables and other officers. Painter v. Polk Co., 70 Iowa, 596.

? L. R. A.

Intoxicating liquors seized under proceedings for their forfeiture are not subject to replevin. Fries v. Porch, 49 Iowa, 351.

Judgment lien for violation of Liquor Law.

The Iowa Laws of 1862, chap. 47, § 8, making a judgment for violation of the Liquor Law a lien on the property of a third person, is constitutional. Polk Co. v. Hierb, 37 Iowa, 861.

Property which the owner knows is used for the unlawful sale of liquors is subject to the lien of a judgment against the occupant for any unlawful sale, although the owner did not know of or consent to the particular sales relied on. Wing v. Benham, 76 Iowa, 17.

To charge the premises with the lien it must be shown that the owner consented to their unlawful use. Meyers v. Kirt, 57 Iowa, 421.

To establish the lien, consent of the owner need not be shown by any affirmative act. Loan v. Etzel, 62 Iowa, 429.

Where different judgments were rendered upon separate trials against the several defendants, plaintiff must elect upon which he would rely as a lien upon the premises where the sale took place. Putney v. O'Brien, 53 Iowa, 117.

The lien given by Iowa Code, § 1558, for fines and costs for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, upon the property occupied for that purpose, is not defeated by a conveyance pending a suit to enforce the lien. McClure v. Braniff, 75 Iowa, 33.

Keeping liquor nuisance.

Under Iowa Code, §§ 1542, 1543, one making a sale of liquor for other purposes than that authorized by his permit is guilty of keeping a liquor nuisance; and the fact that he thus sells is evidence of the intent with which he keeps such liquors. State v. Webber, 76 Iowa, 666.

Where drunkenness, quarrelling and breaches of the peace are carried on, though but once, it is a nuisance. State v. Pierce, 65 Iowa, 85.

An information charging a defendant with keeping intoxicating liquors "for the purpose of sale" is sufficient under Iowa Code, § 1542, which uses the words "with intent to sell." State v. Mohr, 53 Iowa, 261.

In an indictment under Code, § 1543, for the nuisance of selling liquors, it is not necessary to allege that it is the second offense. State v. Howorth, 70 Iowa, 157.

Proceedings for seizure of intoxicating liquors under Iowa Code, § 1544. See Weir v. Allen, 47 Iowa, 482.

In Iowa Code, § 1550, providing that all sales, liens, pledges, etc., made on account of intoxicating liquors, shall be void, the word "lien" does not include the lien of a judgment. Smith v. Luddy, 50 Iowa, 112.

A fine of $1,000 was held not excessive for nuisance in the illegal sale of liquors, where defend-to receive and carry the packages when offered to it at Rock Island. They were properly marked and labeled.

McClain's Code, ed. 1888, § 2412.

It could not lawfully refuse to carry the goods, and no statute of Iowa could be relied on to justify such refusal.

Bozman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 500 (31 L. ed. 719). See Hutchinson, Carr. § 47; Collins v. Hills, 3 L. R. A. 110, 77 Iowa, 181.

Having received and carried the goods, the law conferred upon the defendant certain rights with relation to them. These were:

1. A lien upon them for their transportation, and also for their storage, if it was compelled to store them.

McClain's Code, ed. 1888, § 8364 (2177); Winne v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 81 Iowa, 593; Chicago & S. W. R. Co. v. Northwestern Union Packet Co. 88 Iowa, 377.

2. If the goods were unclaimed for six months and the charges unpaid, it could sell them; and, after reimbursing itself for its lien and costs, deposit the money with the county treasurer, through whom it was liable eventually to pass into the school fund.

McClain's Code, §§ 8365, 8369 (2178, 2182).

It might and it became its duty to store the goods after a reasonable time.

Angle v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 18 Iowa, 555.

The law contemplated that these liquors, ants appeared to have flagrantly violated the law, without much regard for its regulations. State v. Aulman, 76 Iowa, 624.

Abatement of liquor nuisance.

Under Iowa Acts, 20 Gen. Assem. chap. 143, § 12, and 21 Gen. Assem. chap. 66, §§ 1, 2, a place where liquor has been illegally sold may be abated. Elwood v. Price, 75 Iowa, 223.

Under Iowa Laws 1884, p. 82, providing for the abatement of a liquor nuisance by the seizure and destruction of the liquor and the removal of all articles used in the business on the premises, when the nuisance is established, the court should provide for its abatement. McClure v. Braniff, 75 Iowa, 38.

Owners of premises which were fitted up with a bar and other appliances for the sale of drinks, and on which the evidence showed that a saloon nuisance had been permitted to exist, will be enjoined from maintaining the nuisance, although they reside in another place, where they made no showing that they acted in good faith in leasing the property. State v. Douglass, 75 Iowa, 432.

Where the front room of defendant's building was used as a liquor saloon, but other portions of the building were occupied by his family, and a back room was used for a kitchen and also as a place for storing liquors, the back room was considered an "appendage" to the saloon. State v. Fertig, 70 Iowa, 272.

The method of abating nuisances kept in violation of the Liquor Law, defined in Laws 1883, chap. 66, was properly employed in cases which were pending when the Statute was enacted, but not finally determined until afterwards. McLane v. Bonn, 70 Iowa, 752.

The abatement should be decreed, although defendant, who had for years maintained the nuisance, discontinued it four days before filing his answer. Halfman v. Spreen, 75 Iowa, 309.

The Iowa statute providing that evidence of general reputation shall be admissible to prove the existence of such nuisance, and for the allowance of an attorney's fee, is applicable to an action brought under a former statute, but before the trial of which it took effect. And it is admissible to show the amount of attorneys' fees both in the state courts and in the federal courts to which the action was removed. Farley v. O'Malley, 77 Iowa, 531.

The Iowa Act of 1886, providing that pharmacists alone shall have the right to permits to sell liquors for medicinal purposes, though making no mention of the Code, § 1526, abrogates a brewer's right to sell by virtue of a permit under that section. State v. Aulman, 76 Iowa, 624.

A registered pharmacist, permitted to sell liquors for medicinal purposes under Iowa Laws 1886, chap. 83, is guilty of maintaining a liquor nuisance under the Code, § 1543, when he sells for other purposes. 7 L. R. A.

State v. Salts, 77 Iowa, 196; State v. Webber, 76 Iowa, 686.

Where he claimed on the trial that the sales were made by his clerk, evidence that the business was conducted under his supervision, and was drunk on the premises, shows knowledge on his part. Elwood v. Price, 75 Iowa, 223.

As to abatement of liquor nuisance in other States, see Streeter v. People, 69 Ill. 595; Duke v. Marston, 6 New Eng. Rep. 919, 64 N. H. 608.

In Kansas it is a criminal, and not a civil, proceeding. State v. Crawford, 23 Kan. 743.

A decree for injunction and the abatement of a saloon nuisance, obtained by a citizen of a county, is a bar to a suit by another citizen of the same county in the absence of anything to show why such first decree remains unenforced. See Dickinson v. Eichorn (Iowa) 6 L. R. A. 721 and note.

Remedy by injunction.

A statute declaring a building where liquors are unlawfully sold a nuisance and allowing it to be enjoined by a citizen of the county, is not a violation of the right of trial by jury. Littleton v. Frita, 65 Iowa, 488.

Laws 1884, chap. 143, in providing that the nuisance in a building or place where prohibited liquors have been kept or sold may be enjoined, merely provides an additional remedy; and before a defendant can claim that he is about to be deprived of his property without compensation, he must show that such property was owned by him or those under whom he claims, and that it was used for the sale of intoxicating liquors, prior to the enactment of the Statute of 1855. McLane v. Leicht, 69 Iowa, 401.

Where it was shown to have been voluntarily abated before the commencement of the action injunction will not lie. Eckert v. David, 75 Iowa, 302.

A Methodist clergyman who settled in a town, under an appointment by the bishop for a year, is a citizen, and may maintain an action to enjoin a liquor nuisance. Fuller v. McDonnell, 75 Iowa, 220.

An allegation that the unlawful sale of liquors is conducted with the owner's permission is equivalent to saying that it is done with his knowledge and consent; and a temporary injunction should issue to restrain him from further permitting the use of his building for such a purpose. Gray v. Stienes, 69 Iowa, 124.

An adjudication, upon information, that defendant was not guilty of the crime of selling intoxicating liquors contrary to law, is not an adjudication that he is not maintaining a nuisance, and is not a bar to proceedings by injunction to restrain him from continuing it. Martin v. Blattner, 68 Iowa, 236.

The lessor of a building used as a place for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors becomes an aider and abettor in violating the law, and he is a properly marked and labeled, should be carried and stored.

McClain's Code, ed. 1888, § 2412; Laws, 22 Gen. Assem. chap. 73, § 7.

If defendant was bound to receive and carry the goods, it was equally bound to take care of them and for carriage and care it was entitled to compensation. When received and while being carried the goods were lawfully articles of commerce, and no legal seizure could be made of them.

See Hall v. DeCuir, 95 U. S. 488 (24 L. ed. 548).

The articles seized and condemned were articles of interstate commerce.

The Daniel Ball, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 585 (19 L. ed. 1002).

The goods do not lose their interstate commerce character because they are held by the carrier awaiting delivery.

See Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 203 (29 L. ed. 161); License Cases, 46 U. S. 5 How. 575 (12 L. ed. 256).

These articles embarked in interstate commerce were still in transitu, so far as the rights of the consignor were concerned. They had not been delivered to the consignee nor to his agent, but were in the hands of the defendant either as carrier or warehouseman, and in either case were still subject to be recalled by the consignor.

O'Neil v. Garrett, 6 Iowa, 480; Greve v. Dunham, 60 Iowa, 108.

Mr. J. A. Harvey, with Mr. John Y. Stone, Atty-Gen., for the State:

At the time of the seizure, the duty of the Railroad Company as a common carrier had terminated.

2 Kent, Com. 602; Edwards, Bailm. pp. 515-517, also pp. 284-286, 295, 296, 506; Angle v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 18 Iowa, 555.

In this class of cases, the regulation of commerce, in the constitutional sense, embraces transportation only.

See Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1 (32 L. ed. 846), 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 282.

It is the duty of a common carrier to harmonize its regulations and professions with the law.

State v. U. S. Exp. Co. 70 Iowa, 271; Milwaukee Malt Extract Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 73 Iowa, 98.

The Statute makes this whiskey subject to condemnation, if, at the time of seizure, it was owned or kept by anyone for sale in violation of law.

§ 1546.

It was in possession of the Railroad Company but was owned by either the consignor or the consignee. If by the former then it was contraband.

State v. U. S. Exp. Co. 70 Iowa, 271.

If it was owned by the consignee it was held for unlawful sale, for he was engaged in that business.

Beck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The facts established by the undoubted preponderance of the evidence are these: There was shipped from Rock Island, Ill., by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, consigned to defendant Con Creeden, at Des Moines, six packages of whiskey, in separate shipments. The packages contained about five gallons each. Two were shipped on the 7th, and one each on the 9th, 14th, 15th and 17th days of November. Each package was received at the railroad freight depot at Des Moines in two days after the date of its shipment. The charge on each package was 34 cents. They were kept in the freight house or warehouse of the Company until taken upon the search-warrant issued in this case. The de-proper party to proceedings by injunction to restrain the unlawful traffic as a nuisance. Ibid.

Disobedience of injunction a contempt of court.

The statute which provided a fine of $500 for the disobedience of an injunction against the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors is not unconstitutional. Jordan v. Wapello Co. Circuit Ct. 69 Iowa, 177.

Where the selling of intoxicating liquors has been enjoined, proceedings for contempt in disobeying the injunction may be entitled the same as the action in which the injunction was issued. Manderscheid v. Plymouth Co. District Ct. 69 Iowa, 240.

Where one has been fined for violating an injunction issued under the Prohibitory Liquor Law, he may, upon default in paying the fine, be imprisoned, under the general provision of Code, § 4509; and, under Laws 1884, chap. 143, § 12, such person cannot avail himself of the benefits of Code, § 4611, which permits a poor person, after having been imprisoned thirty days for failure to pay a fine in a criminal case, to be released upon giving his note for the amount of the fine, together with a written schedule of his property. Hanks v. Workman, 69 Iowa, 600; Ex parte Tulcher, 69 Iowa, 393. See Carleton v. Rugg, 5 L. R. A. 193, 149 Mass. 550.

Action by wife for damages for injury to her means of support.

In an action by a wife for damages, an original petition claiming a lien on the saloon property, which did not state all the facts necessary to establish L. R. A.

lish it, was held sufficient to prevent the running of the Statute of Limitations; and an amended petition after two years was good. Myers v. Kirt, 68 Iowa, 124.

Defendant is only liable for all the damages to which he contributed, even though it be difficult to separate the damages to which he did not contribute. Huggins v. Kavanagh, 62 Iowa, 368; Richmond v. Shickler, 57 Iowa, 498.

The fact that the wife has purchased liquor from the defendant under compulsion, or to keep her husband at home, does not defeat her right to maintain the action. Ward v. Thompson, 48 Iowa, 588.

The defendant's knowing the husband to be in the habit of becoming intoxicated, and selling him intoxicating liquors while he was intoxicated, will support a verdict for exemplary damages. Welts v. Ewen, 50 Iowa, 84.

In an action for civil damages for intoxicating plaintiff's husband, evidence of sales made more than two years prior to the action is admissible to rebut evidence that the husband had been a confirmed toper long years before. Gustafson v. Wind, 62 Iowa, 281.

An instruction by which it was left to the jury whether plaintiff contributed to the injury by letting her husband have portions of his wages deposited with her, when she had reason to believe that he would purchase liquors with the money, and that if she did, she could not recover, was held proper. Huff v. Aultman, 69 Iowa, 71.

In an action by a wife evidence as to the number, defendant Con Creeden had received like packages of intoxicating liquor prior to this from the Railroad Company, which had been, in the same way, shipped to him from places out of the State. The liquors were seized on the 23d day of November. Two of the packages had been for fifteen days in the railroad freight-house at Des Moines, one for thirteen days, one for nine days, one for eight days, and one for six days. Con Creeden kept a place in Des Moines for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, and was guilty of frequent violation of the law against their sale. The packages were marked with the word "Whiskey," and prior to the seizure in this case like packages had been received for and delivered to Con Creeden, one at a time, by the Railroad Company.

2. In Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 125 U. S. 465 [81 L. ed. 700], the United States Supreme Court has held that the laws of this State restricting the transportation of intoxicating liquors from other States into this State are a regulation of commerce, and are therefore in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, which it is held secures the right of transportation of articles of commerce from one State to another. The features of the Iowa Statute held to conflict with the United States Constitution are those which restrict the right of common carriers to transport intoxicating liquors into this State. The restriction upon the powers and rights of carriers is the point upon which it conflicts with the Constitution of the United States. In so far as the Statute prohibits the keepers of saloons, restaurants, warehouses or any other place, from keeping intoxicating liquors for unlawful sales, it does not conflict with the Constitution of the United States. But, as commerce is dependent upon carriers for transportation of all articles of trade, their powers and rights cannot be restricted. We think there can be no doubt that this is the correct purport of this decision.

We do not understand that the United States Supreme Court has decided in this case, or in any other, that intoxicating liquors transported from another State may be sold within this State for uses forbidden by its laws. Indeed, the court expressly declares that the question is not in the case. The United States Supreme Court in many decisions has held that the States have the constitutional right to forbid the sale of intoxicating liquors within their borders. It appears that this controlling thought has escaped attention in the discussions upon the subject of the effect of the constitutional authority of Congress to regulate commerce between the States upon the power of a State to forbid the sale of intoxicating liquors within its borders which are imported from another State. Commerce is not the use of articles of traffic. When the United States Constitution conferred upon Congress the power to regulate commerce between the States, it was not intended that provisions should be made by Congress to affect the use of the subjects of commerce. It surely was not the intention that laws should be enacted affecting the tastes, habits and wants of the people, so as to increase the demands for articles of traffic; nor could it have been intended that the governments of the States established by the people should be deprived of the power to repress the use of such articles of commerce as the State determines are detrimental to the morals, health, peace and prosperity of the people. The people, by their tastes, habits, wants and laws enacted by themselves, determine what articles of commerce they will use. Commerce in the articles of traffic thus required by the people is regulated by Congress. If the use of certain articles of age and sex of her children is not admissible to affect the question of damages. Huggins v. Kavanagh, 52 Iowa, 328; Welch v. Jugenheimer, 56 Iowa, 11.

But she may show, to sustain a claim for exemplary damages, the number and age of her children, if she also shows that defendant, prior to selling the liquor to her husband, had knowledge that she had such children. Ward v. Thompson, 48 Iowa, 588.

To render evidence of recoveries from other parties admissible to reduce damages, it must be shown that such other recoveries were for sales during the same time as that covered by the alleged sales by defendant. Jackson v. Noble, 54 Iowa, 641.

Where a joint action is brought by a married woman against the seller and the owner of the premises, said owner is entitled to a trial by jury to decide whether he consented to or had knowledge of the sale. Loan v. Hiney, 53 Iowa, 89.

In an action by a wife for injury to her means of support, a judgment obtained by her in an action against another party, for injury thereto accruing, is admissible to show the actual extent of the wrong done by the defendant. Engleken v. Webber, 47 Iowa, 558. Compare Ennis v. Shiley, Id. 552.

Proof that the husband bought liquor of the defendant will not shift the burden upon the latter to show that his liquor did not cause the former drunkenness. MacLeod v. Geyer, 53 Iowa, 615.

Proof that the vendor did not know that such person was in the habit of getting intoxicated constitutes no defense. Dudley v. Sautbaine, 49 Iowa, 650.

7 L. R. A.

The fact that a husband, when intoxicated, called his wife a prostitute in the presence of her neighbors, and threatened to kill her, was held, in the absence of proof that his conduct impaired her health, not to constitute a ground for the recovery of actual damages in her action against the liquor seller, and evidence thereof to be inadmissible as a ground of exemplary damages. Calloway v. Laydon, 47 Iowa, 456.

Evidence that plaintiff's husband had been an habitual drunkard for twenty years before his death was held incompetent to reduce the measure of damages; but evidence of his habitual drunkenness was properly admitted, on plaintiff's behalf, for the purpose of showing that the sale of beer to him was unlawful. Huff v. Aultman, 69 Iowa, 71.

In other States. See Cruise v. Aden, 3 L. R. A. 327, 127 Ill. 231; Brockway v. Patterson (Mich.) 1 L. R. A. 708; Jones v. Bates (Neb.) 4 L. R. A. 495.

Purchasers may recover purchase money.

The Iowa Code, § 1560, allowing purchasers of intoxicating liquor illegally sold to recover the purchase money by action, is valid. Connolly v. Scurr, 72 Iowa, 223.

A demand for money paid for liquors unlawfully sold must be made before an action therefor is maintainable. Schober v. Rosenfield, 75 Iowa, 455.

An agent making illegal sales of liquor, but not receiving the purchase price therefor, is not liable to an action to recover the amount of such payments, under Iowa Code, § 1550. Ibid.

commerce, as intoxicating liquors, is forbidden by the taxes, habits and laws of the people, it is not for the courts, by judicial interpretation of the Constitution of the United States, to force them upon the people against their wishes, and against the laws of their own enactment. The people of the State, in their sovereign capacity, as rulers of their own domestic affairs, may declare that intoxicating liquors shall not be sold in the State for use as a beverage. The provision of the Constitution of the United States in question cannot nullify such a state law, which is enacted in the exercise of full authority. Under it Congress may regulate the traffic in such things until it comes to the point of their use as a beverage. There the authority to regulate commerce ceases to extend to the interdicted liquors, for they are no longer subjects of lawful commerce.

8. A carrier is a servant of commerce, and is protected under constitutional provisions for the regulation of commerce in the discharge of all the duties of a carrier recognized by the law. Regulations of commerce reach him while he is in the discharge of duties pertaining to commerce. When he ceases to be a carrier he is beyond the protection provided by regulations for commerce. If he ceases to be a carrier and becomes a warehouseman, he cannot be protected as a carrier.

Recurring to the facts, it will be remembered that the liquor in question had been received at the place of destination from six to fifteen days prior to the seizure, and was kept in the railroad freight house, or warehouse used for storing freight transported or for transportation upon the railroad. It is a familiar rule of the law that upon the arrival of freight at the place of destination, and its deposit in the carrier's warehouse, his responsibility as carrier ceases. He becomes, as to the freight and the consignee, a warehouseman. Francis v. Dubuque & S. O. R. Co. 25 Iowa, 60; Mohr v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 40 Iowa, 579; 2 Am. & Eng. Cyclop. Law, 881; Ang. Carr. 5th ed. § 304, and cases cited in notes.

The defendant did not, therefore, hold the liquor as a carrier, but as a warehouseman. As such he was the agent of Con Creeden, the bailor.

4. But counsel for defendant say that the goods became impressed with the character of interstate commerce, and retained that character after they went into the custody of the warehouseman. In truth commerce, so far as transportation is concerned, ceased to have connection with the liquors when they ceased to be held by the carrier for transportation.

After that they were held for storage. It surely will not be contended that the storage of goods was a continuation of the transportation. They were stored because the transportation had ceased.

5. It is made plain by a consideration of the facts that the Railroad Company held the liquors under special arrangement with Con Creeden. Six successive shipments of liquor, each containing less than five gallons, were held for from six to fifteen days before they were seized, and it had been the practice of the Railroad Company for some time before these shipments were received to hold shipments of whiskey in the same way. The little freight bills of 84 cents on each shipment were not paid until the package was delivered. Con Creeden did not present demands for the whiskey, but sent an express wagon to get a jug at a time, as it was wanted for sale in the saloon in violation of law. He was a notorious saloon keeper and violator of the law. The packages were marked "Whiskey." All the circumstances lead to the conclusion that the Railway Company held the liquor for Con Creeden under an agreement that it should aid him to evade the law. It cannot, under these circumstances, base any defense upon the fact that its freight charges were not paid. Had it dealt with Con Creeden with a purpose to obey the law, it would not have permitted its freight bills to remain unpaid for so many days, and would not have permitted its warehouse to be used as a place where liquors kept for unlawful sale could be conveniently concealed and protected. In its attempt thus to violate the law, and to aid a notorious violator of the law to evade its provisions, it loses all claim or lien which it had, either as a carrier or warehouseman, for its freight bills of 84 cents each upon each jug of whiskey.

A violator of the law will not be enabled to justify his offenses, and escape punishment therefor, on the ground of rights of property or other rights which he holds in things used in the commission of the offense. Con Creeden's right of property in the whiskey cannot shield him from the effects of his unlawful acts in keeping the whiskey for unlawful sale. Nor can the Railroad Company, which was engaged with and aided him in the violation of the law, defeat the proceeding and escape the judgment of the law, on the ground that it has a lien for trifling sums upon the liquors which it was keeping in violation of law. The foregoing discussion disposes of all questions in the case.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

John N. A. GRISWOLD

v.

George WEBB.

(....R. L....)

An unlicensed hack driver specially ordered for a steamboat passenger is not a trespasser in going with his carriage, for the purpose of meeting such passenger, upon a wharf used by the steamboat company to receive and discharge all passengers, although the rules of the wharf forbid any but private carriages, or hackney carriages which are licensed, to stand upon the wharf.
7 L. R. A

(November 30, 1899.)

ACTION of trespass quare clausum fregit to recover damages for the alleged wrongful entry of defendant upon plaintiff's wharf for the purpose of soliciting passengers as a hackman. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Francis B. Peckham and Samuel R. Honey for plaintiff.

Messrs. William P. Sheffield and William P. Sheffield, Jr., for defendant.

Stiness, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff is owner of Commercial Wharf, in Newport, a part of which is leased to the Newport & Wickford Railroad & Steamboat Company as a terminus. To preserve order upon the wharf, stands are let for hackney carriages, and the following rules are prescribed for its use:

"Rules for Hackmen and Others.

"1. Drivers of hackney carriages shall remain on or near their carriages, except when carrying baggage to or from them.

"2. No one shall occupy a hack stand or express stand except the licensee or his employés.

"3. No hackney carriage or express wagon shall stand on the space to the eastward of the restaurant building, or on the roadways, except on licensed hack stands, even though ordered in advance by a passenger."

East of the restaurant building is a plank walk for passengers, and east of the walk a space is reserved for private carriages. The rest of the wharf is used for sidewalks, roadways, and buildings. The defendant, driver of a hackney carriage in Newport, went to the wharf on the day in question for a lady who was to arrive in the boat, as he had been ordered to do by the passenger, or someone in her behalf. He backed his hack as near as he could to the space reserved for private carriages, when he was ordered to leave the wharf by the superintendent, upon the ground that he had no right to be there, having no license from the owner. The plaintiff claimed that the wheels of the defendant's carriage were backed on to the plank walk, but, upon all the testimony, we are not satisfied this was so, or, if so, that it was anything more than accidental. At any rate the order to leave the wharf was not put upon this ground, but because he had no right there. Upon receiving the order to leave, the defendant stated, both to the plaintiff and to the superintendent of the wharf, that he had been ordered there for a passenger, and he refused to leave. The plaintiff then called a policeman, who moved the carriage to another place in the roadway, where the defendant remained until the boat arrived, when he took his passenger and drove away. The passenger was an infirm lady, who had been accustomed to ride with the defendant, and one who was obliged to use a stool, which he had with him, to aid her in getting into the carriage. The plaintiff sues in trespass, and the defendant justifies under a right as servant of the passenger. The question is whether the defendant had the right to enter and remain upon the wharf to take the passenger, notwithstanding the rules and the order to leave. We understand the rules to forbid an unlicensed hackney carriage to stand upon the wharf at all; for none are allowed to stand in the roadways, except on the licensed stands, and none are allowed to occupy a stand without a license. But the wharf is leased to a common carrier of passengers, with a provision that the space east of the restaurant shall be reserved for the use of private carriages of passengers arriving at the wharf.

The question of right, therefore, is the same as it would be between passengers and a company which owns its terminus. While such ownership carries with it a right of control, in most respects the same as in private property, a railroad station or steamboat wharf is, to some extent, a public place. The public have the right to come and go there for the purpose of travel; for taking and leaving passengers; and for other matters growing out of the business of the company as a common carrier. But the company has the right to say that no business of any other character shall be carried on within the limits of its property. It has the right to say that no one shall come there to solicit trade, simply because it may be convenient for travelers, and so to say that none, except those whom it permits, shall solicit in the business of hacking or expressing. When notice of such prohibition has been given, the license which otherwise might be implied is at an end, and it is the duty of persons engaged in any such business to heed the notice and to retire from the premises. Barney v. Oyster Bay & H. Steamboat Co. 67 N. Y. 801; Com. v. Power, 7 Met. 596.

But, while this is so, the company cannot deprive a passenger of the ordinary rights and privileges of a traveler, among which is the privilege of being transported from the terminus in a reasonably convenient and usual way. A company cannot compel a passenger to take one of certain carriages, or none at all; nor impose unreasonable restrictions, which will amount to that. If a passenger orders a carriage to take him from the terminus, such carriage is, pro hac vice, a private carriage, not in the sense that the passenger has a special property in it, so as to be liable for the driver's negligence, but in the sense that it is not "standing for hire." Masterson v. Short, 38 How. Pr. 481.

The driver is not engaged in his vocation of soliciting patronage, but is waiting to take one with whom a contract has already been made. No question is made that a passenger may have his own carriage enter the premises of a carrier to take him away; but to say that one who is not so fortunate as to own a carriage shall not be allowed to call the one he wants, because it is a hackney carriage, would be a discrimination intolerable in this country. Yet this is really the plaintiff's claim. Every passenger has the right, upon the premises of the carrier, to reasonable and usual facilities for arrival and departure; and, so far as this includes the right to be taken to and from a station or wharf, it is immaterial whether he goes in a private or a hired carriage. Decisions upon this question have not been numerous, and we know of but one directly in point, although in others there are dicta which indicate what is understood to be the law.

Summitt v. State, 8 Lea, 418, was a conviction of the defendant, a watchman in a depot, for assault in ejecting a hackman therefrom

The company had forbidden hackmen to enter the building. Notwithstanding this rule, the right of a hackman to go into a part of the depot to obtain the baggage of a passenger, whose check he had, was not controverted. The prosecutor, having the check of a passenger, was in another part of the depot; but it was held that the defendant was not justified in ejecting him altogether from the station, and the conviction was sustained.

Tobin v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 59 Me. 188, was an action for damages by a hackman who was injured by stepping on a defective platform when leaving a passenger at the station. The court says: "The hackman, conveying passengers to a railroad depot for transportation, and aiding them to alight upon the platform of the corporation, is as rightfully upon the same as the passengers alighting."

In this case it was not claimed that any rules had been violated.

The recent case of Old Colony R. Co. v. Tripp, 147 Mass. 85, 6 New Eng. Rep. 866, was an action of trespass against an expressman who solicited patronage in the plaintiff's station, contrary to its rules. W. Allen, J., says: "Passengers taking and leaving the cars at the station, and persons setting down passengers or delivering merchandise or baggage for transportation from the station, or taking up passengers or receiving merchandise that had been transported to the station, had a right to use the station buildings and grounds, superior to the right of the plaintiff to exclusive occupancy. All such persons had business with the plaintiff, which it was bound to attend to in the place and manner which it had provided for all who had like business with it."

A statute of Massachusetts prescribes that railroad corporations shall give to all persons equal facilities for the use of its depot. The court held that this statute applied only to the relations between common carriers and their patrons, or those who had the right to use the station. It did not give the defendant the right to go there to solicit business because another had the right. See also Harris v. Stevens, 81 Vt. 79.

In Markham v. Brown, 8 N. H. 523, an action of trespass, brought by an innkeeper against a stage driver, the court says the defendant had clearly a right "to go to the plaintiff's inn with travelers, and he might of course lawfully enter it for the purpose of leaving their baggage and receiving his fare."

The case most nearly in support of the plaintiff's contention of those we have seen is Barker v. Midland R. Co. 18 C. B. 46, where it was held that an omnibus proprietor, carrying passengers to and from a station, could not maintain an action for a refusal to allow him to drive his vehicle into the station yard. As the proprietor was not using or seeking to use the railway, it was considered that the company owed him no duty. Jervis, Ch. J., said a passenger would, no doubt, have a right of action, if unduly obstructed, but a violation of duty to him would not give an action to the plaintiff. It is to be observed that the recent English cases are mainly controlled by Statute (17 and 18 Vict. chap. 81), to which the Massachusetts statute is similar. They relate chiefly to the question whether a prohibition to one, to ply for passengers within a station, when the same right is granted to another, is an undue preference, under the Statute. It is generally held that it is not. See Beadell v. Eastern Counties R. Co. 2 C. B. N. S. 509; Painter v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. Id. 702; Hols v. Digby, 27 Week. Rep. 884.

In the latter case it seems to be conceded that one going bona fide to meet a passenger would not be guilty of trespass.

In Marriott v. London & S. W. R. Co. 1 C. B. N. S. 499, the defendant company was ordered to admit the complainant's omnibus into the station to receive and set down passengers and goods, as other public vehicles were admitted. Upon the question before us, we do not think these cases are in conflict with the views we have above expressed.

The case at bar differs from Barker v. Midland R. Co., supra, in this: that here the hackney driver is not plaintiff, seeking to recover damages for the revocation of a license to go upon the wharf, or for a breach of duty to another, but the defendant against an alleged trespass, who relied upon his right as servant of the other to justify his being there. We think the justification is sufficient. It is substantially given by the terms of the lease to the steamboat company. This does not deprive the owner of the general control of his wharf, nor interfere with his reasonable rules for its management. It simply secures to a passenger the common privilege of a passenger, and enables the hackney driver to shield himself from an apparent violation of the rules only when he is acting, bona fide, as the servant of such passenger. This qualification guards the owner from an incursion of unlicensed drivers under a mere pretense of serving passengers, and also confines the right of soliciting business on his premises to those whom he may permit.

We give judgment for the defendant for his costs.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Charles N. WOOD et al.
v.

Willard A. BULLARD.

(...Mass....)

1. It seems that a covenant under seal by a life tenant, having power to dispose of the remainder of the estate by will, to refrain from disposing of a portion of such remainder upon consideration that the will granting the power shall not be contested, is enforceable.
7 L. R. A.

2. A covenantee, who with the means at hand of knowing all the facts accepts his share of money paid by the covenantor for a release from his obligation, will be precluded from afterwards proceeding to enforce the covenant.

3. Proceedings by an administrator of a deceased covenantee to carry out an agreement by such decedent to release, and to procure the other covenantees to release, the covenantor from his obligation, will not estop him from setting up an independent right belonging to him as a covenantee to enforce the covenant, if he has not ratified or profited by the agreement, although they may preclude him from exercising any right to enforce the covenant which he may claim through or on behalf of the decedent.

4. The fact that distributees who have received a portion of the estate of a decedent, who contracted to procure covenantees to release a covenantor from his obligation, may be called upon to contribute towards the damages which may be recovered for the breach of such contract, will not preclude them from exercising their right as covenantees to enforce the covenant, where their liability will in no event be co-extensive with their claim, and there is no means of determining what such liability will be.

5. The words "then surviving," in a will giving a woman power to dispose of an estate by will, and, in case of her failure to make a will, directing payment at her decease of one half the fund to testator's heirs-at-law then surviving, they taking by right of representation, and the other half to the heirs of such woman then surviving, they taking by right of representation, refer to the time of the death of the woman and give the half of the fund to the persons who at that time are testator's heirs-at-law.

(April 1, 1890.)

ON report from the Supreme Judicial Court for Middlesex County (Holmes, J.) for the opinion of the full court of a suit brought to compel the specific performance of an agreement not to dispose of certain property by will. Decree in favor of two plaintiffs and against the others.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. Robert M. Morse, Jr., Thomas H. Armstrong and William E. Jewell, for plaintiffs:

The evidence as to the receipt of the money by plaintiffs was not sufficient to create an estoppel.

See Andrews v. Lyon, 11 Allen, 849; Howard v. Hudson, 2 El. & Bl. 110; Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & El. 469; Freesman v. Cooke, 2 Exch. 668; Turner v. Coffin, 12 Allen, 401; Carroll v. Manchester & L. R. Co. 111 Mass. 1; Tyler v. Odd Fellows Mut. Relief Asso. 5 New Eng. Rep. 191, 145 Mass. 134; Audenried v. Betteley, 5 Allen, 882; Plummer v. Lord, 9 Allen, 455; Lanodon v. Doud, 10 Allen, 438; Peaslee v. Peaslee, 6 New Eng. Rep. 571, 147 Mass. 171; Plymouth v. Wareham, 126 Mass. 475; Hanrahan v. O'Reilly, 102 Mass. 201; Brigham v. Fryerweather, 8 New Eng. Rep. 759, 144 Mass. 48.

The administrators of an insane intestate cannot ratify a contract made by him, although the other party cannot be restored to the same position as before.

Norton v. Norton, 5 Cush. 524; Valpy v. Rea, 180 Mass. 834; Brigham v. Fryerweather, supra; Molton v. Camroux, 2 Exch. 487.

Mr. Samuel Hoar, for defendant:

When a person who is non compos mentis, but apparently of sound mind, enters into a contract that is fair and reasonable, with a person who is ignorant of his incapacity and who takes no advantage of his infirmity, and the contract has been fully performed so that the insane party has had the full benefit thereof, and the circumstances are such that the parties cannot be put in statu quo, such a contract cannot be rescinded by the lunatic himself if he becomes of sound mind nor by his legal representatives.

Molton v. Camroux, 2 Exch. 489; Beavan v. McDonnell, 9 Exch. 309; Niell v. Morley, 9 Ves. Jr. 478; Loomis v. Spencer, 2 Paige, 153; New York Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Hunt, 79 N. Y. 541; Johnson v. Stone, 85 Hun, 830; Riley v. Albany Sav. Bank, 86 Hun, 518; Young v. Stevens, 48 N. H. 133; Scanlan v. Cobb, 85 Ill. 296; Beale v. See, 10 Pa. 56; Lancaster Co. Nat. Bank v. Moore, 78 Pa. 407; Behrens v. McKenzie, 23 Iowa, 838; Abbott v. Crael, 56 Iowa, 175; Alexander v. Haskins, 68 Iowa, 73; Brodrick v. Brodrick, 56 Cal. 563; Wilder v. Weakley, 34 Ind. 181; Fay v. Burditt, 81 Ind. 435; Physio-Medical College v. Wilkinson, 6 West. Rep. 535, 108 Ind. 814; Hopson v. Boyd, 6 B. Mon. 296; Rusk v. Fenton, 14 Bush, 490; Gribben v. Maxwell, 84 Kan. 8; Shoulters v. Allen, 51 Mich. 529; Olew v. Baltimore Bank, 14 Md. 299; Yauger v. Skinner, 14 N. J. Eq. 389; Eaton v. Eaton, 87 N. J. L. 103; Matthiessen v. McMahon, 88 N. J. L. 536; Carr v. Holliday, 5 Ired. Eq. (N.C.) 167; Riggan v. Green, 80 N. C. 286; Encking v. Simmons, 28 Wis. 272; Lincoln v. Buckmaster, 82 Vt. 652.

The administratrix ratified the release, and said release and the covenant therein are binding.

Allis v. Billings, 6 Met. 415; Arnold v. Richmond Iron Works, 1 Gray, 434.

Abigail W. Smith, took no interest in the property, under the provisions of the will because she was not an "heir-at-law then surviving;" that is, living at the time of the death of Caroline A. Wood.

Denny v. Kettle, 185 Mass. 138; Coveny v. McLaughlin, 2 L. R. A. 448, 148 Mass. 576.

Hence the children of Abigail W. Smith, the plaintiffs, Mrs. Moor and Charles W. Smith, took no interest in the property of Caleb Wood by descent or devise from their mother, Mrs. Smith, and they took no interest in the property under the provisions of the will; because they were not "heirs-at-law" of said Caleb Wood.

Abbott v. Bradstreet, 8 Allen, 587; Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 38; Whall v. Conversa, 5 New Eng. Rep. 823, 146 Mass. 845.

C. Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In August, 1877, Caleb Wood died childless, leaving a widow, Caroline A. Wood, and a will wherein he devised the residue of his estate to a trustee, in trust, to invest the same and pay over to her such sums or parts thereof as she might from time to time desire, and upon her decease to dispose of the trust fund then remaining as she might by her will direct; and in case she should fail to make a will, then to pay at her decease one half of said trust fund to his heirs-at-law then surviving, they taking by right of representation, and one half to the heirs-at-law of his wife then surviving, they taking by right of representation.

His heirs-at-law at the time of his death [besides his widow, who was a statutory heir] were as follows: (1) a brother, Charles; (2) four children of a deceased brother, Eliphalet; (3) three children of a deceased brother, Lyman; (4) a sister, Abigail W. Smith.

As some of the heirs-at-law of the testator had been thinking of contesting the probate of the will, his widow on the 24th of September, 1877, entered into an agreement under seal with the heirs, wherein she covenanted that within two months from the probate of the will she would pay over to the said Abigail W. Smith the sum of $5,000, and "that I will not make any testamentary disposition of the trust fund created under said will and remaining at my decease, that shall prevent one half of the said trust fund remaining at my decease from descending to the said heirs or their legal representatives exactly as it would descend to said heirs by the terms of said will, should I make no will, and that I will do no act which will prevent one half of such trust fund as shall remain in the hands of the trustee at my decease from going to the said heirs."

The will was accordingly proved and allowed, and the $5,000 duly paid to Mrs. Smith.

It is conceded that this agreement by its terms did not have the effect to prevent Mrs. Wood from calling upon the trustee to pay to her the whole of the trust property in her lifetime, and that if the property had been thus paid over to her in pursuance of such a request it would have become her own, and that she might have disposed of it as she pleased. The agreement merely precluded her from making a testamentary disposition of the trust fund.

On the 10th of April, 1879, Charles Wood, the testator's brother, entered into an agreement under seal with the testator's widow, reciting the above-mentioned agreement, and that she was dissatisfied therewith and claimed it to be illegal: wherefore, in consideration of $7,000 paid to him by her, "he does thereby cancel, annul and forever discharge and release said contract, and he covenants and agrees with her and her heirs and executors to protect her from said contract, and that no claim against her or her estate shall be made under the same by any person, and that no objection shall be made on account of said contract to any will she had made or may make. And he further covenants that he will procure from the heirs of Caleb Wood named in said contract a release to said Caroline of said contract and all rights under the same." The former agreement was accordingly surrendered to her by Charles Wood, in whose possession it seems to have been, and was canceled.

On the 16th of December, 1886, Mrs. Wood died, leaving a will, wherein she disposed of all of the property in the hands of the trustee, which then amounted to about $260,000, away from the heirs of her husband. Charles Wood had already died December 11, 1884, intestate, childless, unmarried, having procured formal releases from three only out of four of Eliphalet Wood's children, dated February 2, 1880. Mrs. Smith died before the death of Charles Wood, leaving two adult children.

The four children of Eliphalet, the three children of Lyman, and the two children of Mrs. Smith [these all being also the heirs-at-law of Charles Wood], now bring this bill in equity seeking to enforce the agreement of 7 L. R. A.

Mrs. Wood that she would not make any testamentary disposition of the trust fund created under her husband's will. The defenses are, the release and agreement given by Charles Wood, the formal releases given by three of Eliphalet's children, the acceptance by others of the plaintiffs of the money paid by Mrs. Wood for the release and agreement by Charles, under circumstances constituting an estoppel or an accord and satisfaction, and the death of Mrs. Smith before that of Mrs. Wood, which it is contended had the effect to cut off any claim on the part of her two children. The plaintiffs' replication alleges that the release of Charles Wood was given when he was of unsound mind, and this question was submitted to a jury, who disagreed.

As to the three children of Eliphalet who signed formal releases to Mrs. Wood, it is conceded that no claim can now be maintained in their behalf, and that they are to be treated as out of the case.

As to the fourth child of Eliphalet, Mrs. Minor, and the three children of Lyman Wood, their claim is cut off by their acceptance of $1,000 each, as an accord and satisfaction. It is conceded that each one of them received from the administrators of the estate of Charles Wood a sum sufficient, when taken with certain payments made to Lyman's three children, by Charles Wood himself in his lifetime, to make up $1,000 with interest from the time when Mrs. Wood paid the $7,000 to Charles Wood. The testimony and circumstances show clearly that they received the sums, not as gifts from Mrs. Wood, but on a consideration connected with the compromise agreement which she had given with reference to the allowance of her husband's will. She had already paid all the money called for by that agreement, namely the $5,000, to Mrs. Smith, and after having done so she had paid $7,000 more to Charles of which he had in his lifetime paid certain portions to some of these children. A question had arisen early in respect to the purpose of Mrs. Wood in paying this money, and her letter to Mrs. Minor, dated August 9, 1879, showing that it was intended for the children of Eliphalet and Lyman, had been exhibited to several if not to all of those children, immediately after the death of Charles; all of these children were in consultation together in Worcester in December, 1884, with a common purpose to get this money. Three of them, being children of Eliphalet, had signed formal releases to Mrs. Wood in the lifetime of Charles. They all demanded and obtained from the administrators of Charles the payment of such sums as made up the sum of $1,000 to each, with interest. The suggestion in the argument that they took it as a gift from Mrs. Wood cannot be entertained for a moment. Without going minutely into the details of the testimony, we are satisfied from reading it that they all then knew of the agreement which she had made, and knew that Charles Wood had received this money from her upon some bargain or understanding referring to her agreement, and that they either knew all the particulars of that bargain or at any rate had all the information in respect to it which they cared to have. If any particulars were wanting, it was because they shut their eyes and turned away their ears. Under these circumstances, their taking steps to enforce the payment of the money to them by Charles Wood's administrators and their acceptance of it constitute a virtual adoption by them of the bargain upon which he obtained the money from her, so far at least as to preclude them from enforcing her original agreement. It was equivalent to saying, "Whatever he promised as to our giving up that agreement, we adopt it." Kelley v. Newburyport & A. Horse R. Co. 141 Mass. 496, 499, 2 New Eng. Rep. 383.

It remains to be considered whether the bill can be maintained in behalf of the two children of Mrs. Smith; one of whom is Mrs. Moor, who is also one of the administrators of the estate of Charles Wood, and the other is Charles W. Smith.

In respect to Mrs. Moor, it is contended that her claim is cut off by reason of her transactions above referred to in which she, as an administrator of the estate of Charles Wood, took part. It is contended, and the justice before whom the case was heard found as a fact [subject, however, to the question of law whether administrators of an insane intestate could so ratify], that the administrators of Charles Wood have ratified the release by him to Mrs. Wood, and the transaction in relation to it. This ratification is certainly so far effectual as to cut off any claim by the administrators or representatives of Charles Wood, under the agreement of Mrs. Wood. Charles Wood executed a formal release of said contract, and if this was invalid by reason of his insanity the ratification makes it good to this extent at least. The claim of Mrs. Moor, however, does not rest upon her rights as an heir of Charles Wood, but upon her rights as daughter of Abigail W. Smith, who was a sister of the testator.

It is not easy to see in what way her individual claim under Mrs. Wood's agreement is affected by her acts as administratrix of Charles Wood. Let it be assumed that her ratification, as administratrix, of the release and covenants of Charles Wood to Mrs. Wood was full and valid, both in fact and in law; the effect of this is only to give to that instrument the same force which it would have had if its validity had never been questioned. It makes the instrument valid and effectual as an instrument signed and sealed by Charles Wood; but it does not affect the rights of Mrs. Moor as an individual except so far as she might claim under Charles Wood. In executing that instrument, Charles Wood did not act nor assume to act as the agent of Mrs. Smith, the mother of Mrs. Moor; but in consideration of $7,000 paid to him he covenanted with Mrs. Wood that he would procure from the heirs of Caleb Wood a release to her of her contract. If that instrument was valid at the time of its execution, or if it was made valid by being ratified afterwards, it did not cut off the claim of any heir of Caleb Wood under Mrs. Wood's agreement, except of Charles Wood himself, unless something further should be done by which their rights would be affected. As to three children of Eliphalet, something further was done, and they executed a formal release, by which their claim is cut off. As to the fourth child of Eliphalet and the three children of Lyman, something further was done, and their claim is cut off by their acceptance of money as shown above. But as to Mrs. Moor, she has received no money, and has signed no release, and her acts in a representative capacity as administratrix of Charles Wood may affect his estate and the rights of those claiming under him, but do not affect her rights as daughter of Mrs. Smith, unless she was called upon, by reason of what was going on, to make it known to Mrs. Wood that she as an individual did not intend to release any claim she might have under Mrs. Wood's compromise agreement. If she had a valid right to hold Mrs. Wood to that agreement, that right still continues, unless she is estopped to enforce it. The justice before whom the cause was heard found that she was thus estopped by her conduct in paying over the money, as administratrix of Charles Wood, and he mentions no other ground on which the estoppel rests. We are not able to adopt this conclusion. If Charles Wood himself had paid over the $7,000 to the children of Eliphalet and Lyman, and had taken their receipts, and if Mrs. Moor had stood by and assented to such an application of the money, the necessary elements of an estoppel upon her would still be wanting. Mrs. Wood did not intend that any of the money should go to Mrs. Smith. Charles Wood in his lifetime paid nothing to her, or to her children. It must be assumed that Mrs. Wood knew that she was bound to Mrs. Smith, as well as to the other heirs of her husband, and that a release from her was to be procured by Charles Wood. Now if Mrs. Moor had done anything with a design to mislead Mrs. Wood into the belief that she gave up any claim she might have as a daughter of Mrs. Smith, and if Mrs. Wood had in fact been misled to her injury and had acted or omitted to act in consequence thereof, then Mrs. Moor would be estopped. But we do not find these essential elements of an estoppel in what Mrs. Moor did as administratrix of Charles Wood. When Charles Wood took Mrs. Wood's money, and executed his release and agreement, and surrendered her own agreement to her, Mrs. Wood may have jumped to the conclusion that everything had been done that needed to be done, in order to enable her to dispose of the trust property without a violation of her agreement. But we find nothing to show that she was misled into this conclusion by any act of Mrs. Moor which was intended to produce that result. Mrs. Moor did nothing actively, so far as appears, except to pay over the money which she held as administratrix of Charles Wood. She did nothing passively except to omit to make it known to Mrs. Wood that she did not intend to give up any claim which she herself might have as an individual. Was she called upon to do this? Mrs. Wood apparently was not there at the time the money was paid over by Mrs. Moor, or the consultations had.

It does not appear even that Mrs. Moor was afterwards in any communication with Mrs. Wood. It rests upon the party setting up an estoppel to show the grounds on which it rests. The circumstances disclosed in the report, and in that portion of the testimony which is laid before us, fall short of creating an estoppel upon Mrs. Moor. Tyler v. Odd Fellows Mut. Relief Assn. 145 Mass. 184, 188, 5 New Eng. Rep.

191; Bragg v. Boston & W. R. Co. 9 Allen, 54.

It is further contended in behalf of the defendants that neither Mrs. Moor nor Charles W. Smith can maintain their claim under Mrs. Wood's agreement, because if the agreement of Charles Wood to procure releases from all of Caleb Wood's heirs was ratified, then the administrators of Charles Wood would be bound to make that agreement good, and since his estate has been mostly distributed, his heirs-at-law, including these plaintiffs, who have received the same, would also in like manner be bound; and that, therefore, if these plaintiffs prevail in this suit against the estate of Mrs. Wood, they will become liable to that estate in another suit and therefore to prevent circuity of action this suit should be dismissed. This objection, however, cannot prevail, for two reasons. In the first place, if the executor of Mrs. Wood should have any claim, by reason of being held responsible upon Mrs. Wood's agreement, it would be primarily against the estate of Charles Wood, as represented by the administrators, or, if that should prove insufficient by reason of their having distributed it in great part, then the claim, if any is enforceable, would not be limited to Mrs. Moor and Charles W. Smith, but would be against all of the distributees. In either case, the liability, indirect or direct, of Mrs. Moor and Charles W. Smith would not be co-extensive with their claims against the estate of Mrs. Wood, and at the most their claims should be defeated only to the extent of their subsequent liability to that estate. In the second place, that subsequent liability cannot be ascertained in the present suit. The administrators of Charles Wood have still some property of his estate in their hands, and have not settled their accounts, and it cannot now be determined how much property they have, or whether it would be sufficient to respond to any claim in favor of the executor of Mrs. Wood. Moreover, it cannot now be determined what damages, if any, her executor would be entitled to recover by reason of Charles Wood's failure to fulfill his agreement. That question has not been discussed, nor have facts been ascertained or reported with a view to its proper determination. At the present time, we need go no further than to say that the determination of that question in the present suit is impracticable.

Finally, it is contended by the defendants that the death of Mrs. Smith after the death of Caleb Wood, the testator, and before the death of Mrs. Wood, has the effect to exclude her children from any benefit under the provision of Caleb Wood's will. That provision is, that if Mrs. Wood should fail to make a will, then at her decease the trustee should pay one half of said trust fund to the testator's heirs-at-law then surviving, they taking by right of representation. The argument is that, at the testator's decease, Mrs. Smith was an heir-at-law, and her children were not; that his heirs-at-law must be ascertained at the time of his death; and that she, being an heir-at-law at the time of his death, lost the right which she would otherwise have had by reason of not surviving until Mrs. Wood's death. This question has not been discussed by the plaintiffs.

There are very many cases where testamentary language has been construed, bearing some resemblance to that used by the testator; but singularly enough after some little examination no one has been found by us where a remainder over was limited to the testator's heirs-at-law then surviving. Where there is a limitation over to a class designated as the testator's heirs-at-law, or his next of kin, it is usual to hold that this class should be ascertained at the time of the testator's death, unless there is something to be found in the will showing a contrary intention; and this for two principal reasons, namely, that the law leans rather to vested remainders, and that ordinarily in such cases it appears that, after making the special and earlier provisions for the disposition of his property, the testator does not care to follow the property further, but is content to let the law take its course, and the final devise to his heirs-at-law means that at that stage he will let it go as intestate property. It will not be profitable to go over many authorities in detail, because the reasoning is often very refined and subtle and involves a consideration of minute differences of language, and the final determination of each case must after all depend upon the intention to be gathered from all of the language used by the particular testator whose will is before the court.

In the present case, we have come to the conclusion that the limitation over to the testator's heirs-at-law then surviving must mean, to those persons then surviving who at that time would be his heirs-at-law; that is to say, that his heirs-at-law must be ascertained at the time of his wife's death, as if he had lived till then. The reasons in favor of this conclusion are as follows:

The gift was only to heirs at-law then surviving. There was no gift to any heir-at-law except to heirs-at-law surviving at the time fixed. It was necessarily wholly uncertain who would fall within that class. It was indeed possible that all of those persons who were heirs at law at the testator's death might die before the time would come for this gift to take effect. The remainder was contingent. It was not like a gift over to several persons named or clearly defined with a provision that if one or more should die the survivors should take. In such case it has been considered that the remainder is vested, but determinable upon the happening of a contingency. Blanchard v. Blanchard, 1 Allen, 223; Gibbens v. Gibbens, 140 Mass. 105, 1 New Eng. Rep. 98.

In the present case, the language excludes everybody not living at the time of Mrs. Wood's death, and the interest devised was necessarily only a contingent remainder. Colby v. Duncan, 139 Mass. 398.

Moreover, it cannot be said in the present case that if the testator's wife were to die without leaving a will he was content to let the law take its course with the trust fund, because he expressed a wish antagonistic to such a result and gave his property, not to his heirs-at-law, at the time of his death, but to his heirs-at-law surviving at the death of his wife. He was not willing that it should at that stage go as intestate property, but undertook to control the devolution of it. The two main reasons, therefore, which have usually influenced courts to refer the ascertainment of the heirs-at-law to the time of the testator's death fall in this case. Ascertaining them at that time might lead to intestacy, in case all those persons who were then heirs-at-law should die before Mrs. Wood; or, in case a part only of them should die, it would lead to great inequalities among the different branches of his relatives. No reason is apparent why he should wish to discriminate against any branch of the family. The use of the words "they taking by right of representation" shows no discrimination was intended against the children of his deceased brothers Eliphalet and Lyman. No reason is apparent why he should wish to discriminate against the children of his sister. The words "they taking by right of representation," though not of themselves decisive, nevertheless appear to furnish some indication that he meant to have his heirs ascertained at the time of his wife's death, and to exclude none of those who at that time would be his heirs. The fact that the other half of the trust fund was given to his wife's heirs-at-law then surviving, the language being similar in both cases, tends to support the same view, since her heirs could not be ascertained till that time. The words "to my heirs-at-law then surviving" seem to imply that the testator assumes that there must necessarily be a class of this character then in existence, so that his will would be effective to control the disposition of the property. Entering as far as possible into the feelings and wishes of the testator at the time of making his will, it seems on the whole to be satisfactorily certain that, in the event contemplated, he meant to give the one half of the trust fund in equal proportions, having regard to the right of representation, to those persons then living who at that time would be his heirs-at-law. This gives a fuller and broader and more natural meaning to his words, and seems to be more consistent with his general purposes.

The case of Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 38, seems at first sight to go somewhat in a different direction from that above expressed. In that case the words were, after the time fixed, "the estate herein devised shall descend to those persons who may then be entitled to take the same as my heirs." The court held that they meant that, at that stage, the law should take its course, and the estate go to the testator's heirs, as if he had made no further disposition; that this view was fortified by the use of the word "descend," which ordinarily denotes the vesting of the estate by operation of law immediately upon the death of the ancestor; that the word "surviving" was not superadded; and that the word "then" was inserted, not by way of description of the persons who are to take, but by way of defining the time when they should come into the enjoyment of that which was devised to them. The case in reality therefore was quite different from the present.

In Whall v. Converse, 146 Mass. 345, 5 New Eng. Rep. 828, there was nothing to take the case out of the general rule that ordinarily a devise of a remainder to heirs shows an intent at that stage to let the property go according to law. And there is no occasion to do more than merely mention a few other similar cases in this State. Minot v. Harris, 132 Mass. 528; Abbott v. Bradstreet, 8 Allen, 537; Minot v. Tappan, 122 Mass. 535; Childs v. Russell, 11 Met. 16.

The following cases tend more or less to support the conclusion we have reached upon the construction of the will: Fargo v. Miller, 150 Mass. 225; Knowlton v. Sanderson, 141 Mass. 323, 2 New Eng. Rep. 100; Sears v. Russell, 8 Gray, 86, 94, 97; Wharton v. Barker, 4 Kay & J. 438, which is often cited, and nowhere questioned; Sturge v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 444; Clowes v. Hilliard, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 413; Long v. Blackall, 3 Ves. Jr. 486; Pinder v. Pinder, 28 Beav. 44; Re Morley's Trusts, 25 Week. Rep. 825; Travis v. Taylor, 13 Jur. N. S. 791; Bessant v. Noble, 2 Jur. N. S. 461; Doe v. Frost, 3 Barn. & Ald. 546; Briden v. Hewlett, 2 Myl. & K. 90; Buller v. Bushnell, 8 Myl. & K. 232; Clapton v. Bulmer, 5 Myl. & Cr. 108.

The result is that the bill should be dismissed as to all of the plaintiffs except Mrs. Moor and Charles W. Smith, and that these two plaintiffs are entitled to a decree in their favor.

Ordered accordingly.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

James A. RANDALL, Appt.,

v.

EVENING NEWS ASSOCIATION et al.

(....Mich....)

1. A publication containing imputations that a member of the Legislature went there solely for the purpose of passing a bill to enrich himself and his copartners in a certain scheme, and that he had used both liquor and money to procure votes therefor from other members, is libelous.

2. A picture which is a caricature of a member of the Legislature standing on a platform which rests upon bottles, one of which is marked "Rye" with a cask marked "Gin" with faucet all ready for opening upon the platform, on which cask his right foot rests while his left hand is pressed against his heart, and his right hand extended holds a bag marked "$" when printed in connection with a publication which charges his corruption in procuring the passage of a bill, means that liquor and money were used by him in procuring its passage, and constitutes a libel if the implied charges are not true.

3. The inducement is sufficient in a declaration to recover damages for the publication of an alleged libel consisting of imputations that a certain member of the Legislature was guilty of corrupt motives and practices in introducing and procuring the passage of a certain bill, where it shows that plaintiff was a member of the Legislature, and was the introducer of such bill, and was the person referred to in the publication.

4. No innuendo is needed in pleading a libel if the meaning of the publication is plain.

(January 24, 1890.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment sustaining

7 L. R. A.

a demurrer to the declaration in an action to recover damages for the publication of an alleged libel. Reversed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry C. Wisner and Edwin F. Conely, with Mr. John J. Speed, for plaintiff, appellant:

It is not essential that the articles should impute "a legal crime, or any legal or moral offense, or legal or moral turpitude."

Root v. King, 7 Cow. 618, 4 Wend. 114; Solerton v. Peterson, 64 Wis. 200.

The charge that the conduct of Mr. Randall in accepting the office of representative, and in office, was inspired and governed solely by sordid and selfish motives, is libelous.

See opinion of Parke, B., in Parminster v. Coupland, 6 Mees. & W. 108; Ourtis v. Mussey, 6 Gray, 261.

By statute, the giving of a bribe, or attempting by any other corrupt means to control or influence the giving of votes by members of the Legislature, is a criminal offense (How. Stat. §§ 38, 39, 9241), and to falsely and maliciously publish that one had given a bribe to a member of the Legislature to secure the passage of a bill is libelous.

Wilson v. Noonan, 23 Wis. 106.

The publication was sufficiently clear and explicit, and no innuendo was needed to explain the words or point their application.

Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co. 50 Mich. 640.

Messrs. Dickinson, Thurber & Stevenson for defendants, appellees.

Morse, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff commenced a suit in a plea of trespass on the case for libel against the defendants in the Wayne Circuit Court. His declaration averred that he was and is a good, true, honest, just and faithful citizen of this State, and as such had always behaved and conducted himself; that at the time of the printing and publication of the articles of which he complains he was a member of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, from the City of Detroit, being such member from the 2d day of January, 1889, up to the present time; that as such member he hath at all times conducted himself as a good, honest and faithful official, and hath executed and performed his duties as such representative in an honest and conscientious manner, and for the best interests of the State, and of the constituency represented by him, and that he has never been guilty, or, until the time of the publication of these articles by the defendants, been suspected to have been guilty, of the offenses and misconduct hereinafter mentioned to have been charged and imputed to him; that the said plaintiff, as a member of the said House of Representatives, at the session thereof, which began on the first Wednesday of January, 1889, did introduce a bill in said House, entitled "A Bill to Empower the Common Council of the City of Detroit to Borrow Money for the Purpose of Improving the Boulevard," and which said bill was duly passed by said House, and on the 7th day of May, 1889, passed by the Senate; and said bill is the same bill referred to in the publication by the said defendants as hereinafter mentioned; and that the said defendants, contriving, and wickedly and maliciously intending, to injure the said plaintiff in his good name, fame and credit, and to bring him into public scandal, disrepute, ridicule and disgrace with and among his neighbors, and other good and worthy citizens of this State, and to cause it to be believed by them that he, the said plaintiff, had been guilty of the several acts of misconduct and offense hereinafter mentioned to have been imputed to him, heretofore, to wit, on the 8th day of May, 1889, at Detroit, in said County of Wayne, falsely, wickedly and maliciously did compose, print and publish, and cause and procure to be published, in a certain newspaper, known and styled "The Evening News," and of which numerous copies, to wit, of the number of 40,000, are circulated in said city, county and State, the words following, to wit, and the picture hereinafter delineated, to wit:

A GREAT VICTORY—WHAT NEXT?

Rep. Randall is receiving congratulations on every hand over his success in inducing the Michigan Legislature to pass a bill designed to enrich a few speculators at the general expense of the City of Detroit. The next move of the speculators will be to corrupt the caucuses of both parties, and bribe and bulldoze a sufficient number of the common council and board of estimates to vote to issue the bonds. This is somewhat of a job, but it will be cheaper than allowing the people to vote on the bonding question direct. If the $500,000 wanted now was all that would be required, the question might arise whether it was worth fighting; but $500,000 is only the entering wedge of a demand that will not stop short of $2,500,000, even if it does then. And all to enrich a few men who have grabbed a street and are determined that other people's money shall make them wealthy. However, The News can stand it a great deal better than the majority of citizens, who must foot the bills. We therefore join the others who are congratulating Mr. Randall on his victory over the solid opposition of his fellow citizens. There probably never was so signal a victory against such great odds in the history of Michigan legislation. Here was a measure proposed avowedly in the personal interests of its introducer and his partners. He made no secret of it. He told his fellow members very plainly from the start that he did not go to Lansing to waste his time in the public service. He went there for this bill, and this bill alone; and he represented himself and his copartners in the deal, who, like himself, had pecuniary interests in the measure. The bill was denounced by the mayor, denounced by the common council, denounced by the board of estimates, denounced by 5,000 petitioners; and Mr. Randall candidly acknowledged before the senate committee that if it were submitted to the popular vote of Detroit it would be overwhelmed by an adverse majority. Furthermore, the majority of Detroit's representatives at Lansing opposed it, and still further, the bill was one which concerned Detroit alone, and which in no way affected the State outside of Detroit. Here was a situation which might well appall the strongest heart. But it had no terror for the boule-warder's gall. When the Legislature was carefully sized up, it was found to be the smallest, cheapest, rottenest body that ever assembled in Lansing. The premonitory symptoms of a desire to steal something manifested themselves from the beginning. Scarcely a day passed that some measure was not introduced containing promises of boodle, or that the Legislature did not resolve upon some expedition or junket, for which the members voted themselves extra pay or allowance. Nothing was too small for them to despise, nothing too large for them to grasp at. Twenty-five per cent of the whole gang openly announced themselves by words or acts to be paid attorneys of outside interests, and most of the remainder of them waited around for these attorneys to share their fees. All who have been to Lansing this winter, and including even the lobbyists, confess that the present Legislature is the rottenest and cheapest that ever gathered at the capitol. One thing has conspicuously appeared from a very early date in the session. The Legislature of Michigan has learned the trick, long practiced in the Legislature of New York, of looking upon the metropolis of the State as a victim fatted for the sacrifice. In both States the State Legislature is overwhelmingly Republican, while the metropolis is overwhelmingly Democratic. At Albany the metropolis is robbed and pillaged by special legislation. Detroit has always been treated with just as little conscience by the Republican Legislature at Lansing, but never until the present winter did it dawn upon the rural legislative mind that she would afford fat pickings for the rural legislative pocket. Mr. Randall materially assisted in impressing the rural legislator with this lesson, by assuring him that the city was governed by Democratic rascals, and populated chiefly by Democratic thieves, knaves, rumsellers and rum drinkers, meanwhile keeping open house, and dealing out free rum himself to the thirsty granger law-maker. In all these considerations the rustic not only found argument for appropriating Detroit's money to his own use, through the medium of those who expect to recover it, and a hundred times more, from the taxpayers, but also found a salve for his hypocrisy, for he dearly loves to find a moral reason for his thefts. With such a body everything was possible, particularly when $500,000 was at stake. But what shall the people of Detroit say to the Republican party, which, through the Legislature it controls, becomes responsible for this infamous treatment of the great city? And what shall the common people of the whole State say, who are in sympathy with the robbed toilers of the city? They and their fellows have been robbed and pillaged by the authority of the Republican party, in the name of the Republican party; their petitions and protests have been spat upon, and their spokesmen branded in the open Senate as anarchists and incendiaries,—all because Detroit gives a Democratic majority. Detroit is, in short, officially informed by the Republican Legislature that so long as she votes the Democratic ticket she will not be allowed to govern herself; she will be ignored in every measure, concerning her dearest interests; her representatives will be snubbed, and only those who go out to Lansing to rob her will be respected or listened to; a junto of state appointed, and irresponsible police commissioners will be sustained and supported in oppressing and abusing her law-abiding citizens, while they allow thieves and murderers to escape; and every rascal who makes his way to Lansing with a scheme to thrust his arm into her treasury shall have his way if he brings along money enough to pay for it.

7 L. R. A.

THE BOULEVARD PLANA

They are to get $100,000 in bonds issued this year.—Ald. Lauder outlines them, and says the council and board of estimates will be "converted" very soon. Can they be "influenced" as easily as the Legislature?

The boulevard heeleders are in high glee to-day over the slick way that Representative Randall worked his bonding bill through the Legislature. They don't know yet just what the next move will be, but they feel sure that by proper manipulation some of the bonds will be in shape so they can get their hands on them before many moons. Ald. Lauder came out openly this noon, and offered to bet a silk hat that $100,000 worth of the bonds would be issued this year, and he wanted to bet another hat that the present board of aldermen would vote for the bonds by a good majority. He made the offer to a crowd near the Russell House, but, as everybody present knew how easily the boulevarders tied strings to the rural legislators, which enabled them to make the r. l. dance every time the string was pulled, nobody took up the bet. "I tell you," said the alderman, "the council and the board of estimates, too, are for the boulevard by a good majority. I have not counted noses yet, but I and others have talked to a good many, and know how they stand. They will give us what we want. Hear what I tell you now." A bystander, who surmised that the boulevarders might attempt to corrupt the aldermen as they corrupted the rural legislators, asked Ald. Lauder what it was that would make the council go back on their position of two months ago, when they voted three to one against issuing any boulevard bonds. "They didn't understand the needs of the boulevard then," he answered; "but they are getting better posted on it now. They see that all the money from the bonds will be paid to the workingmen. Oh, I tell you we will get the $100,000 soon." The alderman is certainly candid, and, as he is in a position to speak for the boulevard, his talk would seem to settle the fact beyond dispute that the boulevarders, instead of waiting till next fall to elect enough aldermen to carry out their schemes, will try to work the present council. Their success in corrupting the rural legislators has encouraged them to try the same influences on the aldermen. But, fortunately for the taxpayers, the people can reach the corrupt aldermen when they come up for election, which they cannot do with the corrupt legislator from Oshkosh or Podunk. The commissioners which the boulevarders named in the Park and Boulevard Consolidation Bill, and who they expected would lay out an extravagant plan for boulevard improvements, will have a short lease of office. Mayor Pridgeon said to-day that under a decision of the supreme court the Legislature has no right to appoint a permanent municipal board of Detroit, the appointment of which is vested in the mayor. The commissioners named in the bill may serve for a short time, but the mayor will appoint a park and boulevard board very soon after he has been officially notified that the law is in force.

The picture cannot well be reproduced here, but it was a caricature of Mr. Randall standing upon a platform, supported at each corner, and resting upon bottles, one of which was marked "Rye." Upon the platform was a cask marked "Gin," with faucet all ready for opening. Mr. Randall's right foot rested upon this cask. His left hand was pressed against his heart, and his right arm was extended, and clasped in his right hand was a bag marked "$." Above the picture was the following heading:

THE BOULEVARD NAPOLEON.

(In the course of his remarks in the Legislature yesterday Mr. Randall stated that within five years the grateful citizens of Detroit would erect a monument in his honor. The News submits the following design:)

Beneath the picture were three verses of rhyme, which cut no particular figure, as Mr. Randall does not complain of them.

The declaration proceeds: "Meaning by the said publication to impute to the plaintiff that he had been guilty of gross misconduct in the discharge of his official duties, and had acted as such member of the House of Representatives in a manner which was improper, unjustifiable and discreditable to him, in this, among other things, in said publication imputed, to wit, that he had, for bad and corrupt motives, induced the Legislature to pass a bill designed to enrich a certain number of persons at the expense of the City of Detroit; and in this, to wit, that, as a member of said Legislature, he had accepted and received bribes, and was corrupted thereby in his official action in respect to bills pending in or passed by the said House of Representatives, and in this, to wit, that he had, by the giving a bribe, or by other corrupt means, influenced or controlled the giving of votes by members of said Legislature,—by means of the committing of which said grievances, by the said defendants as aforesaid, he, the said plaintiff, hath been and is greatly injured in his said good name, fame and credit, and brought into public scandal, infamy and disgrace with and amongst all his neighbors and other good and worthy citizens of this State. And the said plaintiff hath been and is by means of the premises otherwise greatly injured, to wit, at the place aforesaid. And for that, whereas, the said plaintiff was always reputed to be a person of good fame and credit, and had deservedly obtained the good opinion, and enjoyed the respect and confidence, of all his neighbors, and all other persons to whom he was known, yet the said defendants, well knowing the premises, and contriving, and wickedly and maliciously intending, to injure the said plaintiff in said good fame and credit, and to bring him into public scandal, ridicule and disgrace, on, to wit, the 8th day of May, 1889, did publish, and cause and procure to be published, of and concerning the said plaintiff a certain false, scandalous, malicious and defamatory libel in a certain newspaper known as

7 L. R. A.

'The Evening News,' and of a large circulation in said county and State, and of which said libel the following is a copy. [Here follows matter set out above.] That plaintiff avers that he is the 'Mr. Randall' mentioned in and referred to by said libel, published as aforesaid, by means whereof he, the said plaintiff, hath been and is greatly injured in said good fame and credit, and brought into public scandal, ridicule, infamy and disgrace, and he hath suffered much annoyance, and incurred public odium and contempt, and hath otherwise been greatly injured, to wit, at the county and State aforesaid, to the damage of the said plaintiff of $100,000, and therefore he brings suit."

To this declaration the defendants demurred, assigning the following causes: "(1) That the articles, words and picture set out therein are not libelous or defamatory, and actionable, as charged in said declaration. (2) That they do not in their ordinary signification and meaning impute to the plaintiff any legal crime, or any legal or moral offense, or legal or moral turpitude, and no such signification is charged in the second count. (3) Because there are no matters of inducement or extrinsic facts set up in said declaration to warrant an extension of the meaning of the alleged libelous words and pictures beyond what they naturally imply. (4) Because the alleged matter of inducement or extrinsic facts set up in said declaration are not supported by any warranted innuendo sufficient with such inducement to give plaintiff a right of action. (5) Because the alleged libelous words and pictures complained of are incapable of the meaning attached to them by the averments contained in said declaration. (6) Because it does not appear by said declaration that the picture set up in said declaration was published or connected with any of the published words or articles appearing complete within themselves, whereby the alleged reflection upon the character of members of the Legislature generally are applied to or directed at the plaintiff. (7) Because in the second count of said declaration no time of the publication is alleged, and because there is no innuendo sufficient with the inducement to give the said plaintiff a right of action under said count. (8) Because the declaration is in other respects uncertain, informal and insufficient."

This demurrer was sustained by the court below.

The plaintiff claims, as it will be seen from his declaration, that these articles and the picture impute to him, among other things, these three things: first, that he had, for bad and corrupt motives, induced the Legislature to pass a bill designed to enrich a certain number of persons at the expense of the City of Detroit; second, that he, as a member of the Legislature, had accepted and received bribes, and was corrupted thereby in his official action in respect to the bills pending in or passed by the said House of Representatives; and, third, that he had, by the giving of a bribe, or by other corrupt means, influenced or controlled the giving of votes by members of said Legislature.

The second imputation does not follow from the articles, or any language contained within them, or from the picture, and was so admitted upon the argument in this court by plaintiff's counsel. But we think that the first and last imputations are found within the articles. The plain meanings of the articles are: first, that Mr. Randall did not go to Lansing as a member of the Legislature to serve the public, and so publicly expressed himself, but that he went there alone for the purpose of passing this boulevard bill, to enrich himself and his co-partners in the boulevard scheme at the expense of the people of the City of Detroit; and, secondly, that the Legislature was of such a character that they were grasping for boodle (meaning money), and that the members were susceptible of bribery, in the shape of liquor and money, from those interested in the passage of bills, and that Mr. Randall, taking advantage of this characteristic of said members, used both liquor and money to accomplish the passage of this bill, which was to put money in his own pocket at the taxpayers' expense.

The picture itself is capable of but one meaning, and that is that Randall's monument should show that liquor and money was the source of his Napoleon-like success in passing the bill. This is libelous, if not true. It is gravely argued that men are elected to the Legislature and to the Congress of the United States at every election, avowedly in the interest of private schemes of plunder, and not in the interest of the public, to represent corporations and other bodies or associates of men for their financial advancement and profit, without reference to the interests of the people at large, or even the constituency of the member so elected; that there is nothing illegal in this, because there is no law or statute providing that a member shall lose his seat by so doing; that it is at least perfectly legal for a member of the Legislature to devote his whole time and energies as such member to enrich himself, or the class or corporation he represents, at the expense of the public. If there is now no law against such action by a member of the Legislature, it is high time that statutes be enacted looking towards not only the unseating of a member guilty of prostituting his high place to personal and corrupt greed, but providing also a punishment for such misconduct. Be that as it may, however, we are satisfied that public sentiment is not yet such as to look with either favor or complacency upon a member of the Legislature whose whole avowed aim and effort is to enrich himself, or those who hire him, at the expense of the taxpayers. And we are satisfied that if the charge made against Mr. Randall in this respect be true, he deserves the scorn and contempt of every good citizen, and would receive it. Consequently, if untrue, it is libelous, and has damaged him in the estimation of good men and honest citizens, and whom we believe to be yet largely in the majority in every community in our State. It is equally libelous, if untrue, to state that Mr. Randall accomplished the passage of this boulevard bill by keeping open house, with liquors (which is the true and plain meaning of these publications), or that he did it by the use of boodle.

The inducement in the declaration was sufficient. It is the office of the inducement to narrate the extrinsic circumstances, which, coupled with the language published, affect its construction, and render it actionable; where, standing alone, and not thus explained, the language would appear either not to concern the plaintiff, or, if concerning him, not to affect him injuriously. It is a statement of the facts out of which the charge arises, or which are necessary or useful to make the charge intelligible. Here the inducement shows Mr. Randall to have been a member of the Michigan House of Representatives from the City of Detroit, and the introducer of the boulevard bill, or a bill authorizing the common council of the City of Detroit to raise money to improve the boulevard. With this showing the articles are intelligible, and their actionable character apparent.

Nor was there necessity of any innuendoes. As said in Bourresseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co.: "If the meaning of the publications is plain, therefore, no innuendo is needed. The use of it can never change the import of the words, nor add to nor enlarge their sense." See 63 Mich. 430, 6 West. Rep. 151.

The court erred in sustaining the demurrer. The judgment of the court below is therefore reversed, and the demurrer of the defendant overruled. The record will be remanded, and the usual time will be allowed the defendants in which to plead to the declaration if they so desire. Costs of this court, and of the demurrer in the court below, will be granted plaintiff.

The other Justices concurred.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

FARMERS & MECHANICS NATIONAL BANK of Philadelphia, Plff. in Err.,
v.
S. Josephine LOFTUS.

(....Pa....)

1. A State has the power to change the rule that the validity of a transfer of personal property is to be determined by the law of the owner's domicile, so far as it relates to property within its borders, and to make the transfer there-of subject to its own laws.

2. The power of a married woman to sell and transfer any of the loans of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, or of the City of Philadelphia, with like effect as if she were unmarried, under the Act of March 18, 1875, extends to foreign or nonresident married women owning such securities.
7 L. R. A.

3. An Act regulating the mode of transferring certain securities for loans, which is made to apply to those issued by one only of the municipal corporations of the State, is not special legislation upon the affairs of such corporation within the prohibition of § 7, art. 2, of the Constitution.

(March 10, 1890.)

ERROR to the Court of Common Pleas, No. 4, for Philadelphia County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for the refusal by defendant to transfer certain certificates of loan. Affirmed.

The action was originally brought by one James S. Swartz, who was attorney in fact for S. Josephine Loftus. Pending the suit an agreement of counsel was filed amending the record by making Mrs. Loftus plaintiff in the place of Swartz.

The suit was submitted to the court below for its opinion upon a case stated in the nature of a special verdict, from which it appeared in substance that plaintiff was the owner of certain certificates of loan of the City of Philadelphia; that she was a married woman, the wife of Henry J. Loftus, a subject of Great Britain. She was born in Philadelphia, and resided in that city for some years. She was married to her husband in Italy in the year 1880, and has since resided with him in different places, principally abroad. Her husband has acquired no domicile in Pennsylvania. The property represented by the certificates in question accrued to plaintiff prior to her marriage.

Plaintiff executed a power of attorney to transfer the said loans, and placed the certificates in the hands of her attorney-in-fact, and on December 6, 1888, she sold a part of such certificates.

By an ordinance of the councils of the City of Philadelphia of February 16, 1872, the defendant was made the loan and transfer agent of the said city, and by an ordinance of March 16, 1872, it was required, upon presentation and delivery to it of certificates of loan of the said city for the purpose of transfer, to issue and deliver to the transferee a new certificate.

The plaintiff, through her attorney-in-fact, presented to the defendant the said certificates of loan, with the power of attorney, for the purpose of obtaining the transfer of the loans to the purchasers. Thereupon the defendant refused to make the said transfer, assigning as the reason for its refusal that the husband of the plaintiff had not joined in the power of attorney so executed as aforesaid.

It was further agreed that if upon the facts plaintiff was entitled to have the transfer made, judgment was to be entered in her favor; otherwise judgment to be entered for defendant.

Judgment was entered for plaintiff upon the ground that during the life of a married woman the law of the situs of her personal property alone controls in the matter of its use, enjoyment and disposition, and hence that the Married Persons' Property Act of June 8, 1887 (Pub. Laws, 332), which enacts that every married woman shall have the same right to dispose of her property, real and personal, and in the same manner as if she were a feme sole, furnished the rule for making the transfer in this case.

Also upon the ground that the certificates of loan were contracts to be performed in the City of Philadelphia; that the law of the place of performance should be applied in the enforcement of the contract; and that the enforcement necessarily included the right to transfer the claim and to appoint an attorney for the purpose.

Thereupon the defendant sued out this writ of error.

Messrs. R. L. Ashhurst and Rowland Evans, for plaintiff in error:

7 L. R. A.

A woman acquires her husband's domicile by marriage.

Dougherty v. Snyder, 15 Serg. & R. 84; Hollister v. Hollister, 6 Pa. 451; Green v. Green, 11 Pick. 410.

Prior to 1887, a married woman could not give a power of attorney unless her husband joined therein.

Leiper's App. 108 Pa. 377.

The Act of March 18, 1875, gives no power to a married woman to constitute an attorney to make transfers.

That Act is in violation of article 7 of the Constitution forbidding special legislation for any city or county.

Philadelphia v. Pepper, 16 W. N. C. 109; Bets v. Philadelphia, 21 W. N. C. 155.

All questions as to the assignment or transfer by the voluntary act of the owner of choses in action are determinable by the law of the domicile of the owner; hence the Act of 1887 cannot affect the rights or capacities or disabilities of married women domiciled abroad.

Milne v. Moreton, 6 Binn. 359; Hanford v. Paine, 9 Am. L. Reg. 553; Mulliken v. Aughinbaugh, 1 Penn. & W. 124; Speed v. May, 17 Pa. 91; Law v. Mills, 18 Pa. 186; Steel v. Goodwin, 4 Cent. Rep. 659, 113 Pa. 291; Craspo v. Kelly, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 610 (21 L. ed. 480); Kohne's Estate, 1 Para. Sel. Eq. Cas. 899; Auble v. Mason, 35 Pa. 261; Story, Conf. L. § 52; Davis v. Zimmerman, 67 Pa. 72; Com's App. 11 W. N. C. 492; Reid v. Gray, 37 Pa. 508.

Messrs. Henry B. Robb and William W. Porter, for defendant in error:

The Act of March 19, 1875, specifically confers the right contended for by the defendant in error.

Contracts respecting public funds or stocks the local nature of which requires them to be carried into execution according to the local law, are an exception to the rule that the law of the domicile applies.

Mulliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374; Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 406 (23 L. ed. 247); Brooke v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 108 Pa. 529; Tenant v. Tenant, 1 Cent. Rep. 596, 110 Pa. 478; Brown v. Camden & A. R. Co. 83 Pa. 818; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124 (27 L. ed. 104); Coll v. Palmer, 116 U. S. 98 (29 L. ed. 559); Mullen v. Morris, 2 Pa. 85; Allshouse v. Ramsay, 6 Whart. 331; Wharton, Conf. L. § 401; Story, Conf. L. § 238.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The settled general rule is that the validity of a transfer of personal property is to be determined by the law of the domicile of the owner. And this is especially so in regard to the capacity to pass the title in cases of infants, married women or others who may be under legal disabilities varying in different countries. "A married woman's capacity for the alienation of movables depends in general upon the law of her domicile." Dicey, Domicil, Rule 88, p. 195.

The defendant in error, though by birth a citizen of Pennsylvania, by her marriage lost her domicile here, and acquired the domicile of her husband, which is English. It is entirely clear, therefore, that her general rights, capacities and disabilities as a married woman, in regard to her personal property, are governed by the laws of Great Britain, and are not affected by the laws of Pennsylvania. No assistance, therefore, in the determination of this case can be got from the Act of June 8, 1887 (Pub. Laws, 882). That Act relates to the rights and powers of married women over the control and disposition of their separate property. But the only married women whose rights and capacities the Legislature of Pennsylvania has any power to regulate are those within the Commonwealth, and it cannot be assumed that the Act was intended to apply to any others.

How far the lex loci contractus might affect the rights of property arising therefrom, it is not necessary to consider, as the marriage in this case took place abroad, and the husband did not even by the place of the contract become subject to the laws of Pennsylvania.

But while the general rule as above stated is entirely settled, not only in this State, but in every jurisprudence founded on the common law, yet it is subject always to the power of the State to declare otherwise as to any property having an actual or legal situs within its borders. The title and mode of transfer of land are always governed by the lex loci rei sita, and personal property may be assimilated to land in these respects whenever the law of any State so determines.

In Milne v. Moreton, 6 Binn. 353, 361, Chief Justice Tilghman said: "The assignees stand upon this principle, that personal property has no locality, but is transferred according to the law of the country in which the owner is domiciled. This proposition is true in general, but not to its utmost extent, nor without several exceptions. In one sense personal property has locality, that is to say, if tangible, it has a place in which it is situated, and if invisible (consisting of debts), it may be said to be in the place where the debtor resides, and of these circumstances the most liberal nations have taken advantage, by making such property subject to regulations which suit their own convenience. In cases of intestacy, the property is distributed according to the law of the domicile of the intestate. But yet, so far as concerns creditors, it depends on the law of the country where it is situated. . . . Every country has the right of regulating the transfer of all personal property within its territory, but when no positive regulation exists, the owner transfers it at his pleasure." And see observations of Gibson, (Ch. J., in Mulliken v. Aughinbaugh, 1 Penr. & W. 124, and in Speed v. May, 17 Pa. 94; of King, P. J., in Re Merrick's Estate, 2 Ashm. 485; Smith's App. 104 Pa. 381, and Bacon v. Horne, 123 Pa. 452, 2 L. R. A. 355.

Indeed it may be said that the tendency of modern authorities, under the influence of the European continental jurisprudence, is towards the recognition of the law of the situs to such an extent that what was an exception is tending to become the rule. See note to the late editions of Story, Conf. L. § 388; Wharton, Conf. L. §§ 846-853, and cases there cited; Westlake, Private Internat. L. § 141.

7 L. R. A.

Even Dicey, a common-law writer whose clear and accurate pages are refreshing as the blue sky after the foggy disquisitions of Story and Wharton, generalizes the rule as to creditors to which the Pennsylvania cases above cited adhere, in this form: "Where there is a conflict between a title under the law of the country where a movable is situated, and under the law of the owner's domicile, the lex situs will in general prevail." Dicey, Domicil, Rule 57, p. 202.

In accordance with this tendency the Legislature of Pennsylvania, by Act of March 18, 1875 (Pub. Laws, 24), declared that it shall be lawful for any married woman owning any of the loans of this Commonwealth, or of the City of Philadelphia, etc., to sell and transfer the same with like effect as if she were unmarried. This Act rules the present case. Its intention is not so much to enlarge the capacity of a married woman to deal with her property as to regulate the mode of transfer of certain kinds of property owing their existence to Pennsylvania law, and having their legal situs in this Commonwealth. Being a regulation of property, made for the public safety and convenience in the transaction of business, it is applicable to all owners of the classes of property named, though it may thus incidentally enlarge the powers of some foreign or nonresident married women. The direction is peremptory and without exception that the transfer shall have the same effect as if she were unmarried, and as the purpose of the Act is the public convenience, no construction should be given to it which would operate against that purpose. The authority to transfer, therefore, must be construed to carry with it all the necessary powers to make it effective, and among these is the power to do it by attorney.

The same considerations dispose of the objection to the constitutionality of the Act of 1875, that it relates only to the loans of the City of Philadelphia among municipal corporations. The Act is not a regulation of the affairs of the City of Philadelphia, within the meaning of art. 8, § 7, of the Constitution. As already said, it is the regulation of the mode of transfer of certain kinds of property for the public business convenience. It includes the loans of the Commonwealth itself, and of all corporations chartered by its authority; and the power to include such city loans as the public convenience required is nowhere prohibited to the Legislature.

In the view we have taken, it is not necessary for us to consider the power of Mrs. Loftus under the English Statute of 45 and 46 Vict., chap. 75, further than to say that that Act appears to confer upon married women ample authority to make transfers such as the present. But as the construction of foreign statutes is a matter that courts never enter upon unless absolutely necessary, and as the plaintiff's authority, under the Act of 1875, is clearly sufficient, we rest the case upon that Act.

Judgment affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

Isaac T. RUPARD and Wife, Appts.,

v.

CHESAPEAKE &amp; OHIO R. CO.

(---Ky.---)

1. An individual, in the exercise of his absolute rights, if it may be reasonably apprehended that their exercise may endanger the safety of others in the exercise of their rights, must exercise them with a due regard for the safety of such others.
2. It is the duty of a railroad company where a train crosses a public highway on a trestle and there is danger of catching a traveler thereunder unawares and frightening the horse that he is riding or driving, to give some timely warning of the approach of the train to the crossing.
3. Whether or not the failure of a railroad company to give warning of the approach of a train to a crossing on a trestle over a public highway is negligence, should be left to the jury.
4. A traveler familiar with the place, who hurries up to a crossing where a railroad passes over the highway on a trestle, and attempts to cross regardless of the fact that the train may come at any moment, without looking to see whether a train is approaching, and without any reasonable excuse for not looking, although the train could have been easily seen at a distance of several hundred yards, is guilty of negligence which will prevent any recovery for injuries sus- tained in consequence of the fright of his horse caused by the train.

(February 21, 1899.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court of Clark County entered upon a verdict directed for defendant in an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. G. B. Nelson, Leland Hathaway and D. W. Lindsey for appellants.

Messrs. J. M. Benton and Breckinridge & Shelby for appellee.

Bennett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, Patsy E. Rupard, wife of the appellant, Isaac T. Rupard, while riding on horseback on the public road at a point where the appellee's road crosses said road on a trestle high enough from the ground to admit passage thereunder on the public road by persons on horseback or in vehicles, was thrown from her horse by his becoming frightened by the noise of the train as it passed over the trestle above him.

The appellant was seriously injured by the fall. It is contended that the injury would not have occurred but for the negligence of appellee in not giving timely notice of its ap-

NOTE.—Railroad company not liable when exercising its legal rights in a careful manner.

A railroad company is not liable for damage that accrues to others in the exercise of its legal rights by running its engines, etc., unless the damage is caused by its negligence. Bernard v. Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. 13 Va. L. J. 184, 8 S. E. Rep. 785.

It is not liable, while exercising its rights in a lawful and reasonable manner, for injuries occasioned by horses, when being driven upon the highway, taking fright at noises incident to the movement and working of engines,—as, in the escape of steam and the noise and rattling of cars. Abbot v. Kalbus, 74 Wis. 504.

The authority to operate a railroad includes the right to make the noises incident to the movement and working of its engines,—as, in the escape of steam and the noise and rattling of cars. Ibid.

No action lies against a railroad company for the inconveniences necessarily caused to premises in the vicinity by noises, smoke, jarring of the ground, etc., arising from properly and prudently operating its railroad upon its own lands, or upon land in which the party complaining has no interest. Carroll v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 40 Minn. 168.

Duty to give warning on approaching highway crossing.

- It is the duty of those in charge of a railroad train to give timely and sufficient warning of its approach to the crossing of a public road; and a failure to perform such duty is negligence, the degree of which depends on the facts and circumstances of each case, to be determined by the jury. Eskridge v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 11 Ky. L. Rep. 557; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Stinger, 78 Pa. 219; but compare Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Barnett, 59 Pa. 205.

A foot passenger on a public crossing has a right 7 L. R. A.

to expect some warning upon approaching the railroad track. Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 7 West. Rep. 327, 64 Mich. 93.

The warnings should be given in the usual customary manner, such as ordinary care and diligence require; and if so given the company will be relieved from responsibility. Georgia Pac. R. Co. v. Freeman (Ga.) 10 S. E. Rep. 277.

The failure of a railroad company to give the warning required by law will not justify a recovery by a traveler who is injured while attempting to cross the track in front of a train without looking or listening for the train. Weir v. Canadian P. R. Co. Ont. Ct. App. 1899.

Duty of engineer when person seen crossing railroad track. See note to Parsons v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. (N. Y.) 3 L. R. A. 633.

Duty to signal its approach to highway.

It is the duty of a railroad company to give the signals prescribed by statute, upon approaching the highway, and a failure renders the company liable where injury is sustained. Authorities cited. Cincinnati H. & I. R. Co. v. Butler, 1 West. Rep. 114, note, 103 Ind. 31; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Gaines, 2 West. Rep. 262, 104 Ind. 523; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Slater (Ill.) 21 N. E. Rep. 575.

Railroad trains have the precedence of passing the crossings of public ways unobstructed; but it is the duty of those directing the trains to give all proper and sufficient signals of their approach, and to take all reasonable precaution to avoid collision. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Hogeland, 5 Cent. Rep. 587, 66 Md. 149; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Owings, 8 Cent. Rep. 847, 65 Md. 502; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Horst, 1 Cent. Rep. 96, 110 Pa. 226.

But a recovery cannot be had for personal injuries caused by a moving railroad train, merely because the engineer in charge of the train failed proach to the crossing by blowing its alarm whistle or by ringing its bell, so as to warn the appellant of its approach to the crossing, by which she could and would have kept at a safe distance from the crossing until the train passed it, whereby the injury would have been avoided.

Upon the conclusion of the appellant's evidence, the lower court instructed the jury peremptorily to find for the appellee, which the jury did.

The appellee's contention is that, where its road crosses the public road on a trestle, it does not in common with the traveler have any privilege in, or use of, the public road itself; that its road and the public road, though near and adjacent to each other, are distinct and separate; the former has no rights in the public road, and the traveler has no rights in the track for the purpose of crossing it; therefore the same duties are not imposed upon the appellee that are imposed upon it when it passes over the public road itself in common with the traveler; consequently, it has a right to run its train on a trestle where the trestle crosses a public road at its common, or any, rate of speed, accompanied by the usual noise attendant upon the running of a train, and is not bound, as a matter of law, to give any warning of its approach to the crossing. In support of the foregoing views the case of Favor v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 114 Mass. 350, is relied on.

We cannot agree to this contention. While it is true that the appellee's train does not run on the road itself in common with the traveler, yet it is not true that the public road is not used by the appellee and the traveler in common. It, the public road, supports the appellee's trestle over which its train passes, and the traveler has a right to pass under the track on the public highway; but for his right of passage on the public highway he would commit a trespass by passing under the track on the trestles. The public road, by being trestled across, is as much in the occupation of the appellee as it would be if its track rested immediately upon it, and for the traveler to cross under the track resting on the trestle, or over the track resting upon the ground would be equally a trespass, but for the protection afforded him by reason of being on the public highway.

So it is incorrect to say that the appellee, although its train crosses the highway on a trestle, and the travelers, do not use the same in common.

But the question as to the relative duties of the appellee and the traveler rests upon broader grounds. It is the duty of the appellee, as it is of natural persons, "to exercise its rights with a considerate and prudent regard for the rights of others."

An individual in the exercise of his absolute rights, if it may be reasonably apprehended that their exercise may endanger the safety of others in the exercise of their rights, must exercise them with a due regard for the safety of such others.

To illustrate, a person who is constructing a to give the cautionary signals prescribed by the Statute (Code, §§ 1699, 1700), when it appears that the injuries did not result from such failure. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. King, 81 Ala. 177.

Under the Missouri Statutes a prima facie case of negligence is made when the plaintiff shows that the statutory signals were not given. Huckshold v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 7 West. Rep. 764, 90 Mo. 543.

Must ring bell or blow whistle.

The statute imposes the obligation on railroads to ring a bell or sound a whistle when approaching the crossing of a public highway, and imposes a penalty for violation of the rule. State v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 1 West. Rep. 400, 19 Mo. App. 104.

The statute requires this to be done at intervals. Alexander v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 1 West. Rep. 440, 19 Mo. App. 312.

If either the bell or the whistle is sounded, the statute is complied with. Terry v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 6 West. Rep. 445, 39 Mo. 563.

The exception as to cities applies only to the sounding of the steam whistle, and it is negligence to omit ringing the bell. Coffin v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 4 West. Rep. 885, 22 Mo. App. 601.

The statutes of Illinois require the bell or whistle to be sounded at a certain distance from the crossings (Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Davis (Ill.) 23 N. E. Rep. 850; in Alabama at least one fourth of a mile before reaching a public-road crossing. Louisville & N. E. R. Co. v. Hill, 4 L. R. A. 710, 87 Ala. 708.

The statute requiring the ringing of a bell or blowing of a whistle on a railroad train eighty rods distant from a crossing, and continuing it until the crossing is passed, is no less obligatory because the train is running upon a side track for the reason that the main track is obstructed by a standing train. Brown v. Griffin, 71 Tex. 654.

A party injured a half mile from a railroad crossing L. R. A.

ing cannot assign the violation by the company of the statutory duty in respect to sounding the whistle and ringing the bell at the crossing, as the proximate cause of his injury. Pike v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 39 Fed. Rep. 754.

The omission of the employees of a railroad company to ring a bell or blow a whistle as required by law is material in estimating the amount of care that one who was struck and killed by a train while attempting to cross the track should have observed before attempting to cross the track. Rodrian v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 23 N. Y. S. R. 625.

And the finding by the jury that the bell was rung would not necessarily establish due care, if the circumstances required other and additional precautions. Finkielstein v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 41 Hun, 84.

The fact that a street has been discontinued by the commissioners of highways, but not practically closed, will not relieve a railroad from giving warning signals on its approach to a highway. Rodrian v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 23 N. Y. S. R. 625.

Duty to slacken speed.

Where the track crosses a much-traveled highway, without statutory provision it is the duty of the company to give sufficient notice of the train's approach, and to moderate the speed of the train to such a rate as, under the circumstances, is reasonably consistent with the public safety. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Brandtmaier, 5 Cent. Rep. 144, 113 Pa. 610.

The statute requiring the engineer, where he cannot see at least one fourth of a mile ahead, to reduce the speed of his train before entering a curve crossed by a public road only applies to such crossings as are particularly described, his duty at other crossings being as at common law. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Deaver, 79 Ala. 216.

brick wall abutting a public street on which travelers frequently pass may be liable in damages for the falling of a brick on a traveler from the hands of one of his workmen, although the workman was not negligent in letting the brick fall and the immediate cause of the fall of the brick was accidental; but if it was an accident which the person, building the wall, in view of the danger to the life and limb of travelers on the street, should reasonably contemplate, he should provide against the same by safeguards and barriers, so that travelers might not be exposed to the danger, else he will be responsible in damages for the injury. Jager v. Adams, 128 Mass. 26.

It is precisely upon the same principle that the appellee is made liable for injuries to travelers at crossings. It is no excuse or justification that the act that caused the injury was in itself lawful or "that it was done in the exercise of a lawful right," if the injury arose from the negligent manner in which it was done."

Injury may occur to the traveler at the crossing in two ways, namely: by a collision with him, or by scaring the horse that he is riding or driving, whereby he is injured. It is the duty of the appellee in approaching a crossing, if danger to the traveler in either of the ways above mentioned may be reasonably apprehended, to give timely notice of its approach, in order that the traveler may not only be warned not to come in collision with the train, but secure himself from injury by his frightened horse. By the trains crossing the highway on a trestle, there is no danger of a collision with a traveler on the highway, but if he should be under the trestle with his horse while the train is passing over it, the danger is increased, for it is well known that a horse is more likely to scare at a sound made over his head than when the same sound is made on the ground. So where the train crosses the public highway on a trestle, and in view, as above intimated, of the frequency of travel, on horseback or by driving, on the public highway, and the facility of seeing the train, as it approaches the crossing, in time to prevent injury by scaring the horse, the danger of catching the traveler unawares and frightening the horse that he is riding or driving may be reasonably apprehended, it is its duty to give some timely warning of its approach to the crossing. And the question as to whether or not the failure to give such warning is negligence should be left to the jury.

For an able presentation of the foregoing views, see the case of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Barnett, 59 Pa. 263.

But it conclusively appears from the appellant's own testimony that she received the injury in consequence of her own negligence. She was familiar with the crossing and its surroundings; the track, in the direction that the train was coming, was clear of obstruction several hundred yards, and she could have seen the approaching train that distance, had she looked, but she did not look; nor did she give any reasonable excuse for not looking, but hurried up to the crossing and attempted to cross, regardless of the fact that the train might come at any moment. So, as it conclusively appeared that the injury was the result

It is the duty of a company to observe due caution and all reasonable efforts to prevent injury to persons who may be on its tracks when approaching a crowded city. Duffy v. Missouri P. R. Co. 2 West. Rep. 198, 19 Mo. App. 380. See note to Parsons v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 3 L. R. A. 663.

Running a train in an incorporated town at a greater rate of speed than six miles an hour does not impose absolute liability, under Miss. Code, § 1047, for the killing of cattle, unless the killing resulted from or was rendered inevitable by the rate of speed. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Caster, (Miss.) 5 So. Rep. 388.

Where a train was run at twelve miles per hour, without its bell being constantly rung, in violation of an ordinance, and deceased was run over and killed instantaneously with his stepping on the track; and the engine was not reversed till after it passed over him,—it was negligence per se upon the part of the railroad company. Henry, Ch. J., dissents. Keim v. Union R. & T. Co. 7 West. Rep. 144, 90 Mo. 514.

A municipal ordinance regulating the rate of speed of trains, and requiring the display of signals on moving trains at night, applies to the private switch-yards of a railroad company situated within the corporate limits. Grube v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.) 11 S. W. Rep. 730.

A city ordinance limiting the speed of trains in only one part of a city where a railroad runs is unreasonable and void where there is no material difference between the character of such part and of another part of the city through which a competing line runs. Lake View v. Tate (Ill.) 6 L. R. A. 268.

An ordinance prohibiting a greater rate of speed than four miles an hour by railroad trains within a city's limits is not so palpably and manifestly unreasonable as to justify a court in setting it aside, where there is no evidence to show whether the locality was or was not sparsely settled. Weyl v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 40 Minn. 350.
7 L. R. A.

Duty of traveler to stop, look and listen.

The rule as to the duty of a person approaching a railroad crossing to stop and look and listen for the approach of trains is not a rule of evidence, but one of absolute and unbending law. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Aiken (Pa.) 20 Pustb. L. J. N. S. 183, 25 W. N. C. 13.

It applies as well to persons walking as to those driving. Ibid.

When the track is hidden from one's view for some distance, and the noise made by his own wagon interferes with his hearing the approaching train, it is his absolute duty to stop his team and listen before attempting to cross the track. Abbot v. Dwinell, 74 Wis. 514.

One who recognized the approach of the train should remain in a place of safety, and should he undertake to cross imprudently he will be guilty of negligence and cannot recover damages. McNeal v. Pittsburgh & W. R. Co. (Pa.) 25 W. N. C. 181.

Where he exercised no diligence in listening and looking for the train, and does not pretend ignorance that it was train time, or suggest any mistake or misapprehension, he cannot recover for injuries received from the train. Smith v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 82 Ga. 801.

No amount of negligence on the part of a railway company in failing to close its gates at a crossing will absolve a traveler from the duty to stop and listen. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Franz, 4 L. R. A. 389, 127 Pa. 297; and see note to Freeman v. Duluth S. S. & A. R. Co. (Mich.) 3 L. R. A. 594; Greenwood v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Pa.) 3 L. R. A. 44.

of the appellant's own negligence, the instruction was not improper.

The judgment is affirmed.

An extension of the time for filing a rehearing was obtained in this case, but counsel finally neglected to avail themselves of the extension, and the extended time expired without the filing of such petition, and the decision thereby became absolute.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Ohio, ex rel. J. A. KOHLER, Attorney-General,
v.
CINCINNATI, WASHINGTON & BALTI-MORE R. CO.

SAME

CINCINNATI, NEW ORLEANS & TEXAS
PACIFIC R. CO.

(....Ohio St....)

*1. Where a railway company, incorporated under the laws of this State, misuses a franchise, privilege or right conferred upon it, or claims the right to exercise, or has exercised "a franchise, privilege or right in contravention of law," this court has jurisdiction to inquire into and correct the mischief, though the corporation may be engaged in interstate commerce, and the misuser or usurpation to be corrected relate to and concern that traffic.

2. A corporation, created by this State, and engaged in carrying goods for hire, as a common carrier, has no franchise, privilege or right to discriminate in its freight rates in favor of one shipper, even when it is necessary to do so to secure his custom, if the discriminating rate will tend to create a monopoly by excluding from their proper markets the products of the competitors of the favored shipper.

*Head notes by the COURT.

NOTE.—Quo warranto, for illegal exercise of corporate franchise.

A private corporation created by the Legislature may lose its franchises by a misuser or a nonuser of them; and they may be resumed by the government, under a judicial judgment upon a quo warranto to ascertain or enforce forfeiture. State Board of Education v. Bakewell, 8 West. Rep. 49, 122 Ill. 339; Terrett v. Taylor, 13 U. S. 9 Cranch, 51 (3 L. ed. 658); State v. Real Estate Bank, 5 Ark. 595; People v. Manhattan Co. 9 Wend. 351.

The writ of quo warranto is the proper remedy for usurpation of a franchise. Reynolds v. Baldwin, 1 La. Ann. 182; State v. Kamos, 10 La. Ann. 420. It may be maintained in the name of the people to restrain a corporation from exercising authority not possessed by it under its charter or by law. People v. New York, 32 Barb. 35, 10 Abb. Pr. 144; Com. v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 43 Pa. 295; People v. Utica Ins. Co. 15 Johns. 355.

An information in the nature of a quo warranto against a private corporation is a public prosecution. People v. Golden Rule, 114 Ill. 34.

It is of legal, not equitable, cognizance, and the issues therein are strictly legal. People v. Albany & S. R. Co. 37 N. Y. 161.

It is a civil suit and must be governed by the rules applicable thereto, and be proceeded with like any other civil action. Central & G. Road Co. v. People, 5 Colo. 59; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. People, 10 Mo. 493.

7 L. R. A.

3. Where such corporation fixes a rate of freight per hundred pounds, for carrying petroleum oil in oil-tank cars, substantially lower than its rate for transporting it in barrels in car-load lots, it is exercising "a franchise, privilege or right in contravention of law" within the meaning of the fourth clause of § 6761, Rev. Stat.

(March, 4, 1890.)

PETITIONS in quo warranto to oust defendants from certain franchises alleged to be illegally exercised by them. Judgment of ouster.

Statement by Bradbury, J.:

The pleadings, together with the report of the referee, Hon. Channing Richards, disclose that the Cities of Marietta, O., and Parkersburg, West Va., are situated on opposite sides of the Ohio River, about twelve miles apart; that one of the defendants, the Cincinnati, Washington & Baltimore Railway Company, owns and operates a railway that connects Marietta directly, and, by means of a railway bridge across the Ohio River at Parkersburg, the latter place, also with the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, where it has connections with an extensive system of railways operated by the other defendant, the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company, both which railway companies are corporations created by and under the laws of this State; and that the entire line of the first-named Company lies within the State, while only about one mile of Original jurisdiction is conferred on the supreme court by the Constitution. People v. Boughton, 5 Colo. 487; State v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 45 Wis. 579.

In New York the remedies may now be obtained by civil action. People v. Hall, 80 N. Y. 117. See note to State v. Minnesota T. Mfg. Co. (Minn.) 3 L. R. A. 510.

The granting of leave to file the information is within the sound discretion of the court. People v. Waite, 70 Ill. 25; People v. Moore, 73 Ill. 132; State v. Smith, 48 Vt. 235.

When the attorney-general ex officio files an information, no leave of court is requisite. Vanatta v. Delaware & B. R. Co. 38 N. J. L. 232.

The information is properly filed against the corporate body, not the individual members. State v. Barron, 57 N. H. 486; State v. Taylor, 25 Ohio, 280.

One charged with having usurped powers and franchises and exercising the same without authority of law must either justify or disclaim the alleged acts. Illinois M. R. Co. v. People, 84 Ill. 428.

It is not competent for this court, in a quo warranto proceeding ousting an acting corporation of the franchise to be a body corporate, to consider or determine the rights or liabilities of third parties acquired and incurred in their dealings. Society Perun v. Cleveland, 1 West. Rep. 506, 43 Ohio St. 481. See note to State v. Minnesota T. Mfg. Co. (Minn.) 3 L. R. A. 510.

the extensive system operated by the last-named Company is so located, the remainder thereof extending through the States south of the Ohio River. That the Camden Consolidated Oil Company, a branch of the Standard Oil Company, owns and operates an extensive establishment at Parkersburg, West Va., for refining petroleum oil; and that there are a number of smaller establishments at Marietta, O., engaged in the same business, not connected, however, with the Standard Oil Company, one of which, owned and operated by George Rice, is of considerable magnitude, though much less extensive than the Camden Consolidated Oil Company. That the several owners of these oil refineries mainly depend for transporting their finished product to its principal market, the towns and cities south of the Ohio River, upon the railways owned and operated by the defendants, both of whom are common carriers of freight and passengers. That there are two methods of transporting oil to market, in use by refiners and wholesale dealers, one in barrels shipped in carload lots, in cars furnished by the carrier, the other in iron-tank cars owned and furnished by shippers; and that defendants furnished no tank cars, and did not hold themselves out as prepared to transport oil in that way; and that the tank cars on the road of the Cincinnati, Washington & Baltimore Railway Company were owned and controlled by the Camden Consolidated Oil Company, while those on the road of the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company were owned and controlled by the Chess-Carly Company, a branch of the Standard Oil Company, located in Kentucky, and that the Camden Consolidated Oil Company and the Chess-Carly Company usually adopted the iron-tank car method of shipment, all other refiners using the barrel method only. That for some years prior to the bringing of this action the freight rates established by defendants for transporting oil in tank cars, were made much lower than those for transporting it in barrel packages in carload lots, and that the rates charged George Rice and other refiners and wholesale shippers over these railroads by the barrel method were much higher than the rates charged the Camden Consolidated Oil Company and the Chess-Carly Company respectively for similar services by the barrel method; so that, whatever method was adopted, a marked discrimination was made in favor of these two companies.

Any further statement of facts necessary to understand the decision will be found in the opinion.

Messrs. J. A. Kohler, Atty-Gen., W. B. Loomis, A. D. Follett and George E. Nash, for relator:

An Ohio railroad company has no right to give lower rates to a favored shipper. Such a corporation makes an unlawful discrimination in favor of the larger shipper contrary to public policy, when, in consideration of the fact that such shipper furnishes a greater quantity of freights than other shippers during a given time, it agrees to make a rebate on the published tariff on such freights, to the prejudice of other shippers of like freights under the same circumstances.

7 L. R. A.

Scofield v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 1 West. Rep. 812, 48 Ohio St. 571; Talcott v. Pine Grove 1 Flipp. 120; Orouch v. London & N. W. R. Co. 14 C. B. 255; Parker v. Great Western R. Co. 7 Scott, N. R. 835.

Messrs. McClintick & Smith and Edward W. Strong, for the C. W. & B. R. Co., defendant:

The petition is based wholly upon the ground that the defendant has misused the franchise, privilege and right conferred upon it by law, or has exercised a franchise, privilege or right in contravention of law.

8 Rev. Stat. § 6761, p. 386.

Acts of misuser must relate to matters which are of the essence of the contract between the State and the corporation, and they must be willful and repeated.

Harris v. Mississippi Valley & S. I. R. Co. 51 Miss. 602; Com. v. Pennsylvania Com. Bank, 28 Pa. 388; State v. New Orleans Gaslight & Bkg. Co. 2 Robt. (La.) 529.

Mere mistake in the mode of exercising a power will not be such a misuser as to constitute a ground of forfeiture.

People v. Kingston & M. Turnp. R. Co. 23 Wend. 193.

If violation of the law has been shown, the same law has provided an extraordinary remedy and punishment, which indicates the intention of the Legislature to limit the party aggrieved to this particular statutory relief.

Com. v. Breed, 4 Pick. 460; Scofield v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 1 West. Rep. 812, 48 Ohio St. 571; Peters v. Marietta & O. R. Co. 42 Ohio St. 275.

A judgment of forfeiture will not be ordered if there be any other remedy for the grievances complained of.

High, Extr. Legal Rem. 649; State v. Cincinnati Com. Bank, 10 Ohio, 539; State v. Farmers College, 32 Ohio St. 489.

Discrimination in rates of freight, if fair and reasonable, and founded on grounds consistent with public interest, is allowable.

Herah v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 74 Pa. 181; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 67 Ill. 11; Fitchburg R. Co. v. Gage, 12 Gray, 393; Garton v. Bristol & E. R. Co. 1 Best & S. 112, 154, 165; McDuffee v. Portland & R. R. Co. 52 N. H. 430, 3 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 602; Ransom v. Eastern Counties R. Co. 1 C. B. N. S. 437, 4 C. B. N. S. 135.

Forfeitures are not favored.

High, Extr. Legal Rem. 649; State v. Cincinnati Com. Bank, 10 Ohio, 539; People v. Kingston & M. Turnp. R. Co. 23 Wend. 211; Re Franklin Teleg. Co. 119 Mass. 448; State v. Farmers College, 32 Ohio St. 489.

Messrs. Harmon, Colston, Goldsmith & Hoadly, for C., N. O. & T. P. R. Co., defendant:

The States have no jurisdiction whatever over interstate commerce, and a money penalty cannot be imposed by state law for a breach of duty relating to interstate commerce. If such a breach cannot be the basis of a fine, much less can it justify the most severe penalty which by law can ever be inflicted upon a corporation, namely, the forfeiture of its franchise.

See Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557 (30 L. ed. 244); Com. v. Housatonic R. Co. 3 New Eng. Rep. 449, 148 Mass. 264.

Bradbury, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These actions are brought under the fourth clause of § 6761, Rev. Stat., which authorizes an action of quo warranto to be brought against a corporation "when it has misused a franchise, privilege or right conferred upon it by law, or when it claims or holds by contract or otherwise, or has exercised a franchise, privilege or right in contravention of law."

The petitions charge, among other things, that the defendants misused their corporate powers and franchises by discriminating in their rates of freight in favor of certain refiners of petroleum oil connected with the Standard Oil Company, by charging other shippers of like products unreasonable rates, by arbitrarily and suddenly changing the same, and, finally, by confederating with the favored shippers to create and foster a monopoly in refined oil, to the injury of other refiners and the public; and, further, that the defendants claimed and exercised, in contravention of law, the right to charge for shipping oil in tank cars a lower rate of freight per hundred pounds than they charged for shipping the same in barrels, in carload lots. The defendants by answer, among other matters, denied charging any shippers unreasonable rates of freight, or that they arbitrarily or suddenly changed such rates, and denied any confederacy with anyone to establish a monopoly.

The actions were referred to a referee to take the evidence and to report to this court his findings of fact and conclusions of law therefrom; all which has been done and the cases are before us upon this report.

To the report of the referee exceptions were filed by all parties. The defendants, however, do not now insist upon their exceptions to the finding of the referee in so far as it relates to the facts; indeed, it is difficult to conceive any grounds for their doing so, for these findings are mainly based upon the testimony of the officers and agents of the Railroad Companies.

On the other hand, however, counsel for the relators urge upon us with much force their exceptions to the facts as they were found by the referee; four of which findings at least—the eighth, ninth, twenty-second and twenty-third—deserve consideration. The eighth was, that the open rate of freight made for the public for oil was not excessive, and the ninth, that those open rates were not frequently or arbitrarily changed. Without absolutely committing ourselves to the correctness of these findings, we think they are made immaterial by other findings that require the rendition of the same judgment that should have been rendered had these two findings been the reverse of what they are.

The twenty-second and twenty-third findings of fact should be considered together. The first of the two negatives the existence of a conspiracy or confederation between either of the defendants and the Camden Consolidated Oil Company on the one hand, or the Chess-Carly Company on the other, to foster or create a monopoly in the traffic in petroleum oil, while the other one rests the action of the Railroad Companies, in giving rebates and special rates to these favored shippers, upon the necessity they were under of doing so to secure large shipments of oil over their roads which would otherwise have been lost to them.

It is contended, in this connection, that as the evidence shows, and the referee in another part of his report found, that this action of the Railroad Companies tended to create a monopoly and to injure the business of George Rice in all the markets reached by their lines, and in some instances did in fact create a monopoly, they (especially as their officers were men of large capacity and wide experience in the affairs of the commercial world) must be held to have contemplated and intended these natural results.

It is true that in relation to many matters, both civil and criminal, one must be held to intend the natural and probable consequences of an act and cannot be heard to deny it. We think the principle hardly applicable here, and that the charge of an actual conspiracy by the defendants with others, to misuse the franchises conferred on them by the State, to injure the public, is not necessarily sustained by proof that a course was pursued beneficial to their interests, though it tended to and in fact did produce that result. The inference thus arising is to be given due force, but is not conclusive; and the fact of conspiracy is to be established, if at all, from a consideration of all the circumstances in the case, and we cannot say, in view of all those circumstances, that the finding of the referee in this respect is not supported by the evidence. The exceptions to the report are therefore overruled.

All of the oil of the Camden Consolidated Oil Company that was transported over the Cincinnati, Washington & Baltimore Railroad Company, all of that which was refined by George Rice and other refiners operating at Marietta, Ohio, which was carried south of the Ohio River, and all of that belonging to any of those parties which was transported over the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway, was commerce between the States, the regulation of which, by the Constitution of the United States, is denied to the several States; and as the discrimination, of which complaint is made in this action, relates to this traffic, defendant's counsel contend that this court has no jurisdiction of the subject. No doubt the regulation of interstate commerce belongs exclusively to the national government; but does the controversy now before us, in any proper sense of the term, relate to a regulation of commerce between the States? Does this exclusive right in Congress to regulate interstate commerce preclude any action by a State upon any subject that may incidentally affect such commerce? Certainly a State cannot be compelled to create corporations in aid of, or to facilitate, commerce between the States; but if it does create one capable of engaging in such commerce, and the corporation in fact so engages, is that an emancipation of the corporation from the control of the State? That the power to regulate commerce between the States cannot safely be pressed to such extreme consequences is, we think, recognized by the supreme court in Robbins v. Shelby Co. Tanning Dist. 120 U. S. 4-9 [80 L. ed. 694]. The corporation has received vitality from the State; it continues during its existence to be the creature of the State; must live subservient to its laws, and has such powers and franchises as those laws have bestowed upon it, and none others. As the State was not bound to create it in the first place, it is not bound to maintain it, after having done so, if it violates the laws or public policy of the State, or misuses its franchises to oppress the citizens thereof.

For such offenses the State, acting through its Legislature and courts, and in the exercise of a sound discretion, may either destroy the corporation entirely, by forfeiting its charter, or oust it from the wrongful exercise of its powers; and if, instead of, or in addition to, misusing the franchises actually conferred, it usurps others, the circumstance that the usurped franchises relate to and concern commerce between the States ought not to deprive the State of its visitatorial power. If the State creating the corporation is deprived of this power, none exists elsewhere. "The government creating the corporation can alone institute such a proceeding [quo warranto to adjudge forfeiture of a corporate franchise], since it may waive a broken condition of a compact made with it." Angel & A. Corp. § 777, and cases cited. See note 6.

That the Cincinnati, Washington & Baltimore Railway Company did discriminate in its rates for freight on petroleum oil in favor of the Camden Consolidated Oil Company, and that the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company did the same in favor of the Chess-Carly Company, is shown by the finding of the referee, which is clearly sustained by the evidence. That these discriminating rates were in some instances strikingly excessive, tended to foster a monopoly, tended to injure the competitors of the favored shippers and were in many instances prohibitory, actually excluding these competitors from extensive and valuable markets for their oil, giving to the favored shippers absolute control thereof, is established beyond any serious controversy. The justification interposed is that this was not done pursuant to any confederacy with the favored shippers or with any purpose to inflict injury on their competitors, but in order that the Railroad Companies might secure freight that would otherwise have been lost to them. This we do not think sufficient. We are not unmindful of the difficulties that stand in the way of prescribing a line of duty to a railway company, nor do we undertake to say they may not pursue their legitimate objects, and shape their policy to secure benefits to themselves, though it may press severely upon the interests of others; but we do hold that they cannot be permitted to foster or create a monopoly, by giving to a favored shipper a discriminating rate of freight. As common carriers, their duty is to carry indifferently for all who may apply, and in the order in which the application is made and upon the same terms; and the assumption of a right to make discriminations in rates for freight, such as was claimed and exercised by the defendants in this case, on the ground that it thereby secured freight that it would otherwise lose, is a misuse of the rights and privileges conferred upon it by law. A full and complete discussion of the principles and a thorough collection of the authorities bearing upon the duties of railroad companies towards their customers is to be found in the opinion of Judge Atherton, in the case of Senfield v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 43 Ohio St. 571, 1 West. Rep. 812, to which nothing need be now added.

It appears that of the two methods of shipping oil, that by the barrel in carload lots and that in tank cars, the first only was available to George Rice and the other refiners of petroleum oil at Marietta, Ohio, as they owned no tank cars, nor did the defendants own or undertake to provide any; but that both methods were open to the Camden Consolidated Oil Company and the Chess-Carly Company, by reason of their ownership of tank cars; and that the rate per barrel in tank cars was very much lower than in barrel packages in box cars; that in fact the Cincinnati, Washington & Baltimore Railway Company, after allowing the Camden Consolidated Oil Company a rebate, and allowing the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company for switching cars, received from the Camden Consolidated Oil Company only about one half the open rates it charged the Marietta refiners, and that both Railroad Companies claimed the right to make different rates, based upon the different methods of shipping oil, and the fact of the ownership by shippers of the tank cars used by them. It was the duty of the defendants to furnish suitable vehicles for transporting freight offered to them for that purpose, and to offer equal terms to all shippers.

A railroad is an improved highway; the public are equally entitled to its use; it must provide equal accommodation for all upon the same terms. The fact that one shipper may be provided with vehicles of his own entitles him to no advantage over his competitor not so provided. The true rule is announced by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the report of the case of George Rice v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 1 Intera. Com. Rep. 722: "The fact that the owner supplies the rolling stock when his oil is shipped in tanks, in our opinion, is entitled to little weight when rates are under consideration. It is properly the business of railroad companies to supply to their customers suitable vehicles of transportation (Ogdensburg & L. O. R. Co. v. Pratt, 89 U. S. 82 Wall. 123 [23 L. ed. 827]), and then offer their use to everybody impartially." Page 50 of the report of the case.

No doubt a shipper who owns cars may be paid a reasonable compensation for their use, so that the compensation is not made a cover for discriminating rates or other advantages to such owner as a shipper. Nor is there any valid objection to such owner using them exclusively as long as the carrier provides equal accommodations to its other customers. It may be claimed that if a railroad company permit all shippers indifferently and upon equal terms to provide cars suitable for their business, and to use them exclusively, no discrimination is made. This may be theoretically true, but is not so in its application to the actual state of the business of the country, for a very large proportion of the customers of a railroad have not a volume of business large enough to warrant equipping themselves with cars, and might be put at a ruinous disadvantage in the attempt to compete with more extensive establishments. Aside from this, however, a shipper is not bound to provide a car; the duty of providing suitable facilities for its customers rests upon the railroad company, and if instead of providing sufficient and suitable cars itself, this is done by certain of its customers, even for their own convenience, yet the cars thus provided are to be regarded as part of the equipment of the road. It being the duty of a railroad company to transport freight for all persons indifferently and in the order in which its transportation is applied for, it cannot be permitted to suffer freight cars to be placed upon its track by any customer for his private use, except upon the condition that, if it does not provide other cars sufficient to transport the freight of other customers in the order that application is made, they may be used for that purpose. Were this not so, a mode of discrimination fatal to all successful competition by small establishments and operators with larger and more opulent ones could be successfully adopted and practiced at the will of the railroad company and the favored shipper.

The advantages, if any, to the carrier, presented by the tank-car method of transporting oil over that by barrels in box cars in carload lots, are not sufficient to justify any substantial difference in the rate of freight for oil transported in that way; but if there were any such advantages, as it is the duty of the carrier to furnish proper vehicles for transporting it, if it failed in this duty it could not in justice avail itself of its own neglect as a ground of discrimination; it must either provide tank cars for all of its customers alike, or give such rates of freight in barrel packages, by the carload, as will place its customers using that method on an equal footing with its customers adopting the other method.

Judgment ousting defendants from the right to make or charge a rate of freight per hundred pounds for transporting oil in iron tank-cars, substantially lower than for transporting it in barrels, in carload lots.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

Robert T. SMITH, Appt.,
v.
GEORGIA PACIFIC R. CO.

(....Ala.....)

Calling the name of a station and stopping the train soon after to take a side track while another train passes will not make the carrier liable for injuries to a passenger who attempts to get off at that place, where all the surroundings indicate that it is not the proper place for alighting.

(January 15, 1890.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cleburne County in favor of defendant in an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from the negligence of defendant's servants. Affirmed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.
Messrs. Kelly & Smith for appellant.
Messrs. Knox & Bowie for appellee.

Clopton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant's injuries, for which he sues, were received while alighting from a train at Hedlin, a regular station on defendant's road. His right of recovery is founded on the allegation that his injury was caused by the negligence of defendant's servants. The specific negligence complained of is alleged to consist in calling out the name of the station, bringing the train to a stand-still immediately thereafter, thereby inducing plaintiff to believe, and to act upon the belief, that the train had reached the usual place for landing passengers, and suddenly starting it without giving him notice. Plaintiff's act in leaving the train being voluntary, it is incumbent on him, in order to entitle him to a recovery, or before the opinion of a jury is required to be taken as to the question of negligence, to produce evidence from which the inference may be reasonably drawn that his injury was caused by the negligence of the defendant. We shall therefore direct our consideration to the question whether, on the facts clearly proved, and having regard to the liberty to draw inferences therefrom, the court would have been justified in taking the question of negligence from the jury; for if on the facts, which admit of no dispute, and allowing all adverse inferences, it would have been the duty of the court to set aside the verdict had one been rendered in favor of plaintiff, and the affirmative charge in favor of the defendant was authorized, we need not consider the various rulings of the court. Bentley v. Georgia Pac. R. Co. 86 Ala. 484.

A railroad company, being a carrier of passengers, is under obligation to use reasonable care to transport them safely. This general duty includes the specific duty not to expose them to unnecessary danger, and not intentionally or negligently to mislead them by causing them to reasonably suppose that their point of destination has been reached, and that they may safely alight, when the train is in an improper place. Calling out the name of the station is customary and proper, so that passengers may be informed that the train is approaching the station of their destination, and prepare to get off when it arrives at the platform. The mere announcement of the name of the station is not an invitation to alight, but, when followed by a full stoppage of the train soon thereafter, is ordinarily notification that it has arrived at the usual place of landing passengers. Whether the stoppage of the train, after such announcement and before it arrives at the platform, is negligence, depends upon the attendant circumstances. The rule is aptly expressed in Bridges v. North London R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 877, by Willes, J.: "It is an announcement by the railway officers that the train is approaching, or has arrived at, the platform, and that the passengers may get out when the train stops at the platform, or under circumstances induced and caused by the company, in which the man may reasonably suppose he is getting out at the place where the company intended him to alight. To that extent calling out is an invitation."

A reference to a few leading cases will aid in the solution of the question whether, on the facts hereafter stated, plaintiff should or could have supposed that the train had reached the usual place for the discharge of passengers.

In Bridges v. North London R. Co., supra, the executrix and wife sued for injuries suffered by her husband which resulted in his death. The train on which he was a passenger had to pass through a tunnel before reaching the main platform. There was within the tunnel a platform, similar to but narrower than the main platform. The train went partially up to the main platform and stopped, the last two carriages remaining in the tunnel, the last but one opposite the small platform, and the last, in which the deceased was riding, opposite a heap of rubbish lying near the track. A passenger who had alighted on the platform from the carriage next to the last, found the deceased lying on the heap of rubbish fatally injured. There was no light in the tunnel, and it was filled with steam. The name of the station had been called in the usual way. It was ruled, on appeal from the Exchequer Chamber to the House of Lords, that it might be reasonably inferred that the deceased, having heard the name of the station called, and finding that the train had stopped, got out of the carriage supposing that he would alight on the platform, and that the evidence furnished matter on which it was necessary to take the opinion of a jury. L. R. 7 H. L. 218.

In Central R. R. Co. of N. J. v. Van Horn, 83 N. J. L. 188, the name of the station which was plaintiff's destination was announced while the train was in motion, and soon thereafter it was brought to a full stop, some distance from the station. The plaintiff went out on the platform of the car for the purpose of alighting, and while standing thereon the train was suddenly put in motion towards the depot, where she was thrown off and injured. This was at night. It is said: "The court would not be warranted in saying that it is not negligence to give notice of the approach to a station, and then to stop the train short of such station, in the night time. Such a course would naturally tend to jeopard passengers, for it would induce them to believe that they had arrived at the station designated, and they would, in the ordinary course, go to the car platform. At night, this must be the inevitable result."

In Taber v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 71 N. Y. 480, Andrews, J., says: "The plaintiff was justified, under the circumstances, in supposing that she had reached her destination, and that the train was at the place where passengers were to alight; at least, the jury might have come to the conclusion that she was free from negligence. The defendant was bound to take notice of the circumstances, viz.: that the station had been announced; that passengers for Williams would naturally assume that the train, when it stopped, was at the station, and at the place where they were to alight; that by reason of the darkness of the night, and the absence of a depot, or other external indication of a station, passengers, especially those not familiar with the surrounding objects, would not, by observation, know that the train had run beyond the highway crossing; that passengers, in the absence of notice, would, according to the usual custom, start to leave the train as soon as it came to a stand-still." In that case the night was dark, and there was no depot or station light or anything to indicate the stopping place, which was a highway crossing, to a person not familiar with it. It was held that whether notice should have been given to the passengers, as a reasonable precaution, that the train was to back, and whether the omission to do so was negligence, were questions for the jury.

On the other hand, in Mitchell v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 51 Mich. 236, the plaintiff intended to take another train at the crossing of two railways. Before arriving at the junction, the name of the station was called out, and the train came to a full stop, as required by law, before reaching crossings. Plaintiff hurried to leave the car, went down the steps where there was no platform or other convenience for landing, and, as she was stepping off, the cars were suddenly started to go forward to the depot, when she fell and was injured. This was in daylight, and it does not appear that any person employed on the train observed her. It was held that the injury was purely accidental, unless plaintiff was herself negligent, and that the company was not liable. Campbell, J., said: "The only cause of the mischief, leaving defendant's carelessness or negligence out of view, was her mistaken supposition that the cars had stopped for the station, and that she should therefore get out. There was nothing at the spot to indicate a landing place, and there was at the proper place, a short distance further on, a building and platform, appropriate and used for that purpose. The stoppage of the cars was required by statute, as well as by usage, as a precaution against collisions. The calling of the station was not shown to have been out of the usual course, and, from the distances mentioned, we can hardly conceive it should have been delayed. No one representing the company, whether conductor or brakeman, is shown to have known or suspected that plaintiff had put herself in peril or left her place. Nothing is shown which put them in fault for not knowing this."

We have specially referred to the cases cited, because they distinguish between the instances in which the negligence of the defendant is and is not a question for the jury, and have made the foregoing extracts because they clearly declare the principles on which the distinction rests. They all concur that neither the announcement of the station, nor stopping the train before it arrives at the platform, if required by law or usage, for the purpose of avoiding collisions or other accidents, is negligence per se.

In Bridges v. North London R. Co., supra, Baron Pollock observes, in reference to the conduct of the passenger who was injured: "Had he known the rubbish was there instead of the platform, to jump out onto it with such a fall as would break his leg and occasion mortal internal injuries would indeed have been negligent, and rash in the extreme. But it was two hours after sunset, there was no light within the tunnel, and the deceased was near-sighted, and he might well have supposed he would step on the platform, as did the passenger in the next carriage, with impunity."

It will be observed that, in each of the cases in which it was ruled there was evidence of negligence sufficient to be submitted to the jury, there existed the element that, by reason of the want of light or other things, the passenger may have been deceived into supposing the train had arrived at the platform or place where it was intended he should alight. Comparing all the cases, we deduce that when the name of the station is called, and soon thereafter the train is brought to a stand-still, a passenger may reasonably conclude that it has stopped at the station, and endeavor to get off, unless the circumstances and indications are such as to render manifest that the train has not reached the proper and usual landing place.

The undisputed facts are: Heflin was the point at which the regular passenger trains met and passed each other. It was customary for the east-bound train, on which plaintiff was a passenger, to take the side track, leaving the main track unobstructed for the passage of the train going westwardly. This was necessary to avoid collision. Heflin was plaintiff's point of destination. As the train was approaching, the name of the station was called, as was usual, and the train was stopped very soon thereafter, the object being to take the side track. On its stoppage, plaintiff went out of the rear door of the car, and was descending with one foot on the first step of the car and the other about touching the ground, when the train moved to go forward to the depot, which caused him to fall. It was drawn to the usual place for the discharge of passengers, and again stopped. The rear of the car, from which plainiff was getting off, was about 200 yards from the depot building, the proper place for the discharge of passengers. The train was first stopped in a cut, about 360 feet long, and from 5 to 11 feet deep. This was in daylight, about 1 o'clock P. M. Plaintiff had been in Heflin once before, but, as he states, arrived and departed in the night-time, and was not about the depot in day-time. Nevertheless he knew, or ought to have known, that there was a depot at which passengers got off and on the trains, and that it was not in such a cut. All the surroundings indicated that the spot at which plaintiff attempted to leave the train was not the proper place for landing. From the description of the place given by witnesses and shown by the diagram in evidence, it is unreasonable to conclude or infer that any person possessing the ordinary sense of sight, and using it, could have supposed that the train had arrived at the place where the Company intended passengers to get off. It does not appear that any of those in charge of or employed on the train noticed the plaintiff when leaving it, or had cause to suspect his intention to get off. There were no circumstances or surroundings caused by the Company which should have induced plaintiff to reasonably suppose he was getting out at the place where the Company intended him to alight. The evidence clearly establishes that his injury was accidental, if not produced by his own negligence. On the undisputed facts, the court would have been justified in giving the affirmative charge in favor of defendant.

Affirmed.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

Owen JONES et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF NEBRASKA.

(....Neb.....)

*1. An information against certain parties charging that at certain times and places they "did willfully, maliciously and unlawfully interrupt, molest and disturb a religious society, to wit, 'the Welsh Presbyterian Church,' and the members thereof, while said members were met to perform the duties enjoined upon them and appertaining to them as members," etc., is sufficient to sustain a conviction.

2. A church organization may make rules by which the admission and expulsion of its members are to be regulated, and the members must conform to these rules. If, however, it has no rules on the subject, those of the common law prevail; and, before a member can be expelled, notice must be given him to answer the charge made against him, and an opportunity offered to make his defense; and an order of expulsion without such notice and opportunity is void.

(January 14, 1890.)

*Head notes by MAXWELL, J.
† L. R. A.

ERROR to the District Court for Gage County to review a judgment convicting defendants of interrupting and molesting a religious meeting and sentencing them to pay a fine therefor. Reversed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion. Messrs. Pemberton & Bush, for plaintiffs in error:

This complaint states no offense. The manner of the disturbance must be alleged, as by talking and laughing aloud, by profane swearing, etc.

2 Bishop, Cr. Proc. §§ 285, 289, 290, 293, 294; Stratton v. State, 13 Ark. 688; State v. Sherrill, 1 Jones (N. C.) 508; State v. Ringer, 6 Blackf. 109.

It is not sufficient to charge a conclusion of law.

1 Wharton, Cr. L. § 285.

It is sufficient as a general rule to charge a statutory offense in the words of the statute, but when a more particular statement of the facts is necessary to set it forth with requisite certainty, they must be averred.

State v. Graham, 38 Ark. 519; Ocarfoss v. State, 42 Md. 403; Com. v. Richardson, 126 Mass. 84; State v. Armell, 8 Kan. 238; United States v. Mills, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 142 (8 L. ed.

640); State v. Seamons, 1 Greene (Iowa) 418. A complaint must set forth all the facts necessary to constitute an offense.

Lambertson v. State, 11 Ohio, 282.

The justice of the common law permits no investigation of facts which may be followed by the loss of a right or by the infliction of a penalty, to be conducted ex parte.

State v. Bryce, 7 Ohio (pt. 2) 83; Hiss v. Bartlett, 8 Gray, 406, 63 Am. Dec. 776.

Messrs. William Leese, Atty-Gen., and Burke & Prout, for defendant in error:

An indictment in the language of the statute, that the defendants unlawfully and willfully did disturb a congregation then and there assembled for religious worship, and conducted themselves in an unlawful manner, is sufficient.

Maxwell, Cr. Proc. —: Kindred v. State, 83 Tex. 67; State v. Stubblefield, 23 Mo. 563; Com. v. Daniels, 2 Va. Cas. 402; State v. Ratliff, 10 Ark. 530; State v. Louver (Neb.) 42 N. W. Rep. 762.

A complaint charging a misdemeanor is good if it contains sufficient to show a violation of law.

Ex parte Maule, 19 Neb. 273.

Civil courts will not review the procedure leading up to a judgment in an ecclesiastical court, except where such judgment affects some property right.

Bird v. St. Mark's Church, 62 Iowa, 567; Hardin v. Baptist Church, 51 Mich. 137; Salé v. First Baptist Church, 62 Iowa, 26; Atty-Gen. v. Geertings, 55 Mich. 563; State v. Farries, 45 Mo. 183; Watson v. Jones, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 679 (20 L. ed. 666), Cent. L. J. Jan. 24, 1890.

The offense was proven regardless of the question of membership, and the allegation in the complaint as to the want of membership, at least so far as the plaintiff in error, Jones, is concerned, is mere surplusage.

State v. Prubnow, 14 Neb. 484.

Maxwell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs in error were convicted of "interrupting and molesting a religious meeting, charged in the complaint," and sentenced to pay a fine of $10 each, and the costs. The first ground of error, as assigned, is that the complaint does not charge an offense. The complaint is as follows:

The complaint and information of David Edwards, made before Richard Whitten, one of the justices of the peace in and for Gage County, Nebraska, who, being first duly sworn, on his oath says that Owen Jones and Owen Parry, late of said county, at and within said county, on the 11th day of December, A. D. 1887, and on divers other Sundays before said date, did willfully, maliciously and unlawfully interrupt, molest and disturb a religious society, to wit, "the Welsh Presbyterian Church," and the members thereof, while said members were met to perform the duties enjoined upon them and appertaining to them as members of said religious society, the said Owen Jones and Owen Parry not then and there being members of said religious society, and having no right to be present at said meeting. He therefore prays that the said Owen Jones and Owen Parry may be arrested, and dealt with according to law. David Edwards, Subscribed in my presence, and sworn to before me, this 12th day of December, 1887.

Richard Whitten,
Justice of the Peace.

The general rule is that the manner of the disturbance should be alleged, as by talking, laughing or profane swearing. Cockreham v. State, 7 Humph. 11; State v. Stubblefield, 23 Mo. 563; Kidder v. State, 58 Ind. 68; State v. Ringer, 6 Blackf. 109; Lockett v. State, 40 Tex. 4; Maxwell, Cr. Proc. 286.

We are not prepared, however, to say that the complaint is void. The charge that the plaintiffs in error at certain dates "did willfully, maliciously and unlawfully interrupt, molest and disturb a religious meeting, to wit: 'the Welsh Presbyterian Church,' and the members thereof, while such members were met to perform the duties enjoined upon them," etc., states an offense under the Statute. State v. Louver (Neb.) 42 N. W. Rep. 762.

The language of the Statute is: "If any person or persons shall at any time interrupt or molest any religious society, or any member thereof or any persons, when meeting or met together for the purpose of worship, or performing any duties enjoined on or appertaining to them as members of such society" (Crim. Co. e, § 32); and the complaint is nearly in the words of such Statute. The objections to the complaint, therefore, are overruled.

It will be observed that it is charged in the information that "the said Owen Jones and Owen Parry, not then being members of said religious society, and having no right to be present at said meeting," were present, etc. This allegation having been made, it becomes material in the case. The proof shows—in fact, it is admitted—that the plaintiffs in error had been members of the church in question; but it is claimed they were expelled, and thereby ceased to be members. It is not claimed that any open trial was had, or that the parties accused were notified to appear and defend any accusation against them; nor do any facts appear from which the society would have the right to exclude the parties named from its membership. Any society may make rules by which the admission and expulsion of its members are to be regulated, and the members must conform to those rules. If, however, there are no rules governing the case, then, before a member can be expelled, a charge must be made against him, and notice given to him to make his defense, and opportunity presented to make the same. Innes v. Wylie, 1 Car. & K. 257.

In the case cited, a member of a society had used menacing language towards another member of the society, and for this a majority of a general meeting of the society voted that he should no longer be considered a member thereof, but gave him no notice of the intention to take his conduct into consideration, or any opportunity to make his defense. It was held that he was still a member, and the order of expulsion was void. Rez v. Richardson, 1 Burr. 540; Rez v. Liverpool, 3 Burr. 731; Bagg's Case, 11 Coke, 99; Aug. & A. Corp. § 420.

The rules of the church, if any, for the admission and expulsion of members, were not offered nor introduced in evidence, nor any proof of a public trial upon any charge, or any notice to the plaintiffs in error to appear and answer any specific charges. In the absence of any rules, the common law prevails.

In State v. Bryce, 7 Ohio (pt. 2), 82, it is said: "This proceeding is essentially adversary in its character. The justice of the common law permits no investigation of facts which may be followed by the loss of a right or by the infliction of a penalty, to be conducted ex parte. It is essential to its validity that the party should be duly summoned." 4 Bl. Com. 272; Rez v. Stone, 1 East, 639; Fuller v. Plainfield Academic School, 6 Conn. 542; Com. v. Pa. Ben. Institution, 2 Serg. & R. 141; Rez v. Richardson, 1 Burr. 540; Rez v. Lyme Regis, 1 Doug. 154."

The case cited was one where it was alleged that the relator had forfeited his office of trustee of the Ohio University by neglecting his duties, but it is applicable to that under consideration. A church society is a voluntary organization, founded for the advancement of the spiritual welfare of its members, by counsel, admonition and example, and to enable the society to employ and pay a pastor to look after, not only the welfare of that particular organization, but many charitable objects requiring aid, and to promote, as far as possible, with the means at hand, the welfare of the race. There must be freedom of individual thought, and, in respectful language, expression to such thought. It may be presumed that no sincere follower of the Master will so far forget his duty as to indulge in railings or unjust accusation. The right of membership is a valuable privilege, of which no one should be debarred except for adequate cause shown, either by the rules of the society, or after a fair examination of the charges, after due notice. As neither of those things appear to have taken place, the order of expulsion would seem to be void. In saying this, however, we do not intend to justify the conduct of the plaintiffs in error, as shown by the testimony of some of the witnesses. The respect due to their associates certainly required the use of words of a less belligerent character. Whether the use of the words and the conduct of the parties generally were sufficient, under the rules of the organization, if any such there were, or would be deemed sufficient, after a fair trial, for the expulsion of the parties, is a matter for the determination of the church tribunals, and need not be considered here; but for the want of proof showing the right of the society to expel the plaintiffs in error, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

The other Judges concur.

Petition for rehearing denied April 10, 1899.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

HENDERSON et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

REYNOLDS.

(...Ga....)

1. Instructing a jury shortly before twelve o'clock Saturday night that they will have to cease deliberations during Sunday, and will be kept together and given their meals and a place to sleep at their own expense, is sufficient to require a setting aside of a verdict which was rendered by the jury in a few minutes thereafter.
2. The use of railroad "standard" time in all the cities and towns along the line of railroads does not authorize the use of that time in running the courts, where there is no law recognizing any other standard time in the computation of a day or the hours of a day than the meridian of the sun.
3. A verdict may lawfully be received in the early hours of Sunday where the case was commenced, the evidence, argument and charge of the court were concluded, and the jury had retired, before the beginning of Sunday.

(December 16, 1899.)

NOTE.—Sunday; verdict may be received on.

The mere fact that the jury conclude their deliberations on Sunday does not of itself vitiate their verdict. Stone v. Bird, 16 Kan. 438; True v. Plumley, 36 Me. 406; 2 Thompson, Trials, 199.

This is so, it seems by the principal case, in a State where it has been held that a verdict cannot be received on Sunday. Reas v. Irvin, 49 Ga. 436.

The courts of other States hold that a verdict re-

ERROR to the Superior Court for Cobb County to review a judgment for defendant entered upon a verdict alleged to have been rendered under circumstances rendering it illegal. Reversed.

The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gober & Alexander and Harrison & Peebles for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. C. D. Phillips and Clay & Blair for defendant in error.

Simmons, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. It appears from the record in this case that Henderson & Son brought their action of complaint against Reynolds. After the evidence had all been submitted to the jury, and the charge of the court delivered, the jury were sent to their room, about half-past 8 on Saturday night. Some time before 12 o'clock the judge sent the sheriff to inquire of the jury if they were likely to agree. The sheriff reported that the jury told him they were not. About half an hour after, the court ordered the jury brought in, and told them it was nearly 12 o'clock, and that, the next day being Sunday, turned on Sunday is good. Baxter v. People, 8 Ill. 385; Cary v. Silcox, 5 Ind. 370; Rosser v. McColly, 9 Ind. 587; McCorkle v. State, 14 Ind. 39; Houghtaling v. Osborn, 15 Johns. 119; Butler v. Kelsey, 15 Johns. 177; Webber v. Merrill, 34 N. H. 202; Com. v. Morrow, 3 Brewst. 402; Hiller v. English, 4 Strob. L. 486. At common law, the Lord's day is not a day for legal proceedings, and a judgment cannot be rendered on that day. See note to Parsons v. Lindsay (Kan.), 3 L. R. A. 658.

they would have to cease their deliberations until after midnight of the next day; that during that time they were not to discuss the verdict, or anything connected with the case; that they would have to keep together during the entire day and night; that the sheriff would provide a place for them to sleep together; and that they would be furnished their meals, but that it would be at their own expense. The jury were then sent back to their room, and in a few minutes returned with a verdict. This, in substance, is the eighth ground of the motion for a new trial.

We think the court erred in refusing to grant a new trial upon this ground. In the case of Physioc v. Shea, 75 Ga. 466, it was held error for the court to state, in effect, after the jury had been out all night without supper or breakfast, that they would not be allowed their meals, except at their own expense. "This operated as a threat to starve such as had no money into finding a verdict, and resulted in a speedy finding."

The instructions given by the trial judge in that case were in substance the same as given in the case under consideration. In that case the judge told the jury that they could have breakfast at their own expense. In this case the judge told the jury that they must be kept together from 12 o'clock Saturday night until Monday morning, and could have meals at their own expense. And in both cases the result was that the jury agreed upon a verdict within a few minutes after such instructions.

In the case cited the court says: "The old idea of starving juries, to coerce a verdict, has passed away, . . . and the judge is empowered to furnish refreshments at the expense of the county."

We are not surprised that this jury should agree so quickly, after being instructed by the judge that they would be kept together for more than twenty-four hours longer at their own expense. It may have been that the very jurors who were holding out against the proposed verdict were unable to pay for their meals, and therefore agreed to the verdict, rather than go without food until the court should meet again, the next Monday morning.

2. The ninth and tenth grounds complain that the verdict was made and returned on Sunday. The judge ran the court by railroad or "standard" time, which was twenty-two minutes behind the sun time: the verdict being rendered at two minutes before 12 by the railroad time, and twenty minutes after 12 by the sun time. It was contended in the argument before us that, as the railroad or "standard" time is now used in all the cities and towns along the line of the railroads, that time should be observed by the courts, instead of the meridian or sun time, and that the judge, in this case, having announced at the beginning of the term that he would run the court by the railroad or "standard" time, the verdict was received on Saturday, instead of Sunday. The trial judge, in his note to these grounds of the motion, seems to take this view of the law. We do not agree with him therein. The law, which is strict, and requires certainly where time enters into legal duty, fixes that time with reference to a certain, unvarying and uniform standard, than which none could be more certain. The only standard of time in the computation of a day, or the hours of a day, recognized by the law of Georgia, is the meridian of the sun; and a legal day begins and ends at midnight,—the mean time between meridian and meridian, or 12 o'clock P. M. (post meridian), twelve hours after meridian. The Code, where it mentions the hours of a day, usually affixes "M." (meridian), "A. M." and "P. M." (before and after meridian), to indicate this standard. As instances, see sections 1286, 1287, 1312. The civil day begins and ends at 12 o'clock, midnight. Anderson, Law Dict. Day, 811.

It seems idle to waste words in saying that the standard of time fixed by persons in a certain line of business cannot be substituted at will, by persons in a certain locality, for the standard recognized by the statutes of the State, as well as the general law and usage of the country, especially when it is considered that such an arbitrary and artificial standard could as easily fix 5 o'clock for midnight as it could twenty minutes past 12, as was done in this case. Legal custom cannot in this way change Sunday into Saturday. To expect courts of justice, officers of the law and the public generally, especially that large class of the population who do not live in cities or at railroad stations, to go to the railroads for the time which is to guide them in the performance of their duties under the law, when they have in the heavens above them a certain standard by which to ascertain or regulate the time, or to permit them at will to follow two standards of time, would be highly impracticable, and would be productive of great uncertainty and confusion in the administration of the law. Thus, the legality of elections might be made to depend upon conflicting proof of local custom; for what might be considered a legal election in one precinct might be regarded as illegal in the next precinct, because of the time of opening or closing the polls, or the people of a precinct might differ among themselves as to this. And so with regard to the enforcement of the criminal law. The law requires the railroads to cease running their freight trains by 8 o'clock on Sunday mornings. Code, § 4578. To allow the railroads to fix the standard of time would be to allow them at pleasure to violate or defeat the law. Even in cities, where it is insisted the adoption of railroad time has become general, the same difficulties might exist; for instance, in the City of Augusta, in this State, which is at the dividing line of two railroad standards, the railroads which enter the city from the east have one standard of time, and the railroads which enter from the west another standard, an hour different, both differing considerably from the meridian or sun standard.

But, while we think the court erred in its view as to the time when Saturday expired and Sunday began, we do not think its refusal to grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict was received on Sunday was error. We do not think that the reception of this verdict on Sunday rendered it invalid or void. It seems to us that it was a very proper thing for the court to do. It was much better to receive this verdict upon Sunday morning than to keep twelve jurors, and the officers attending them, confined in a room throughout the sabbath, and for nearly thirty-six hours. It was an act of charity and of necessity to receive this verdict, so that the jurors could return to their homes for rest and refreshment during the night, and, if they so desired, could attend public worship during the day.

Where the trial of a case is commenced on a "week day," and the evidence and argument and the charge of the court are concluded and the jury retire before the end of the day, and a verdict is not agreed upon until the early hours of the Sunday, we do not think it wrong, in morals or in law, for the trial judge to receive the verdict, and allow the jurors and officers to go home to spend the sabbath. There is now very little conflict in the courts of this country upon this question. The great and decided weight of authority is in favor of receiving verdicts on Sunday.

The case of Hiller v. English, 4 Strob. L. 496, is one of the leading cases upon this subject. In the discussion of that case, Mr. Justice Wardlaw says (p. 600): "It was then charity to the jurors to receive and publish their verdict when they were ready to present it. Their duty was done. Why should they have been punished? If the observance of the Lord's day by them was looked to, it was surely better to permit them to be at home, to take their natural rest, and to join in public worship, if they would, than to lock them up during the Sunday, uncomfortable, dissatisfied and ill suited to each other, as they probably would have been."

This decision also shows that the case of Shaw v. McCombs, 2 Bay, 232, which has been frequently cited in support of the invalidity of receiving verdicts upon Sunday, was incorrectly reported, and that the decision of that case was not as stated by Judge Bay ten or fifteen years after the decision was made.

In the case of Cory v. Silcox, 5 Ind. 873, it is said: "The verdict of the jury was returned and received by the court on Sunday. We will not elaborate this point. Much useless learning has recently been displayed upon it by able jurists, and some variety of opinion has been the result. While we admit that many cases are to be found in the books deciding that no judicial act can be done on Sunday, and that verdicts returned on that day are void, we are not satisfied that we would be subverting morality, religion, justice or the spirit of the common law, by following their example as to verdicts. The reason of the rule making Sunday die non juridicus was founded in those principles of religion which require a strict observance of that day, and surely that which tends to its non-observance cannot be regarded as being within the reason of the rule. We apprehend that jurors worn out by the laborious investigation of a lengthy case, and unnecessarily pent up together from twelve to twenty-four hours, would be little inclined, while in that condition, to observe the sabbath as they should. We can easily conceive of places where their minds would be far more religiously inclined."

